PM must see to it, and I know it will, that the case against Pvt. Levy be reopened, and the Army's case be told in the findings of the court-martial. Our men are fighting, or so they believe, that all men who were created equal should remain so.

"We Follow Regulations and Don't Have to Bow to Anyone," Officer Says

By LT. JEFFERSON GRANT

Fort Huachuca, Ariz. — Recently I read in one of our newspapers certain references to the 92nd Infantry Division.

I do not write this letter in defense of General Almond or the 92nd Division because I am not proud to be a member of it and never have been, but I am a wearer of the uniform of the United States Army and I am proud of that.

Take a look at some of the remarks:

That General Almond is not a top-flight commander. Well, General Eisenhower would not have been if his men had failed.

That the men of this division are not well trained. Trained men are the result of trained leaders. They are well trained men are the result of trained leaders. They are as well trained as their platoon leaders make them.

If General Almond were the No. 1 division commander and he had a bunch of would-be platoon leaders he would have a sorrier-than-hell division.

Proficiency School

That a school to make certain officers proficient was established and that all of the students were colored is true.

This was wrong because many white officers should have been there, but most of those sent deserved to be there.

That colored officers are frozen at second lieutenant. Five of us have reached that mighty rank of first lieutenant, either by merit or "Uncle Toming".

Others of us must be promoted sometime or other, but while waiting for that promotion we should not fail to perform the duties of the office we now hold.

Weapons Not Outmoded

That the weapons we trained with are outmoded. That's strictly a lie.

That there is segregation at officers' mess. Well, we of this regiment sit at any table we see fit except the staff tables. If the white officers herd themselves all at one corner, who gives a damn?

We don't care about sitting down to dine with them either. In fact, we hope for the day when there won't be any to come into the mess hall. We aren't friends, so why dine together?

Davis's Report

That Gen. B. O. Davis's report that all was well here. General Davis reported what he saw and that was the only truthful report he could make. The problems here are strictly of a racial nature. General Davis can not solve them.

That frequent searches are made for arms and ammunition. That is true. It is merely an army routine and is done for the soldiers' protection, not because the army is afraid of trouble.

If any white division were on the range, it would be searched for ammunition, its rifles checked and locked up until the next day.

Think what would happen, even in an all-colored division, if soldiers were allowed to keep firearms at all times.

Job and Duty

There are a few of us officers who realize that some white officers are sincerely not interested in training our boys. Therefore, it is our job and our duty to make fighting soldiers out of them.

Each platoon leader can make his men the type of soldier he wants. He can make a platoon of bowing and scraping Uncle Toms or a platoon of fighting Americans. We don't have to be captains and first lieutenants to train men.

If a few of us were more interested in getting promoted than soldiering for America and our people, we would stop soldiering and take lessons in bowing and scraping, grinning, singing and being stool pigeons. Fortunately, we prefer to be men as well as second lieutenants.

When someone writes to a newspaper that the men are not well trained, he is telling the nation that colored officers can't train men, which is what some brass hats would have the country believe. No one can train anyone unless he sincerely believes in what he is trying to inculcate in his men.

If a platoon leader sincerely believes in the American Creed; if he sincerely believes he wants the best trained soldiers in the army, all he has to do is teach them what he believes.

There is no regulation that requires us to be anyones' friend. All that any colored officer can do is live as close to the regulations as he possibly can. If we do that we will not have to bow to anyone.

Ga. Messman Is Hero of Sicilian Invasion

Spots Planes 4 Days, Nights Without Relief; Must Remain in Menial Post

WITH THE U.S. AMPHIBIOUS FORCES (ANP) — Because the navy does not have a rating for plane spotters, Arthur J. Goodwin, 17-year-old enlisted man from Valdosta, Ga., messman and unsung hero on an assault transport in the invasion of Sicily, must continue his menial task for the duration.

Goodwin proved his mettle when the push for the beaches began. Dropping his plates, he took a position on the bridge and with keen eyes glued to the sky, identified enemy aircraft for the gun crew long before they had a chance to drop their bundles of death.

AUG 21 1943

It was his excellent eyesight and knowledge of planes that also enabled him to save the gunnery from shooting down American planes.

4 Days, Nights Without Relief

The young seaman was so indispensable that he was ordered to remain at his post from Friday to Monday night without relief. Only catnaps, coffee, sandwiches and the burning patriotism in his fighting heart were able to see him through the trying assignment.

With an alacrity and accuracy that amazed the captain and crew alike, Goodwin picked out Focke-Wulfe 190's, German Ju 88's and directed fire toward them. Never once did he fail to recognize our own aircraft, the Mustangs, the Spitfires and the Beaufighters.

The difficulty of Goodwin's job is emphasized because during the fierce attacks American planes became mixed with enemy fighters. Although it required the highest brilliance in observation and discernability, the messman was equal to the task.

Asked how he recognized a Mustang, Goodwin laconically replied:

"I know 'em by their square wingtips."

AUG 21 1943

Only Frightened Once

There was only one instance when the young seaman admitted fright and that was when enemy planes dropped explosives 100 feet away from his ship. The big boat quivered and reeled, but miraculously escaped damage.

Shortly after coming aboard ship Goodwin was moved up to a gun crew and required to attend plane identification classes.

His ready knowledge of planes caught the imagination of instructors and he was elevated to a gun on the bridge, a job calling for a steward's mate second class rating.

Was Model Plane Builder

The youth's familiarity with planes dates back to his school days in Valdosta when he spent his spare moments reading through books on military aviation in the library.

Later, with pennies he earned from work with a dry cleaner, he bought plane parts and constructed model airships. He little knew then how valuable these efforts would be now to his Uncle Samuel.

Goodwin's only trip in an airplane was taken at a county fair in Valdosta before he joined the navy. And — he can't remember the type of ship it was!

Blast Army Prejudice At La. Base

SEP 18 1943
Defender
Chicago, Ill.

NEW ORLEANS, La.—Complaints were directed this week to the Army Inspector General's office, charging discrimination and abuse in regard to the activities of the 247th Quartermaster battalion, now stationed at the New Orleans staging area, Harahan, La.

The local office of the NAACP in its letter to the Inspector General stated that from information furnished this branch, "Order No. 206 P.I.C.-O.G., issued Monday, August 23, 1943, and signed by Colonel Lockett, relieved of command all Negro commissioned officers assigned to the 247th by the War department and placed in command white commissioned officers who were assigned to the port battalion and placed on special duty with the 247th."

The NAACP's letter contended that such an order is contrary to the section of army regulations which state that officers on special duty must not be placed in command of a company when officers assigned by the War department are available. These white officers on special duty with the 247th have no authority to sign morning reports and correspondence of a unit of which they are not a part, and are not carried on the records of the organization."

The following additional complaints were likewise filed with the local office the NAACP's communication stated:

1. Attitude of Colonel Haven has changed to one of hositlity.

2. Negroes stationed at the New Orleans staging area are generally abused.

Tolerance Costly to Jewish Soldier

WASHINGTON (ANP) — Support in the appeal of Sgt. Alton Levy, liberal Jewish soldier, from a court-martial sentence was assured last week by the NAACP and the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union.

Sergeant Levy, who is appealing to Secretary of War Stimson, was given a four-month sentence, stripped of his chevrons and fined, allegedly because of his outspoken criticism of the mistreatment of colored soldiers at the Lincoln (Neb.) Air Base.

The Jewish soldier, said to have been placed in charge of a unit of colored troops, allegedly incurred disfavor by assuming a sympathetic attitude and attempting to improve their literacy rating.

Army Reported Trying To Gag Negro Chaplain

New York, N.Y.
Daily Worker

NOV 6 1943

(Special to the Daily Worker)

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 5.—Chaplain Luther M. Fuller is slated to go on the inactive list, according to reports from Fort Dix, published in the local Negro press.

The Fuller case has attracted wide interest since he was returned from duty in the South Seas last spring because, according to published reports, he had protested the treatment of Negro soldiers. He was court martialed in July but no verdict has yet been announced. The move to put him in the inactive list is characterized by the Philadelphia Tribune as a way to get rid of Fuller without finding him guilty.

On the inactive list, Chaplain Fuller would keep his rank as lieutenant, and remain under Army control, thus keeping him silent on the charges he is alleged to have made, and which are supposed to have led to his court martial.

Chaplain Fuller has been serving lately with Negro troops at Ford Dix. Last week he was ordered to the Station Hospital to receive his terminal examination.

Lt.-Col. Joseph C. Donohue, area commander in charge of the Negro troops with whom Chaplain Fuller was serving, has given him a letter praising his character and work in glowing terms and recommending him for civilian employment.

There is a serious shortage of Negro chaplain in the Army.

Judge Hastie Sees Bias in Levy's Penalty

Afro-American

OCT 30 1943

WASHINGTON

Judge William H. Hastie, former civilian aide to the secretary of the War Department, stated Tuesday that the court-martial and conviction of Alton Levy, white, "create a strong implication of prejudice and bias."

Judge Hastie declared:

"First, I can think of no proper circumstances which could have led the court, after stating before adjournment, Saturday, August 14, that the charges against Levy had not been proved to decide on Monday, August 16, after the week-end recess, that he was guilty beyond a reasonable doubt."

The second point raised by the Howard University Law School dean was to the effect that it was a well known fact that the rumors which Levy, former union organizer, is alleged to have repeated had been circulated months before Levy arrived at camp.

Labor Leaders Meet

Judge Hastie's statement was made on the eve of a meeting of labor leaders at Freedom House, NYC, called to plan assistance to the former union organizer, sentenced to four months at hard labor.

The meeting was organized by David Dubinsky, president of the ILGWU; Samuel Wolchok, president of the United Wholesale and Retail Employees' Union, and A. Philip Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, AFL.

Levy, private at the Lincoln, Neb., Army Air Base, was convicted for circulating "false statements" about the treatment of colored soldiers at the base and "slanderous" rumors about the commanding officer, General Ducan.

15 Seabees Hit Jim Crow, Are Dismissed

Daily Worker New York

NOV 3 1943

Charged with "ineptitude" and "unfitness," 15 Navy Seabees were dismissed this week from the U. S. Navy for protesting Jim Crow and creating a "small state of mutiny."

The men have presented their case to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and are preparing to appeal to Frank Knox, Secretary of the Navy for reinstatement. They have worked at Naval construction bases for more than a year.

Thirkeid Montgomery, officer's cook, 2nd class, spoke for the men, listing a number of grievances they had complained of.

The group, before their discharge, had been asked by the battalion commander to meet with him for the purpose of ironing out the trouble.

The meeting was, the commander said, off the record. Into the discussion were [illegible] such things as "segregated signs," the "matter of ratings," "separate liberty buses" and why, except in a few cases, all the first class men were white.

The following day the men were summoned to the office of the commanding officer and told that the meeting of the previous day was a violation of Navy regulation.

Workers Defense League Seeking Record on Case

NOV 12 1943

NEW YORK — (ANP) — Pvt. Alton Levy, serving four months at hard labor at the Lincoln Army Air base where he was court-martialed for opposing illegal discrimination against Negro soldiers, had just finished a week at the army hospital, the Workers Defense League reported.

SEES BROTHER

The league announced that Miss Harriet Levy, sister of the imprisoned ex-sergeant, had succeeded in seeing her brother Nov. 2 at the guardhouse. She had received permission for her visit from Brig. Gen. Early G. W. Duncan, who had in mid-October issued an order that Levy was to have no more visitors.

Meanwhile the league released a request [illegible] Col. Stanley J. Grogan of the bureau of public relations of the war department, asking that the full transcript of the army's investigation on the Levy case be made public. The letter also asked that the notes of the stenographer present at the Levy court martial now be transcribed and made public. The requests were in a reply to a letter Col. Grogan had sent to Monroe Sweetland, national director of the CIO War Relief committee, who had asked the league to reply.

SCORE INVESTIGATOR

In the same letter, League Secy. Morris Milgram expressed his amazement at the effort of the army investigator to secure statements about mistreatment from Negro soldiers right in front of their white officers.

The letter pointed out that "in the labor movement, both CIO and AFL, we have had many years of experience with such methods of hearing grievances. Until workers become organized into unions, they are afraid to [illegible] their grievances against their employers in public although the penalty may be no greater than discharge from the job. How much more timid most Negro soldiers [illegible] such a cse when the fear of erprisal by a commanding officer extends much farther than the utmost reprisal possible from a civilian employer?"

Protests Jim Crow In Post Exchange

Here is a letter I have written to the President of the United States:

I understand that we, the American people are fighting in a war so as to keep within the borders of our country what we call democracy. The word in itself spells out just that something that puts us on the edge to see it through but is it really worth fighting for on the part of the Negro race? Will we really have a place to fit into at the close of this war?

About an hour ago an incident occurred here in this camp that I shall always remember. I walked into a post exchange that is supposed to serve the entire camp here at Sutton. After I had bought a few necessary items, I walked over to the sandwich counter to get a couple of sandwiches. There stood another colored soldier. After we had waited in line for an hour for service, and just when we were about to be served, a guard walked over and replied, "You will have to leave soldiers." Looking about us and being in the midst of more than 200 white soldiers, we asked to whom he was speaking and his reply was, "No colored soldiers allowed in this Post Exchange." Two of the white soldiers remarked, "Why can't they stay and be served, they're soldiers aren't they?" But knowing conditions we immediately left the store without any further words.

Is this what we're fighting to hold? Is not the sacrifice of leaving our loved ones and homes great enough? Do we not leave our homes in answer to your calls whenever it is given with a smile on our faces and with just the amount of grit to put the program over? We have always been true and loyal to the flag of our country and history has never recorded a betrayal of the Negro. Our loved ones on the home front have rolled up their sleeves and gone into the fight there and many a sacrifice has been made in buying bonds to do their part there.

Will we always have to face this expression, "Your face is black, and you will have to leave." It is true that America has white sons on the battle front but it also must be remembered that she has black sons with hearts of gold and most eager to give their last drop of blood to defend the cause. We do not choose to eat, sleep nor socialize with our white brothers, but as long as the best post exchanges are built for them with all of the necessary items, we do feel as black sons of these United States of America, that doors to your army exchanges should never be closed in our faces.

Yes, our hearts were pierced again today with that little arrow so often shot, called "Jim Crowism" and time will heal the wound but what about the scar?. The scar will always be there. Yes there will be peace again, but for how long? As long as there is hatred, tmalice, prejudices and Jim Crowism within our borders, peace will come, yes peace will come but like the wings of the morning, will take its flight again.

Sailor Assails Tenn. Discrimination

I am a sailor on a base in Millington, Tennessee. It has one of the worse systems in which to run the place. None of us here can hardly say anything toward getting a break without the officers in charge putting us on extra duty. It is a place which will only lead to trouble. We are called "niggers" by the officers, enlistees and others who are on the station. When we report these actions to the Officer of the Day, [illegible] are only wasting our time.

One officers, a commander, stated to me one day when I told him how they were treating us: "You niggers are in the South now and you must do like the southerners do. If not, you will be transferred to the brig." How can we stand it down here with such carrying on.

We are here to help win the war. They have a canteen in every hall down here for the white sailors. Half of them will not wait on us and when they do they say "What do you want niggers?" so we have to leave. The S. P. on the station calls you the same along with the other officers. I am writing you in our barracks as we do not have a place to write our letters. We don't have a recreation hall or have time to have any fun. We work from morning until night and extra duty if we kick.

When we serve them, they call us "niggers" and one of our boys is in the brig because he talked back to the officers who called him the name.

When we go to town, they treat us like dogs. The S. P.'s will call you "niggers" along with the city police. They run you off the streets and make you do things they wouldn't make the others do.

There are some that are O. K.—the chaplains and some officers. I hope I did not take up too much of your time.

In closing I remain a great reader of the colored paper for which I one sold in my own home town. Thanking you kindly for your time we are proud and happy to know that we could tell our troubles to you. A sailor in the service in Millington, Tennessee.

Protests Alton Levy Sentence

NOV 13 1943

NEW YORK — Contrasting the court-martials of Sgt. Alton Levy of the Lincoln, Nebraska Air Base, who fought for Negro rights and Col. William T. Colman of Selfridge Field, Michigan, who shot a Negro soldier, the Workers Defense League last week reiterated its plea to President Roosevelt that former Sgt. Levy be freed and restored to his rank.

At the same time the league secretary, Morris Milgram, declared "a great victory for democrary" had been won when Brig. Gen. Early E. Duncan, in charge of the Army Air Base in Lincoln, where Levy [illegible] serving four months at hard labor for protesting discrimination against Negro soldiers, had reversed himself after ordering that Private Levy was to have no more visitors, as a result of widespread press and public protests.

ASKS PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT TO COMMUTE LEVY SENTENCE

Call Post Cincinnati Ohio

NOV 6 1943

WASHINGTON—(ANP) — President Roosevelt was called upon to commute the sentence of Pvt. Alton Levy last Tuesday when attorney for the soldiers, Leon M. Despres of Chicago, filed a brief with the chief executive summarizing the errors said to have been committed in the courtmartial proceedings against Levy.

Levy is now under a four-month sentence at hard labor at Lincoln Army Air base, Lincoln, Neb.

Introducing the summary, Atty. Despres said that "A careful analysis of all available material leads to the conclusion that the conviction of Alton Levy results from action directed particularly against him for his championship of Negro soldiers' rights and for his personal background as organizer for a labor union."

Levy had been charged with circulating rumor that the wife of the commander of the base, Gen. Early Duncan, dominated base policy. The summary points out that this was a rumor that had already gained wide currency and that he was not imparting new knowledege to anyone. The brief points out that although testimony disclosed that several soldiers had been questioned about the rumors, he was the only one singled out for punishment.

Levy's view regarding the treatment of Negro soldiers was generally known although he had never expressed his views at a formal staff meeting. He maintained his views in this respect were substantially correct, but that the court-martial refused to probe these charges to determine their accuracy. The brief maintained, in this respect, that the statements of Levy were of sufficient interest to warrant probing, otherwise why would they have been made part of the charges against him.

Atty. Despes questioned the propriety of having Gen. Duncan, who was the alleged cause of much of the grievance, appoint the members of the court-martial. "Although Brig. Gen. Duncan may not have been technically the signer of the charges underlying the specifications", says the brief, "(the identity of the actual signer of the charges against Levy has never been revealed), he was directly involved in the statements charged to Levy".

Finally, it is pointed out, that after the court had announced a conclusion of not guilty, a finding of guilty was clearly [illegible]lar.

At press time there was no indication what disposition the President would make of the request for commutation, nor was there any relenting on the part of the war department.

White Sergeant Jailed; Condemned Army Bias

Declares He Wouldn't Deny Charges If He Could; Gets 4 Months in Brig

SEP 18 1943

A young white soldier, Alton Levy, of the Bronx, N. Y., is in the guard house today at the Lincoln, Nebraska, Air Base, because he apparently protested too often against the discriminatory treatment of the Negro soldiers at the base.

Gets "Busted"

Formerly a staff sergeant, Levy was recently charged with conduct unbecoming a soldier. He was court-martialed on Aug. 13, reduced to the rank of private and sentenced to four months in the guard house at hard labor with an $18 a month forfeiture of pay. Prosecuting Army officers were reported as having referred to his activity and statements in behalf of the Negro soldiers as "unpatriotic" and "reprehensible."

Appealed to President

A group of New York liberals and labor leaders have urged President Roosevelt to review the case of Pvt. Levy. In an open letter to the President, Secretary of War Stimson, Army Chief of Staff Marshall and Judge Advocate Cramer, they warned that "the existing racial tensions in this nation are already so great that we must be extremely careful not to penalize those who seek to establish better relationships between the races."

Supporting Appeal

Among those who signed the protest were Roger Baldwin, director of the American Civil Liberties Union; A. Philip Randolph, international president, Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters; John Chamberlain, New York Times book reviewer; Lester Granger, executive secretary, National Urban League; Father William C. Kernan, director, Christian American Institute for Democracy; William Agar, director, Freedom House; Morris Milgram, secretary, Workers Defense League, and Ann Arnold Hedgeman, of the Brooklyn NAACP.

After being inducted into the Army, Levy spent a period of basic military training in the South, then was transferred to the Lincoln Air Base at Lincoln, Neb. He rose to the rank of staff sergeant, and noting the treatment of Negro troops tioned at the base, he obtained his assignment to work with them. In a series of letters to a New York friend, he wrote:

Segregated in Barracks

"I told you, I think, that we have about 300 Negro illiterates we are training. Well, they finally segregated them in barracks about two miles away from where we stay.

"Most of the whites in charge of them are Southerners. Naturally, as a result, they are treated like dogs. They are kept in camp while the others are allowed out. They sleep in old canvas cots while the others sleep in the new army cots and mattresses and all the trimmin's. And, they are hounded and harassed and yelled at and cursed and insulted and generally treated abominably.

"I have been protesting against the treatment they have been getting ever since I arrive here. At staff meetings and in sessions with the officers I have made my criticism clear. In fact, while I have not been the only one to feel this way, I have been the only one to make my feelings public to officers and enlisted men."

He concludes this letter by saying: "Already, I am called 'Nigger lover.' "

On Aug. 9, shortly after a riot between Mexican and Negro soldiers at the Lincoln Air Base, Levy wrote that he had been examined by Army intelligence officers about the objections he was supposed to have voiced concerning the treatment of the Negro soldiers. He admitted that he had made the statements about the Negroes, but denied the other charges made against him, which included an allegation that he had termed the general a "drunkard."

At the court martial, which was held on Friday, Aug. 13, the chief testimony against Levy was given by a WAC, Pfc. Helen Perkins, and another girl, whom Levy and some other soldiers had met socially. Pvt. Perkins also gave evidence against four other soldiers with whom she had dates. Levy wrote that the names of the men "were Rothman, Greenbaum, Josephson, Levy and Bolton. Bolton," he said, "the only Aryan to be turned in, was the guy who visited with me at the home of the girl at the bar. As it developed it was a good thing that he was there because it was his testimony which defisitely cleared me of the charge she made against me—that I had deliberately made the positive statement that Mrs. Duncan (wife of the General) owned the bus line and that the general was a drunkard."

Denying all of the charges except his statements about the mistreatment of the Negro soldiers, Levy told the officers of the court-martial that "I wouldn't deny them if I could. I said them and I still say them."

Born in New York City, Levy is 29, attended Townsend Harris High School and the College of the City of New York. He is a former organizer for the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, AFL, an amateur writer of songs and skits, one of the latter having been used on a Fred Allen radio program. Since becoming a soldier, some of his material has been used in shows at Army posts, his biggest song hit being "G I Love You."

In an interview with Pvt. Levys family—his father, Morris Levy and his sisters, Harriett and Lila Levy—they stated that they were one hundred per cent with their son and brother on the attitude he had taken; that while they regretted that he had lost all he had worked so hard to gain since entering the Army, they were more than proud of the fact that he had not allowed being in the Army to close his eyes to the discrimination and mistreatment of another minority group of his fellowmen who were serving in that same Army.

Meanwhile, the Workers Defense League, headed by Morris Milgram and Laurence T. Hosie, has joined together with CIO and AFL unions, and many liberal leaders, for an organized protest against the court-martialing of Levy as well as "to protect against the continued Jim Crowing of Negroes in the United States armed forces."

Army-Navy Restrictions Held Down Volunteers to 2 Per Cent; Illiteracy Rejections 5 Times White Rate

December 5, 1942.

WASHINGTON

The effect of segregation as a deterrent upon the total war effort was spotlighted last week with the release of Selective Service's report of its operations covering the year following Pearl Harbor.

The 674-page report, issued by General Lewis B. Hershey, national director, was submitted to President Roosevelt as a record of the administration of the Selective Service Act covering the period from December 7, 1941, to December 5, 1942.

In eighteen pages of the report, devoted to "Negroes and Selective Service," the lowered rates of induction of colored men resulting from discriminatory practices both within and outside of the services were shown.

Only 1.8 Per Cent Volunteer

According to the report, only 1.8 per cent of the 3,015,550 colored men registered for military duty enlisted voluntarily. This small percentage was attributed to restrictions placed upon colored voluntary enlistments by the army, navy, marine corps, and coast guard.

One of the major and yet unsolved problems encountered by selective service, it was pointed out, is the high rejection rate among colored registrants because of educational deficiency which is five times as high as that among whites.

Declaring that the largest numbers of illiterates are found in the sections where separate school systems exist, the report stated that no national program has yet been devised to give pre-induction training to illiterate registrants and so increase their availability for military service.

Urge Colored Educators

As a corrective measure, the report urged that conferences of the War Department, Selective Service, the U.S. Office of Education and other government agencies directed toward relief of the situation include colored educators.

Relaxation of army rules on educational requirements, while permitting induction of higher numbers of colored, has also had the effect of increasing the problem of education within the army.

Following its statement that venereal diseases form the most important cause for rejection of colored registrants, the report stated that remedial steps are being taken and added:

Rays Poor Housing

"There is growing recognition of the social aspect of these diseases. Bad housing is recognized as a significant factor in the prevalence of venereal diseases.

"A number of the larger urban communities have undertaken to improve housing conditions among colored people during the last few years, but this work has practically stopped because of the effect of war conditions on building construction."

Prosecuting Army officers were reported as having referred to his activity and statements in behalf of the Negro soldiers as "unpatriotic" and "reprehensible."

Appealed to President

A group of New York liberals and labor leaders have urged President Roosevelt to review the case of Pvt. Levy. In an open letter to the President, Secretary of War Stimson, Army Chief of Staff Marshall and Judge Advocate Cramer, they warned that "the existing racial tensions in this nation are already so great that we must be extremely careful not to penalize those who seek to establish better relationships between the races."

Supporting Appeal

Among those who signed the protest were Roger Baldwin, director of the American Civil Liberties Union; A. Philip Randolph, international president, Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters; John Chamberlain, New York Times book reviewer; Lester Granger, executive secretary, National Urban League; Father William C. Kernan, director, Christian American Institute for Democracy; William Agar, director, Freedom House; Morris Milgram, secretary, Workers Defense League, and Ann Arnold Hedgeman, of the Brooklyn NAACP.

After being inducted into the Army, Levy spent a period of basic military training in the South, then was transferred to the Lincoln Air Base at Lincoln, Neb. He rose to the rank of staff sergeant, and noting the treatment of Negro troops tioned at the base, he obtained his assignment to work with them. In a series of letters to a New York friend, he wrote:

Segregated in Barracks

"I told you, I think, that we have about 300 Negro illiterates we are training. Well, they finally segregated them in barracks about two miles away from where we stay.

"Most of the whites in charge of them are Southerners. Naturally, as a result, they are treated like dogs. They are kept in camp while the others are allowed out. They sleep in old canvas cots while the others sleep in the new army cots and mattresses and all the trimmin's. And, they are hounded and harassed and yelled at and cursed and insulted and generally treated abominably.

"I have been protesting against the treatment they have been getting ever since I arrive here. At staff meetings and in sessions with the officers I have made my criticism clear. In fact, while I have not been the only one to feel this way, I have been the only one to make my feelings public to officers and enlisted men."

He concludes this letter by saying: "Already, I am called 'Nigger lover.' "

On Aug. 9, shortly after a riot between Mexican and Negro soldiers at the Lincoln Air Base, Levy wrote that he had been examined by Army intelligence officers about the objections he was supposed to have voiced concerning the treatment of the Negro soldiers. He admitted that he had made the statements about the Negroes, but denied the other charges made against him, which included an allegation that he had termed the general a "drunkard."

At the court martial, which was held on Friday, Aug. 13, the chief testimony against Levy was given by a WAC, Pfc. Helen Perkins, and another girl, whom Levy and some other soldiers had met socially. Pvt. Perkins also gave evidence against four other soldiers with whom she had dates. Levy wrote that the names of the men "were Rothman, Greenbaum, Josephson, Levy and Bolton. Bolton," he said, "the only Aryan to be turned in, was the guy who visited with me at the home of the girl at the bar. As it developed it was a good thing that he was there because it was his testimony which defisitely cleared me of the charge she made against me—that I had deliberately made the positive statement that Mrs. Duncan (wife of the General) owned the bus line and that the general was a drunkard."

Denying all of the charges except his statements about the mistreatment of the Negro soldiers, Levy told the officers of the court-martial that "I wouldn't deny them if I could. I said them and I still say them."

Born in New York City, Levy is 29, attended Townsend Harris High School and the College of the City of New York. He is a former organizer for the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, AFL, an amateur writer of songs and skits, one of the latter having been used on a Fred Allen radio program. Since becoming a soldier, some of his material has been used in shows at Army posts, his biggest song hit being "G I Love You."

In an interview with Pvt. Levys family—his father, Morris Levy and his sisters, Harriett and Lila Levy—they stated that they were one hundred per cent with their son and brother on the attitude he had taken; that while they regretted that he had lost all he had worked so hard to gain since entering the Army, they were more than proud of the fact that he had not allowed being in the Army to close his eyes to the discrimination and mistreatment of another minority group of his fellowmen who were serving in that same Army.

Meanwhile, the Workers Defense League, headed by Morris Milgram and Laurence T. Hosie, has joined together with CIO and AFL unions, and many liberal leaders, for an organized protest against the court-martialing of Levy as well as "to protect against the continued Jim Crowing of Negroes in the United States armed forces."

Segregation Takes Huge Toll in Selective Service Program

Army-Navy Restrictions Held Down Volunteers to 2 Per Cent; Illiteracy Rejections 5 Times White Rate

WASHINGTON

The effect of segregation as a deterrent upon the total war effort was spotlighted last week with the release of Selective Service's report of its operations covering the year following Pearl Harbor.

The 674-page report, issued by General Lewis B. Hershey, national director, was submitted to President Roosevelt as a record of the administration of the Selective Service Act covering the period from December 7, 1941, to December 5, 1942.

In eighteen pages of the report, devoted to "Negroes and Selective Service," the lowered rates of induction of colored men resulting from discriminatory practices both within and outside of the services were shown.

Only 1.8 Per Cent Volunteer

According to the report, only 1.8 per cent of the 3,015,550 colored men registered for military duty enlisted voluntarily. This small percentage was attributed to restrictions placed upon colored voluntary enlistments by the army, navy, marine corps, and coast guard.

One of the major and yet unsolved problems encountered by selective service, it was pointed out, is the high rejection rate among colored registrants because of educational deficiency which is five times as high as that among whites.

Declaring that the largest numbers of illiterates are found in the sections where separate school systems exist, the report stated that no national program has yet been devised to give pre-induction training to illiterate registrants and so increase their availability for military service.

Urge Colored Educators

As a corrective measure, the report urged that conferences of the War Department, Selective Service, the U.S. Office of Education and other government agencies directed toward relief of the situation include colored educators.

Relaxation of army rules on educational requirements, while permitting induction of higher numbers of colored, has also had the effect of increasing the problem of education within the army.

Following its statement that venereal diseases form the most important cause for rejection of colored registrants, the report stated that remedial steps are being taken and added:

Raps Poor Housing

"There is growing recognition of the social aspect of these diseases. Bad housing is recognized as a significant factor in the prevalence of venereal diseases.

"A number of the larger urban communities have undertaken to improve housing conditions among colored people during the last few years, but this work has practically stopped because of the effect of war conditions on building construction."

Protest Fails to Halt Jim-Crow Battalion at Fort Des Moines

Baltimore, M
Afro-American
SEP 7 1943

FORT DES MOINES, Ia.—Following almost upon the heels of a protest to Col. Oveta Culp Hobby, WAC head, against the setting up of separate regiments at first WAC training center, here, an all colored battalion, staffed by colored officers, was organized last week.

Va. [illegible] Nash is recuperating

Segregation Opposed

Two weeks ago a committee headed by Mrs. Jeanette W. Brown, executive secretary of the National Council of Negro Women, told Director Hobby that it directly opposed the setting up of a separate regiment of colored WAC's at Des Moines because this will set back any program of full integration in the Women's Army, and follow the segregation pattern of the regular army.

Wanted Enlistment Aid

Mrs. Brown had, at that time, just returned from a government sponsored tour of WAC training centers, given for the purpose of having the tourists return and interest their organizations in aiding in a drive to recruit more young women for the service.

At that time, the National Council of Negro Women said that it could not advocate enlistment unless the WAC offered all advantages of training and promotion, without segregation, to all inductees. The council is the only non-white member of the Women's Interest Bureau of the War Department.

The committee which made the protest included Dr. Mary Bethune, president of the council; Miss Elsie Austin, attorney; Mrs. Thomasina Johnson, chairman of the A.K.A. Non-Partisan Council; Mrs. Venice Spragg, national chairman of the employment department of NCNW; Miss Dorothy Height, executive secretary of the Washington YWCA; Mrs. Julia West Hamilton, president of the YWCA; Miss Hilda Orr, NCNW, and Mrs. Borwn.

All-Colored Unit

The new battalion is under command of First Officer Sarah E. Jackson, First Officer Jackson took over her new duties, last week, with an acting battalion adjutant and an acting sergeant major comprising the battalion staff.

The company commanders of the new battalion are Second Officers Ina McFadden, Glendora Moore, Vera Campbell, Alma O. Berry and Oleta Crain.

Hastie Urges Fight On Army Jim Crow

NOV 3 1943
Daily Worker New York N.Y.

William H. Hastie, who resigned as civilian aide to the Secretary of War in protest over Army jim crow, urged a crowd which packed the Allen AME Church, South Jamaica, Sunday night, to intensify its fight against mistreatment of the Negro soldier on the home front.

Mr. Hastie, who is dean of the Howard University Law School, Washington, D. C., and a former Federal judge in the Virgin Islands, also told his 700 Negro and white hearers that Congress, in killing the Federal aid to education bill because it would have helped Negroes, hurt the white child as well as the Negro child.

Referring to Comptroller General Lindsay Warren's ruling last week that the President's executive order against discrimination by employers holding war contracts was not mandatory, Mr. Hastie said that Warren asked Mobilization Director James Byrnes for an "interpretation" of that part of Executive Order 9346 which said that "contracting agencies" . . . "shall include in all contracts" . . . "a provision obligating the contractor not to discriminate," etc.

Byrnes is reported to have said the President did not mean "must," whereupon Warren issued the ruling limiting the power of the Fair Employment Practice Committee.

Mr. Hastie said that the President himself must be requested by the people to say what he meant and to say it without delay.

FORECASTS HEARINGS

He forecast a public hearing in Washington soon on the numerous complaints of Army jim crow and the general mistreatment of the Negro soldier on the home front.

The meeting was called by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People both as a testimonal to Mr. Hastie for his work in behalf of the Negro service men and to acquaint the community further with facts in the case of James Penn, imprisoned Negro worker charged with "mugging." Penn, 27 and married, was at work at the time the alleged "mugging" was committed, according to witnesses. Money is being raised for an appeal.

Joseph Green, president of the Jamaica branch of the Negro Labor Victory Committee and Communist leader, was repeatedly applauded as he analyzed the war situation as it affected the Negro people.

Green said: "We are fighting racial oppression on a world scale and that world-wide oppression of Negroes, Jews and other minorities is led by Hitler and the Nazi armies. That is why we need a second land front in Western Europe. We've got to smash these armies completely and liberate the world from fascist racialism."

He was loudly applauded.

Discourage Six Girls Trying To Join WAVES

AUG 18 1943
Atlanta, Georgia

Applicants Given Rush Act in D. C.

Daily World

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — Six girls were rebuffed when they sought vainly to to join the WAVES at a recruiting office Friday afternoon. Although two were able to wangle applications out of the recruiting officer, every means of discouraging them was made, even to closing down the office because "it was too hot."

Two of the girls entered the office first. They were Hazel Lee of Cleveland, graduate of the New York Secretarial School and of the Howard School of Dentistry as a hygienist; and Althea Jefferson of Washington, Pa., a stenographer and [illegible]. Their names and [illegible] were taken, they were given literature and told that 'no plans" had yet been made for them.

As they left, Zelma Hammond of San Francisco and Bernice Jacobs of Los Angeles entered the office. Miss Hammond received her bachelor's degree in biology and economics at San Francisco State College while Miss Jacobs, a graduate of the University of California, has taught school in Texas and is now engaged on her masters in American history. The yeomen was taking the name of Miss Hammond when a superior officer summoned him. Another carried on and got as far as the name of Miss Jacobs when an unidentified officer came through and told them they were closing for the day since the heat was terrific. The yeoman never finished taking the address and the front door was closed. They were given literature and asked to leave by the rear, refused, and were finaly shown through the front door.

OFFICE CLOSED

About half an hour later, Cleomine B. Lewis of Tulsa, Okla., and Cora E. Wright, Lancaster, S. C., sought to apply. Miss Lewis has her degree in English from Virginia Union university and is a stenographer, while Miss Wright is a graduate of South Carolina State College, has taught two years, and now attends Howard. Upon entering they were told that the office really was closed but that "a little breeze" came along and so they opened for a few minutes.

They approached the desk and immediately the recruiting officer busied himself at the telephone, although he had said nothing into it for five minutes when a superior officer called for him. Upon returning, the [illegible] explained, he was cordial and appeared to want to be helpful. They were given applications, paraphernalia and literature, and told to fill them out at home. They wanted to do it there but were discouraged since the office couldn't permit it after five o'clock.

No explanation, official or otherwise, has been forthcoming. The navy department refuses to say that is the status of its consideration of plans to accept Negro women into the WAVES. Meanwhile, the AKA Non-Partisan Council on Public Affairs continues to press its campaign to force the issue with the navy department, insisting that it be done too on a non-segregated basis.

Court Martial White Officer For Criticising Treatment Of Colored Troops In The South

Guardian
Boston, Mass
SEP 11 1943

Leaders Protest To President

Protesting the courtmarshialing of Sergeant Alton Levy of the Lincoln, Nebraska Air Base for his expressed disapprval of the Army's treatment of colored troops stationed there, a score of leading liberals, including William M. Agar, Roger N Baldwin, Lester Granger, A Philip Randolph, Norman Thomas, Irving Abramson, Reinhold Niebuhr, John Chamberlain, and Charles S Zimmerman, urged that President Roosevelt and high Army circles conduct a thorough review of the case. Sgt Levy is serving 4 months at hard labor in the Lincoln Air Base guardhouse after having been demoted to a private for [illegible] ing the discriminatory treatment the colored troops received.

In the open letter to the President, Secretary Stimson Army Chief of Staff Marshall and Judge Advocate General Cramer, the liberal group pointed to the dangerous reaction upon army and civilian morale resulting from the persecution of those who believe in democracy and equality between races. Noting that racial tensions in the nation were already "great", the President and Army chiefs were warned against penalizing "those who seek to establish better relationships between the races," and [illegible] action on the case.

Sergeant Levy, 29, of New York City, a former organizer for the International Garment Workers Union, rose to the rank of staff sergeant in the year of service he saw. At the Lincoln Air Base in Nebraska he was assigned to work with colored troops, and noted the discriminatory treatment to the soldiers of that race in the matter of new equipment in their Jim Crow segregation and their rude treatment by officers. Levy protested repeatedly at local staff meetings against the undemocratic treatment of the colored troops, both because of his concern for the principles of demcracy and his fear of increased race conflict.

Early in August, after a riot between Americans of Mexican descent and colored troops, Levy was questioned by Army intelligence officers on alleged statements he had made, primarily his protests against the treatment of colored troops at the post. Levy admitted the statements of protest against colored troop life, but denied the other charges. On August 13, the Army authorities instituted formal prosecution of the charges with Levy's courtmartial on grounds of conduct unbecoming a soldier.

Officer Hates Negroes, Asks Transfer From Unit

Chicago, Ill. Defender

JUL 3 1943

LOS ANGELES, Cal. — A white army lieutenant has just requested transfer from the 93rd Division because he hates Negroes, the Defender learned early this week.

Lieut. Howard D. Steward, a recently commissioned officer in the famous 25th Infantry, made the request in a letter addressed to General Fred Miller, and gave as his reason "my prejudice against Negroes."

The letter, which pleaded for relief from duty with the 93rd Division and transfer to a white unit, said, in part: "I feel that I can be of more service to the army in another organization. My dislike for Negro soldiers has become an obsession with me and I feel that my services to the government are not as useful as they might be with white troops."

Declaring that he was not aware of his hatred for Negroes while he was serving as public relations officer of the division, Steward declared: "It was not until I was transferred to a regiment and had closer contact with them that I realized how much I dislike them. Many times I think I have been unjust in my decisions and actions with soldiers because of my dislike for their race."

Col. E. M. Yon, commanding the 25th Infantry, recommended approval of the transfer with the statement "I believe that his general value to the 93rd Division is very negligible."

By his own action and admission, Lieut. Steward gave indisputable support to the many arguments that have been advanced against the army's stubbornness in refusing to man Negro units with colored officers. While critics have held that there is no logical excuse for the setting up of Negro divisions, as such, in the first place, it has been contended that the least the government could do would be to place colored officers in charge of colored soldiers.

Steward was appointed to a second lieutenancy on December 12, 1941, and to a first lieutenancy on September 28, 1942.

White Sergeant Courtmartialed For Friendliness To Race Troops

Chicago, Ill Defender

SEP 11 1943

(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON. — Courtmartialed, reduced to a private, fined and sentenced to four months in the guardhouse!

This is the experience of Sgt. Alton Levy—now Private Levy—all because he expressed his opposition to the jim-crow and unfair treatment accorded Negro soldiers at the army base in Lincoln, Nebraska. Levy is white and Jewish.

A touch of anti-semitism figures in the case, too. The charges against Levy are reported to have grown out of a report made by a Wac, allegedly planted by the intelligence division. She is reputed to have "dated" twelve soldiers over a period of investigation. But the only six she submitted unfavorable reports on were six Jewish soldiers.

Levy's persecution was based on reports that he had made remarks about the general and his wife, about the running of the post, about Lincoln, Neb., politics and the effect of it upon the post, and about the Negroes and the way they are mistreated. He denied all the remarks except those concerning the Negroes. He admits saying the Negroes are ill-treated.

Protested Bad Treatment

Although the Wac is reported to have admitted there was nothing unpatriotic about Levy's statements, and though the evidence was flimsy concerning his statements other than concerning Negroes, he was found guilty on court-martial. The case is now passing through the routine process of review, where it will probably be automatically approved—unless the public voices its protest of such gestapoism.

The following letter, written in July by Levy to a friend sets forth some of the things concerning Negroes about which he admitted having made statements—which statements became the basis for his court-martial, reduction in rank, fine and imprisonment:

"I told you, I think, that we have about 300 Negro illiterates we are training. Well—they finally segregated them in barracks about two miles from where we stay.

"Most of the whites in charge of them are Southerners. Naturally, as a result, they are treated like dogs. They are kept in camp while the others are allowed out. They sleep in old canvas cots while the others sleep in the new army cots with mattresses and 'all the trimmins'. And, they are hounded and harassed and yelled at and cursed and insulted and generally treated abominably.

Moves To Area

"They're afraid to move. They get no sympathy and no help. It's unbelievable. I have had ever so many fights about it. I've argued and protested but all in vain. Today, the commanding officer asked me if I wanted to take charge of the office they've set up in the Negro area. I immediately said 'yes,' and was assigned there. Actually, nobody else wanted it. All of the drill instructors and teachers have refused to live in this area with the men even though it means hoofing two miles each morning in order to get to them.

"I have moved down here and am, so far, the only white living in the area. I don't know how much good I'll be able to do for them. I may be able to get them more passes and a recreational hall for themselves. Treatment is usually a reflection of the officer in charge, so changes will depend upon his attitude.

"I have been protesting against the treatment they have been getting ever since I arrived here. At staff meetings and in sessions with the officers I have made my criticism clear. In fact, while I have not been the only one to feel this way, I have been the only one to make my feelings public to officers and enlisted men.

"Already, I am called 'Nigger lover,' etc. They can't understand me (the whites, I mean). 'How can you live with them and use the same toilet?'—that sort of stuff. For my part I like it. It's interesting and besides, I'm curious to see exactly how much I can do with them. I only wish I had more control and authority over them than I do. This way my hands are tied."

Jim Crow Seaman's Service Unit Flayed

Pittsburgh, Pa Courier

OCT 9 194

BALTIMORE, Md.—(ANP)—An investigation of the policy of the local comittee of the United Seamen's service by the national headquarters was reported under way last week after the disclosure that colored seamen are not allowed the use of lodging and recreational facilties of the Seaman's Service club here.

The color bar was exposed by Archie Jenkins, 73-year-old merchant marine cook, who had just returned from a voyage to a war zone. Mr. Jenkins reported making a visit to the club to secure accommodations for overnight, just as two white seamen were checking out and that he was told that colored seamen were not provided lodging.

BAN ADMITTED

That the club does have a ban against colored seamen using the facilities was later admitted by Victor W. Bowyer, white, post executive, who is in charge of the club.

Mr. Boyer said that the port committee had enunciated the policy for the club and in doing so had taken into consideration local traditions. He added that "we over at the club are in a different spot" in the matter.

ANTI-BIAS STEPS BEGIN

James Drury, white, port agent for the National Maritime union, asserted this week that some steps to eradicate the discrimination at the club have already begun. He added:

"The question of denying the use of the facilities of the club to colored seamen was raised by a representative of the shipping industry and vigorously opposed by the union, backed by representatives of the War Shipping administration.

"The matter was referred to the National United Seamen's service body and the national office upheld the contention of the union. Despite that, the local committee has not seen fit to reverse its ruling denying the use of the facilities to colored seamen."

Board Rejects Pettit for Training as Bombardier

Baltimore. Md Afro-American

BALTIMORE

Despite the fact that Acting Secretary of War Robert Patterson announced July 15 that colored men would be trained as bombardiers and navigators, the local Aviation Cadet Examining Board has rejected the application of George D. Pettit.

Young Pettit, 21, a former student at A. and T. College, Greensboro, N.C., passed the board's examination with a score of 188 on August 20, and was ordered to report for physical examination Tuesday morning.

Rejected on Height

In the midst of the examination he was informed that he was too tall (Pettit is seventy-three inches tall) to be a fighter pilot and that there was no need to continue with the examination, as the army was accepting colored men only as members of pursuit squadron forces.

At the same time, however, white applicants may be seventy-six inches in height and qualify as glider, fighter, instructor, bomber, observation, and numerous other pilot posts.

Sought Three Jobs

When Pettit applied to take the examination, he said that it was his understanding it would qualify him for three pilot jobs: bombardier, navigator, or ordinary pilot.

Eight others, all white, took the examination along with Pettit

Sergeant, Busted to Private, Had Served Three Months of Term

New York, N. Y

NOV 14 1943

Pvt. Alton Levy, form[illegible]or organizer, has been released from the Army stockade at Lincoln, [illegible] Air Base after serving 88 days of a four-month sentence. He has been transferred to an undisclosed camp after completion of his sentence, which was shortened by the accumulation of time off for good behavior.

The Public Relations Office at the base said Levy was returned to duty as a private, to which rank he had been reduced from sergeant when sentenced.

Levy's sudden release from the Army prison camp came as a complete surprise to his father, Morris Levy, of the Bronx, and to his sister, Harriet Levy. Only last week, Miss Levy visited her brother at the Base, but Army authorities barred her from discussing the case, which brought nationwide protests from liberal and labor organizations.

Late Friday night, his family received a telegram from Levy from Kansas City, Mo., which read:

"Released at 10 in morning. On train at 11. Wonderful to be out again. Will write. Alton."

A form[illegible]e International Ladies' Garment Workers Union, AFL, Levy was sent to the stockade, stripped of his sergeant's stripes and demoted to private on three counts, the main count charging that he "wilfully and maliciously" made "false statements" about the mistreatment of Negro soldiers at the Base. The other two counts accused him of circulating slanderous remarks about the commanding officer, Brig. Gen. Early Duncan, and his wife.

Evidence presented during the trial, and since the court-martial, cited numerous instances of the mistreatment of Negroes at the Base. At the time Levy was brought before the Base's officials, Levy was preparing a full report to his superiors on the mishandling of Negro soldiers at the Base, pointing out that Negroes were segregated in "ghetto-like" quarters, discriminated against in the issuance of passes and provided with inferior recreational fac[illegible].

Levy also denied the War Dept.'s charge that he circulated rumors about Gen. and Mrs. Duncan. Leon M. Despres in letters to the War Dept. pointed out that these rumors were known to Army authorities months before Levy's trial.

Despite protests from AFL and the power of truth and justice.

"But the fight is not yet won. Already we have secured many improvements in the conditions of Negro soldiers at the Lincoln Army Air Base and we have obtained the freedom of a [illegible] soldier. The Workers Defense Lea[illegible]ks the aid of all progressive Americans in keeping up the fight to win the restitution of his stripes and to end the system of Army Jim Crow against which Pvt. Levy fought. Restitution of Pvt. Levy to his rank of staff sergeant is essential to give courage to thousands of soldier boys [illegible] War Dept. stood by its original [illegible] Levy was not punished for his criticism of the mistreatment of Negroes. The War Dept., however, refused to make public the testimony at the trial.

Decision Questioned

Supporters of Levy also questioned the final decision of the court-martial, pointing out that 48 hours before the final sentence was announced, Levy appeared to have been acquitted of the charges. That was on Saturday, Aug. 14. On Monday, Aug. 16, the court of seven officers again convened, recalled one of the witnesses who had testified against Levy, and found Levy guilty of all the charges.

The Levy case dates back to Aug. 9, about a week after Levy arrived at the Base and was asisgned to work in the Negro area. On that day he was called before three officers for questioning about statements [illegible]sedly made to WAC Cpl. Helen Perkins, who was in charge of registering civilians at the Base's Service Club, and to a Miss Helen Anderson, of Lincoln.

The officers accused Levy of saying that "the Base is run by Mrs. Duncan for her sole benefit, with the approval of her political friends," and that "the colored soldiers at the base are being mistreated." He was also accused of saying that "approximately 290 colored soldiers are at the Base but only 40 are allowed to go to town at night because Mrs. Duncan does not want her friends shocked by the sight of a drunken Negro on the streets of Lincoln."

Levy denied making any of the statements, except that "Negro soldiers are mis[illegible]d at the Base." According to [illegible]res, Le[illegible] freely admitted that statement and elaborated on it."

Morris Milgram, national secretary of the Workers Defense League, which led the fight for Levy's release, said:

"Pvt. Levy's release is a great victory for democracy, a victory for the average man. People kept saying that the Army could not be influenced by public opinion. This victory shows the power of the thousands of letters that deluged the White House, the power of the liberal, labor, Negro and Church press which championed his cause who believe in the enforcement of the anti-discrimination clause in the Selective Service Act.

"Gen. Duncan had threatened that Levy would not be freed if the public protest continued. Levy was freed just because of the national public demand of soldiers and civilians, of WA[illegible]d housewives that justice be done. Many [illegible]nown thousands participated [illegible]nning this victory.

"This is a victory against Army Jim Crow and we must press our advantage now by demanding its end."

"Post" Says H[illegible]And Violence Visited Upon Colored Troops Is Dangerous Disregard Of Professed Democratic Principles

WASHINGTON, August 26.—In a[illegible]forthright editorial statem[illegible] Washington Post, leading c[illegible]l daily, last week charged that the "humiliation" and "violence" visited against Negro soldiers by both white soldiers and civilians, and the consigning of colored troopers to an "inferior status" is "one more manifestation of a dangerous disregard of democratic values which has been c[illegible]d over from civilian [illegible] into the armed services."

Declaring it the inescapable duty of the army to "promote among its enlisted personnel a decent regard for the rights and feelings" of Negroes in the service, the Post suggested launching of educational programs among whites to afford a "greater knowledge of the Negro's contribution to the war effort, of his legitimate aspirations. They simply cannot e[illegible]ively wage a united nations war with color prejudices in their minds."

"Efforts must be made at the same time to make Negroes feel that th[illegible] contribution is appreciated. They have shared in some of the toughest [illegible] of this war. They are entit[illegible] to hope that this world struggle for human liberation will open up to them richer opportunities for advancement and education than they have hitherto enjoyed. They can scarcely be expected to give full devotion to the democratic cause unless it affords some recognition of their legitimate aspirations.

"Any such program of education obviously m[illegible]st be accompanied by a firm insistence on the part of the army that Negro rights be respected by men in uniform and civilian alike. There are many ways in which any intelligent camp commander can act to erase the causes of friction between white and colored troops.

"He can see to it, if Negroes are segregated, that adequate recreational facilities are available to them, not [illegible] inside the camp but also in the community near which the camp is located. [illegible] can act to secure reasonable transportation service for his colored soldiers in places where jim crow traditions prevail. And, above all, he can insist that civilians show respect to the uniform his men wear, whatever the color of their skins. Officers should not be placed in command of Negro troops unless they have a sympathy for them and a willingness to safeguard their rights.

"It is no part of the army's business, to be sure[illegible] remedy all the defects of American life. But is a part of the army's busines[illegible] set an example of devotion to democratic principles. And it is high time now for the army to do this in regard to its Negro soldiers."

Negro And Jewish Prisoners In Germany Not Farmed Out On Land As Are Whites

Negroes of American and other nationalities are among the prisoners incarcerated in Germany and Japan. There were approximately 6,000 American prisoners alone in Germany in June. [illegible]stimated that thousand[illegible] colonial Negroes captured [illegible] North Africa and France are also behind barbed-wires there.

Prisoners are divided into three groups; civilians, interned when we engaged in hostilities; fliers, brought down over enemy territory; and the infantrymen captured in Tunisia.

Negroes are housed indiscriminately with other prisoners in Germany, it was learned from Dr. Tracy Strong, world director of War Prisoners Aid, YMCA, one of the participating services included in the over-all National War Fund, which begins its nation-wide drive for funds this month.

There is at least one method of treatment accorded Negro and Jewish prisoners in Germany that differs from that of white prisoners, it was learned: that is: they are not farmed out for agricultural work, as are white infantry pisoners but are housed in the prison camps at all times.

This is done apparently to keep them from mixing with the Aryan population, which Hitler holds out as the master race. Prisoners who work on farms are frequently housed on the farms where they work.

Under terms of the Geneva Conference, fliers and internes (civilian prisoners) are not permitted to work on the land.

Dr. Benjamin Mays, president of Morehouse College, is a member of the board of directors of the War Prisoners Aid, YMCA. This agency is one of the participating services in the National War Fund. It conducts recreational, educational and religious activities for the men behind the barbed wire, who, although comparatively comfortable, live bleak and barren lives at best.

The War Prisoners Aid cooperates with the Red Cross, which supplies material relief, information to families and works for the improvement of prison camp life. The service is extended to prisoners without regard to color or race. Observers from neutral countries make regular visits to the Axis camps, talking with prisoners and commandants, looking into their needs and treatment.

Wherever possible the War Prisoners Aid provides the prisoners with games played in their homelands, handicraft equipment, hobby material, books, music and musical instruments, and other things.

Jewish Soldier To Face Second Court Martial

Fought for Fair Treatment Of Negro Soldiers

NEW YORK — (ANP) — Army officials at the Lincoln, Neb., army base are considering a new court martial for Alton Levy according to a report by the Workers Defense league. Levy was tried previously by a special court martial and reduced to the rank of private for demanding better treatment for Negro soldiers attached to his camp.

Morris Milgram, national secretary, and Neil Scott, public relations director, said they had confidential information from sources that "cannot be divulged lest further injustices occur," purporting to show army officials are planning the new trial.

WAC TESTIFIED

The first court martial was based on evidence against Levy supplied by Cpl. Helen Perkins, a WAC, but the presently contemplated trial will be based on statements Levy made in leters to Miss Rosalina Peck of New York which were published by the WDL. The court martial is said to be called for alleged violations of the articles of war.

"If it is a crime to reveal army violations of the selective act provisions which call for 'no discrimination against any person on account of race or color' in the selection and training of draftees, then we plead guilty and it is against us that the government should act," said the WLD representatives.

"Brig. Gen. Early E. W. Duncan is a southerner and an old army man of hard and tough appearance," went on the league agents. "A recent visitor to the Lincoln air base talked to Gen. Duncan concerning Levy's plight. This person whose name must remain undisclosed because of his close proximity to army jurisdiction, said that Gen. Duncan stated that Levy made "subversive statements' and that he didn't want people to think that Levy's being a Jew had anything to do with it.

SAID HE WAS IMPARTIAL

The general claimed to be impartial in administering justice and declared that Levy was still under military orders and if he divulged military secrets he must answer for it. He added that nothing could be done about the court martial and that the Negro-white situation must be watched closely because "There are a lot of southern soldiers who don't want to associate with Negroes."

Eyewitnesses at Lincoln say that the only place on the military reservation where democracy exists is in the guard house where prisoners who are white, Mexican and Negro share jugs, towels, soap, cigarets and fraternize unreservedly. In the "so-called freedom outside the guard house," the soldiers are rigidly segregated, which has "produced seething animosity and a bloody riot."

New Republic Slaps Army for 'Mistake' of Apeing Dixie Hate

Special Section on Race's Future Calls Intermarriage Laws Futile; Praises Colored Press for Job Fight

NEW YORK—Causes, dangers and possible solutions of American interracial unrest are discussed in a special supplement on the future of colored American, in the October 18 issue of the New Republic.

The 20-page supplement deals separately with race science, racial progress and the colored American's status in industry, the armed forces and politics.

The army is accused of a military, as well as ethical, mistake, "which should by now be apparent," in the "excessive degree" to which the South's jim-crow pattern has been adhered to.

Morale Damaged

This practice, the writer continues, has lowered the morale of colored soldiers to the extent of creating the army's "most serious background problem" and has in turn been responsible for acute unrest among civilians over the mistreatment of the soldiers.

The writer defends colored newspapers against accusations that they have created this civilian unrest, explaining that the press has done no more than "report and react to actual instances of cruelty and brutality to colored soldiers by civilians, or discriminatory treatment of them in the army."

Many Whites Disgusted

The morale of many democratically inclined white soldiers is also said to have been damaged by observation of Dixie abuses which army authorities condone, and a mixed division of volunteers is proposed as a partial solution.

Danger after War

The writer predicts a "tragic day for the South when white troops and colored troops are mustered out and return home," continuing:

"It is impossible for the army to take a colored youth and make a soldier out of him, teach him how to kill on a battlefield, how to defend himself, how to sustain himself in a crisis through courage, daring and skill, and then expect him to slip back easily into his former role of complacency, servility and caution."

Employment Restricted

On the question of industrial employment, the writer notes the limitations in job classifications and upgrading which have attended wartime progress, and the fact that this progress has come chiefly through sheer need of manpower, rather than through a sense of justice of efforts of the FEPC. He continues:

"The colored man has two means of preparing himself for the po[illegible] crisis. [illegible] is to try to nail down every gain he has made by getting formal rulings from law courts and governmental agencies.

"This phase is important, but it is not enough. The colored man must also try by good work to fit so well into industry that management will see no economic advantage, and perhaps even disadvantage, in laying him off because of the color of his skin.

Press Commended

"In driving this vital fact into the minds of colored workers, the colored press and a number of other organization, hammering away week after week, logically, compellingly, are performing one of the most constructive educational tasks in American history.

"While the colored press has been widely attacked for its militancy, white critics at the same time have consistently overlooked or failed to understand this important work."

Whites Must Help

An end to oppression and discrimination and obliteration of slums are proposed as means by which whites should contribute to this program.

Race science is discussed on a basis of various scientific refutations of white superiority theories and the following comment:

Intermarriage Laws Futile

"The bugaboo of intermarriage, which lurks in even the most civilized white minds, could as well be forgotten. People are going to mate with whom they please, as they have in the past, and laws to prevent it are futile.

"For the white people who fear intermarriage, there is literally no problem; they will never be forced to submit to it.

"Marriages, to quote Henry Fielding, are made of 'high and tender friendship,' and such an emotion does not grow from a feeling of repulsion.

Few Are All-Colored

"Nor have the South's strict anti-miscegenation laws prevented a constant lightening of the colored man's skin. There have been many mixed couples, legally married in Northern States, whose lives would put to shame the clandestine carnality of the white men who have created the generations of mixed-blood Negroes—to whom they have repudiated all the obligations of parenthood.

"Of the thirteen million colored Americans, six million are light-skinned mulattoes. Melville Herskovits estimates that less than a quarter of all Negroes are pure-blooded.

"It is ironic that those who cry loudest against 'social equality,' by which they mean intermarriage, hail from the States, counties and townships where white blood, regardless of [illegible] flows [illegible] the heaviest volume into colored veins."

Poll Tax Attacked

"Elimination of the poll tax," says the writer, "will not, of course, assure the colored man suffrage; other techniques, ranging from discriminatingly administered qualification tests to threats of violence, will continue for the time being to keep him from the polls.

"But the poll tax is the principal buttress between the Southern man and the ballot, and its removal will bring him pressing ever nearer to political emancipation."

Soldiers Banned at Dance Arrested on Ten Counts

NOV 27 1943

LONDON, England—Fourteen Negro soldiers were standing court-martial proceedings on ten counts each at Paignton, Devon, last month, charged with mutiny, shooting with intent to murder two U. S. Army police sergeants, and making inflammatory statements in the presence of other soldiers.

During the trial, however, events leading up to the arrest of the men revealed that they had been subjected to "dixie" tactics on the very night before the alleged shooting incident in the square of a Cornish town. First, they were asked to leave a dance at the Town Hall, and second, they were refused drinks at a public house.

THREATEN TROUBLE

A sergeant testified that while he was on military police duty, five of the men came to the dance. He said that they were asked to show passes, but when they did not have any, a lieutenant asked them to leave. As he was about to leave, the sergeant stated, one of the men threatened that if the white boys touched him—"well, you wait and see."

"Two English Royal Engineers started 'butting in,'" the sergeant went on, "and told the American police that the colored soldiers were being picked on."

The following night, the non-commissioned officer stated, Negro soldiers entered the lounge of a public house where he was on duty. A group of American soldiers, he said, left and others remained standing until the colored boys left. The bartender told them that they could not be served in that part of the house and there was a lot of mumbling among the men.

CONFINED TO CAMP

Describing incidents on the night of the shooting, a private named Edwards said the men went back to the town in a formation of threes, led by a private with a tommy-gun.

Cross-examined Edward said he saw ammuntion issued to all the men except two who had bayonets.

He went along because he was frightened. When they started firing he ran away.

Court Martial Of Colman Is Questioned

Democratic Way Seen Stake In Army Policies

CHICAGO, Ill. —(ANP)— A strongly worded resolution was directed last week to the Veterans of Foreign Wars national encampment in New York by the Charles L. Hunt Post No. 2024, roundly scoring the Army court martial policy and segregation and discrimination by the Army command and civilians against Negro soldiers.

Calling the recent court martial of Col. William Colman, former commander of Selfridge Field, Mich., "outrageous" and a "travesty upon justice" the resolution said upon justice" the resolution said that "millions of Americans are concerned with the type of leadership in our Army if high ranking officers could indulge in drunkenness while on duty, especially if intoxication were to be used as an excuse for the wanton shooting of a private soldier."

For his crime of shooting Pvt. Willie McRae, Colman was reduced to the rank of a captain.

CITIZENS ALARMED

Citizens are alarmed over the policies of the Army with respect to Negro troops which allows them to be "abused by our white commanding officers" and by civilians in many sections of the country, despite the fact they are in the "uniform of the United States" and pledged to fight for democracy, stated the paper.

The resolution, presented to the national body by Lt. Col. Louis Johnson, was signed by Dr. Clarence Payne, Lester Milsap, Otho B. Kerr, Thomas Miller, and Johnson. Declaring that the whole Army policy of segregation is wrong the resolution pointedly asked:

> "What excuse is the War Department giving for training our famous 8th regiment for over two years and then refusing to send them to the front? What reason is given that the 93rd division which, according to the inspector general's office, has been trained up to modern standards for battle remaining on these shores?

"Why are hundreds of Negro medical officers assigned to non-medical posts, as sanitary engineers to combat mosquitoes of dredge swamps, when many of them according to high standards of medical science should be rendering service according to their ability in the hospitals, and field stations of the nation?

OFFICERS NEGLECTED

"Why is it that high ranking Negro field officers are kept in innocuous positions?

"Why is it that our northern boys are sent to southern camps and refused not only the protection of the civil authorities, but also that of the military authorities, under whose service many of them serve by necessity?

"Why is it that from all portions of the country come reports and letters from our soldiers that they are not being fed well? Why is it that over 90 percent of the Negro troops on foreign soil are used as labor battalions?"

If this is too much to ask of the men who form our policies at home "what evidence have the darker nations of the world to believe that justice will be administered to them," concluded the paper.

5 Overseas Flyers to Go to Selfridge as Instructors

Members of 99th Are Allowed 23 Days' Furlough Before Reporting for New Job

By DOUGLAS HALL
Staff Correspondent

NOV 6 1943

MITCHELL FIELD, N.Y.—Five weary flyers, who really know first hand the story of warfare in the skies over the North African theatre of war, reported here for duty this week.

The pilots, all members of the 99th Pursuit Squadron now based in Italy, are Lts. Lee Rayford, Washington, D.C.; Walter Lawson, Newton, Va., Charles Dryden, NYC, Louis Purnell, Philadelphia, and Graham Smith, Vicksburgh, North Carolina.

Unhurt, Nerves on Edge

The boys reported a long but uneventful trip back to this country. All have had at least thirty combat missions over enemy territory and do not have a scratch to show for it. Most of them admitted their nerves "are a bit on edge" but that's about all.

"Nothing is wrong that a bit of good old American hospitality won't cure," one of them stated. They have been given twenty-three day furloughs to "rest up a bit."

Eligible for Award

The flyers are eligible for the Oak Leaf Cluster, an award given to a flyer who has made at least thirty combat missions, but they did not have time to wait for it in Italy. They will get their awards later.

It is understood that these flyers will report to Selfridge Field as instructors when their furloughs are over. Indications also point to promotions for the battle-worn heroes.

The pilots expressed surprise that the people over here know that the people over here knew home. They said they wanted to surprise their friends but learned that almost everybody knew that they were being returned, because Ollie Stewart told about it in his dispatches from Italy.

Off to Visit Relatives

Here is what happened to the pilots after they received their furloughs:

Lieutenant Smith returned to North Carolina to visit relatives and friends. Lieutenant Rayford left for his home in Washington. Lieutenant Dryden is at home in New York. He has been in the hospital for a few days. Nothing serious. His parents, one sister and brother are in New York.

Lieutenant Lawson is visiting his wife Mrs. Cleo Lawson in Virginia. He was married only a month before he was sent overseas.

Colonel Reduced To Captain By Court Martial For Shooting

Journal & Guide
Norfolk, Va.

(Later Story on Page 1)

SELFRIDGE FIELD, Mich.—An Army court martial Tuesday of last week convicted Colonel William T. Colman, ousted commander of Selfridge Field, of four violations of the ninety-sixth Article of War and ordered him reduced to his permanent rank of captain.

SEP 25 1943

He was acquitted on all other charges. In directing the reduction, the court martial ordered that he be placed at the bottom of the list of captains, not to be promoted for three years. The case will be reviewed by the War Department in Washington and sentence will not take effect until approval.

A new light was brought forth in the trial concerning the shooting of Pvt. McRae when Lt. Col. Paul A. Petree of the medical corps, chief of the neuro-psychiatric division of the Percy Jones General Hospital, Battle Creek, Mich., quoted Col. Colman as saying, "I have given orders repeatedly that a Negro chauffeur should never be sent to drive my car."

Colonel Hammer Huston of Signal Corps Headquarters, Tampa, Fla., read the sentence as Colman stood before the nine colonels who had deliberated four hours before reaching a verdict.

AT FOOT OF LIST

Huston said the court ordered Colman placed "at the foot" of the list of captains for three years and suspended from all temporary promotions for "a like period."

Although the court convicted Colman of four violations of the ninety-sixth Article of War—"disorders and neglect to the prejudice of good order and military discipline," it acquitted him of 25 additional counts, including the felonious shooting last May 5 of Private First Class William McRae, a colored soldier at the air base.

SHOOTING "CARELESSNESS"

Colman, however, was found guilty of discharging a pistol "through carelessness" which wounded McRae and touched off the investigation and court martial. The deposed commander testified that his mind was "a blank" when he shot McRae.

Colman also was convicted of three charges of being drunk and disorderly, but acquitted of allegations that he misused government property and arranged the transfer to Selfridge Field of 12 soldiers, including Private (now lieutenant) Benson Ford, grandson of Henry Ford.

The first indication that the 39-year-old Army officer had been found guilty came shortly after lunch when the court martial was reopened and the officers called for a copy of Colman's military record to determine his punishment.

The Colman Case: A Disappointment

Journal & Guide
Norfolk, Va.

A COURT martial of his fellow officers has found Colonel William T. Colman, former commandant at Selfridge Field, Michigan, guilty of careless use of firearms in connection with the serious wounding of a colored enlisted man. Numerous other serious charges were heard but at the end the court held that the near-fatal shooting was "careless use of firearms" and exacted as the prime punishment the loss of rank from colonel to captain for the accused officer.

This will be a personal disadvantage to the officer, of course, but he retains the rank of a high officer nevertheless—hence the Army considers him fit for command.

But if that is all the Army thinks of a trained, responsible officer's misconduct where a black soldier is involved, and nearly killed because, apparently, he committed the crime of being other than white, one cannot have but a cynical regard for the justice dispensed by that armed service branch.

Two congressmen have criticised the court martial's action. In a related case, a different jury is hearing the evidence. Perhaps the Army setup is humiliated by what was done in Col. Colman's case. The harm is done; it should be undone as much as is humanly possible.

Mock Justice.

THE recent court-martial trial of Colonel William T. Colman at Selfridge Field was a travesty rendered in the name of justice

Bee (Magazine Section

All of the evidence irrevocably pointed to the guilt of the colonel. He shot his Negro chauffeur, Private William McRae, stationed at the base. Further, he was drunk and had well established charges against his integrity as a forthright and honest commandant.

Chicago. Ill

The sentence pronounced by the nine colonels of merely demoting him, (Col. Colman), to a captain could hardly have been surpassed by the kind of justice offered a Negro plaintiff in the hinterlands of the South. More was to be expected of an officer jury committed to high honor in the interest of a high morale functioning army.

The armed services also have been rendered a great disservice by this verdict. It is gravely imperative that the army takes the initiative in rescinding this dastardly verdict. It is offensive to the morale of the army, to Negroes and to lovers of justice everywhere.

Failure to amend its own innocuous sentence for the colonel's criminal and dishonorable conduct, the army must be judged unfit to conduct a fair trail. Congress and the President should be appealed to step in and see that honorless incompetents such as Colonel Colman be given the full penalty in keeping with the ghoulish conduct he exhibited.

The time is long overdue both in civil as well as in military affairs that higher respect for life, property and rights of Negroes be observed. How can men of good will observe these interminable mockeries against justice and regard them, if at all, so lightly?

Private McRae is an American citizen fighting for the preservation of his country and when an irresponsible officer can wound him with but slight punishment, it is time for an accounting from the President and Congress, promptly.

The Trial of Col. Colman.

Chicago. Ill

THIS nation has followed the court-martial trial of Colonel William T. Colman, commanding officer of Selfridge Field Michigan, with mingled shame and overt disdisgust.

The Colonel was originally accused of shooting 24-year-old Pvt. William McRae, Negro, who was serving as chauffeur for the base motor pool. The colonel's guilt has virtually been established in this shooting by his own unguarded admission.

In addition, the Colonel faces other charges, among which are, misappropriating government property, habitual drunkeness, acceptance of expensive gifts from civilian contractors and transferring of wealthy enlisted men to Selfridge Field, bestowing special favor on them.

The Colonel has entered a plea of not guilty. The defense further submits that Colonel Colman has been suffering from "hysterical tendencies since October, 1941," a clear subterfuge—this.

Private McRae was shot on May 5. The original trial was ordered July 20, but a continuation was granted for the prosecution and defense to better prepare their cases.

The trial will probably be long drawn out but the judge advocate, and the court of one lieutenant colonel and eight colonels have a singular urgent responsibility and that is to render a decision of justice which will elicit from commanding officers in the future, greater respect for life and rights of Negro soldiers as well as for the fidelity of the high station entrusted to them.

Levy Penalty Challenged By Former Stimson Aide

PM

New York, N. Y

PM's PM Exclusive

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20—Judge William H. Hastie, former civilian aide to Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson, today challenged the court-martial and conviction of Alton Levy, now serving four months at hard labor at the Lincoln, Neb., Army Air Base.

After a comprehensive study of the case, Hastie cited two "particularly disturbing" disclosures which "create a strong implication of prejudice and bias" in the proceedings against the former International Ladies Garment Workers Union, AFL, organizer.

The Howard University Law School dean, who resumed his post there after resigning from the War Dept. in protest against Negro discrimination, declared:

"First: I can think of no proper circumstances which could have led the court, after stating before adjournment Saturday, Aug. 14, that the charges against Levy had not been proved, to decide on Monday, Aug. 16, after the week end recess, that he was guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.

Months' Old Rumors

"Second: It was well known to the post command that the rumors which Levy is alleged to have repeated had been circulated around the camp for months even before Levy came to that station. In such circumstances, it is disturbing that Levy was singled out for punishment.

"Such facts must and do create a strong implication of prejudice and bias in the trial and conviction of Alton Levy."

Judge Hastie was appointed special assistant to the Secretary of War in October, 1940, and resigned last February, after his efforts to curb discrimination in the Air Forces were frustrated.

His statement on the Levy case came on the eve of a meeting of labor leaders at Freedom House in New York, called to map further action in Levy's behalf. The meeting, organized by David Dubinsky, president of the ILGWU, Samuel Wolchok, president of the United Wholesale and Retail Employes Union, CIO, and A. Philip Randolph, head of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, AFL, will be held today.

Lincoln Reports

Meanwhile, efforts to reopen the Levy case were stimulated by reports from Lincoln quoting the commanding officer of the base as saying that Levy would not be granted the usual parole.

Morris Milgram, executive secretary of the Workers Defense League, declared that "these reports confirm our charge that Levy is being held as a hostage in an attempt to impose silence on those who have taken up the fight for him."

Pointing out that Levy at no time has authorized or been associated with the protests made in the case, Milgram said investigators who had visited the base had been told that Levy would be released Nov. 6 "if the agitation stops."

"It now seems clear," Milgram said, "that Gen. Duncan (the commanding officer) is carrying out his threat by not granting Levy the customary parole."

Levy was convicted of circulating "false statements" about treatment of Negroes at the base and "slanderous" rumors about the commanding officer. The War Dept. has so far declined to make public its report of the trial and ensuing investigation.

Exported Jim Crowism

Dear Editor: New York, N. Y.

I am a New Zealander and would like to let you know of a disquieting piece of information regarding discrimination I received in a recent letter from a [illegible].

First, you must know we have no color problem in New Zealand. Maoris share unhampered in the political, social and economic life of the country. A recent Minister of Health was a Maori. There are, as you probably know, some American soldiers in New Zealand and in a newspaper cutting sent to me was reported a Maori fined for hitting an American soldier over the head with a beer bottle (direct action, for which our Maoris are noted) and in this case, if the American was laboring under any delusions of white superiority, he was undoubtedly disillusioned, but it's a dangerous virus and one hates to think of our healthy country exposed to such a horrible thing.

Furthermore, there are also many Americans in Australia. One of Sydney's leading hotels had adopted a policy of refusing to serve U. S. Negro soldiers, as white U. S. officers or men (I forget which) had informed the management if Negroes were admitted, they themselves would [illegible].

What and whom exactly is this country fighting for? Don't know exactly what you can do about this export of racial prejudice, but thought possibly you might be able to point out to the U. S. boys who will be serving overseas that they are all unofficial ambassadors of this country and by humiliating some of their own comrades-in-arms, they are not putting up a good show for America, to say the least of it.

Dispute Over Swimming Facilities Reportedly Caused Discrimination

BALTIMORE

The War Shipping Administration is opposed to the present application of jim crow at the United Seamen's Service Club, 1420-24 N. Charles Street, said Thomas Cox, white, port representative of the agency, Thursday.

Mr. Cox, a representative of the WSA on the local port committee which adopted the policy of excluding colored merchant seamen from the use of recreational and lodging facilities, said that the Government emphatically concurred with labor that there should be no racial discrimination when the question was raised.

Unalterably Opposed to Policy

According to Mr. Cox, the balance of the committee, made up predominantly of representatives of the shipping industry, insisted that colored seamen be restricted.

James Drury, white, port agent of the National Maritime Union, CIO, had previously issued of statements that his organization and the WSA were unalterably opposed to the jim crow policy at the club.

The United Seamen's Service is a member agency of the War and Community Fund, and it is reported that the national body has the matter of racial bias in Baltimore under consideration.

73-Year-Old Seaman Barred

Last week, however, [illegible] L. Adams, white, acting port executive, and no directive has yet been issued to the local committee. The situation is unchanged, Mr. Adams indicated Wednesday.

Exclusion of colored seamen from the club was uncovered five weeks ago when Archie Jenkins, 73-year-old Merchant Marine cook recently returned from a war zone, charged that he was refused accommodations.

Color Bar Admitted

Victor W. Bowyer, white, then port executive, who has since been transferred to oversea duty, admitted at that time that a color bar existed. He said that adherence to local tradition and public sentiment was responsible for the adoption of the policy by the local committee.

E. Arch Seidl, of the Dichman, Wright and Pugh Shipping Company, chairman of the committee, said that decision was reached following a dispute over the use of swimming facilities at the club.

Here's How Jim Crow Operates at Camp Upton; No Commissioned Officers in Colored Company; White Soldiers Are Shocked by Prejudice

By GLENN DOUGLASS

A young private visited the AFRO last week to ask this newspaper to reveal how the Dixie jim crow trail begins in "democratic New York State."

He had a few other things to tell about the busy receiving center at Camp Upton which handles the introduction into the army of thousands and thousands of white and colored draftees.

Here are some of the things he told:

There is not a single commissioned officer stationed in the Sixth Receiving Company, the jim crow unit set up by the camp to handle colored draftees.

One Top Sergeant

The highest colored official in the company is astute, well-trained, quiet-spoken Irving Miller, who holds competently the position of topkick at the camp.

Despite the fact that there are hundreds of capable colored lieutenants and higher officers, the jim crow Sixth Receiving Company is commanded by a white officer, Lieut. Richard Traynor.

Discrimination at Upton is not short-lived. Permanent parties there who, due to limited service status, have been assigned to the camp for the duration, can well recall evidences of jim crow which cropped up last winter.

Barred from Dance

One of the more flagrant of these came about when camp officials decided to institute weekly dances for camp personnel. Posters and literature were prominently displayed, inviting all to come and "have a good time."

On the evening of the affair, colored soldiers who attempted to enter the hall were politely refused admittance. To quell their anger, camp officials had a dance hall built in the Sixth Receiving Company area for "colored dances."

Not only is Upton-style jim crow detrimental to the morale of colored draftees who go there, the AFRO learned, but it has also done much to create wonder and confusion in the minds of many white New Yorkers.

Find Tolerant Whites

"We'd go to the station theatre at night," the informant said, "and stand in line with the whites. There was no segregation there. Whenever the authorities can't get away with imposing jim-crow rules, the whites mingle freely with us.

"Frankly, it wasn't our fault. We had that old chip on our shoulders until we found out that at the theatre and at the post exchange the whites were anxious to show us that they neither understood nor agreed with jim crow rules.

"The white fellows there — the majority of them — were shocked by the prejudice. We heard them discuss it many times and they often talked it over with us."

Lieutenant Protects Men

An idol among colored soldiers at Upton is Lieutenant Traynor, the Sixth Receiving Company's white commanding officer. No narrow-minded bigot, Lieutenant Traynor, according to reports, has often gone "to bat" for his boys.

Other white officers at the camp regard him as "dangerous" because he fraternizes with the colored lads, plays ball with them and treats them like human beings entitled to respect.

Working as efficiently as he could despite the wall of prejudice which confronts him, Sergeant Miller, a Brooklynite and former Y worker, has, during his short service at Upton, done his utmost to make the camp pleasant for his charges.

Sergeant Commended

He has managed to maintain the respect of the men under him, command the deference and admiration of his superiors, and remain militant under every possible circumstance.

The kid in khaki who reported these facts to the AFRO-AMERICAN is a good soldier. He has done his utmost and he is ready and willing to take his chances when his outfit leaves for danger and unknown territory.

But there are things he wonders about and he wants the AFRO readers to think them over. Why so much hullabaloo about bias below the Mason-Dixon Line when the jim-crow trail begins at Camp Upton for thousands of colored lads.

OCT 30 1943

Soldier Hurls Challenge

If American soldiers are to be degraded and marked because of their race at the very inception of their military careers, what can they hope to find as time marches on and they are sent perhaps to the deepest South?

The kid in khaki told us that he thinks that the citizens of New York State, white and black, who are fair ought to see that our Government does something about it.

Meanwhile, with more loyalty in his heart than he has room for bitterness, he has returned to his outfit to continue to do his part. He asked the AFRO to ask you: "Will you do yours?"

War Dept. Can't Protect Soldiers

WASHINGTON

The War Department admitted last week that it cannot protect soldiers from civilian violence under existing statutes. In any conflicts between civilians (no matter how prejudiced) and soldiers in the South, the local courts alone have jurisdiction.

Pvt. Bell, home on furlough two months ago, was standing in a street of Starksville talking to a girl.

Four white boys came up and one pushed him. Bell didn't say anything, so the next one asked him didn't he "like it." He was still silent.. One of them struck him and told him to "take that."

By this time a younger brother of Bell came on the scene and suggested to his brother that they leave.

Boys Attack Soldier

At that, one of the white boys took Pvt. Bell by the collar and asked him what he was doing with that "suit on." Bell replied that Uncle Sam had told him to put it on.

The white boys then told Bell if he didn't take it off they were going to whip it off him. They pushed him in the street and all four attacked him.

In protecting himself Pvt. Bell cut one of the boys on the arm with a knife.

Police jailed both brothers. A mob attacked the jail. The boys were taken to Macon for safety and afterward moved to Columbus. When the situation quieted down they were returned to Starksville.

Men Who Faced Death Together at Sea Separated by Baltimore Bias

BALTIMORE. — Ten colored British seamen, all survivors of a recent torpedoing off the Brazilian coast, were jim-crowed for the first time in their lives when they arrived in Baltimore Sunday, they told the AFRO this week.

4/16

They arrived Sunday from the Port of Spain, Trinidad, West Indies, along with fourteen other West Indian and East Indian sailors and an unnamed number of white shipmates.

Separated by Jim Crow

All of the colored seamen and the Indians were lodged at the York Hotel, while other arrangements were made for the white Englishmen, a spokesmen for the group said.

He stated that ten British seamen protested to the British Consul against their separation from their shipmates, but were told that Baltimore was part of the South and that separation of races is to be expected.

When they pointed out, the spokesman said, that they had "sailed together, been torpedoed together, arrived in port together and lived other places together," they were told white people would not accept them here.

The seamen and others of their crew on a British ship were torpedoed in the South Atlantic in June, they said. They landed seven days later at a small Brazilin coastal town near.

Find Fascism in Baltimore

Two days later they arrived in Pernambuco, Brazil, they said, and were quartered in the same hotel and "treated alike." The same thing happened elsewhere until they reached Baltimore, they added.

One of the seamen said that after they had been torpedoed, the submarine came alongside their lifeboat and the commander asked the identity of their ship. When they told him is was English, the seaman said, he apologized and said:

"I thought it was American; they talk so much and do nothing."

AUG 14 1943

The seamen spent two days in Baltimore and were transferred to New York to await orders to ship out.

War Sec'y Won't Deny Policy Barring Negro Units At Front

By HARRY McALPIN
(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON. — Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson dodges queries last week on whether the splitting up of the 930th and 931st Field Artillery Battalions, formerly of the 184th Field Artillery regiment, represented confirmation of the policy of the War Department in its refusal to use Negro troops as combat units.

The two battalions, after nearly three years training at Fort Custer and Camp Forrest, Tenn., as crack artillerymen, have been split up and about 1200 of the men assigned to service units, principally quartermaster corps.

At his press conference last week in response to a question by the Defender, Stimson declared that troop movements and readjustments of units constitutes military information which he does not care "to give out because it would be of aid and comfort to the enemy."

The action, however, has caused considerable doubt as to what enemy is meant—the foreign or domestic brand.

See Waste of Funds

Without presuming to tell the army how to carry on its tactical operations, observers point to the very practical consideration of waste of the taxpayers' money and the loss of time and effort involved in training 1200 men over a period of three years for artillery duties and then assigning them to service functions in a quartermaster unit.

During this period of training, these men have doubtless fired many thousands of rounds of artillery ammunition, while learning to operate the big guns. Here are some of the prices of the shells wasted in training these men (figures taken from the bond price tags at the "Back the Attack" War Bond show now in Washington.):

Each shell for a 240 mm. howitzer, $81.12: for a 155 mm. gun, $33.09; for an M73, $25.89; for a 90 mm. $18.60; for a 57 mm. $15.95.

If an average of one 240 mm. howitzer shell per man was fired once each month, the wasted training for this item alone, over a three period would amount to $3,504,384. This does not include the cost of shells for any of the other many types of guns used in artillery training—and for which there is no need or use in the quartermaster corps.

Change Air Base Groups

Furthermore, the special clothing provided the artilleryman costs the army $164.09—most of which is replaceable each year during training. This amounts to an additional waste, over a three year period of $580,704. Field and extra equipment is not included.

An estimate of the money wasted in training 1200 artillerymen for three years to serve in the quartermaster corps is conservatively put at $50,000,000.

No Negro combat units have yet been sent overseas. Dismemberment of these crack artillery battalions seems to confirm the reported army refusal to use Negroes in combat untis.

Charges are also being made that many of the Negro air base security units, in which the men have been trained to use machine guns, anti-aircraft guns, and to operate small tanks are being changed over to non-combat engineer units.

Army Making England Like Jim-Crow South; Race Riots Numerous; Major Clash Feared

Philadelphia Tribune
Philadelphia, Pa.

SEP 1 1 1943

NEW YORK — (ANP) — From confidential sources which the Associated Negro Press has every reason to believe compepetent and reliable, and which the Associated Negro Press will not reveal, the following account of colored American soldiers in England has been secretly received:

"The conditions over here are getting like those in the States. White officers are doing a fair job in convincing some British people about the race problem. Most colored troops are gradually being moved out of and away from cities to isolated camps. White MP's are usually placed in these vicinities and intimidate Negro soldiers as well as the girls who are seen with them.

"Last week, there were at least two riots over here. Another one on July 1, and the last of May. During the last of May two colored were killed, more wounded and a white officer wounded. Had an awful time throughout the night. One colored officer practically took charge of the camp. He collected about 600 rifles in two days. Started when a white MP shot a colored soldier.

"Last week, one started when fights broke out between colored and white soldiers in a city in northern England when white soldiers are reported to have resented British girls being with colored soldiers. In a southern English city, there were a number of fights which started when a white lieutenant made remarks about some 'Nigger soldiers and' merchant men who were passing. The soldiers resented it. A riot was prevented by some of the few colored MP's who came up and rescued the officer. Yet an MP sergeant (white) at the same time insulted a colored officer who had tried to quiet the soldiers. At MP headquarters the colored officer said that he was insulted by the provost officer (white) in front of the other MP's, who were enlisted men, and arrested as being drunk. The coolness of the four colored lieutenants, the colored MP's and the colored American Red Cross personnel prevented a probable riot during the night.

"Riots are much more frequent [illegible] the [illegible] can publish. The troops [illegible] into the gun rooms and get their rifles and ammunition to protect themselves often. If something is not done by the U. S. Army soon, I would not be surprised to see a major battle between colored and white American soldiers. It seems that some top people want southern U. S. A. transferred over here. Even Mr. Bondy from the American Red Cross is over here trying to find reasons for moving the colored clubs (clubs staffed by colored) out of certain cities, because it is said that certain people must be satisfied. One of them is Mr. Gibson, the American Rd Cross commissioner in Great Britain. One of his ex[illegible] is that he understood that the colored personnel were too highly skilled in their jobs.

"White officers are behind most of the trouble. They have even canvassed communities, telling the residents and business people not to serve or associate with the colored soldiers (whom they command and get their protions off.) The few colored officers are treated as bad by their fellow officers. There are some fair-minded officers, but they are not permitted to do much because they are not promoted and are shifted in many instances from place to place.

"Have seen a couple of colonels who were very good, but their executive officers are rotten and slip many things over. The colored soldier is doing a job. All he wants is to e treated like a soldier. Colored soldiers want colored officers. Their conduct on a whole is excellent.

"If you can convince the white officer that each colored soldier being wants to get home to his colored wife or friend, you can do a good job. These boys are not excited by the white girls even though they are sought out by the girls in many cases. And the whole thing seems to hinge on the friendship of the colored soldier and the white girl. Many soldiers are in a very low frame of mind, and if they were not real soldiers, I am convinced that the enemy would be trying to work on them. However, it's possoble that the enemy is helping these riots to break out since the tension is so great.

"The American colored soldier is often fined his entire salary or more for the smallest infraction. Oftimes they must travel 20 miles to another town to have a little fun. The colored Red Cross worker is being resented because the soldiers look up to them for leadership. Also the American Red Cross workers are not wearing bandana handkerchiefs The U. S. army is to blame for most of the trouble, not the Fifth Column The officers won't give the fifth column a chance."

Urges Americans Abroad To Strive to Learn "Foreigners' Ways"

WASHINGTON—In a program designed to "do something about race prejudice", the Infantry Journal for August published an interesting article on Psychology for the fighting man. The article was well displayed and is believed to be a part of the Army's own program to educate officers, especially those from the South on matters of race connection with morale and discipline.

The article, in part states:

"It is extremely important for the American soldier to understand clearly some of his own peculiar habits of thinking and acting. It will help him for example to understand the basis of the race prejudice that is all too common among many Americans as well as among Germans and many other peoples.

Traces History of Prejudice

"The reason for race prejudice can be traced back to a natural need for security. Everyone wants to feel secure. And he feels most secure in familiar surroundings with people he knows. For this reason it is natural for us to resent it when strangers come among us, get jobs, and settle down to make themselves at home. We do not understand the "foreigners," and deep down beneath the surface we are afraid of them. This resentment happens unless we have become used to strangers by travel or by living with them as friends. On the surface it is usual for men to belittle the stranger, to make fun of his ways. When the unconscious fear of strangers is very great, men will even gang up on them and attack them.

"In ganging up on foreigners, a group or nation gets an unthinking new sense of its own strength, solidarity and security. Hitler was trying this trick when he undertook to turn Germans against Jews. They were labelled outsiders and foreigners, and the German people, insecure since their defeat in the last war, found strength and confidence—some of them—in persecuting the Jews.

Color Basis for Prejudice

"Color of skin is often a basis for prejudice, because it is so clearly a badge of difference between peoples—a mark that sets one people clearly apart as different, as not "one of us." American whites have been prejudiced not only against black skins, but against yellow and against the copper skin of the American Indian. The United States excluded both Japs and Chinese from Immigration when our western states became afraid of their cheap labor. And the old German Kaiser invented the slogan, "The Yellow Peril," when he wished to unite Europe against the Asiatics

"Sometimes the prejudice against the Negroes flares up in the Army. It is not a problem, however, in a camp where it is well understood that a soldier in United States uniform is a soldier, not a white or Negro, Christian or Jew, rich man or poor, but a soldier, and as much worthy of respect.

"And not everyone feels race prejudice. There are plenty of white men who are constantly meeting and working with black, brown and yellow men of brains, education, cuture and ability. These white men know that skin color is not a sign of inferiority or superiority, and they tend to forget [illegible]t it, or at least to regard it [illegible]important. Those [illegible]en are numerous in Euro[illegible] South America, Asia and Africa, where the races are mixed up in business and politics.

"In the United States we are more used to seeing large numbers of men with dark skins who are uneducated. We do not often meet the scholars among the Chinese, Negroes and other dark-skinned peoples. The two oceans more able and successful men of Africa and Asia. So we keep our prejudices. Nowadays with the great American enthusiasm for the bravery of our Chinese allies, this prejudice is less then it was, but it is still very strong.

"Now, however, the American soldier is going among people who do not understand if he knows antagonism toward other Americans or our Allies on account of their color just as the Americans may be surprised at those more liberal attitudes.

"If, however, the American soldier understands the basis for his own feelings as well as those of the men he meets, he can avoid friction and embarrassment to America.

"The strange people will still seem strange to him because they have strange customs and novel habits of thought. But he will be on the right track when he realizes that the differences are superficial; that other races, while different from his own, are not necessarily inferior. He will know that he cannot tell just from a man's color whether that man will bind up his wounds feed him if he is hungry, or help him repel enemy invaders.

"The soldier who is going to represent America fairly and wisely among the peoples of North Africa or China or the South Pacific should think these matters over. It will help him to remember that skin color in itself means nothing about the intelligence, wisdom, honesty, bravery or kindliness of man. If he studies carefully [illegible] people or other races whom he meets, he can satisfy himself that this is true.

"And he must come to understand and learn to respect their manners. Only then will he realize that national differences in manners and customs are mostly due to differences of tradition, climate and religion."

Employees From CIO Attack Red Cross On Blood Segregation

OCT 9 1943

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Protesting the nominal segregation of Negro [illegible] white blood in the American [illegible] Blood Bank, twenty blood donors employed by the Congress of Industrial Organization's National headquarters in Washington, Wednesday, signed a letter urging the Red Cross to discontinue this prejudicial policy. Although there exists some doubt as to whether Negro blood is consistently segregated all along the line of scientific processes involved with the plasma, the Red Cross continues to work on the principle of segregation.

The letter from the CIO blood donors read in part:

"As it (segregation) has absolutely no basis in biology or any other science, we urge Red Cross to abandon this useless practise.... Particularly in view of the fact that a Negro, Dr. Charles Drew, Professor of Surgery at Howard University....was not only one of the pioneers in the chemistry of the blood bank, but also became Director of the blood bank in England.. The majority of informed Negroes [illegible] are protesting this segregation in the only way they know: refusal to donate their blood to the Red Cross. This of course, lessens the amount of blood available to both Negro and white casualties alike.

Army Board Considers Chaplain Fuller's Case

Philadelphia Tribune

Philadelphia, Pa.

By LLEWELLYN RANSOM

AUG 7 1943

Snatched from mob violence and death at the hands of Southern army officers who persisted in carrying their nefarious practice of throttling democracy for colored people even on battlefields in the South Pacific, rescued by the arms and daring of colored soldiers, Chaplain Luther M. Fuller finally had to face ten days trial in New York to preserve his honor and fitness to serve his country.

The ten day trial ended last week in New York. Ten army officers and two chaplains now contemplate the fate of Chaplain Fuller.

The sudden and dramatic appearance of Warrant Officer Mathew Brandon to testify in the Chaplain's behalf caused so much consternaion that the trial was held up for three days. Officer Brandon had been stationed in the Southwest Pacific. He had heard all of the Chaplain's sermons of protest that were now used as a basis for the charges of unfitness for service. Brandon knew the facts behind these sermons, and it was he who had protected the Chaplain when white officers attempted to hijack him and rush him off in a jeep to an airport where he would be spirited away.

Frustrated, the officers went to Brigadier General Rose. The General explained that even a colored Chaplain's person was inviolate. This made it possible for Chaplain Fuller to return to the United States unmolested.

H[illegible] W. C[illegible]ston, of Washington, D. C., acted as defense attorney for the Chaplain in New York.

When Fuller returned to the United States, the Chief of Chaplains in Washington, D.C., attempted to have him discharged from the Army. This, the War Department over-ruled on the grounds that it was impossible for one man to pass on Fuller's dismissal. The case was then turned over to the Board of Reclassification, which now contemplates its decision.

White Army Officer Reveals Some Of The Hardships Faced By Colored Soldiers

Norfolk, Va

Editor's Note—this interesting expression on racial problems, especially as it affects colored service men, was written by a white Richmond man now an officer in the Army. It is reprinted through the courtesy of the Richmond Times Dispatch, in which it was published as a letter to the editor.)

I received both my Times-Dispatch and my New Republic in today's mail. At lunch I read, and was much concerned by, Walter White's account of some of the injustices which Negro troops have been subjected to. At dinner I read your reprint of Time's article on the Interracial Meeting in Atlanta.

That such a meeting could be held, and particularly that it could be held in Atlanta, is, as the article itself says, "a hopeful sign." The cases cited by White are those which involved extreme physical violence, usually resulting in death. Most of these cases have been reported in the press, usually in the form of brief paragraphs, stating that Private So-and-So, of Camp Such-and-Such, Such, was shot, killed by a local officer.

In most cases this is all the publicity that such an occurrence receives. Such happenings merit the closest study by the newly formed committee or council, and its findings should be given the widest publicity.

The attitude of the civilian population towards the Negro soldiers in Louisiana and Texas was a surprise and a disappointment to me. There are thousands of men who wear the uniform of the Army of the United States, who perform their duties as soldiers faithfully and well, but who are treated in their civilian contacts as outcasts and as untouchables.

I have talked with many of them in recent months, and almost to a man they agree that the Army's treatment of them is fair and just and that they get along very well on the whole with the white soldiers. The treatment they receive from the people of the towns near which they are quartered is another story.

I have seen Negro troops unable to buy cigarettes, razor blades, or newspapers in a town of several thousand people where there were half a dozen stores.

I have seen Negro troops, after a week or more of maneuvers in thef ield, denied a few hours pass to go into town because the authorities indicated that they did not want them on the street. . . .

I have seen what could easily have developed into a bloody riot stemmed because a Negro non-commissioned officer was man enough and soldier enough to call his men to attention and march them out of a store after they had been cursed and insulted because one of their number had taken a drink of water from a public drinking fountain.

These are not isolated occurrences, they are day to day happenings, and as such have become a festering sore that time has done nothing to heal.

I do not pretend to know the answer to the problem, but I am very conscious of its existence and of the extreme need for intelligent, cooperative action in combating it. I do know that such action can not be fostered by hush-hush methods, that we must cease being tolerant of such gross intolerance, and that such bigoted prejudice must be fought by every educational means available.

These men are doing their job and serving their country and they deserve to fare better at the hands of those amongst whom they must temporarily live.

I look forward to the day when I may ask, as I did recently of a volunteer woman worker at a recreational center in a small Louisiana town, "What facilities are there for the Negro troops?" and receive, in reply, more than a stare of blank incredulity.

Fight for Levy Will Continue

NOV 16 1943

The fight to restore Pvt. Alton Levy to his original rank of staff sergeant will be continued on his behalf by the Workers Defense League and the United Retail and Wholesale Department Store Employes, CIO, according to officers of both organizations.

Levy, who served less than three months of a four-month term at hard labor after a court-martial for opposing Jim Crow in the Army, was released Friday and shipped to an Army camp at Amarillo, Tex. The War Dept. declared Levy's sentence had been reduced for good behavior, but previously Brig. Gen. Early E. W. Duncan of the Lincoln Army Air Base had said Levy would have to serve his sentence to the end, Dec. 16.

In a telegram to James A. Wechsler, PM's National Editor, Nathaniel M. Minkoff, Chairman of the Committee on Discrimination of the Workers Defense League, gave PM full credit for its part in obtaining Levy's release.

The telegram stated:

"Release of Pvt. Levy five weeks before scheduled despite Gen. Duncan's declaration Levy would serve out full term can be attributed to the magnificent series of articles by you in PM which exposed the prejudice behind Al Levy's conviction. On behalf of the entire board of the League, warmest thanks to the Newspaper PM for this splendid contribution to the history of journalism."

Recruiting Goes on Feverishly All over U.S. for White Only; Army Calls Ban Customary

WASHINGTON.

Although nurses are urgently needed by the Army and Navy, this refers to white nurses and not colored, whose quota is full the War Department Public Relations Office told the AFRO today.

The system of accepting colored nurses only on a pro-rata basis of the proportion of the colored soldiers in the Army, and then in a ratio of one to every ten beds is based on civilian practice in this country it said and added:

"There are now 188 colored nurses on duty in this country, and 41 in foreign service, with a nurse to each ten beds for colored soldiers."

The public relations division made it clear that despite the shortage of white nurses, colored nurses were not desired to fill this shortage, as this just did not fit in with the War Departmen's policy, which "has its basis on custom."

Truman K. Gibson, civilian aide to the Secretary of War, when queried about the army's failure to utilize the services of many colored nurses who are anxious to help, said Friday:

"I have received many representations on this issue from interested organizations and colored leaders and have referred them to the office of the Surgeon General, who must carry the full responsibility for this policy.

"Beyond this, I have no official statement to make."

Red Cross Has Charge

The Red Cross recruits nurses for both the army and navy, supervising physical examinations and other check-ups before the nurses are allocated to the armed forces.

A recent Red Cross bulletin referred to "an alarming slump" in recruitment during the past five months which is "causing grave concern."

The Red Cross, the bulletin points out, is 2,000 nurses short of meeting the actual present required strength of the Army Nurse Corps.

The seriousness of the situation is complicated by the fact that about 400 new hospitals are to be opened in all theatres of war during the coming year to care for the increasing number of casualties.

An example of the shortage may be seen in Baltimore, where the Red Cross chapter, with a quota of 46 nurses a month, has 215 more to sign up before the end of the year.

Not only is the army having difficulty in filling requisitions for nurses for overseas assignments but it cannot get enough nurses for army hospitals in the United States.

Set Up Unit in Philadelphia

Last month at Mercy Hospital in Philadelphia a unit of the U.S. Cadet Nurses' Corps was set up with 63 enrolled. The corps is under the supervision of the U.S. Public Health Service, which pays for the training of nurses with the agreement that their services will be available throughout the war in military, Federal or essential civilian nursing service.

Mrs. Bettye Phillips, superintendent of Provident Hospital in Baltimore, said that her hospital had filled its quota of twenty nurses and had not been requested by the Federal Government to take any more.

Lincoln Hospital in New York also reported that it had all of the nurses that it could accommodate and had not been approached regarding an expanded training program.

"Quota Filled"

Lt. Col. Ida W. Danielson, assistant superintendent, Army Nurse Corps, who recently wrote to Miss Carolyn Dillon, a registered nurse of New York, rejecting her application, said:

"I am directed by the Surgeon General to acknowlege receipt of your letter and to inform you that your application for enrollment in the Army Nurse Corps cannot be given favorable consideration at this time because the quota of colored nurses required by the corps has been filled."

Mrs. Alvenia Feaster, chairman of New York's Joint Committee of Nurses, representing more than 2,000 colored nurses, said:

"When one of our men falls wounded on the battlefield, he does not care if black or white hands administer the nursing care necessary to saving his life."

Defends Son Who Charged Discrimination Against Negro Soldiers

SEP 28 1943

New York, N. Y

Morris M. Levy, of the Bronx, New York, father of Pvt. Alton Levy, the soldier who is in the guardhouse at Lincoln, Neb. because he opposed discrimination against Negroes at the Lincoln Air Base, has appealed to President Roosevelt to intercede in young Levy's behalf.

Pvt. Levy, a former organizer for the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, AFL, was reduced from the rank of staff sergeant and sentenced to four months in the guardhouse at hard labor with an $18-a-month forfeiture of pay.

Conviction Upheld

The conviction has been upheld by the Army Service Command at Denver. Protests sent to the White House have been referred to the Adjutant General's office, which is conducting an investigation at FDR's request.

The elder Levy's letter said:

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT:

"All of my life I have loved America and the fundamental principles upon which it was founded. The freedom of speech, of work, and of economic opportunity offered by our Constitution seems to me to provide a lasting hope—a light for humanity to look toward. The name America and the word freedom have become synonymous to me, and I have striven to impart this idea into my family and my associates during my entire life because, somehow, I felt that, indeed, this is the land of the free, and all men are created equal by God of one flesh and one blood.

My faith in America has remained unshaken through all difficulties because I have strong confidence in the Constitution, as I said before, and in your great courage, along with the help of the Congress, to run America according to the dictates of our forefathers. However, I must admit now that my faith in you and in the Congress and in the Army is being badly shaken by an incident that has come to my attention while I lay ill in bed.

'Home of Free'

"It was reported to me that my son, Alton Levy, a sergeant in the U. S. Army stationed at the Lincoln, Neb., Air Base, has been court martialed, demoted to private, placed in the guardhouse for four months at hard labor, and fined $18 reduction in pay a month. My son, Mr. President, is suffering all of this because he dared to speak up for the rights of other American citizens who were being abused because they were black or because they were of the Negro race.

"My son did the same as I would have done, because I have taught him that America is the home of the free regardless of race or color. If this were Hitler's Germany, I know there would be no need to write you—because I would be ignored. But this is America—and my son is in the Army to fight to destroy the brutal racial theorists of the fascist war monsters, and yet my son is being punished for fighting the same type of theorist here at home.

Alton Levy

"My son spoke the truth—has the truth no virtue? Is the truth not to be given justice? He said nothing in secret. He made his complaints concerning the treatment of Negroes at every staff meeting.

"Mr. President: In the name of democratic justice, in the name of the sacred honor of our Constitution; in the defense of your announced principles for which my son and millions of others are giving their lives, and in honor to the great God whom this Christian Nation purports to serve, please order an immediate review of my son, Alton Levy's, case, and let justice be done. Let it not be said that the U. S. Army is no different than the Nazi hordes which we fight."

Rumored transfer of a well trained field artillery group to non-combat training, failure to send Negro combat divisions into action, despite thorough combat training on maneuvers, are said, by reliable informants to furnish the basis for sharp criticism of Army policy which may any day break out in the open.

HAMILTON FISH ASKS FOR DATA

Senator Sheridan Downey (D.-Cal.) author of the Senate resolution to investigate discrimination in the armed services, is known to be pushing for an early hearing on his resolution and to have flatly rejected the suggestion of Senator Robert Reynolds, chairman of the Senate Military Affairs committee, that hearings on the measure be held in executive session to avoid public knowledge of the facts brought out by witnesses at the hearings. The California Senator has insisted that the hearings be public and that such witnesses as Judge William H. Hastie, former civilian aide to the Secretary of War, be invited to testify.

Congressman Hamilton Fish (R.-N. Y.) has recently requested the War Department to furnish him with complete data on the use of Negro troops in combat and their record under fire.

The nub of the criticism leveled at high Army officials is based on their failure to use Negro troops in any large numbers for anything but common labor. Those who raise this criticism point to several bits of evidence to support their views. They declared that it was significent that the five United States Senators who have just returned from a 40,000-mile tour of American fighting fronts had little to say about Negro troops except as labor battalions.

At a press conference held by three of the Senators last Wednesday (Senators Meade of N. Y., Russell, of Ga., and Brewster, of Maine), both Senator Meade and Senator Russell made special comment of the excellence of the work of the Negro troops in building roads, airports, and engaging in stevedore work. Said Senator Russell, of Negro troops in India, "These Negroes can unload a ship in four days where it formerly took the native Indian and British troops two weeks."

Without confirmation from the War Department is the statement that crack Negro artillery units, the 930th Field Artillery company at Camp Forrest, Tenn., and the 931st Field Artillery company at Camp Butner, N. C., have been virtually disbanded with more than 80 per cent of their officers and men transferred to Quartermaster work. It was pointed out, by reliable informants, that these two outfits had had extensive artillery training for more than a year, that some of the officers and men had formerly had service in the 8th Illinois Regiment, and that 100 per cent of the Negro officers of the units had graduated from Fort Sill, outstanding Field Artillery school.

The fact that two full strength Negro divisions, the 92nd and 93rd, are still kept in this country, despite completion of intensive combat training on maneuvers, furnishes another reason for the deepening criticism of Army policy.

What the War Department's reaction to these criticisms is has not been evident on the surface. That something is stirring on the whole question has, however, been increasingly apparent in recent weeks. It would not be surprising if a fundamental statement of Army policy regarding the roughly 10 per cent of the armed forces who are Negroes was not made in the next few weeks, revealing marked changes in the status of the Negro soldier.

Seamen's Service Sets Up Jim Crow Club In Mobile

Defender
Chicago, Ill NOV 6 1943

By JOHN LeFLORE
(Defender Staff Correspondent)

MOBILE, Ala.—Apparently stymied in its effort to make democracy workable in the South, the United Seamen's Service will establish its first Jim-Crow Seamen's hotel in Mobile, it was announced by Douglas P. Falconer of New York, national executive director, after a conference here with other USS representatives last Saturday.

The compromise plan for a separate hotel was regarded as the only practicable way out of a dilemma created by racial segregation laws of the South.

So Negro boys who go down to sea in ships to carry foodstuffs and implements of war to our fighting men on the far-flung battle fronts all over the world, now must be content to suffer ostracism from the society of their white fellow-seamen when they step ashore at Southern ports.

It is all right for them to bear together the travail of duty during wintry gales under the murky skies of the North Atlantic, as they fight submarine wolf-packs lurking in mountainous seas. But they dare not be housed in the same hotel right here in our own country!

One hotel, the George Self for white seamen, was dedicated here last Friday, and is already in operation. Until the other hotel is available, Negro seamen must make out as best as can in a city already over-populated, with an inadequate housing program because of an expansion of war industries.

However, O. B. Cloudman, chairman of the Port Area committee, and George E. Blacktopp, Mobile port executive of the USS, promise that as soon as necessary agreements are made, work will be rushed on the rehabilitation of the building selected to make it ready for occupancy within a few months. Present plans are to provide a number of bedrooms, including special rooms for men with families, shower bath, lounges, and a spacious recreation room. The building will be heated with gas and properly ventilated to protect the seamen's health. Practically all services found in the average hotel will be furnished for the men.

Falconer advised that all rest centers of the USS are open to Negro seamen.

Among those present at the Mobile conference on the question of hotel facilities for Nergro seamen were Falconer, Harold L. Dunn, also of New York, Director of Domestic Operations, USS, Frank C. Bancroft, Gulf Coast Regional Director, USS, with offices in New Orleans, O. B. Cloudman, George E. Blacktopp, O'den Banks of the Seafarer's International union, Rev. B. B. Williams, Prof. B. F. Baker, and J. L. LeFlore, the three latter named are members of the Colored Area Committee of the USS.

Hastie Tells Barristers of Racism in Armed Forces

Afro-American DEC 4 - 1943
Baltimore, Maryland

BALTIMORE — Speaking on "Legal Aspects of Racial Discrimination in the Armed Forces," Judge William H. Hastie of Howard University told the National Bar Convention in session here last week that the habeas corpus writ for release from military service has so far proved to be the most effective means of fighting illegal induction.

Major complaint among colored service men, he said, is the practice of classifying colored and white registrants into separate groups and calling them according to racial quotas, which is in violation of the Selective Service Act which provides that in the selection and training of service men there shall be no discrimination on account of race or color.

States Mustn't Discriminate

In regard to separate service units in the armed forces, Judge Hastie said that if a State discriminates against its citizens, such discrimination is certainly in violation of the Constitution, but whether the national government is similarly restrained is a question on which the Supreme Court has not yet expressed an opinion.

The discussion on this subject was led by Gregory Hawkins, local attorney, who related his personal experiences during the months he served in the

Hastie Bares Rigid Curbs On Race Pilots By Air Corps

Chicago, Illinois Defender

FEB 20 1943

By WILLIAM H. HASTIE

Recent Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War

Second of a Series

It was not until March, 1941, that the army air corps began accepting applications from Negroes for aviation cadet training. The actual instruction of Negroes to be flying officers did not begin until several months later. But even then, and to this day, there was and is only one type of combat aviation—namely, pursuit flying—for which the air command will train a Negro.

How did it happen that the training of Negro aviators was started in the field of pursuit flying? It is common knowledge that grave doubts were expressed from the beginning as to whether the Negro was capable of making good as a combat aviator. The air command described and still describes the training of the Negro in aviation as an "experiment."

Yet, in the face of this expressed skepticism, the air command saw fit to begin with the training of Negroes for pursuit flying, the most difficult type of combat aviation. The single pilot in his pursuit ship has the most exacting of air tasks, handling his fast plane, maneuvering it at terrific speed in actual combat, mastering the technique of accurate and properly directed fire in aerial dog fights, and exercising split second judgment in unexpected situations and emergencies.

Why Pursuit Pilots?

Why was the Negro, whose ability was in doubt, not started off with observation flying or in bombardment where co-pilots and other crew members assist each other and share and divide responsibility?

Only the men who made the decision know the answer. They may have reasoned that through pursuit flying Negroes would demonstrate their ability to perform any air combat task. Fortunately, it seems to be working out that way.

They may have also reasoned that Negroes were less likely to succeed in pursuit flying than in somewhat less exacting work. Yet, in all fairness it should be said that the best of facilities and thoroughly competent instructors were provided for the segregated training program for Negro pilots. And the men in the field who started this training did so with enthusiasm and determination to make it a success.

Statistics already released by the air command show that, during the first year of Negro pursuit piloting training, 42 per cent of the Negro trainees successfully completed their course and earned their wings as pursuit pilots. During the same period 59 per cent of white aviation cadets who entered training qualified as flying officers. Of course the number of Negroes was small and the statistics are therefore not conclusive.

Good Percentage

More important is the fact that Negro candidates have no opportunity at any stage of training to be assigned to some other branch of combat flying, if they seem not to be well adapted to pursuit work. The Negro cadet must become a pursuit pilot or nothing. White cadets are sorted out and placed according to their apparent aptitudes.

Under these circumstances, the fact that 42 per cent of the Negroes who had the physical and educational qualifications for aviation made the grade in the most difficult assignment is a significant accomplishment.

Beyond the fact that the Negro must have the ability for pursuit flying, or else not fly at all, he must meet the special physical specifications of the pursuit pilot. If he is too tall or too heavy for pursuit flying, he cannot be an army flyer, however competent he may be for some flying job other than pursuit work.

200 Get Wings in '43

In wasted manpower, it is difficult to say how much is being lost by imposing such restrictions upon the Negro. It seems probable that some 200 Negro pursuit pilots will earn their wings in 1943. But the air command has never undertaken a campaign of publicity or promotion designed to get young Negro men with superior training into flying training.

When the air forces set up their college reserve program, no Negroes were wanted. The small "Negro quota" was already filled for a year in advance. So, while the ground forces were welcoming Negro college men into their college reserve, the air forces refused to accept them.

Even earlier the air corps had undertaken the recruiting of groups of men from the individual college campus who would go into training as a unit with the group spirit and enthusiasm developed through their association at college. The Negro was excluded from this also. Thus, only the Negro who went forward on his own initiative, determined despite hell and high water to be a combat flyer, ever became an aviation cadet. Even then, he was accepted only within limited quota restrictions and for one type of training.

Cadet Restrictions

Within the past two months, restriction upon the acceptance of volunteers in the army have been extended to aviation cadets. Apparently, aviation cadets will be chosen almost exclusively from men already in the army. A new problem faces the Negro. He must apply for aviation cadet training through his commander and his papers must survive a journey through military channels. It remains to be seen whether his application will be encouraged and facilitated to the same extent as the application of the white soldier.

HASTIE—

In this connection, one recent experience is disturbing. For more than a year the air command has been selecting young soldiers, high school graduates, to be taken from the ranks and trained to become enlisted pilots. They become master, staff and technical sergeants with flying rating.

So far as I have been able to discover, Negro enlisted men have not been accepted in this program. How different will the situation be now that both prospective flying officers and prospective enlisted pilots will be selected from the ranks of the army?

Need for Expansion

Two hundred Negro pursuit pilots a year is something more than token representation. Certainly, 200 pilots can make a big difference in almost any of the present theatres of war. Yet the failure of the air command to encourage or even permit the full participation of the Negro in flying training and service prevents the number of Negro pilots from being several times 200 per year.

If the air command should decide to use Negro flying officers nd enlisted men without racial restrictions, 1,000 pilots would be a conservative estimate of annual production.

Of course there would be serious practical difficulties in developing segregated training fields and segregated organizations of many various types in such an expansion. From a military point of view all of this new segregated set up probably would not be worth the time, expense and diversion of personnel.

But if the war lasts long enough it is not too much to hope that those in authority will realize that their insistence upon strict racial segregation in aviation training and organization is a real hindrance to the ultimate objective of success in battle.

Mobile Situation 'Quited'

Daily World
June 4, 1943

Dr. B. F. Ashe, regional director of the War Manpower Commission, reports that prompt intervention and adequate protection given to persons and property by federal, state and city authorities at the Alabama Dry Dock and Shipbuilding Company, Mobile, Alabama, has "decidely quieted" the situation resulting from the recent race and labor disturbance.

Asserting that "the arrangements in force have given confidence o many workers, both colored and white, to remain on the job and resume work without fear," Dr. Ashe said in a statement that "while there is no doubt that production was seriously interfered with, it was never completely halted and is now gradually returning to normal."

The present basis of agreement that separate ship ways be maintained for Negro workers, thus enabling them to participate at all grades of skills employed on the hulls of the ships, Dr. Ashe said, seems to solve "at one and the same time both the difficulty of upgrading Negro workers adequately and that of providing them with adequate protection while at work in designated ways apart from the whites."

Stimson Again Ducks Stand On Army Bias

Defender
Chicago, Ill

OCT 6 1943

By HARRY McALPIN
(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON. — Jim-crow, discrimination and segregation are still rife in the Army of the United States. There have been, however, some definite moves toward the improvement of a very bad situation.

Despite these improvements, however, the War Department refuses to speak out plainly on the efforts it is making toward this end, refrains from giving the needed lift which it could give to the morale of thousands of soldiers, particularly Negro soldiers.

Last week, in War Secretary Stimson's press conference, the secretary was offered "bait" on a silver hook — a chance to pat the War Department on the back for some of its recent moves. Instead, he hedged — or rather the replies prepared for him by the Bureau of Public Relations were a hedge.

Stimson was asked: "In view of the fact that Negroes in the Army are now roughly ten per cent of its total strength and that for some time there have been apparent changing and developing policies affecting their army status, would you care to summarize the present policies of the War Department affecting Negroes in the Army, particularly with regard to their use as combat troops, their utilization as officers and enlisted men in the several branches of the service, and the degree to which it has been found possible to train and activize units of mixed racial character?"

Policy 'Unchanged'

Here was a chance to say a lot of good things about the Army—which exposes itself usually to so many bad things to say. Instead, Stimson answered by saying that all he could say at the time is that the "army's basic policies remain unchanged." He said units of the army are sent to overseas theatres as needed and when they have demonstrated their readiness for combat by successfully completing all the War Department's rigid tests for their respective arms and services.

"The War Department feels that present organizational policies serve the war effort to the best advantage, and a deviation from present policies is not feasible," he declared.

Still fishing for a morale-lifting answer, the secretary was asked: "There have been recent newspaper accounts of materials disseminated by the Army War College and other branches of the Army to orient officers on race relations. Would you care to comment on this program and the degree to which it will be developed in the future?"

To this he replied that it has been a long standing policy of the Army War College Library to issue from time to time lists of topics of timely and professional interest tc all officers. To be of real value, he said, such lists must cover a wide scope of subjects. Then he added, "These lists do not constitute an expression of the War Department policy, nor are they necessarily part of the training program. They are informative only." He said the Army War College Library had recently issued a list on race relations.

Recreational Problem

A third question asked was: "The press has carried recent accounts of investigations conducted by Brig. Gen. Benjamin O. Davis Sr., and others into conditions affecting Negro troops, and has reported a number of complaints of Negro troops regarding alleged inadequate transportation and recreational facilities in and around Southern camps. Will you comment upon what the War Department has done or is doing to deal with these problems so far as they have been found to exist?"

These, the secretary said, have constituted problems from the beginning of the war. Inadequate recreational and transportation facilities have been ever recurring problems, he pointed out. "These problems have to be faced and solved by the local commanders concerned," he said. "I am very glad to say very considerable progress has been made in the solution of these problems. Of course, it is my desire for these improvements to be continuous."

He could have set a tempo for local commanders to follow by citing just one example of improvement — and there have been some. There is the case of a camp in Virginia where through cooperation of the local commander and War Department efforts Negro and white soldiers ride buses to and from the camp without regard to the Virginia jim-crow laws. It can be done!

Riot Reports

Meanwhile, stories published in daily newspapers here continue to cite racial hostilities and bitterness existing in the British Isles where white troops object to the presence of Negro troops.

Says the Daily News on Wednesday last:

"London, Oct. 6—A free-for-all fight among American soldiers was disclosed today to have occurred in a Wiltshire village on September 26, the same day on which two military policemen were wounded during an American shooting affray in a town in Cornwall.

"A number of soldiers were injured in the Wiltshire battle, several of them seriously, when Negro and white troops fought with knives on the town's main street.

"American troops have been barred from the town by U. S. military authorities, pending an investigation and military police are patrolling the streets.

"The Cornwall gun battle started with a fist fight between two American soldiers attending a local dance.

"The following night one group of Americans arrived at the town square, each man carrying a rifle and 60 rounds of ammunition hidden beneath his coat and ambushed another party leaving a hotel. The soldiers fought for 10 minutes before order was restored."

White House Flooded With Protests Against Railroads' Defiance Of FEP

Defender
Chicago, Ill

DEC 25 1943

(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON — The White House was deluged this week with protests against the action of 16 Southern rai[illegible] in defying the directive [illegible] by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, calling for equal employment opportunities and gradings for railroad workers of all races.

Among the more prominent organizations denouncing the attitude of the railroads were the National Negro Congress, United Transport Service Employes of America (UTSEA), CIO, National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, N.A.A.C.P., Council Against Racial and Religious Discrimination, and the Urban League.

The message from the National Negro Congress said, in part:

"In defying the order of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice to cease discriminatory practices against the Negro people, the Southeastern Carrier's conference, representing sixteen Wall street owned Southern railroads, has placed itself in opposition to the nation's war efforts and the need for additional manpower for the effective war operation of the railroads. The case against discrimination in employment has become joined. The issue is clear and simple. Shall we again permit through a policy of appeasement an insignificant minority of unpatriotic employers to defy the war aims of the nation? Or shall the criminal action of the railroad owners be recognized for what it is—treason against the nation?"

Says War Interest Sacrificed

An excerpt from the UTSEA letter reads as follows:

"This stand indicates that railroad labor organizations and the southern railroads in subscribing to a policy of racial discrimination are not interested in the winning of the war, nor in the safety of patrons who are paying enormous transportation fees. Today, many roads have enlisted the services of 'teen age youngsters and women to do the work of experienced and stable railroad[illegible]

DEC 25 1943

The N.A.A.C.P. pointed out that there were in the letter of the railroads to the FEPC "two thinly-veiled threats of mob violence" to thwart the provisions of Executive Order 9346 prohibiting discrimination in war industries and agencies on account of race, creed, color or national origin.

N.A.A.C.P. Demands Action

Blasting the statement of the companies that "conditions of chaos" will result if Negroes are employed, the letter states that this idea is being planted deliberately in the minds of the traveling public "for sinister and undemocratic purposes."

The President is urged to meet vigorously and unequivocally "this impudent challenge of your authority as President and as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy" with the prediction that the overwhelming majority of the American people will give him unqualified support.

The federation protest said, in part:

"The many friends of the FEPC have looked upon the outcome [illegible] the railroad hearings as a s[illegible] of the effectiveness of our country's efforts to stamp out racial discrimination from industry. They hailed the decision of the FEPC. Therefore non-compliance with FEPC's findings and directives would undermine the morale of the many minorities of our country, have serious repercussions among our allies abroad, and greatly increase our national manpower problem.

"The railroads have made their position clear. They insist upon the continuance of the status quo of racial discrimination. It seems necessary, therefore that, in the interest of securing adequate war manpower and promoting national morale, the findings and directives of the FEPC be enforced."

Called "Brazen Defiance

The Chicago Council Against Racial and Religious Discrimination wrote expressing its whole-hearted condemnation of the efforts of the southern railroads to repudiate the FEPC directive.

"This action, in our opinion," the council said, "constitutes an affront not only to American Negroes, but to American democracy itself. It represents, moreover, a challenge to your own authority—a challenge which must not go uncontested."

The executive board in a unanimous resolution termed the action of the southern carriers "brazen defiance of the United States government," and called upon its affiliated organizations to express their support of the FEPC and urge President Roosevelt to "take whatever steps may be necessary to secure compliance from the railroads with Executive Order 9346."

MOW Head Writes

In a hotly-worded statement, typical of him, A. Philip Randolph, national director of the March-on-Washington movement said:

"Hiding behind the smoke screens that the directives of FEPC are unrealistic and impractical, and conjuring up terrifying hobgoblins of racial disaster in the South if just employment opportunities are awarded Negroes in the railroad industry, the Southern railroad managements have denonuced the President's Executive Order 9346 as a scrap of paper, expressing their flat refusal to obey it.

"This is a sharp challenge to the Negro, liberal and minority groups of the country. It is a mortal thrust at the heart of American democracy. Certainly, it will give cause for Hitler and Tojo to shout hypocrisy to American democracy, but Negroes, Catholics, Jews and other minority groups will not let this challenge go unanswered.

"From every housetop, pulpit, and street corner, the voice of the people must ring down these charges, demanding that President Roosevelt meet this challenge with forthright action, ordering these railroads to obey the directives of FEPC. The fight to save and make an effective FEPC, is a vital part of the fight to help win the war and the peace."

Local Group Protest

The Chicago Branch of the N.A.A.C.P. said:

"Defiance of FEPC by southern railroads constitute direct threat to principles of democracy and successful prosecution of the war," and urged "prompt and firm action in support of the committee." Oscar C. Brown is president of the local N.A.A.C.P.

The Chicago Civil Liberties committee affirmed that it was wholeheartedly behind Executive Order 9346 and FEPC and urged him to take decisive action to meet the challenge of the southern railroads in refusing to recognize the legality of the FEPC order. The committee declared, "The purpose of the railroads was to create disunity and strike a blow at the United Nations' war effort. Ira Latimer is executive secretary of the Chicago Civil Liberties committee.

Expressions of support of FEPC were also sent to the President by the Chicago Council of the National Negro Congress of which C. Francis Stradford is chairman, and the Chicago Chapter of the March-on-Washington movement of which Charles Wesley Burton is chairman.

The Chicago Urban League informed the President that it read with dismay the refusal of the railroads to obey the FEPC order and said it seemed inconceivable that any group of American citizens, especially in this hour of crisis, would allow racial prejudice to prevent the full utilization of all available competent labor. A. L. Foster is executive secretary.

64 Soldiers Get 1-5 Years

Afro-American DEC 11 1943
Baltimore, Md.

PARIS, Tenn.—(ANP)—Sixty-four colored soldiers stationed at Camp Tyson were last week sentenced to from one to five years each at hard labor for riding two army trucks into a nearby town without authority.

The terms are considered the stiffest ever handed down by an American military court.

The non-commissioned officers were given five years each, while one private was sentenced to a year and the other privates received longer terms, according to Col. William H. Dunham, junior commanding officer of the barrage balloon training center.

The soldiers had planned a joy ride to Jackson last October 10, but never reached their destination because camp officers discovered their absence and learned of the missing trucks. They later found the missing men in a small town called Henry.

Court Martial Lily-White

The sentences were termed very rash, as former punishments for misappropriation of government property are said to have been much lighter.

The men are slated to serve their sentences at a Federal rehabilitation camp, according to a court martial, composed of all whites. A decision by the judge advocate of the War Department in Washington, however, may modify the terms.

Terror Against Soldiers Goes Unpunished

Daily Worker
New York, N.Y.

By Adam Lapin

(Daily Worker Washington Bureau)

(This is the first of two articles on discrimination against Negro soldiers)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 10.—"There never will be any action taken on these old cases."

This is the official attitude of the Department of Justice on about half a dozen cases of violence against Negro soldiers by white police officers in the South on which the War Department has asked action. According to Attorney General Francis Biddle and his aides, these cases are dead. And as far as they are concerned, this whole issue is dead.

But according to a report submitted to the National Lawyers Guild by William Hastie, the well known Negro leader and former civilian aide to Secretary of War Henry Stimson:

"Civilian violence against the Negro in uniform is a recurrent phenomenon. It continues unabated. It may well be the greatest single factor now operating to make 13,000,000 Negroes bitter and resentful and to undermine the fighting spirit of three-quarters of a million Negroes in arms."

Here are some of the cases cited by Hastie in his report:

CULPRITS UNPUNISHED

In January, 1942 a group of civilian policemen and one military policemen went on a shooting spree in a narrow, crowded street in the Negro business section and without any provocation injured about 30 soldiers with buckshot fired from riot guns.

In March, 1942, city policeman A. J. Hay of Little Rock shot and killed Sergeant Thomas Foster, a Negro soldier. After an inadequate presentation by a local attorney designed by the Department of Justice, a grand jury cleared Hay who is now in the Army.

In July, 1942, city police officers in Beaumont Texas fired several shots into the body of Private Charles Reco, a Negro soldier, whom they had arrested. At the request of the War Department, the Department of Justice filed a criminal information. But the Department later abandoned prosecution for the stated reason that there was no hope of conviction.

Shortly afterwards in El Paso, Texas, Private Willie Julius was shot and killed by a city policeman. Local authorities went through the motions of submitting the case to a grand jury—which took no action.

During Sept. 1942 Lt. Norma Greene, a Negro nurse, was badly beaten by two policemen in Montgomery, Alabama. While condemning the action of the police officers, military authorities found no grounds for interference since Lt. Greene was not in uniform.

In Oct. 1942 Private Henry Williams, a Negro soldier, was killed by a bus driver while riding through the streets of Mobile. In this case there was not even the formality of a Grand Jury hearing.

In November, 1942, Private Larry Stroud was shot through the back of the head by a city policeman in Columbia, South Carolina.

During the same month, Private Raymond Carr, a Negro M.P., was shot and killed by a city policeman in Alexandria, Louisiana—the second major outbreak of violence in this city. Local military authorities asked state officials to prosecute. When the state officials refused, the same request was made of the Department of Justice which insisted that the state should handle the case. Finally, the case was presented to a local grand jury which exonnerated the killer.

NOTHING DONE

The War Department has asked for action in a number of cases. But it has not spoken up publicly to condemn these acts of violence against Negro servicemen.

The Department of Justice has to an extent been hampered by lack of legislation to prosecute in Federal courts the slayers of members of the armed forces. There is a law to this effect which applies to some categories in the Federal service such as the Coast Guard, immigration inspectors and members of the grazing service. But it does not cover men in the Army.

Within the limits of existing legislation, Hastie found, however, that there has been a disgraceful failure to take vigorous action on the part of Attorney General and the Department of Justice.

Specific recommendations made by Hastie for remedial action are:

First, that the President make a public appeal to the nation "directing attention to the continuing course of unrestrained violence against Negro soldiers.

Second, that the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy launch a positive program of education within his branch of the armed forces, calculated to develop the attitude of respect toward members of the minority groups in our army and navy which we are now trying to inculcate with reference to foreign peoples among whom our men in arms are now living.

Third, that Attorney General Biddle should prosecute some of the cases listed above and should sponsor legislation to strengthen the hand of the Department of Justice and the Federal courts in dealing with acts of violence against Negro servicemen.

Fifth, that the Senate and House Military Affairs Committee should act to approve such legislation, which could be in the form of an amendment of Section 243 of Title 18 of the United States Code.

New Development Gives Ray of Hope

Amsterdam -News
New York, N. Y.

(This is the second in a series of exclusive articles by the AMSTERDAM NEWS on the progressive side of Negroes in various branches of the Armed Forces. A fortnight ago we reviewed the Coast Guard setup. Another feature in this series will appear at a later date.—The Editors.)

By S. W. GARLINGTON

ALL'S NOT "PEACHES AND CREAM" in the Army. In fact, much of the discrimination practiced by this branch of ou armed forces—if recorded—would serve as tear jerkers and blood-boilers. But, there's always a bright side to everything—even the booting of Mussolini. So, let's review the progressive side. After all, its' good for your morale—which should be able to stand a dose of "You're not SO bad off" after the recent epidemic of race riots.

Progress has a way all its own. It will eventually express itself, irrespective of reactionary forces. In World War I, we did not have a General. Now we do—Brigadier General B. O. Davis. As late as 1941 we did not have Army fliers. Now we do . . . and our fliers are making a more than creditable record, too.

Gen. B. O. Davis

Fliers Aid Allies' Advance

Early in July a dispatch from Allied Headquarters in North Africa stated that First Lieut. Charles B. Hull, 22-year-old pilot from Brazil, Indiana, claimed the first Axis plane credited to his squadron which was patrolling in the North African Theatre of War. Hull brought down a German Focke-Wulf 190 during a dog fight over Castelventrano Airfield in Sicily. He piloted a P-40 Warhawk escorting Mitchell Medium bombers that raided the field. One other German plane was destroyed and a third damaged by fliers in the Negro American Fighting Squadron.

The exploit drew congratulations from Dwight D. Eisenhower, Allied Commander-in-Chief. He was at the air-base with the Squadron Commander, Lieut. Benjamin O. Davis, Jr., when the fliers came back.

Future Bombardiers

At present, the closest Negroes can come to being a bombardier is by buying war bonds—hence a "Bondardier." That's not a distasteful substitution, because bonds and stamps are needed, too, to win the war. But this limitation will soon be a bit of history in our march toward more democracy in the Army.

Acting Secretary of War Robert P. Patterson, at a press conference on July 15, 1943, made known the fact that the Army will soon train Negro bombardiers and navigators. The Army Air Forces, it said, will open bombardier and navigator schools which will be attended by both Negro and white aviation cadets. Whether the success of our fliers in Africa or the pressure of war brought about this pending progressive step, we are not concerned. All that matters is that it is in the making, and we are appreciative.

Over 3000 Officers

Negroes are in almost all the technical and service schools, military and civilians, run by the Army or under contract to it. More than 2,683 have been graduated from Officer Candidate Schools. These men have been commissioned and are serving in all arms and branches of the Army with Negro Reserve and National Guard Officers on active duty. There are more than 3,000 Negro officers serving in all grades, from Second Lieutenant to Brigadier General. In World War I, there were only 1,353 officers of which more than half served overseas.

Cadets and WAC Training

Negro aviation cadets continue to be trained at the Tuskegee Army Flying Field in Alabama. A group is also being trained at Selfridge Field in Michigan.

The story of Negro women [illegible]ing the Army and their acceptance and treatment by the Army is one of the bright chapters of any review on the Army. They are serving, both in the ranks and as officers, in the Women's Army (Auxiliary) Corps (WAC's).

In contrast to one of the "brightest chapters," the treatment and status of Negro Military Police (MP's) and Chaplains and the extreme sparsity of Negroes in direct command of near a half million Negroes go to make up one of the blackest chapters in the current history of the Army.

Where Are Our Soldiers?

The latest available figures on Negro personnel in the Army, enlisted and commissioned, show that there are more than 450,000 serving in every arm and branch of the service. Of that number more than 60,000 are serving outside of the Continental United States with other American forces. In the far Pacific there are more than 25,000 Negro soldiers on duty.

Approximately 10,000 are stationed in North Africa. In addition, a completely organized and well trained (at Tuskegee) Army Air Force Pursuit Squadron has been committed to combat and participated in the battle of Pantelleria, the Italian island "stronghold" which is or was supposed to guard the Sicilian Straits. Their participation in this battle marked the first appearance of Negro Americans in overseas aerial combat.

'Heroes All!'

What about heroes growing out of participation in the Army? In World War I exactly 191 received the Distinguished Service Cross and 3 officers were decorated with the Croix de Guerre. According to the number of Negroes serving in the Army now, those to be decorated for heroism will undoubtedly exceed the above figures—if everything is equal.

Medals and awards are often over-emphasized. They minimize the excellent lesson found in the story of "The Widow's Mite." In actuality, all Negroes serving in the Army are heroes. With this statement there should be no quarrel. After all, with all the Jim Crow and limitations placed upon the Negro—even in the Army—the Negro who volunteers for service under his flag is more than a hero.

War Dept. Again Refuses to Establish Mixed Unit

Afro-American

SEP 18 1943

WASHINGTON.

Reaffirming its stubbornly maintained position that it will not retreat from its policy of segregation in the armed forces, the War Department, in a letter under date of September 4, to Walter White, NAACP secretary, declared:

"The suggestion contained in your letter (of July 14) for the formation of mixed units has been considered at various times by the War Department and the decision reached that such action would be inadvisable." The letter was signed by John J. McCloy, Acting Secretary of War.

Mr. White, in releasing the above information, revealed [illegible] that recently he had visited McCloy and thanked him on behalf of colored people for the establishment of non-segregated training for colored bombardiers, pilots and navigators.

Baltimore, Md.

At that time Mr. White expressed the hope that after they had received this training in mixed units, colored aviators would be permitted to fight in mixed units. The negative answer recorded above is Mr. McCloy's reply.

Soldier In Africa Ponders 'Whys' Of Disunity At Home

Journal and Guide
Norfolk, Virginia

AUG 28 1943

EDITOR'S NOTE: Things are not as dark on the "dark continent" as is generally believed, writes Pfc. William H. Harris, who is with an engineers' battalion in North Africa. The way the American soldier is received causes him to "swell with pride." However, when he reads accounts of racial trouble in various sections of his homeland, he gets a letdown, and wonders —why? His letter follows in full.

Editor, Journal and Guide,
Dear Sir:

Over here in this so called dark continent things are not as dark as I read in those books in school. The natives are friendly and intelligent, and possess a culture that perhaps comes down from Biblical times.

GREATEST ARMY

In our association with them we learn how Americans impress them. They expect us to have plenty and to give the same. They tell us we are lucky to be soldiers of the greatest Army in the world.

We appreciate this recognition and swell with pride at being Americans. But on reading in the Journal and Guide of the myriad number of race riots and ill feeling among the people in the United States, we wonder if we shouldn't be back over there giving our full aid in what seems to us a fight more related to our future and well being.

We are perplexed to read about these seemingly unreasonable racial clashes. Its unbelievable how the people in the states seemingly love to fight each other while we, their fathers, sons, and brothers, are giving our all to exterminate that alleged maniac who proclaimed that he should, and tried like hell to, rule the world.

FIGHT RIGHT MAN

I sincerely hope that the people of America have not and must forget that Adolf did not exclude America from that list of countries he wished to destroy in his lust for power. We fighting men over here are on the verge of another great battle. We colored soldiers some times wonder if we're fighting the right man.

We continue to be loyal to our country to the end, but we can't help being concerned over the seemingly uncalled for fighting among people who are supposed to be united in the fight against Nazism.

Not knowing how or what evil is at the base of these outbreaks, we form our own conclusions. Naturally we expect some of these opinions to be wrong and we are hoping that this disgusting situation will be alleviated as soon as possible.

We believe that our President and his cabinet are doing everything possible to improve race relations. Nevertheless, we are shocked and bewildered at what seems entirely unreasonable. Must we delay victory by fighting among ourselves?

Surely all [illegible] Americans realize [illegible] effect these riots have on production, unity, and the fighting spirit in general. American soldiers, black and white, have fought, are fighting, and will fight side by side until victory is won.

FATAL BATTLE

Let us imagine the results if white and colored soldiers of the American Army would begin slaughtering one another in the midst of a battle against the enemy.

I am sure we all realize that victory can only be accomplished through strict adherence and unity. Let's wake up and reason intelligently as cultured beings should. Victory must and shall be ours at the climax of this great struggle!

The Mystery Of The 93rd Division

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa

Whether the War Department knows it or not, there is widespread concern about the future of the all-Negro 93rd Division.

This division was activated more than two years ago and widely advertised as the answer to the demand of colored Americans that Negroes be used as fighting soldiers as well as working soldiers.

Divisions that went into training long after the 93rd started, are now overseas.

The Japanese-American Combat Team from Hawaii trained for a few months in Mississippi and has since had its baptism of fire in Italy.

The Office of War Information has sent out stories about Negro troops in various parts of the world, but they are always laborers or stevedores.

We know very well that laborers and stevedores are necessary, indeed essential, in modern warfare, but we contend that it is the rankest sort of color discrimination to use Negroes ONLY as laborers and stevedores.

The Army has already wasted millions of dollars training artillery units composed of Negroes, only to break them up and send them to the Quartermaster after they had become highly skilled with field guns and built up a high esprit de corps.

Does the Army bureaucracy intend to do the same thing with the 93rd Division?

Why is this highly trained combat unit being used to guard warehouses and tool sheds in the hour of decision?

PUBLIC COURT-MARTIAL

Colonel William T. Colman, white, former Selfridge Field (Mich.) air base commander, on trial by court-martial for shooting Private William McRae, colored, heard witnesses testify that he had given orders that no colored soldier was to serve as his chauffeur.

Afro-American

This army commander, with such pronounced racial hatred, faces other charges:

1. Misappropriating a 300-watt Delco engine generator, of the type that makes electricity for house purposes, a refrigerator and five beds.
2. Accepting use of a vacation lodge from a Federal contractor at his camp.
3. Using army civilian employees for private work.
4. Transferring and promoting men by fraud.
5. Being drunk four times in two months on duty, in quarters, and in station.

Baltimore, Md

The War Department plainly means to make an example of Colonel Colman. His trial is open to the public and the press.

Commander Fights Race Prejudice At Army Camp

ABERDEEN PROVING GROUND, Md. (ANP)—The courageous fight put up by a post commander against race prejudice in the Army was revealed this week by Negro soldiers stationed there.

The commander of the post, Maj. Gen. Harris, is opposed to segregation and fights it here in a courageous manner, soldiers revealed. "As a result, some semblance of democracy operates here to the extent that some companies are seen drilling with their ranks sprinkled with Negro soldiers."

Post exchanges, theatres and service clubs are open to all, and certain technical classrooms are mixed. There are several

Navy Discrimination

In April, 1942, when Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox announced that the policy of the Navy department had been relaxed and that United States citizens who happened to have been black would, in the future, be given the opportunity for service in the Marine corps and for more extended service in the Navy, The Courier, which had waged an unrelenting campaign against the Navy's practice of discrimination and exclusion, announced that Negro citizens had expected more and deserved more.

* * *

The Courier did not delude itself into believing that the Navy department had decided to observe to the letter the mandate of Abraham Lincoln, the federal constitution and the laws of the nation and treat all citizens in the service of their country alike.

* * *

The caste of high officers in the Navy had too long cultivated a tradition of regarding the Navy as a sort of separate sovereignty to change overnight.

* * *

Secretary Knox bluntly intimated that Negroes were to be recruited for the expanded messman class, for construction battalions and for coast guard duty.

* * *

Nothing has happened since April, 1942, to change this conviction.

* * *

The Navy department still treats Negroes as though they were second-class American citizens to be disposed of as suits the prejudices of the Navy high command which, to be truthful, does not include Secretary Knox and President Roosevelt.

* * *

We believe reports that the word has gone out from the board of admirals in the Navy department to both Secretary Knox and the President that this equal rights stuff for all citizens is not to be considered in the Navy.

* * *

As the nation prepares to celebrate Navy Day and to pay deserved tribute to the fighting prowess of our Navy, The Courier submits that the United States Navy, in policy and practice, is one of the chief violators of the principles of democracy for which we say we are fighting. We make the following charges, supported by abundant evidence:

1. The Navy makes a rigid distinction between American citizens, based on the color of their skins.

2. Certain ratings in the Navy are given to white Americans only.

3. The messman class is recruited principally from black Americans.

4. That no attempt has been made to classify thousands of messmen to discover their fitness for other types of service.

5. That hundreds of Negroes have been kept in the messman class, regardless of their demonstrated ability to perform other types of service, as demonstrated by Dorie Miller and others who when occasion demanded, have quit their servile jobs to man the guns and defend their ships.

6. That the Navy stubbornly refuses to commission any Negro

7. That the Navy stubbornly sticks to segregation in its training program.

8. That the Navy draws a rigid color line against Negro women.

9. That the Navy has broken the hearts of thousands of black boys who have wanted to serve their country.

10. That the Navy maintains a strict system of segregation on all its ships.

11. That the example of the Navy undermines faith in the professed ideals of the nation.

* * *

What can be done about the Navy The Courier does not know. We are at war and all Americans, regardless of personal interests, seek victory.

* * *

There is certainly reason to fear, however, that the victories which the Navy wins with its guns may be dissipated by its undemocratic practices.

* * *

Maybe the Congress can find some way to inform the admirals in the Navy that the department they are running still belongs to the American people, all of them, black and white.

* * *

The Negro Press and the Negro people have done their utmost. In their contacts with the Navy department, they have met with polite but firm run-arounds and evasion.

* * *

Since Admiral Chester Nimitz left for Hawaii, not one responsible, policy-making officer in the Navy department has been willing to talk with any representatives of the Negro people. Secretary Knox, who can't do much anyway, has ducked them. Assistant Secretary Ralph Bard, who carries even less weight with the Navy admirals, has funneled into practice some of the policies of the admirals.

* * *

But not a single admiral has given an ear to the Negro's plea that the Navy practice democracy. Each Negro delegation to the Navy department has been met by a commander, a captain or someone of lesser stature. These men can hear complaints. They have no power to act. For two years, Rear Admiral Randall Jacobs has been too busy to see any Negro or delegation of them. He is chief of the Bureau of Naval Personnel and in the responsible position affecting Negroes in the Navy. He does as he pleases and keeps his door closed.

Frequent complaints are lodged against the Army. But the high command of the Army, from General Marshall down, have listened to Negroes and have attempted to improve conditions in the Army. A Negro delegation might as well attempt to see Hirohito as to try to have a conference with either Admiral Ernest King or Admiral Jacobs. They are not concerned with those whom they regard as second-class citizens.

* * *

The situation in the Navy, for the sake of the nation in its future relations with other peoples, demands a congressional investigation. The Courier has already asked for that investigation and will press its request.

Citizens Surprised By Army's Objection To Dancing Couple

NOV 27 1943

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Edgar T. Rouzeau, Courier War Correspondent, whose "Wheel And A Prayer" article appearing exclusively in last week's issue of The Courier, created much comment, spanned the Atlantic last week by plane to return home for a well-earned rest. He visited The Courier home office over the weekend . . traveled to Fairmont, W. Va. . . . hometown of Captain George Spencer Roberts, Jr., of the 99th Pursuit Squadron, to deliver personal greetings and presents. En route, he stopped off in Morgantown, W. Va., with Staff Photographer John G. Taylor, to get an "exclusive" on the story which appears below.)

By EDGAR T. ROUZEAU, Exclusive to The Pittsburgh Courier

MORGANTOWN, W. Va.—Citizens of this city, white and colored, see nothing unusual or improper in the fact that a respectable and winsome colored high school graduate had danced with a white soldier in the ballroom of the fashionable Hotel Morgan here on November 5. Some hinted broadly that the setting was quite democratic and that it was very stupid for Army officers concerned to focus so much embarrassment upon themselves by attempting to make a cause celebre out of a simple matter.

Most of those interviewed by this reporter admitted frankly that they had not even been aware that a jitterbug number had been staged at the hotel by the daughter of one of Morgantown's best known and most widely respected Negro citizens. The incident was brought to their knowledge when newspapers reported that the soldier concerned had been court-martialed for his act.

GIRL WORKS AT HOTEL

The soldier in the case is Pvt. Herman P. Suiter, 25, Louisville, Ky., until recently a member of a class of 60 Army Air Corps preflight students at West Virginia university. His dancing partner was 18-year-old Dorothy Johnson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles N. Johnson, of Rightmore stret.

Dorothy is next to the oldest of five children in this family. She is an exceptionally bright girl who has strong views of her own on democracy and racial tolerance. She graduated this past June from the Scottdale high school, Scottdale, Pa., and hopes to continue in college as soon as she can raise the necessary funds. [illegible] has been working at the Morgan hotel as an elevator girl.

Her father, born and reared in this city, is a musician by vocation, but also works in the school system. It was his view that if "we are going to fight prejudice, we can't afford to be prejudiced ourselves." He said his daughter had danced in public with a young man who had shown himself to be a gentleman, and that under the circumstances he could see nothing wrong.

COMMANDER ACTED ON OWN INITIATIVE

Private Suiter's commanding officer, Capt. Walter C. Troutman, brought charges against the soldier. He told this reporter Saturday afternoon, however, that he had taken action on his own initiative, that neither the hotel management, the guests at the dance, nor outside citizens had filed any complaint over the fact that one of his cadets had danced with a colored girl. He insisted, that, nonetheless, the soldier was "entirely out of line in dancing with an uninvited guest, an elevator girl who was not properly dressed."

The so-called improper dress was a blue uniform worn by Miss Johnson, but the dance was semi-formal. Miss Johnson said that the hotel management had not mentioned the matter to her, and that she has lost no friends by dancing with Private Suiter. She has been told that white students at West Virginia university have voiced the opinion that she was perfectly correct in what she did.

Captain Troutman, formerly a football star at the University of Georgia, ordered Suiter to appear for court-martial on the charge that he had prejudiced "good order and military discipline" and had brought "discredit upon the military service by dancing with a colored girl in view of [illegible] present."

ORDERED PAY FORFEITED

The court-martial board found the student guilty. Two-thirds of his pay of $50 was forfeited for one month and the findings of the court were ordered incorporated into the student's permanent service record to be "used in any future case against this aviation student during his entire Army career."

Fortunately for the pre-flight student, the results of the trial were later reviewed and overruled by the Eastern Flying Command at Maxwell Field, Montgomery, Ala., and the sentence set aside. Private Suiter has [illegible] graduated with his class and is now taking advanced training at Nashville, Tenn.

The action of the board of review was a slap in the face for Captain Troutman, who commands the preflight school at the university here. Captain Troutman said that the question of color did not enter into his mind when he issued the court-martial order.

GIRL GIVES STORY

He said that Private Suiter had violated regulations by dancing with an uninvited guest who was working for the hotel as an elevator girl. He said the girl was improperly dressed and that he would have taken the same action against Suiter if his dancing companion had been white instead of colored. He added that the decision of the board of review was final, that all charges against Suiter had been rescinded, and that "all this ado over nothing is nonsensical."

Interviewed, Miss Johnson related the following:

"On the evening of November 5, the pre-flight students were giving a dance at the hotel. Several such dances had been given by previous graduating classes and Pvt. Suiter had won a jitterbug contest at one of them.

"My friend, Elgy Shade, and myself, were on duty on the elevators. On this evening Pvt. Suiter wanted to demonstrate his jitterbug prowess and he got the idea that he would make a better showing if one of us would dance with him. He approached Miss Shade first and she later told me that she dance with him in a corridor leading to the ballroom but refused to go out on the floor.

INSISTED ON DANCING

"Suiter approached me several times and asked me to dance. I told him each time that I was on duty and I further warned him that he would probably get in trouble. He laughed off my warning and kept insisting that it would be very patriotic on my part to help him entertain his friends.

"I got to thinking and I finally decided that perhaps I would be helping the cause of democracy to indulge him in this request. It seemed harmless enough and the dance was to be done in public. I mentioned the fact that I had on only my blue uniform, but he waved this last objection aside by reminding me that the dance was informal and that none of the girls present were dressed in gowns.

GUESTS APPLAUDED

"With that, I accepted the invitation, and we went out on the dance floor. There were several couples dancing, [illegible] soon as they noticed that we were jitterbugging, they left the floor and joined the ring that was beginning to surround us. The conclusion of the dance was greeted with heavy applause, and many of the guests begged us to give them additional numbers. Private Suiter was willing, but I refused to accommodate them, and soon afterward, I left the hotel and went home.

"There were several naval officers among the guests. Captain Troutman also had someone representing him at the dance. It seems to me that there was plenty of time to have stopped us if our dancing was against military regulations. When I arrived home, I told my parents that I had danced at the Hotel Morgan, and I told them how it happened. None of us thought any more about it after that night until Private Suiter's court-martial was reported in the newspapers."

CAUSED FURORE

Courier

Miss Dorothy Johnson, employee in the Morgan hotel, Morgantown, W. Va., was [illegible] innocent means by which a white soldier was court-martialed for bringing discredit upon the military service by dancing with a colored girl in view of those present" at a dance in the hotel.

FIGHT BOSTON USO BAN UN MIXED DANCING

Chicago Bee
Chicago, Illinois

By PAUL DANIEL DAVIS.

BOSTON, Nov. 18. (ANP)—Following instructions given by the white senior hostess to five colored junior hostesses at the Hoetl Touraine in Boston to the effect that they were not to dance with white servicemen under [illegible] circumstances, and to refuse their offers to dance, Attorney Ray W. Guild started blasting the jim-crow tactics of the Greater Boston Sailors' and Soldiers' Committee, Inc.

NOV 27 1943

This edict sanctioned unanimously by the board of directors of the Greater Boston USO committee, which has a colored member in Atty. Matthew Bullock, member of the Massachusetts Parole board, and also apparently by one of the leading Boston colored matrons, Mrs. John B. Hall, is to apply to the Buddies-Bay State club located on the historic Boston Common.

Confer on Policy.

Attorney Guild, president of the Co-ordinating Council of Colored Organizations for National Defense, has called for a meeting this week of the committee and citizens of Boston in order to determine what policy is to be followed. This becomes necessary since the two above mentioned colored citizens in strategic positions have agreed to the segregated policies of the USO committee.

The present controversy grew out of the fact that the Buddies-Bay State clubs, located on the Boston Common, less than 50 feet from the statute of Crispus Attucks, refused last July to admit Negro hostesses.

In August, following a meeting between white women and three colored civic leaders—Mrs. Lucy Mitchell, wife of the executive secretary of the Governor's council of Massachusetts; Wilemina Crosson, Boston school teacher, and Mrs. John B. Hall—18 colored girls were certified as junior hostesses. Last week the first request was made for five of the group to come to the Hotel Touraine for instructions. There these colored girls were informed that they were to confine their dancing to the colored soldiers.

Riots on Increase Abroad

Kansas City, Mo.

Kansas City Call

Secret Report Puts Blame on Dixie Officers

SEP 3 - 1943

NEW YORK— (ANP)— From confidential sources which the Associated Negro Press has every reason to believe competent and reliable, and which the Associated Negro Press will not reveal, the following account of the American Negro soldiers in England has been secretly received:

"The conditions over here are getting like those in the States. White officers are doing a fair job in convincing some British people about the race problem.

"Most Negro troops are gradually being moved out of and away from the cities to isolated camps. White MP's are usually placed in these vicinities and intimidate Negro soldiers as well as the girls who are seen with them.

Two Riots in Week

"Last week, there were at least two riots over here. Another one

July 1 and the last of May. During the last of May, two Negroes were reported killed, more wounded and a white officer wounded. Had an awful time throughout the night. One Negro officer practically took charge of the camp. He collected [illegible] 600 rifles in two days. Started when a white MP shot a Negro soldier.

"Last week, one started when fights broke out between Negro and white soldiers in a small [illegible] in northern England when white soldiers are reported to have resented British girls being with Negro soldiers.

"In a southern England city, there were a number of fights, which started when a white lieutenant made remarks about some 'N..... soldiers and merchant men' who were passing. The soldiers resented it.

"A riot was prevented by some of the few Negro MP's [illegible] came up and rescued the officer. Yet an MP sergeant (white) at the same time insulted a Negro officer who had tried to quiet the soldiers. At MP headquarters, the Negro officer said that he was insulted by the provost officer (white) in front of the other MP's, who were enlisted men, and arrested as being drunk.

"The coolness of the four Negro lieutenants, the colored MP's and the colored American Red Cross personnel prevented a probable riot during the night.

"Riots are much more frequent than the press can publish. The troops break into the gun rooms and get their rifles and ammunition to protect themselves often. If something is not done by the U. S. Army soon, I would not be surprised to see a major battle between Negro and white American soldiers.

"It seems that some top people want southern U. S. A. transferred over here. Even Mr. Bondy from the American Red Cross is over here trying to find reasons for moving the colored clubs (clubs staffed by Negroes) out of certain cities because it is said that certain people must be satisfied.

"One of them is Mr. Gibson, the American Red Cross commissioner in Great Britain. One of his excuses is that he understood that the Negro personnel were too highly skilled in their jobs.

White Officers To Blame

"White officers are behind most of the trouble. They have even canvassed communities, telling the residents and business people not to serve or associate with the Negroes (whom they command and get their promotions of) the few Negro officers are treated as bad by their fellow officers.

"There are some fair minded officers, but they are not permitted to do much because they are not promoted and are shifted in many instances from place to place.

"Have seen a couple of colonels who were very good, but their executive officers are rotten and slip many things over. The Negro soldier is doing a job. All he wants is to be treated like a soldier. Negro soldiers want Negro officers. Their conduct on a whole is excellent.

"If you can convince the white officer that each Negro soldier wants to get home to his colored wife or friend, you can do a good job. These boys are not excited by the white girls even though they are sought out by the girls in many cases.

"And the whole thing seems to hinge on the friendship of the Negro and the white girl. Many soldiers are in a very low frame of mind, and if they were not real soldiers, I am convinced that the enemy would be trying to work on them. However, it is possible that the enemy is helping these riots to break out since the tension is so great.

"The American Negro soldier is Oftimes they must travel [illegible] miles more for the smallest infraction. Oftimes they must travel 20 miles to another town to have a little fun. The Negro Red Cross worker is being resented because the soldiers look up to them for leadership. Also the American Red Cross workers are not wearing bandana handkerchiefs. The U. S. army is to blame for most of the trouble not the fifth column. The officers won't give the fifth column a chance."

BIDDLE RAPS ARMY BRUTALITY

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.

Claims All Must Share Blame For Racial Disturbances At Home

NOV 20 1943

By JAMES E. BOYACK
New York Bureau

NEW YORK — Declaring that the Negro ploblem is no longer sectional, but national and international, United States Attorney General Francis Biddle, in an address before the Jewish Theological Seminary of America at the Waldorf-Astoria hotel here last Wednesday, pointed out that "the principles and promises of our national Constitution guaranteeing equality of treatment and opportunity to all, must be fulfilled in the due course of our democratic life."

So forthright were the Attorney General's remarks, that interracial authorities immediately interpreted them as officially expressing the Administration's same policy where the Negro is concerned.

RAPS TREATMENT IN ARMY CAMP

Mr. Biddle is the first Administration spokesman to frankly express himself on discrimination in the armed forces. He told his Waldorf-Astoria audience:

"War unifies a country, not merely by giving expression to a common effort, but by throwing together vast masses of young men, who in their training at the camps, exchange ideas and the points of view of other parts of the country. A large proportion of the camps obviously for practical reasons, have been built in the South, and the Negro officers and soldiers trained there have without doubt been treated in many cases with discrimination, rudeness and even brutality by white civilians and white police officers. The result among the Negroes is bitter disillusionment and anguish, as anyone knows who has talked to colored troops, or read the letters they have sent home.

"The Army has been alive to the serious effect of this treatment on morale, and has made efforts to improve it," he said.

CITES ARMY JOURNAL

Mr. Biddle quoted an article in the semi-official "Infantry Journal" which he said deals frankly with race prejudice.

" 'Sometimes the prejudice against the Negroes flares up in the Army. It is not a problem, however, in a camp where it is well understood that a soldier in the United States uniform is a soldier, not white or Negro, Christian or Jew, rich man or poor, but a soldier, and as such worthy of respect'," according to the Journal.

"We must realize," he said, "that the problem of the relation of the white to the Negro, in fact the problem of most racial minorities, are national in their scope. They concern all of us, for they go to the roots of our democratic standards. I have emphasized the Negro soldier, for mistreatment or disrespect of the Negro citizen in uniform who fights to defend our flag, is disavowal of those things for which our flag is the symbol . . . a free nation under God.

MUST LIVE DEMOCRATIC

"To this promise of American life we have two committments which we cannot revoke; which we cannot disregard. Our national Constitution guarantees equality of treatment and opportunity to all. More recently we have assumed the obligation of democracy elsewhere in the world attacked by totalitarian aggression. These principles and promises must he fulfilled in the due course of our democratic life. Nor can we assume the obligations of a defense of world democracy if our example of democracy at home, in this fundamental aspect, is neither consistent nor courageous. Race intolerance is no longer a matter merely of domestic concern for it undermines our moral authority as a nation which apparently can profess . . . but cannot practice democracy."

The Attornev General insisted that what has rendered peculiarly acute mistreatment of minorities: Japanese, Negro or Jewish—is our reiterated insistence on democratic equality of opportunity, irrespective of race—and the total nature of our war compared with the last.

"For now more than ever," Mr. Biddle said, "every man, black or white, Jew or gentile, is enlisted to fight or to work for the common cause.

DISUNITY IN OUR RANKS SERIOUS

"But how can every man believe that the cause is a common one, including himself as well as another, if he sees discrimination against him as a member of a race, or of a religion; discrimination in an Army in which he must fight, in industry, in the civil offices of the government?" he asks.

"I do not believe that many will deny the discrimination, or its evil effects on our democratic ideals, except those whose prejudices, though honestly held, blind them to the tragic contradictions involved in such behavior.

"I know that there are those who contend that any discussion of these tense and difficult relationships in the midst of war, is unwise. Why stir up trouble? So the argument runs . . . and give ammunition for propaganda and the appearance of disunity to our enemies? Why not put off a solution until the war is over?

"If those conditions were sporadic or local in their origin, the argument would have more weight. But they are not.

"They involve many sections of our country, and are creating a national psychology of intolerance that makes them infinitely more difficult and serious. Moreover, the appearance of national disunity on the outside, serious as it is, seems to me less evil than the actual disunity in our ranks. It is not exact to say that the recent outbreaks of racial violence in America has been fostered by Axis propaganda. But it is certainly true to conclude that the effect of such violence serves well the enemies' purpose. Immediately after they occurred, the Detroit riots were reported and commented on from short-wave stations in Germany and Japan, and the news soon travelled into Africa and India and China.

ALL SHARE IN BLAME

"When all is said and done I am less concerned about how the United States looks to her enemies. What I care about is what she looks like to her friends; to those who love and believe in her; to Americans at home and abroad, who want to be able to speak with pride and without any mental reservation, when they say with Thomas Jefferson: 'This government . . . the best hope of man.'

"The blame is universal . . . for surely all Americans must share the responsibility for this so un-American condition in a country which is, I believe, on the whole, honestly dedicated to democratic living. And just as the blame must be shared by all alike, so it concerns us all . . . government, society, the churches, whose function here is indistinguishable from the democratic concept . . . labor and the employers of labor, the press, the school and the college.

DISTURBANCES ARE NATIONAL

"Often in the past, the Negro problem has been thought of, and talked about as if it were sectional . . . as if it existed in certain States in the South and was not a problem in the North. Whatever once was true, it is perfectly clear that the problem is now national in its scope and is not confined to any particular part of the country. The Los Angeles disorders, the Detroit riots, the New York disturbances, all of recent months, show that racial clashes since the war started do not occur only in the South and do not spring from ancient prejudices and hatreds and fears inherited from the Civil war . . . or from the outnumbering of the whites by Negroes in certain parts of the South. They are implicit in great industrial societies that have never known slavery or inherited the memories of slave relationship."

General Battles Army Prejudice

Daily World
Atlanta, Ga.

ABERDEEN PROVING GROUND, Md. — (ANP) — The courageous fight put up by a post commander against race prejudice in the army was revealed this week by Negro soldiers stationed here.

The commander of the post, Maj. Gen. Harris is, opposed to segregation and fights it here in a courageous manner, soldiers revealed. "As a result, some semblance of democracy operates here to the extent that some companies are seen drilling with their ranks sprinkled with Negro soldiers Post exchanges, theatres and service clubs are open to all and certain technical classrooms are mixed. There are several thousand Negro soldiers at this key ordnance centre but the highest ranking colored officer is a 1st lieutenant, who took the place of a white captain. He commands Company D the unit reserved exclusively for Negroes.

War Plants Denying Jobs To Negroes Face Penalties

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa

OCT 30 1943

CLEVELAND—(ANP)—War plants in this area that refuse to employ Negro men and women will lose their labor priority, which entitles them to preferential recruitment of additional workers by the U.S. Employment Service, Dr. William P. Edmonds, WMC Cleveland director, announced Monday.

"No company has the right to claim that it has a priority on the supply of labor left in this communty when it has made no effort to break down color barriers and to draw upon a source of manpower that is still available in considerable quantities," he stated.

NO NEGROES HIRED

Edmunds took action after Miss Mary C. Schauffler, assistant director in charge of Negro employment, disclosed that [illegible] Cleveland's 240 basic war plants employing over 100 people had not hired a single Negro. Three of these companies were removed immediately from the labor priority list.

Miss Schauffler further revealed that of the 170 armament factories which employ Negroes, 63 have each hired more than 10, and of these 63 plants seven are on the priority list. Seventy of the concerns employ some Negro women, but no Negro men.

Dr. Edmund said that there are still more than 8,000 employable Negro women unable to obtain jobs in war factories.

Sgt. Levy Faces Second Trial For Aiding Negroes

Chicago, Ill

SEP 25 1943

NEW YORK — (ANP) — Army officials at the Lincoln, Nebr., army base are considering a new court martial for Alton Levy according to a report by the Workers Defense league. Levy was tried previously by a special court martial and reduced to the rank of private for demanding better treatment for Negro soldiers attached to his camp.

Morris Milgram, national secretary, and Neil Scott, public relations director, said they had confidential information from sources that "cannot be divulged lest further injustices occur," purporting to show army officials are planning the new trial.

The first court martial was based on evidence aginst Levy supplied by Cpl. Helen Perkins, a WAC, but the presently contemplated trial will be based on statements Levy made in letters to Miss Rosalina Pack of New York which were published by the WDL. The court martial is said to be called for alleged violations of the articles of war.

"If it is a crime to reveal army violations of the selective acy provisions which call for 'no discrimination against any person on account of race or color' in the selection and training of draftees, then we plead guilty and it is against us that the government should act," said the WLD representatives.

"Brig. Gen. Early E. W. Duncan is a southerner and an old army man of hard and tough appearance," went on the league agents. "A recent visitor to the Lincoln air base talked to Gen. Duncan concerning Levy's plight. This person whose name must remain undisclosed because of his close proximity to army jurisdiction, said that Gen. Duncan stated that Levy made 'subversive statements' and that he didn't want people to think that Levy's being a Jew had anything to do with it."

The general claimed to be impartial in administering justice and declared that Levy was still under military orders and if he divulged military secrets he must answer for it. He added that nothing could be done about the court martial and that the Negro-white situation must be watched closely because "there are a lot of southern soldiers who don't want to associate with Negroes."

Eyewitnesses at Lincoln say that the only place on the military reservation where democracy exists is in the guard house where prisoners who are white, Mexican and Negro share jugs, towels, soap, cigarets and fraternize unreservedly. In the "so called freedom outside the guard house" the soldiers are rigidly segregated which has "produced seething animosity and a bloody riot."

BIGWIG CRITICS OF CHELSEA CHAPLAIN NOW OWE BAY STATER VOTE OF THANKS

By THE ROVER

A Jewish American Army Sergeant has been fined, punished and reduced in rank for protesting mistreatment of Colored troops. A ranking officer, Colonel William T. Coleman, has been placed on trial charged with shooting a colored Army chauffeur. A colored soldier from Brooklyn, N. Y. committed suicide because of racial injustice in a southern Camp. Today the Army might well ponder: What about this man, Chaplain Fuller?

Well, what about Chaplain Luther M. Fuller, the militant Massachusetts pastor of People's Baptist Church of Chelsea who was granted leave of absence to serve [illegible] Army of the U. S. A. and who has [illegible] been on trial for making [illegible] very charges of racial injustice that have been more than substantiated by current events? What cause is there now to "punish" the Chelsea challenger of those men in high places who are today boasting so haughtily about the "Four Freedoms," the Atlantic Charter ,and "Liberty under Law" for nations as well as individuals?" It becomes the obvious duty to apply these selfsame principles to a man of the pulpit, regardless of his race, his church, or his army affiliations. An Army chaplain does not lose his identity as a minister of Christianity; and therefore he cannot tolerate sin, or evil, in the Army or out. When the Church or any of its representatives loses the freedom of combating sin or evil, then we as a nation are drifting toward fa[illegible]—we [illegible] losing our religion.

Tuskegee Men Suffered

Last week's headlined trial of Colonel William T. Coleman, charged with shooting his Colored chauffeur, is only one example of the sort of un-American acts which Chaplain Fuller preached against. There are numerous others but the Tuskegee Story is fairly representative. Selfridge Field, Michigan, is the training site of the 332nd Colored Fighter Group which originated July 4, 1942 at Tuskegee. From the eventual public clamor an dwar board resignation of Judge William T. Hastie, it was evident that the Colored pilots weren't getting anywhere at Tuskegee. On March 29, 1943, the 332nd moved (many pilots flew) to Selfridge Field, Michigan, where there were all sorts of rumors of inferior planes and dissatisfaction. Planes were cracking up. On May 9 Lieutenant Sidat Singh, the great Syracuse grid and basketball star was killed when his plane fell into Lake Huron. Five nights previous, on May 4, Colonel Coleman was charged with shooting William McRae a Col[illegible] [illegible] the 332nd, acting as chauffeur.

Given Wrong Commanders

The current commander of the 332nd Fighter Group in Michigan is Colonel Selway, a West Pointer and pilot of 17 years experience who is said to be quite alright with the men and who has publicly announced his intention to make the Colored unit one that all will be proud of. Colonel Selway succeeded Lt. Co[illegible] West[illegible]s, which means that the 332nd has had three commanders inside of a year, none of them Colored.

Testimony at the trial last week claimed that Colonel Coleman was addicted to drinking scotch by the quart and that he was a dangerous man to have a gun when in that condition. Yet he was assigned to command Colored pilots as if their life was of no consequence at all. This is the same gross indifference (and crime) that places Colored troops under the command of arrogant, lynch-law, race-hating individuals that plague the life and liberty of Colored troops in other areas. These are the things Chaplain Luther M. Fuller has been preaching against.

Levy Supports Fuller

The news-lines concerning former Sergeant Alton Levy, the "liberal Jewish soldier" at the Lincoln, Nebraska airbase, is not as surprising as it may seem to some readers. White American sailors and soldiers have supported and will continue to support colored buddies in the fight for equal justice. There are others who are not so intelligent. These latter hate the Jews as well as the colored citizens. Reports say that when Sergeant Levy stood up for his colored troops he was broken down to a private, fined and sentenced to 4 months hard labor. There seems reasonable indications that much of this punishment was racial in nature. In all probability Private Levy will be called a radical and a "red." In any event, former Sergeant Levy has rendered us a great service. His case will be taken by NAACP. And this too is another proof that Chaplain Fuller-like General Billy Mitchell, knew what he was talking about. There is no treason in working for better race harmony!

Why Have Chaplains?

"In this total war there are many ways of being a patriot." So spoke Walter Winchell via his radio program last week.

Chaplain Luther Fuller today must be judged as a patriot standing firmly against the influx of fascist doctrines into American democracy. Chaplain Fuller (and all other Colored Army chaplains) were enlisted for the expressed purpose of improving the spiritual and moral welfare of American troops according to the best traditions of the United States Constitution. He did his duty where and whenever he saw the U. S. Constitution being violated. For this he deserves a vote of thanks from the War Department and especially at this time of reported sabotage by many so called white men who are blessed with far more privileges than the average colored man enjoys. Chaplain Fuller is a patriot. He should be pardoned with apology. Either this or we must put the question: Why have Army chaplains at all?

suppression religious freedom in the Armed Forces. To those who contend Chaplain Fuller's case is not based on religious freedom, the answer is that truth is a vital part of Christianity and Chaplain Fuller's greatest crime was that he told the truth. There is much irony in this situation when we consider the national issue now being made regarding America's relations with Russia. The Soviet is being branded as "anti-Christian." This week the Massachusetts Knights of Columbus in a meeting at the Copley Plaza adopted serious resolutions to assure our former enemy, Italy, of having a good American Christian administration. We are, in short, making great plans of making "other folks" religious when we've got plenty of Christianizing to do right here at home. Chaplain Fuller told the truth. The only issue now is whether we at home are willing to accept the truth. If we can't ACCEPT it here, we certainly can't TEACH it in other countries! Nor is the menace to the Christian Church entirely restricted to the much discussed communistic ideology. We have no place in our Constitution for ANY form of religious or racial intolerance in America.

Cards Stacked Against Negro Combat Units

By ALBERT ANDERSON

CHICAGO.—(ANP) — Is it true that the United States army has been deliberately breaking up well trained Negro combat units and distributing them among service outfits rather than sending them across to do battle? The statistics would seem to bear out an affirmative answer to this question. The sometimes plaintive, frequently disgusted and bitter complaints of men who have been part of these fighting outfits otherwise point to such a conclusion.

Units Broken

Trained up to the minute, proud of their organizations, ready for the big test, soldiers report frequently finding their regiment, battalions or brigades, just as they feel they are ready to be sent across, broken up except for small cadres or units, which are then used as a basis for training other groups. In opinions expressed too often not to have considerable veracity, these tactics seem to disclose a ruthless determination to prohibit Negroes, trained in actual fighting, from reaching any of the front lines where they might gain glory and prestige for themselves or their race, or where they might engage in killing white men even if they are Nazis.

Practically every combat unit in the army with the exception of the two all-Negro divisions, the 93rd and 92nd and the veteran 24th Infantry, reputedly in the Southwest Pacific, has been broken up in this fashion. There are said to be a few airbase protective units whose business is to protect airbases but the real fighting units of which the army is proud are conspicuous by their absence on the fronts.

Houston Texas

Cites Negro Units Broken up

To recite the names of a few units which have been busted in the fashion described:

The 78th Field artillery regiment, Fort Bragg; four battalions, white officers, well trained. Disbanded all but a small group. Highly efficient men sent to quartermaster and engineer groups.

350th and 351st Artillery regiments both of Camp Livingston, La. A few men were taken from these two outfits and made the basis for the new 350th Artillery group composed for the most part of new recruits. The men in the former regiments who had been trained for a year and a half and that training thrown to the winds.

The 846th Tank Destroyer battalion, the oldest of the tank groups in point of service, broken with all new men to train over. The 828th Tank Destroyer battalion also at Camp Hood, Tex., broken up after it had gotten as far as California and had desert training.

The 795th Tank Destroyer battalion, Camp Hood. Col. Theo. Mann, a tough officer whom even white fellow officers respected, commanded this outfit, which was activated at Fort Custer, Mich. The 795th was busted. Col. Mann is out in the woods in Texas with a small group of men, marking time according to reports. His men, who had been trained, went to quartermaster and engineer corps.

The 184th, crack national guard regiment from Illinois. This group trained at Fort Custer also and was broken up there into two battalions. New training methods in the army call for smaller units, the explanation said. The regiment became two units, the 931st Field Artillery battalion, led by Lt. Col. Marcus Ray of Chicago, an officer idolized by him men, and the 930th Field Artillery battalion, commanded by Lt. Col. Wendell T. Derrick.

Expensive Training for Naught

The training of those artillery groups proceeded apace. Days upon days they learned to manipulate their batteries of 155's, firing shells which cost $27 every time a gun spoke. As soon as they were hard as nails and really fit, their range records being outstanding, the order came stripping the majority of the men from the regiments.

The 930th F. A. battalion is now at Camp Butner, near Durham, N. C., with just a handful of its original men and a lost of new recruits whom it will take a year to whip into any sort of shape. The same is true of the 931st. It is now at Camp Forrest, Tenn., the camp named so proudly for the famed rebel general of the Civil war. It too has a handful of its old personnel, the balance shanghaied to service units.

Negro Troops on Guard

The two national guard outfits are presumably combat troops. Actually they are guard units according to reliable information. The 366th up at Camp Devens, Mass., under Col. McQueen is reported not to have been trained in any true sense for combat duty. It guards points on the New England coast. One battalion goes out on guard for two or three weeks. It returns and the other battalion takes its place. Observers expect it to be in this country for the duration. The 372nd is in New York City. It too, a proud national guard outfit, is doing guard duty in New York City.

The 369th Anti-aircraft regiment at Hawaii is outside the country and in an important spot. It, with the 24th and the gallant Tuskegee flyers no won convoy duty somewhere off North Africa, presumably are the only Negro troops which can really lay claim to being combat and the 369th in one sense is doing guard duty also. Guarding a key defense area but still guarding.

Quartermasters and Engineers

The 93rd is ready. It has been so for many weeks according to information trickling back from the men who are part of it. The division has had desert training, specialized training, is as hard as nails and would like nothing better than to get a few symbols of Nordic supremacy out in front of it, but it still languishes "somewhere in California." Why, no statement has so far indicated.

Sen. Downey of California is to launch a request for an investigation of the use of Negro troops in congress. Whether it materializes or what comes of it is a question for the future. It is reported that colored friends of Sen Downey will approach Congressman William L. Dawson, only Negro congressman, in an effort to have Dawson sponsor a similar resolution in the house of representatives.

Why No Negro Troops In Combat

This is not a letter directed against Lucius Harper personally, but all agitators who are sitting at home thinking the Negro soldiers are "just dying" to dodge bullets on some foreign shore. Mr. Harper figures so prominently in this discourse, because I disagree with so many of his remarks in "Dustin' Off The News" on October 2, 1943.

The newspaper men who are agitating for the Negro troops to be put into actual combat, remind me of the arm-chair politicians who sit at home and tell other nations what WE are not going to stand for from them.

Mr. Harper, you mentioned the fine record that Negro soldiers have made in past battles and how "tragic" it would be if historians can only say that the Negro soldiers served as labor units in this our present war. But, Mr. Harper, I would like you to look through the history books that our children have to study at school . . . even in college history courses . . . and tell me if you find ANY mention of Negro troops in ANY American War, or for that matter ANY European War? We know now, that the English and French sent their African troops in FIRST against the Germans, but was that mentioned in all the papers carrying war news? I saw a picture of some French African troops en route to the front, and read a tiny paragraph about the 99th Pursuit Squadron when they first appeared in America in the local white newspaper, but these only appeared once.

You will find a record of the part played in the development of America in the annuals of the War Department, or in Negro history books written primarily by Negroes but how many have access to these? It is true that many school systems are incorporating "Negro history" in their curriculums, but you will admit that those schools are few in number. So OUR children will still have to depend upon the books at hand and the Negro's part in the wars and development of America is conveniently omitted from them.

The Negro troops here at home are going through rigorous training AND guarding the bridges, reservoirs, rail centers, defense plants, and other important arteries of American industry. Why are they placed in such positions? Because those centers are also important to the war effort, and the white Americans can look at Negro troops and see they are not of Italian, German, or Japanese extraction. They can look at them and say: "We know they will not be influenced by any fifth column propaganda, because in spite of the ill treatment we have given them, in spite of our acts of prejudice against them, they have stood ready to defend America. They have no other country to which they owe allegiance. They are native born citizens of America. America is their country.

I am sure the "Powers-That-Be" in Washington do have a "cracker in the woodpile" in keeping so many Negro troops at home . . . but that "cracker" is not to discredit the Negro soldiers as combat troops in the war arenas.—DeLouis Davis, Phoenix, Ariz.

Report Rank Discrimination at Ft. Huachuca

Kansas City, Mo Call

Say 92nd Not Well Trained

Officers Called 'N.....' by General In Charge at Post

TUCSON, Ariz.—(ANP)—Confidential information has been obtained by the Associated Negro Press of startling and sensational discriminatory practices imposed upon soldiers of the 92nd infantry division stationed at Fort Huachuca. Sources cannot be revealed for fear of reprisals upon the informants.

The shameful situation threatens to develop into a national scandal, and more important, according to observers, unless the federal government and the army high command takes immediate, forthright action to correct the disgraceful conditions, it is believed that all the fury of an overseas battlefield will explode in this desert community.

Black American soldiers who a few months before had entered the U. S. Army filled with patriotic determination to help win the war for democracy, even to the point of sacrificing their lives, are now reported to be enmeshed in the doldrums of frustration and despair as a direct result of the heartbreaking inhuman treatment meted out to them by commanding general and white officers alike.

Officers Called "N-----"

Specifically the shocking charges made by army personnel attached to the fort are:

1. That the commanding general, E. M. Almond, of Anniston, Ala., refers to his Negro charges both in and out of their presence as "N----."

2. That the commanding general is formulating plans to convince the war department to ship the division overseas for combat duty, although the division is miserably unprepared for such service.

3. That Gen. Almond is not a top flight commander and was not assigned to a white unit because he lacked necessary qualifications. The war department foisted him upon the Negro group, it is charged, because it was necessary to place him somewhere.

4. That the commanding general orders the post Gestapo to hold a "shakedown" of enlisted personnel after each live ammunition practice to detect possible bullets secreted away for an allegedly planned "insurrection."

"Frozen" at 2nd Lieut.

5. That a quota system operates in the making and promotion of Negro officers with few ever reaching the rank of first lieutenant. Most of the Negro officers are "frozen" at the second lieutenant level.

Information has trickled out of the camp that several white officers including one colonel have been severely beaten up or killed in altercations with enlisted personnel. The officers are also said to stand far behind the lines during firing practice with live ammunition, because they fear a sharpshooter might train his sights upon them and revenge mistreatment.

6. That enlisted personnel is trained with obsolete combat weapons and not given instructions in modern methods of warfare. Instead, training consists almost exclusively of marches and drills around the confines of the army post.

7. That the food served in mess halls at Fort Huachuca is the "worst in the army."

Morale Found High

8. That although present conditions on the military reservation have existed ever since the division moved into Arizona last May, Atty. Truman K. Gibson Jr., acting civilian aide to the secretary of war, and Brig. Gen. Benjamin O. Davis, inspecting general from the inspector general's office, Washington, on a recent inspection here found conditions to be "in excellent shape," morale "high", training "good" and the overall picture "gratifying".

Personnel at the army post is said to be greatly puzzled over how they can reconcile the vicious dictums of Gen. Almond and his staff of white officers to preachments of a nation pledged in a war to carry the four freedoms and democracy to the far corners of the world.

Rumors are being circulated in Tucson that the soldiers are so restive under the "slaveocracy" rule at the camp that a flareup of serious proportions is expected almost momentarily.

Only positive intervention of the federal government with drastic punishment delivered upon the heads of responsible authorities is seen as a possible preventative.

Soldiers complain that at a recent meeting of mess officers and mess sergeants, Gen. Almond deplored the alleged waste of food and declared before the mixed group:

"There is too much waste in these mess halls. These niggers eat too damn much meat and bread and not enough vegetables."

Unprepared for Overseas

Added to this stinging insult are the alleged plans of Gen. Almond to heighten his stature in the army by sending unprepared men overseas as a fighting unit.

One army private said that "if the Japs or Germans saw us coming they would laugh themselves to death."

In stead of training for combat through the techniques of handling issued weapons, the men are trained to walk miles upon miles over the rocky mountainous terrain" charged a disgusted soldier.

Morale of the men is exceedingly low, according to an informant, because it is popularly believed at the post that Gen. Almond was not considered capable of handling a white unit and was assigned to the 92nd division where he spews his spleen of disappointment on the helpless Negro soldiers.

Further evidence of the contempt the commander holds for his charges was found in the allegation that he sent his post Gestapo to uncover suspected hidden bullets used in live ammunition practice because he fears an uprising of protest.

Reports are current in Tucson that several officers, one of whom was a colonel have been severely beaten or killed by the non-commissioned victims of their race hate and venom. These sinister raids usually occurring in the middle of the night have revealed that some of the soldiers are concealing arms to protect themselves from further indignities and in many instances to save their lives.

Another extremely sore spot witht he men is the restriction in rank of colored officers. It was pointed out that when the organization was formed in World War I the articles of war stated that "All officers above the rank of first lieutenant will be white." There has been but slight deviation from that order, it is charged.

White Officers Advanced

"All of the white officers, who joined the division about 19 days earlier than the Negroes after the division was reactivated in October, 1942, have been made first lieutenants and captains," informed a camp soldier.

"In the 365th infantry regiment particularly three Negroes have made the first lieutenant grade. When we arrived here the general started a development school for backward officers. In a class of 50 officers whom it was felt needed some 'polishing up on' all were Negroes.

This does not represent a situation of inaibility as it affects one group," continued the servicemen, "it is out and out discrimination. These 50 men can never expect to get beyond their present grade."

It was pointed out that the educational background of the Negro officers was generally higher than that of the white officers, yet the Negroes have been persistently passed over in promotions.

Post officials apparently don't think that Negro soldiers need regulation field rations to maintain their maximum health, it was charged, and as a result the food served in mess is a constant source of nausea to the men. Negro officers, it was stated, are so browbeaten and coerced that they dare not object to any of the varied discriminations and irregularities for fear of being "broken."

Particularly bitter are the men over the statements accredited to Atty. Truman K. Gibson and Gen. Benjamin O. Davis that conditions are "in excellent shape", training "good", morale "high" and the overall picture "gratifying." Enlisted men who said the two high officials were at Fort Huachuca recently to investigate the post must have known that the reservation is a "key of dynamite" if they had their oyes open.

White War Workers Ask Rent Scale The Same As Negroes

Journal and Guide
Norfolk, Virginia

HAMPTON — A petition requesting that rentals being paid by in-migrant defense families in Copeland Park, and refrigeration facilities, be equalized with those for Negro families in Newsome Park, has been sent to the U. S. Commissioner in Washington by 4,300 legal voters of Copeland Park who held several meetings on the matter recently.

The vast housing project, one of the largest in the world, is divided into two sections. Copeland Park for white families with 3,826 units and Newsome Park for Negro families with 1,174 units. Copeland Park is fully occupied, and over 800 families are in Newsome Park.

J. R. Bradham, chairman for the petitioners, pointed out that there should be no "discrimination" either in rentals or other facilities. Copeland Park families pay $33.50 per month for a two-bedroom house, whereas those in Newsome Park pay $26 for homes of the same construction and the same facilities.

Brandham further observed that some of the Copeland houses have refrigeration while others depend upon ice boxes for which they must pay $5 a month extra for refrigeration service—this being inadequate under the OPA ruling that ice may be had only every other day.

The language of the petition stated in part that: "We the renters of Copeland Park are appealing to your office for an adjustment oh the rent at Copeland Park, as we are paying a higher rent for the same construction houses that the colored renters are paying in Newsome Park.

"There isn't any difference in the rating of the two races, and the defense workers at Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company know this is to be the fact.

"We are American citizens and taxpayers, doing our 100 per cent defense work and buying as many bonds as we feel we can afford. We want an adjustment made on this matter at the earliest possible opportunity."

AREA DIRECTORS EXPLAINS

G. L. Reed of Norfolk, district director of the FPHA, who said he knew nothing of the petition since he returned from Washington Sunday, pointed out that the rental structures are in keeping with the national policy wherever subsidized housing is provided for war workers.

Mr. Reed said, "the program states that housing units are to be built for certain income groups; the rent structure is based upon what the workers can afford to pay.

"Whenever a project is construc[illegible]or two different income groups this differential exists, whether the residents be white or Negro. Rentals on government housing are based on two factors: cost amortization, and ability to pay of the workers.

Failure to Use Colored Soldiers in Actual Combat Breaks Down Morale

BY JOSEPH D. BIBB

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.

ACCORDING TO persistent charges, approximately a million colored Americans have been drafted, but few are actually engaged in combat. It is said that several hundred thousand "have been sent into combat zones as engineer troops, and are engaged in building road[illegible]aring demolitions and handling supplies." These American soldiers of dark skin are designated as "engineers," according to the critics, but in t[illegible] they are nothing more than stevedores and members of "labor battalions." If it is true as charged, that more than three quarters of a million colored soldiers are on duty in the United States without any prospect of being sent into combat, then it is time for the patriotic and loyal colored Americans, who are buying bonds and working night and day to further the war action, to express their to express their resentment in firm and determined fashion.

Mr. Bibb

CONDITIONS REFLECT BIASED ATTITUDE

Colored youth, whose ardor has not been quelled and whose enthusiasm has not been dampened, because they do not know of these discriminatory procedures, are planning to enter the armed forces as American citizens. If any of these swarthy-skinned [illegible]ots are asked about their p[illegible]ence in the various branches, some say, "we want to fly in the azure with eagles and bomb the Axis," others want to drive tanks. Many lads, who tinker with radio and electricity, have expressed a desire to get into the Signal Corps. But if these unfortunate Americans but knew that they were doomed to be "engineers,"—all of them,—without regard to qualification, it is hardly conceivable how they would be fired and inspired. The prevailing conditions are a reflection upon our head men. These men must be strong in their prejudices and passions, when they blight the hopes of would-be fighting men because of their color.

THE BARBER gathering control stood up and said, "I was in the last war and I don't want my boy to be treated as I was. They didn't let me do any fi[illegible]ing, but they poured troub[illegible] I want them to [illegible] my boy like an American [illegible]ier."

HUMAN EMOTIONS VS. PATRIOTIC INSTINCTS

These emotions well up in the hearts of black people and it is high time that the big-wigs in the Army and Navy take note of it. We cry, we bleed, we torture, we, too, are sensitive to pain, insult and suffering. William Cowper, the blind English poet, told about it in his famous lines, "skins may differ, but affections dwell in white and black the same."

COLORED Americans, mothers fathers, willingly give their sons to their country's cause, but how can noble citizens refrain from grief, when the glory and glamour of combat is to be denied them? No noble people want all of their sons to be engineers and members of the labor battalions. Such unfairness, such exhibitions of "master race" philosophy are the very things we are led to believe that we are fighting against. These are the thin[illegible]at crush the spirit [illegible] tr[illegible]ls.

Conditions of this kind should be aired in the Senate hearings on the "father draft." The heads of the Government should take cognizance of the consequences of such crushing, demoralizing practices. It should never be forgotten that the American colored people have human emotions as well as patriotic instincts.

SOMETIMES, it seems that there are too many white Americans who cannot appraise the emotions of dark humanity. It appears that they do not deem that there is anguish, love and tenderness under dark skins.

VETERAN FEARS TREATMENT OF SON

Last week when a postman laid an odd-shaped bundle into the hands of a middle-aged barber of the darker race, a story of powerful human emotions was unfolded. The barber held his scissors in mid-air for several minutes as he gazed out into [illegible] space. They then fell aimle[illegible] from his trembling hands and broke upon the barber shop floor. When asked what was his trouble, he replied in a tremulous voice, "Those are my little boy's clothes that they are sending me from camp. He is my only son, and he is just a baby." Then he sat down in silence, but a strange glare crept into his burning, black eyes. One of the waiting patrons discreetly spoke out, breaking the tensity, "Only a father or a mother can know how those bundles hit you," he said.

Fair Hiring Practices On The South's Railroads

From Norfolk Virginian-Pilot

There was a time, within the memory of every middle-aged person, when nearly all—if not, indeed, all—firemen on the South's railroads were Negroes. Every locomotive was fired from a kind of coal-car trailer. Firing the locomotive was a job of hard, sooty shoveling and Negro firemen were hired for it with almost a complete absence of white competition.

The employment picture began to change with the introduction of new locomotive design. Automatic stokers took most of the backache out of the job of firing coal-fed locomotives. Diesel-powered locomotives gave the fireman's job a new elegance and leisure. The job that white workers were once content to leave to Negro operatives they now began to seek for themselves. The Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen accelerated the displacement of Negro firemen by white firemen by various devices. They negotiated working agreements with the railway companies under which difficulties were imposed against the hiring of firemen not eligible for promotion to the rank of engineers and conductors. By one such device or another—some expressed and others tacit—the bars against the employment of Negroes as locomotive firemen have been raised higher and higher. The pressure is on to replace Negro firemen with white firemen.

This is the background to keep in mind in appraising the present conflict between the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices and the sixteen Southern railway companies that have rejected the Committee's directives instructing the carriers to end employment discriminations based on color or race. The carriers question the legal authority of the Committee to promulgate an order touching working agreements governed by the Railway Labor Act. They affirm that a flat attempt to do away brusquely with employment practices rooted in established Southern cus[illegible]is utterly unrealistic." They declare in particular that—

> Any attempt . . . for instance, to promote Negroes to locomotive engineers or train conductors, would inevitably disrupt their present peaceful co-operative relations with their employes, would antagonize the traveling and shipping public served by them, would substitute conditions of chaos for the present conditions of harmony, would result in stoppages of transportation, and would most gravely and irreparably impair the whole war effort of the country.

This kind of reply by the carriers was invited by the inclusiveness of the FEPC's directives. The Committee, as its chairman, Malcolm Ross, has made clear, was chi[illegible]concerned with the progressive displacement and non-hiring of Negro firemen. But when it drew up its cease and desist order it attacked all forms of racial discrimination—in railway promotion as well as in hiring. In his rebuttal to the carriers' defiance of the Committee, Mr. Ross says that the issue of promoting Negro firemen to the engineer and conductor ranks "is dormant and could remain so if the railroads offer justice to Negro railroad men in the classifications where reason and public policy both urge it." More is the pity, then, that the FEPC did not limit its cease and desist order to the main grievance, instead of expanding its directives to open the whole Pandora's Box of racial segregation and discrimination.

The railway companies are far less to blame for the provoking element of this dispute—the cold squeeze applied to Negro firemen—than the white-controlled brotherhoods. The "promotable" limitation on the hiring of firemen is not the invention of the carriers but the invention of the unions. No such limitation was found necess[illegible] the past to dispose of the "delicate" question of Negro engineers and conductors. The question never became delicate because it never arose. It was arbitrarily made delicate by the covetousness of the unions for jobs which they were formerly content for Negro workers to have, but which they now want for the union's white members. The simple term for this is greed.

Railroads and FEPC

From Richmond Times-Dispatch

The Fair Employment Practice Committee and the 16 Southern railroads which have declined to follow its directions concerning the employment of Negroes, seem to be in disagreement as to the issues involved in the controversy. The FEPC says it is talking solely about the hiring of Negro firemen on locomotives, at a time when there is a shortage of 850 firemen on American railroads, whereas the 16 Southern carriers say that any attempt "to promote Negroes to locomotive engineers or train conductors," would inevitably di[illegible]ditions and ha[illegible] the war effort.

Since Malcolm Ross, chairman of the FEPC, flatly denies that his committee is interested in promoting colored men to positions as engineers or conductors, it would be interesting to know what the 16 carriers have to say concerning the desirability of putting on colored firemen to take up the existing shortage. Mr. Ross states that "white Southern engineers have for decades had decent working relationships with Negro firemen," and he quoted Sidney Alderman, counsel for the railroads at the FEPC hearings, as having said: "I certainly do not mean to contend that anything in the South would interfere with the employment of Negroes as firemen on locomotives."

Apparently the 16 railroads suspected the FEPC of wanting to do the things it now denies having in mind. In the light of this denial, what do the railroads have to say concerning the proposition? Are they willing to increase their efficiency by employing colored firemen where vacancies and shortages exist?

There remains the important question which concerns the attitude of the Brotherhoods of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen. No reply has been received from that quarter to the directive of the FEPC. The carriers point out that they cannot go counter to contracts which they have s[illegible] with [illegible] brotherhoods, and that the provisions of the Railway Labor Act are applicable. True enough, but the FEPC retorts that the "discriminatory Southeastern Carriers' Conference Agreement . . . was reached with the brotherhoods in 1941, and by mutual agreement it can be altered or discarded."

If the FEPC is trying to do the things which the carriers have accused it of, there is much to be said concerning the difficulties which would arise on the railroads, if an attempt were made to carry out the FEPC's instructions. But if the only real issue involved is whether colored firemen are to be employed by railroads which sorely need such firemen, but which are prevented from hiring them by agreements between the union and the companies concerned, then the agreement should be rewritten. No union, no corporation, should be allowed to stand in the way of the war, and the railroads are absolutely vital to victory. They must operate with maximum efficiency, and they should be free to employ such crews as they require.

Red Cross Needs Blood But Not From Negroes

JAN 29 1943

Kansas City Call
Kansas City, Mo.

The Red Cross blood bank is running short of donors. It was reported early last week that less than half of the quota of blood had been obtained.

Pleas are being made on all hands—in the daily press, on the radio in public gatherings—for persons to donate blood. The blood is needed for men, black and white, on the battlefields.

The need for blood grew so great that Dr. Logan Clendening was called upon to write an article pointing out that the dnnation of blood is harmless, painless and takes only a short time.

There are upwards of 50,000 Negroes in Kansas City, Mo. Many are willing and anxious to donate blood but their blood is not wanted at the Red Cross center.

Miss Ernestine Jones, who works in a hospital in Milwaukee, Wis., and knows how important blood is when a patient needs a transfusion, arrived in the city last week to visit her mother, Mrs. Maude Jones, 2119 Park Ave.

JAN 29 1943

When she arrived she saw and heard announcements of the dire need of blood donors. She called the Red Cross center to offer her blood and was told that there were no facilities for taking the blood of Negroes but that if she would leave her name and address, they would call her later.

Miss Jones received the same answer that Negro Kansas Citians have been receiving ever since the blood bank was opened Dec. 1. The blood of Negroes was not accepted from the first at the Red Cross blood bank. It was stated that a mobile unit would be sent to the Negro community to take Negro blood which would be kept separate from the blood of other people.

Scientists say that there is no difference in the blood of persons of different races and that there is no necessity for the separation of blood. But the Red Cross persists in its policy of separation.

The Red Cross keeps its segregation at the expense of the boys on the fighting fronts who need blood. Negro people are ready with their blood when the Red Cross is ready to accept it.

Blood Bank Pledge Irks Canadians

MONTREAL—Irked by a newspaper article which assured Canadian blood donors that their blood "will not be used to save lives of Chinese and Negroes," colored and white citizens staged a monster protest meeting here last Sunday.

The article appeared in the May 21 edition of the Employes' Cherrier House Organ of the Canadian Car Munition plant. Included in the article, captioned "Blood Donors Wanted," was the assertion: 'Your blood will not be used to save lives of Chinese and Negroes but will serve here in Canada, if ever we undergo air raids or other war calamities."

No sooner had the article appeared than a wave of indignation swept over the city. Chief among the protesting individuals was the Rev. Charles Estes, pastor of the Union United church. A mass meeting was called for Sunday, and it was decided that it would fit in with the scheduled appearances of A. Philip Ranolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, who was due here to negotiate for the organization of employes of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

NEW HAVEN, Conn.—Station WTIC in Hartford cancelled a speech on race relations scheduled to be delivered by Prof. Maurice R. Davie of Yale university because it objected to certain references in the script about the American Red Cross policy on Negro blood doners, it was learned this week.

The speech which was to have been given in connection with the Fourth of July celebration contained the following objectionable statement, according to station officials. "Perhaps no single incident has done more to damage Negro morale than the gratuitous insult to the race by the Red Cross in first refusing to accept the blood of Negro donors and then in segregating it, for no scientific reason whatsoever."

Leonard Petrucelli, program manager for WTIC, said the Red Cross had not objected but the station management had decided "it was not in the public interest" to carry the program.

Prof. Davie, a sociology instructor at the eastern school, said he had refused to make the talk even though it meant cancellation of the program because he refused to "kowtow to the Red Cross or any other organization that interferes with my freedom of speech."

Give Your Blood To Red Cross

Segregation makes your blood boil — but we can do our part by letting the pot boil over in our all-out effort to provide blood plasma for our Negro soldiers.

Many white people, ignorant of the fact that there is no differences in the blood of the two races, continue to segregate the blood. Until white America is educated, we will have to be contented with the white and black blood bank. Two races fighting for the same cause, two races' blood constantly mixing on the battlefront, but at home they must be separated.

We can make our contribution to the cause of liberty by giving blood for our brave soldiers. Visit your local Red Cross station and donate your blood for democracy. Every pint you give will make some soldier stronger, braver and more determined to return home and help stamp out discrimination. — Mrs. Gladys Greene. Elmira, N. Y.

End Of Blood Bank Jim Crow Is Urged

OCT 4 1943

Protesting the nominal segregation of Negro from white blood in the American Red Cross Blood Bank, twenty blood donors employed with the plasma, the Red Cross Organizations National Headquarters in Washington, Wednesday signed a letter urging the Red Cross to discontinue this prejudicial policy.

Although there exists some doubt as to whether Negro blood is consistently segregated all along the line of scientific processes involved with the plama, the Red Cross continues to work on the principle of segreggation.

The letter from the CIO blood donors read in part:

"As it (segregation) has absolutely no basis in biology or any other science, we urge the Red Cross to abandon this useless practice . . . Particularly in view of the fact that a Negro, Dr. Charles Drew, Professor of Surgery at Howard University . . . . was not only one of the pioneers in the chemistry of the blood bank but also became Director of the blood bank in England . . . . The majority of informed Negroes today are protesting this segregation in the only way they knew: refusal to donate their blood to the Red Cross. This of course lessens the amount of blood available to both Negro and white casualties alike.

"In view of the above facts, we of the CIO strongly urge a revision of your discriminatory policy of pandering to common race prejudice, in the hope that the Red Cross will join with other forces seeking to extend democracy at home as well as abroad."

JUN 19 1943

MONTREAL.—(ANP) — Angered by an article promising blood donors that their blood "will not be used to save lives of Chinese and Negroes," Montreal Negroes held one of the largest mass meetings in the history of the dominion Sunday at the Union United church with a view toward ending that and similar race discrimination.

Article Read

The offendng article appeared in the Employes Cherrier House Organ of the Canadian Car Munition plant, Cherrier, Quebec, in the May 21 edition. Under the title, "Blood Donors Wanted," the article said:

"Your blood will not be used to save lives of Chinese and Negroes but will serve here in Canada, if ever we undergo air raids or other war calamities."

The meeting passed resolutions condemning the statement as "undemocratic, un-Christian, anti-racial and maliciously designed to foster racial fricton, antagonism and misunderstanding," and authorized the minister of the church, the Rev. Charles Estes, to bring the matter to the attention of the united church in its conference in Montreal this week to seek coopration in wiping out the attitude expressed.

Randolph Speaks

Principal speaker was A. Philip Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, who was here in the interest of securing union recognition from the Canadian Pacific railway. The brotherhood has ordered the purchase of $5,000 in Canadian victory war bonds, it was revealed.

Mr. Randolph told the gathering that question of race and color was the central issue of the times and urged Canadian Negroes to organize and fight for their rights now, since when the war ends it may be too late. He also advocated full and unqualified support of the united nations in the war against the axis.

An organizing committee was formed to set up a permanent group to fight discrimination against all minority groups in Canada and to secure the enactment of a civil rights bill at Ottawa. Rev. Estes was elected chairman and Miss Velmer Coward was named secretary.

BLOOD DONATION

Boston, Mass

SEP 18 1943

The following statement on blood segregation appears in the September issue of "Digest of Treatment," a magazine which circulates chiefly among members of the medical profession:

"One wonders if the most rabidly white conscious mother would rather see her boy die in the far off Solomons or Africa than see him saved by the blood of a colored donor!

"The colored boy is fighting the common enemy with the same enthusiasm as his white comrade in the defense of democracy. We are one people in the United States,—of all colors, of every possible national extraction, and of all the known faiths, but united by a common ideal, by a supreme faith in democratic institutions. It is shameful that, like the Hitlerites, some of us should feel that the blood of a colored man or of any other healthy individual would polute us. Let us really practice what we preach—the brotherhood of man."

The Red Cross isnotnamed; nevertheless, the statement is a sharp rebuke to that organization for its blood-segregation practice. In general the medical profession has accepted the conclusion of scence that the blood-plasma is identical in all peoples. The refusal of the Red Cross to back down from its anti-scientific attitude seems therefore to be a case of plain stubborness.

Blood Bank Jim Crow Being Fought At Red Cross Door

Defender
Chicago, Ill.

Protests against the jim-crow policy of separating the blood plasma of Negro and white donors were carried direct to the door of the Chicago chapter of the American Red Cross Society, 5 N. Wabash avenue, this week.

Over 100 protestants, members of the Committee of Racial Equality, an interracial group, stormed the place with leaflets outlining the bigotrous practice of blood segregation, and referring to it as "contrary to medical science, democracy and the best national morale."

Distribution of the literature began Monday morning at 10 o'clock, with members of the organization working in shifts of two to three each, handing the leaflets to passersby in front of the building. Aside from urging donors to give their blood, the leaflets asked them to protest the segregation policy when doing so.

Miss Bernice Fisher, secretary of the National Federation of CORE, stated that distribution of the literature was resorted to only after numerous conferences with local Red Cross officials had been unavailing. She declared that her group had exhausted every means of reaching an agreement with the local body without the use of public criticism. Correspondence had been exchanged since mid June she said, and talks had been held at various times since July 8.

One spokesman for the society, Ralph Baier, denied that there was any segregation of the blood in an interview on July 8, Miss Fisher stated. However, on August 3, Joseph H. King, first vice chairman, repudiated Baier and admitted that the local chapter "adheres to the national policy" of separating the blood of Negro donors from that of white persons.

King, Miss Fisher asserted, protested against calling it "segregation" of the blood. but had no answer to her question as to what is, or would be, done with the blood of Chinese and Indians.

Quotes Medical Journal

The leaflets, in addition to the protest, quoted the Journal of the American Medical association in an article of July 4, 1942, in which it was said:

"There is no evidence that the blood of Negroes differs in any significant respect from that of white persons. The successful transfusion with whole blood from white persons to Negroes or vice versa can be accomplished quite as readily as between members of the same race . . . The segregation of the blood of white persons from the blood of Negroes in the blood bank is therefore not only unscientific but it is a grevious affront to the largest minority in our country . . ."

According to Miss Fisher, the leaflets are to be distributed in front of the Wabash avenue address all week. Approximately 10 000 have already been passed out, she stated.

Dorothy Thompson Blasts Red Cross Blood Policy

NEW YORK—Dorothy Thompson, widely-known columnist and author, this week joined the ranks of the large number of critics who have shot holes through the claim of the American Red Cross, that differentials exist in racial blood streams.

Attacking the policy of the Red Cross in segregating blood plasma, Miss Thompson said the arguments used to justify the separation are silly. "The constituents of a Negro's blood," she declared, "are exactly the same as Winston Churchill's or Adolph Hitler's."

Pointing out that blood has been divided into four types by medical research, but that these types are not in the leastwise affected by the race of the individuals, Miss Thompson stated that the Red Cross "knows the controversy plays in the realm of totem and taboo, that has nothing to do with pathology."

The columnist held: "If a blonde white man of Norwegian ancestry should be suffering from acute hemorrhage, and it were necessary to pick off the street a man willing to shed his blood to save another's life, the right blood type might be found in a Galican Jew, a South Slav, a Negro or a Japanese, while another Norwegian might have to be rejected.

"The Lord has diffused the four blood types so thoroughly," she held further, "that two cousins may belong to different types and a Jew and Julius Streicher to the same."

Dismissing the Red Cross argument as a fear without foundation, Miss Thompson declared: "It is astonishing to me that this superstitution falls when serum from horses, cows or sheep is put into human veins. No one seems to fear his children will walk on four legs, or moo, or neigh."

Concluding the piece, the writer said, "But considering how long it takes a superstition to die, I would say to my Negro friends: Stop bothering about the blood banks. It's a silly controversy and not worth a campaign. Since your blood is of the same physiological constituency as everyone else's, your argument contributes to scientific precision.

"But you don't win any victory for your race by winning the argument. Race and blood are two different matters."

Blood Does Not Tell

Birmingham, Ala.

BY DOROTHY THOMPSON

Spokesmen for colored Americans have protested the policy of keeping Negro and white plasma in two blood banks, for the separate treatment of Negro and white wounded needing transfusions.

The Negroes regard it as another sign of racial discrimination.

Officials of the American Red Cross know that the controversy plays in a realm of totem and taboo, that has nothing to do with pathology.

The constituents of a Negro's blood are exactly the same as Winston Churchill's or Adolf Hitler's.

There are four types of blood, as discovered and classified by medical research. (Plasma is derived from all four types equally.) Whole blood for transfusion purposes must be labelled according to type. But the race of the donor has nothing to do with the blood type into which he may fall.

If a blond white man of Norwegian ancestry should be suffering from acute hemorrhage, and it were necessary to pick off the street a man willing to shed his blood to save another's life, the right blood type might be found in a Galician Jew, a South Slav, a Japanese or a Negro, while another Norwegian might have to be rejected.

Thus, the Scriptures are almost, but not quite scientifically correct when they say that "The Lord hath made of one blood all the nations of the earth." The Lord hath made of four bloods all the nations of the earth, and has diffused the four so thoroughly that two cousins may belong to different types and a Jew and Julius Streicher to the same.

* * *

Why, then, this prejudice of men against having their lives saved by plasma or blood from the veins of men of another color? For that prejudice exists.

I think, the reason goes back to the unprecise use of words. A white boy resisting a transfusion of "colored" plasma, believes that it will make him partly Negro. And everything that we say on the subject of blood, confirms him in this pure superstition.

We say, "I am of pure Anglo-Saxon blood."

Or, of a high-bred horse, "blooded mare."

Or, of an aristocrat, "blue blood."

Or, "blood will tell."

Or, "blood is thicker than water."

These, and a thousand other phrases, confirm the human race in the superstition that racial and other inherited characteristics are transmitted in the blood stream. It is astonishing to me that this superstitution falls when serum from horses, cows or sheep is put into human veins. No one seems to fear his children will walk on four legs, or moo, or neigh.

* * *

If racial characteristics were carried by the blood stream, the resistance of one race of men to having transfusions of the blood or plasma of other races would probably be insuperable. For, although they have no control over it in the first place, most men do not desire to change their race, unless they belong to one which suffers peculiar disadvantages. If a man's visible racial characteristics make it difficult for him to find work, or expose him to humiliations, he may desire to escape from his race by obliterating its more obvious characteristics. Among many American Negroes it is a social distinction to be light colored for the obvious reason that they thereby more closely approach the dominant white world. In a great and prosperous African civilization exactly the reverse would probably be true.

Orientals, who live largely on vegetarian diets, find that the carnivorous westerners have a horrible smell, "like cadavers." The Irishman who brags of the hair on his chest as a sign of virility is not comprehensible to a Chinaman or a Japanese, who certainly belong to fecund races, but find the hairyness of Nordic man closely akin to the hairyness of the baboon.

But no amount of pumping other people's blood into men's veins affects their color, hair, stature, or any other racial characteristics of themselves or their progeny.

Racial characteristics are transmitted through the chromosomes. A person is determined as colored or white the moment he is conceived and the blood stream has nothing to do with it.

If, for centuries, people had been saying, "I am of pure Anglo-Saxon chromosomes," the statement would certainly be untrue, considering the endless mixture, not of blood but of sexes, but the idea would be correct.

* * *

If we are going to go on talking about our blood and speaking precisely, we'll have to get used to describing ourselves as types O A B or AB, none of which are anything to brag about. All four include geniuses and morons, yellows, browns, whites and blacks.

But considering how long it takes a superstition to die, I would say to my Negro friends: Stop bothering about the blood banks. It's a silly controversy, and not worth a campaign. Since your blood is of the same physiological constituency as everyone else's, your argument contributes to scientific precision. But, you don't win any victory for your race by winning the argument. Race and blood are two different matters.

The leaflet urged donors to give their blood but at the same time to protest the segregation policy of the American Red Cross.

BLOOD DONATION

Boston, Mass.

Guardian

Unwilling to accept the insulting conditions of the American Red Cross which segregates the blood of colored donors, a number of prominent New Yorkers will contribute to the Chinese blood bank which accepts the blood of all on equal terms. In the appeal for donations to the Chinese blood bank there is a quotation from Confucuis, the great Chinese philosopher who lived about 500 years before the Christian era: "Within the four seas all men are brothers". The appeal goes on to say that more than "2000 years later, science proved that he was right. The life-giving element of human blood—the plasma—is identical in all races."

What Confucuis asserted could have been dismissed by the Western World as the vaparing of the "heathen Chinee"; but the same concept is expressed in the Christian bible: God "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth" and despite two thousand years of Christian teaching the "brotherhood of man" has not been accepted even by many of the exponents of Christianity. Without a quiver modern Apostles will consign an evil-doer to fire and brimstone by biblical authority but will recoil before skin color. The American Red Cross refuses to back down from its unscientific position, and it is easy to understand the embarrassment of the New York blood donors. How much harm the American Red Cross policy is doing the blood bank cause and how many lves may be needlessly sacrificed thereby can equally be understood.

BLOOD IS BLOOD

It has always been considered a ridiculous practice for one to "bite off his nose to spite his face."

Ridiculous, therefore, can be said to describe the attitude of those persons who are refusing to help supply the Red Cross Blood Bank because that institution persists in a policy of segregating Negro blood from white blood, merely to appease an ignorant element of the population which does not know that "blood is blood." We are quite sure that in a crisis medical men of the Red Cross would not bother about whether a Negro or a white person furnished the blood that was needed to save human life. Nor would the most ignorant or bigoted soldier of either race, if his life hung in the balance, raise any question about the racial identity of the person who gave the blood that had been selected to be injected into his body.

Negroes have submitted to so much outrageous and senseless discrimination down through the years, until it should be no hardship to give blood to the Red Cross under present conditions. The fact that Negro boys on the battle fronts are suffering and dying should serve as a deterrant to any among us who may feel inclined to refuse to give blood to help save human life.

But nevertheless and notwithstanding, commendation is due members of the CIO who recently sent a letter of protest against the "segregation of blood" policy of the Red Cross. This letter, appearing as a part of a news story in the NEW YORK AGE, was as follows:

"As it (segregation) has absolutely no basis in biology or any other science, we urge the Red Cross to abandon this useless practice . . . Particularly in view of the fact that a Negro, Dr. Charles Drew, professor of surgery at Howard university, was not only one of the pioneers in the chemistry of the blood bank, but also became director of the blood bank in England. . . . The majority of informed Negroes today are protesting this segregation in the only way they know: refusals to donate their blood to the Red Cross. This, of course, lessens the amount of blood available to both Negro and white casualties."

Although there exists some doubt as to whether Negro blood is consistently segregated all along the line of scientific processes involved with the plasma, the Red Cross continues to work on the principle of segregation.

The letter from the CIO blood donors read in part:

"As it (segregation) has has absolutely no basis in biology or any other science, we urge the Red Cross to abandon this useless practice. . . . Particularly in view of the fact that a Negro, Dr. Charles Drew, professor of surgery at Howard University . . . . w[illegible] only one of the pioneers in the chemistry of the blood bank but als[illegible]tor of the blood bank in England . . . . This of course lessens the amount of blood available to both Negro and white casualties alike.

OCT 2 1943

"In view of the above facts, we of the CIO strongly urge a revision of your discriminatory policy of pandering to common race prejudice, in the hope that the Red Cross will join with other forces seeking to extend democracy at [illegible] as well as abroad."

As long ago as September, 1942, Mrs. Lucas became the first Negro donor assigned to Sydenham Hospital and she now donates to the bank at Bellevue Hospital.

On December 7, 1942, at war council meeting held at the hospital, committees were chosen to aid in the acceleration of the work of the institution during these times. Admits Red Cross Is Following Rule Laid Down by Government

WASHINGTON

Army and navy responsibility for the segregation of plasma in the Red Cross blood banks was revealed this week following a release by the officials of the United Federal Workers of America and the Office of the Army and Navy Surgeons General, following a union pr[illegible]s of the [illegible]a segregation.

DEC 18 1943

In letter sent to the Surgeons General and to the president of the American Red Cross, Richard Tynes, chairman of the War Relocation Authority branch of the USWA, CIO, said:

"We believe this segregation is harmful to the war effort; that it contributes to disunity and that it is an insult to one-tenth of all America."

DEC 18 1943

Medical Corps Head Quoted

Admission of any responsibility for an insistence upon segregation of the plasma was contained in a letter signed by Lt. Col. Douglass B. Kendricks of the U.S. Army Medical Corps, special representative on transfusions and intravenous solutions.

While agreeing upon the soundness of the union's stand that there is no scientific basis for the segregation, Lt. Col. Kendricks said:

". . . Unfortunately, there is a disinclination on the part of many whites, which you of course recognize, to have colored blood injected into their veins.

Passes Buck to Service Men

"Whether that disinclination is the result of ignorance or prejudice, it nevertheless exists and is a factor with which this office always reckons in setting up any plasma program for the army.

"It is the conviction of this office that disregard of this feeling would greatly mitigate against the successful conclusion of the program for collecting blood plasma for the armed forces.

"While this office sympathizes with the aspirations of the colored race, it feels that it must continue its present policy in the matter of blood plasma, even though it may not be the ideal solution.

Asked to Swallow Insult

"In a thoroughly sincere spirit, I am going to express the thought that herein lies a wonderful opportunity for colored Americans to assist in a difficult situation.

"It is my firm belief that nothing would contribute more toward breaking down existing barriers than for colored citizens generally to contribute to the donor program, fighting it as evidence on their part of a superior concern for national welfare over racial interest."

DEC 18 1943

J.C. Policy Unanimous

The same sentiments were expressed in the reply of Rear Admiral Ross T. McIntyre, Navy Surgeon General. He said.

"The policy followed by the Red Cross in its blood donor service is one which was adopted unanimously by all agencies involved and is not considered discriminatory against any race.

". . . Segregation of racial blood is practiced in order that the persons receiving the plasma may know that it is made from blood taken from people of their own race."

JUN 30 1943

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(SNS)—Chairman Francis J. Haas, of the Fair Employment Practice committee, announced Monday that he would visit Detroit this week to investigate the status of cases in that city now pending before the FEPC and that upon his return he would recommend action in line with his findings to the new membership of the committee.

Hearings on cases in Detroit, originally scheduled to open this week, will be held July 28 and 29, or earlier if possible, chairman Hass stated.

Of the eight pending Detroit cases two companies last week declared their intention to comply with the terms of executive order 9346. Chairman Haas stated that during this visit to Detroit he would examine the unresolved cases in order to determine when they might go to hearings, and that he would also study several more recent cases which involve large war industries.

"When the new members of the committee meet for the first time," chairman Haas said, "they will have before them several important groups of cases, including those in Detroit, those concerning alleged discrimination on certain railroads, and the Capital Transit case in Washington. I wish to give the new committee the opportunity to decide the order in which it wishes to hear these cases. I can give assurance that every effort will be made to achieve quick disposition of cases now on the committe's docket."

A part of the reorganization of the FEPC, following the mandate given it in the president's executive order 9346, will be the establishment of 12 regional offices responsible to the committee and located in the 12 regions of the war manpower commission.

Labor Trouble On West Coast

Rush Two Men To Scene To Gather Facts

JUL 21 1943

WASHINGTON— (ANP)— The firing of hundreds of Negroes in West Coast shipyards by the companies for failure to pay dues any longer to the jim-crow boilermakers union, has resulted in a flood of protests to the Fair Employment Practice committee. As a result, the committee has rushed two men out there to ascertain the facts and to submit recommendations.

Resting on that part of the amended executive order permitting the use of outside aid, the committee invited Judge James H Wolfe, chief justice of the Utah Supreme court and he accepted, to meet Daniel Donovan, field examined for FEPC in Los Angeles last Saturday.

Wolfe was described as a 'liberal' in the field of labor relations. He has served as conciliator for the government in other labor disputes. Where he stands on the Negro could not be determined. Donovan, with the committee since 1941, formerly held a card in the International Association of Machinists, but was identified with that bloc of the IAM which had consistently sought to relax the bars against Negro membership.

Basis of the dispute goes back to 1942 when Henry J. Kaiser, ship-a-week builder in Oregon, went to New York and asked for 20,000 men for his yards. He received a heavy response which included hundreds of Negroes Kaiser has a close shop contract with the boilermakers union, which makes the union virtually the hiring hall for the company meaning, no card, no job.

The name of Tom Ray, business agent for local 72 up in Portland, sticks out as the most outspoken objector to Negroes in the union and in the yard. The upshot of the argument was that the union would organize the Negroes into auxiliaries, give them cards but no voice in union affairs Wanting the jobs, the men fell into the auxiliaries in large numbers, and apparently things have been going along peaceably.

MEN ARE SORE

It seems now, however, that the men are sore about a number of things almost all of which can be summed up into unequal opportunity, the normal development of discrimination and segregation. George M. Johnson, assistant to the chairman of FEPC, said they have had the problem for about six months. In Los Angeles alone at least 100 men were released, he added.

George Streater, who as a labor representative with the War Production board generally explains these matters from the AFL point of view, was down in the gulf area when the story broke. Joseph Keenan top AFL man with WMC, was also out of town.

Except for the two men sent to the scene, the FEPC has nobody on the spot. The War Manpower commission, however, has Clarence Johnson, former representative of the Dining Car Waiters and Cooks (SFL) there and ready to lend a hand. Rated as one of the best field men black or white, on Negro employment problems, Johnson is a former labor consultant in OPM, and WPB. While there was little convincing in the answer given that Johnson's aid would be enlisted now, it is expected that the agreement now being worked out between FEPC and WMC will automatically make such cooperation feasible.

FEPC SETS DATE FOR R. R. CASES

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa.

Committee Refuses To Adopt "Mobile Compromise" As Precedent for Job Pattern in the South

WASHINGTON, July 15—Agreement to hold here on September 15, 16 and 17 the long delayed hearings on discrimination against Negroes in the railroad industry, the establishment of 12 regional offices to expedite investigation of discrimination complaints, and an implied rebuke to Chairman Haas for his action in settling the discrimination cases at the Alabama Drydock company in Mobile, Ala., on the basis of complete segregation of Negro workers to four of the company's 12 shipways, were the principal features of a two-day, first meeting of the new seven-member FEPC.

TO HOLD PUBLIC R.R. HEARINGS

Father Francis J. Haas, new chairman, in a press conference last week indicated that the full committee would hold public hearings on complaints against 26 railroads, members of the Southeastern Railway association and against six others on charges of racial discrimination. At the same time he stated the new committee had agreed to establish 12 regional offices throughout the country at points roughly the same as the regional offices now maintained by the War Manpower Commission. He stated that an agreement is being worked out with WMC for closest cooperation in accomplishing the purposes of the President's executive order against discrimination in war industry.

During its sessions the new committee, consisting of P.B. Young, Sr., of the Norfolk Journal and Guide, Samuel Zemurray of the United Fruit company, Sara Southall of the International Harvester company, John Brophy of the CIO, Boris Shishkin of the AFL and Milton P. Webster of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, adopted a resolution refusing to accept with approval the action of Father Haas in agreeing to segregate Negro workers in the Mobile case.

ALA. COMPROMISE NO PRECEDENT

Courier Pittsburgh Pa.

Said the resolution:

"The comimttee accepts the accomplished fact of the settlement made in Mobile to end a crisis in war production, except that the committee cannot give its approval to the complete segregation of Negroes on the ship ways and does not consider that a precedent."

Questioned on the effect of this resolution on the present status of Negro workers at the Mobile shipyard, Father Haas refused to say whether this action would mean a final change in the existing agreement or not. He stated, "it will all depend on whether we get complaints of discrimination from Negro workers at this shipyard."

In a prepared statement the FEPC chairman said: "The newly appointed committee has accepted the responsibility placed upon it to promote the fullest utilization of all available manpower regardless of race, creed, color or national origin. The objective is to further the prosecution of the war, worker morale and national unity.

TO SET DATE FOR DETROIT CASES

"The committee is conscious that this sound objective must be pursued where wartime crowding in houses, buses and recreation grounds have bred irritation among decent people, and have afforded irresponsible persons the opportunity for shameful mob violence. This is cause for grave concern, but not for despair, I learned last week in Detroit, where mixed races make tanks and airplanes side by side, that the workers in war plants did not lose their heads at the time when hoodlums were rioting in the streets of Detroit."

Haas announced that the FEPC would set dates for hearings in the discrimination cases now pending in Detroit and Washington "as soon as it appears that efforts to settle them by negotiation have failed." He indicated that the president of the Capital Transit company here had appeared before the committee during its sessions and that negotiations for employment of Negro bus drivers by the company were in progress. He said also that three of the six Detroit companies charged with discrimination had already indicated willingness to comply with committee directives of no-discrimination.

Malcolm Ross, former OWI and National Labor Relations Board official, and George Johnson, former associate executive secretary of the FEPC, were named by Haas as "assistants to the chairman."

SAYS EDUCATION PROGRAM NEEDED

Another meeting of the committee is scheduled for July 26, and it is expected that meetings will be held twice monthly. A budget in excess of half a million and a staff of more than [illegible] workers are expected, according to Haas. The funds for the present will come from the Office of Emergency Management, he said.

One new member of the committee, Sara Southall of the International Harvester company, stated that in her opinion the work of the committee in accomplishing an end to discrimination in industry must begin by "a program of education from the president of the company on down.

"We are dealing in the realm of prejudice," she said. "It does no good to begin with the little fellows down the line. In any corporate structure it is the president who develops policy, who has to be changed from his old practices. We must start with him and go down to the lowest assistant foreman."

Note Progress In Rail Fight

Delegates In Session Here

By WILLIAM A. FOWLKES

Representatives from seventeen states, attending the annual meeting of the International Association of Railway Employees at the Butler Street YMCA Tuesday heard their counsel describe the progress of action against discrimination against Negroes in the railway service.

Resolutions from the body are expected to be made public today when the meeting comes to a close.

Chief Counsel Charles Houston, of Washington, D. C.; Col. A. T. Walden, of Atlanta, and Attorney Arthur D. Shores, of Birmingham who have conducted national and local fights against discrimination against the group in the service, gave a report of their work. Methods of co-operation and combatting discriminations against seniority rights in contracts of the roads under the Southeastern Conference Agreement were suggested.

The group is looking forward to the Railway hearings September 15-17 before the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee in Washington, hopeful that directives from that body against several existing evils will aid in their eradication. Among these evils is the problem of Negro firemen whose jobs are being threatened with the entree of the Diesel engine.

Officers of the I. A. R. E. attending the meeting include: H. R. Barnett, president of Knoxville, Tenn.; Arthur Lewis vice-president; T. D. Redd treasurer; Leyton Weston, secretary, St Louis Missouri, and L. R. McLoy, employees' representative, Jackson, Tenn.

Members of the women's auxiliary are also in attendance at the meeting.

Msgr. Haas New Chairman Of Independent Body In Latest Order

WASHINGTON, D. C.—President Roosevelt on Friday, issued a new executive order scrapping the old FEPC and establishing a new committee "to promote the fullest utilization of all available manpower, and to eliminate discriminaory ractices."

At the same time, the White House confirmed the recent appointment of Monsignor Francis J. Haas as chairman of the new committee which is established as a separate agency within the Office of Emergency Management of the Executive Office of the President.

The new committee will be composed of a chairman and not more than six other members to be appointed by the President. Upon the appointment of the new committee, the old organization, established by Executive Order 8802 and operating within the War Manpower Commission, will cease to exist.

In his new order, President Roosevelt said: "I do hereby reaffirm the policy of the United States that there shall be no discrimination in the employment of any person in war industries or in Government by reason of race, creed, color, or national origin, and I do hereby declare that it is the duty of all employers, including the several Federal departments and agencies, and all labor organizations, in furtherance of this policy and of this order, to eliminate discrimination in regard to hire, tenure, terms or conditions of employment, or union membership because of race, creed, color, or national origin."

Under terms of the new order, Msgr. Haas will receive a salary not exceeding $10,000 a year and the remaining six members shall receive necessary travelling expenses and, unless their compensation is otherwise prescribed by the President, a per diem allowance not exceeding $25 per day and subsistence expenses on such days as they are actually engaged in the performance of duties.

"The committee shall formulate olicies to achieve the purposes of his order and shall make recom- nendations to the various federal epartments and agencies and to he President, which it deems ne- essary and proper to make effect- e the provisions of this order," he new order states.

"The committee shall receive and vestigate complaints of discrim- ation forbidden by this order. It ay conduct hearings, make findings of fact, and take appropriate steps to obtain elimination of such discriminaion," the order continues, "and the committee shall have the power to promulgate such rules and regulations as may be appropriate or necessary to carry out the provisions of this order."

Veteran Labor Ability

Msgr. Haas, the new committee chairman, is a veteran of labor disputes, dean of the School of Social Science of Catholic University, a member of the original National Labor Relations Board, a special conciliator for the Labor Department since 1935 and a participant in the settlement of about 12,500 labor squabbles.

The committee as orginally established on June 25, 1941, had independent status, but was placed under Paul V. McNtt when his authority was broadened to embrace selective service and other phases of the manpower problem. However, the FEPC has been inactive since Mr. McNutt, in January, indefinitely postponed scheduled hearings of charges of discrimination against Negroes by railroads.

Ever since the postponement of the railroad hearings, Negro, labor, and religious organizations, have protested inactivity of the FEPC and recently received assurance that the committee would "soon" be active again.

FEPC Boss Is Priest, Msgr. Francis J. Haas

Vigorous, Friendly, Blunt Cleric Is Tight-Lipped and Always in a Hurry

Mr. Carter talks to Governor Herbert O'Conor of Maryland.

(EDITOR'S NOTE — Father Haas was named by President Roosevelt to the FEPC chairmanship after Mark Ethridge had fumbled it. The priest had a record of having mediated labor disputes before he took on this new job.

Asked whether he weren't successful as a conciliator because management and labor respected his priesthood and clerical garb, Father Haas answered that the reporter didn't know management and labor.)

By MICHAEL CARTER

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Unless Southern political pressure again splits the Fair Employment Practices Committee (FEPC), colored men will soon be employed as engineers, mechanics, and even conductors on interstate rail carriers. Msgr. Francis J. Haas, vigorous head of the FEPC, assured the AFRO that his revitalized committee was strong enough to cope with the problems as they arose and that the hearings would be held on schedule—September 15.

In his first personal interview with a member of the race press, Msgr. Haas assured colored people that the FEPC deserved their continued confidence and support.

"The FEPC is far from impotent. It is, in fact, a very virile influence in the lives of colored citizens and other minorities. It is still in business and is going to stay. We also have hearings scheduled for the Kaiser Shipyards, but cannot announce a date yet. We do know that hearings will be scheduled after the railroad case."

Answers Blunt, Friendly

It is not at all easy to talk to the Monsignor. He answers questions in a blunt, but friendly manner, but he never offers more information than is required to answer the specific inquiry. A conversation with him is never kept alive on the basis of its weight or mutual interest. You have to keep fueling it with new questions.

All during the interview, Msgr. Haas was assisted by St. Claire Bourne, colored, former editor of The People's Voice, New York tabloid, and now an information specialist who writes the FEPC press releases. Haas called upon him for statistical information.

The railroad hearings, scheduled for this month, include charges against 14 railroad unions as well as 23 railroad lines. The latter include the Pennsylvania, the Baltimore and Ohio, and the New York Central.

Although the FEPC only "alleges" discrimination on these and other roads, every train rider knows that whatever colored employees he encounters will either be porters or waiters.

Won't Speculate

He has "no idea as to what will happen either during the hearings or after them. The answer to that is in the law itself. The committee has done its job in investigating and preparing for the hearings. We can't speculate on what will happen."

Another evidence of the revitalization of the FEPC is in on the instance of the Capital Traction Company in Washington, D.C. This company has steadily upheld the principles of the Confederacy in barring colored workers from its lines.

Msgr. Haas said, "The Capital Traction hearing is reaching a satisfactory conclusion. You can't set a definite time limit on it but I should say it is a matter of weeks."

All minorities in the United States. Jews, Mexicans, Filipinos, and others, are indebted to colored Americans for the FEPC, Msgr. Haas believes. "Pressure from the colored people created the FEPC and all minorities are better off for it.

Must Find Cases

"Colored people can continue to aid the FEPC by bringing to its attention cases affecting them. We are compared to a court. We do not seek out injustices, but try to correct those which are presented to us. It's your job to find the cases; ours to solve them." That was in answer to my question concerning the "White Only" advertisements which I had seen in several Western papers.

Msgr. Haas believes that although our faith in the FEPC was shaken at the time the committee was licked in the first railroad hearings, we have now renewed that faith.

"The FEPC is sincere in its aims. Of course, no government agency can succeed without the co-operation of the people. Our new budget is for $500,000. That is a considerable increase over the original appropriation of $80,000."

Under the new budget regional offices will be opened in eight cities, and in Chicago, colored directors have been appointed. The committee will employ 23 clerks, 29 professional workers, and about 50 clerical and professional workers in Washington, D.C. Inability to secure qualified personnel is advanced as one of the reasons for tardiness in establishing other offices.

Average Success

Regional offices have been established in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, and Dallas. The other four will be open as soon as the requisite personnel is obtained.

"Instead of lying around doing nothing, these offices are picking up situations and are meeting with more than average success."

Because Msgr. Francis J. Haas is more or less unknown to colored people I felt him out on various topics, including the old standby question on Aryan blood in the Red Cross.

"Is it biologically sound to segregate blood?" Msgr. Haas asked me. St. Claire Bourne told him that it was absurd and that colored people were indignant about it. "Then it's all wrong," Msgr. Haas replied.

To some questions the Monsignor said, "I think you are doing a disservice to your people to ask such questions. Some of your questions concern the entire committee and I am but one-seventh of it."

He was more co-operative on the score concerning white employees at the FEPC. "Most of them actually requested to work here. Malcolm Ross, a deputy, is a Virginian and is as seriously interested in the work as I am." White employees told me that they preferred to work at the FEPC, and that they "did not know that colored people were so nice—the educated ones."

On the general race issue, Msgr. Haas believes:

That it is a practical political possibility to end discrimination.

That the South, unable to solve the race problem after having had years of brutal experience, needs the help of the entire country.

That labor unions offer the colored man a partial solution to the race problem.

The priest criticized me again when I asked him for personal opinions on matters of general race issues and problems concerning the FEPC. "We are in the same position as a judge. You are not helping the case by placing the judge in a position which can be called prejudiced." Any prejudice which Msgr. Haas might show would be in favor of, and not against us.

Plea for Neighborliness

He did not tell me the following, but Bourne pointed it out to me. This is an excerpt from The American Federationist, official magazine of the American Federation of Labor. The quotes are from an article titled "Justice for All" by Francis J. Haas.

"In commenting on the rioting (in Detroit) it was pointed out that there was absolutely no trouble between the colored and white families living in the same block." Msgr. Haas used this as a plea for neighborliness, industrial and domestic.

"We must show ourselves and the world that we can work together for victory . . . we are reaping the fruits of our past folly. We must exalt the idea of 'togetherness' in the place of separateness and division."

PERSONAL OBSERVATIONS:

Msgr. Francis J. Haas is the "regular fellow" type of priest. He smokes cigarets, moves about quickly and pats you on the back. He is not taciturn, but unless you keep needling him he will stop talking.

His method seems to be simple: I shall answer questions, but that's all. Even his office staff makes the same comment. I spoke to several women employees who were surprised that he talked to me so long.

Fair, Courteous

I am impressed with what I interpret as his fairness and courtesy and his tremendous energy. He seems to have a real respect for colored workers, depends on St. Claire Bourne for statistical detail, and shows a real interest in the race press.

I guess I was most impressed with the close-lipped manner he used in closing our interview. "The FEPC is doing and will continue to do everything in its power to eradicate dis[illegible]ination in all war industries. [illegible] cases to us and w[illegible] our vigor." Shortly after th[illegible] ran into anothe[illegible] and saw him walk an[illegible] ver ways trotted and [illegible] al- [illegible] seemed determined to get there in a hurry and in the same [illegible]

[illegible] as much jim crow as could be [illegible] ved.

Afro-American
Baltimore, Md.

In his first personal interview with the race press, Msgr. Haas calls the FEPC a virile influence in lives of colored citizens.

He never offers more information than is required to answer a specific inquiry.

It's the people's job to find the cases; ours to solve them, he stated.

Most of the white employees requested to work in FEPC did not know that colored people were "so nice and educated."

Msgr. Haas smokes cigarettes, pats you on the back, is fair, courteous and energetic.

Carey McWilliams

JUN 19 1943

In reorganizing the Fair Employment Practice Committee, of which he is chairman, Monsignor Haas could go a long way toward giving this body the strength, character and intelligence it must have to be of any use at all, by appointing Carey McWilliams of Los Angeles to its membership. McWilliams, a lawy who has become one of the real authorities on pr lems of racial minorities and migratory labor, did an honest and effective job as California's Con sioner of Immigration during Governor Olson's a ministration that the incoming reactionary Governor Warren made it his highly publicized first official act to fire him. McWilliams had already resigned by letter, knowing the impossibility of carrying on his work under the new set-up, but the Governor would not be done out of the pleasure of dism[illegible] a state official who spoke and worked for the rights of Mexicans, Chinese and Japanese in California. McWilliams' recent book, "Bro[illegible]s U[illegible] Skin," is both an analysis of our national bungling of racial problems in the past and an outline for affirmative national action in the future. There are few men better fitted for work with the FEPC—if, as its new chairman declares, it is going to undertake a vigorous, honest program.

THE NEW FEPC ORDER

JUN 12 1943

AFTER SEVERAL MONTHS of earnest campaigning, political maneuvering, buck-passing an[illegible]t stalling, the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices has been given a shot in the arm, hauled back out into the open an[illegible]ped up on its own feet with instructions to go ahead on its own. The most ardent principles of democracy at home as well as abroad have hailed the issuance of the amendment to Executive Order 8802 as a signal victory.

There can be no question that it is a triumph and a significant one. The issuance of the order, in itself, bolsters the belief of those of us who have clung to the conviction that the will of the people must inevitably be the will of the government.

Age

But, issuance of the new order does not signify final victory. Rather must it be viewed like our triumph over the Axis in Africa, as the first step forward in a struggle which will undoubtedly be a very bitter one. To wipe out Hitlerism abroad, the United Nations must assault and overcome "festung Europa."

The principal weapon in this home front fight for democracy is the Executive Order on which the Committee on Fair Employment operates and from which it draws its powers. That the original order was inadequate appears proven by (1) the failure of the old Committee to attain desired result and (2) the issuance of the new order.

New York

FEPC

The language in the new order is definitely stronger. Whereas the President originally said: "it is the duty of employers and of labor organizations . . . to provide . . . the full and equitable participation of all workers in defense industries without discrimination because of race, creed, color or national origin," his amended order reads: "It is the duty of all employers, including the several Federal departments and agencies, and all labor organizations . . . to eliminate discrimination in regard to hire, tenure, terms or conditions or employment or union membership because of race, creed, color or national origin." By being so much more specific, the order furnishes firmer bases for the Committee's operations.

JUN 12 1943

The new order gives the Committee power to "formulate policies to achieve the purposes of this Order" and "to recommend to the Chairman of the War Manpower Commission appropriate measures . . ."

Definite provision, in the amended order, for necessary personnel, supplies facilities and services, for the Committee and of authority to use the services and facilities of other Federal departments and agencies is another new addition which adds strength. Similarly, making the chairmanship of the Committee a full-time, paid job tends to remove the agency from the "voluntary welfare and social work" status which hampered the old group.

JUN 12 1943

Most significant portion of the amended order, however, is the provision granting the Committee power "to promulgate such rules and regulations as may be appropriate or necessary to carry out the provisions of this Order." It is, perhaps, too early to venture an opinion on how far this provision actually goes. But it does appear to offer wide possibilities.

To sum up, the amended order definitely contains considerably more promise than the old one. The increase in strength, however, lies more in the expansion of its operating facilities than in raising of its level of authority. The fullest answer must come through the work of the new Committee itself.

Conferees Disagree On New FEPC Set-up

Pittsburgh, Pa. Courier

WMC BLASTS JOB BIAS!

FEB 27 1943

47d

WASHINGTON, D.C., Feb. 25—In addition to urging an all-out drive for "stepped up" war production through all legitimate channels, the planning bureau of the War Manpower Commission, in a report submitted last week to Commissioner Paul V. McNutt, warned that "the nation's manpower needs for 1943 cannot be met unless job-discrimination against Negroes, women and other available workers is eliminated."

WASHINGTON, D.C., Feb. 25—The knotty problem of revising and strengthening FEPC as an instrument to stamp out job discrimination in war industry was thoroughly explored in a three-hour conference, held here last week between War Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt, Attorney General Francis B. Biddle and the invited representatives of 22 minority groups, labor and religious organizations.

The conference called by Commissioner McNutt at the direction of President Roosevelt was invited to discuss proposals for sanctions to give FEPC power to enforce its decisions; proposals for reconstituting the Committee on a full time paid basis, and proposals to give the Committee an independent existence with power to establish its own policy and procedures.

FEB 27 1943

PRESIDENT WILL GET REPORT

The conference was closed to the press, but it is known that a summary of the discussion will be reported directly to the President by Commissioner McNutt and Attorney General Biddle.

Judging from reactions of the organizations involved to McNutt's letter of invitation, it is clear that there must have been a general agreement that FEPC should be restored to its independent status as a Committee directly responsible to the President and that public hearings on discrimination in the vital railroad industry be immediately rescheduled.

CONFEREES DISAGREE

The positions taken by the organizations on the question of sanctions to put teeth into FEPC decisions and as to the question of whether there should be a paid or volunteer Committee indicate some disagreement. It was learned that the American Federation of Labor is vigorously opposed to giving FEPC power to enforce its decisions against Jim-Crow AFL unions. The March On Washington Movement was known to insist that the present volunteer membership of the Committee be retained. Other organizations, such as the Southern Conference on Race Relations and the National Urban League, are understood not to attach great importance to the question of a paid or non-paid Committee but do insist that ample funds and personnel be provided to enable FEPC to accomplish its objective of bringing hundreds of thousands of minority group workers into war industries.

FEB 27 1943

A statement released by the NAACP showed its position to be one favoring action by President Roosevelt to give FEPC power to intervene in any Railway Mediation Board or National War Labor Board hearing involving a union found guilty of discrimination and to prevent payment of government funds to employers guilty of unfair labor practice.

MAY DRAFT DR. GRAHAM

Whatever comes out of the conference and the presentation of its findings to the White House, it is certain that the future of the Committee will depend on the selection of a chairman to succeed Dr. Malcolm MacLean. No likely prospects have been added to those announced last week. The previous statement by Dr. Frank P. Graham that he could not accept the post was met this week with reliable reports that efforts will be made to draft him for the chairmanship.

The complete list of persons who attended the FEPC conference is as follows: Sidney Hollander and George Segal, Co-ordinating Committee of Jewish Agencies; P. B. Young Sr. and Dean Gordon Hancock, Southern Conference on Race Relations; A. Philip Randolph, March On Washington Movement; Mrs. Maudelle Bousefield, Women's Advisory Committee to the War Manpower Commission; Mrs. Dorothy K. Funn, Negro Labor Victory Committee; Lester Granger, National Urban League; Walter White, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Morris Milgram, Workers' Defense League; Rabbi Israel Goldstein, Synagogue Council of America; Abner Green, American Committee for the Protection of Foreign Born; Samuel Rosenwein, National Lawyers' Guild; Roger Baldwin, American Civil Liberties Union; George Sanchez, League of United Latin American Citizens; Rev. Francis W. McPeek, Federal Council of Churches of Christ; Willard Johnson, National Conference of Christians and Jews; John W. Davis, Association of Negro Land Grant Colleges; Warren Brown, Council for Democracy; I. N. Ornburn, American Federation of Labor; Willard Townsend, Congress of Industrial Organizations; John P. Davis, Southern Conference for Human Welfare; William Johnson, Negro Labor Leaders' Council; Monsignor John Ryan, National Catholic Welfare Conference; Fowler Harper, Deputy War Manpower Commissioner; Charlotte Carr, Deputy War Manpower Commissioner; Edith Keyes, Assistant to Commissioner McNutt.

FEPC, U. S. Agencies Okay Job Complaint Agreement

Atlanta, Georgia

WASHINGTON,—(A N P)—The Fair Employment Practice Committee has worked out with the U. S. Maritime commission, the war and navy departments, procedures by which cases of alleged discrimination occuring within the jurisdiction of these government agencies shall be properly handled and adjusted.

According to Will Maslow, director of field operations for FEPC similar procedures are being negotiated with the National War Labor board, National Labor Relations board, War Shipping administration and the Interstate Commerce commission Operating procedures with the War Manpower commission were the first to be arrived at by the reorganized committee.

Except for the WMC agreement, the others are informal in character. The procedures will be followed by the maritime commission in the handling of all shipyard labor involving either government-owned and privately operated plants of privately owned plants operating under contract with commission. No estimate was available as to how many plants are affected here.

There are, however, nine government owned but privately operated plants under the supervision of the navy which are covered by the procedures, whereas 47 plants and 71 ordnance departments under the department are covered.

Several Cases Adjudicated By Regional Office

Solutions Show Growing Power Of Committee

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(SNS)—The hiring of Negro women by a New York City firm engaged in war work which had never before given such employment to Negro workers was announced by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice this week. The company, General Desserts Corporation ,produces packaged foods for the armed forces.

Announcement of the settlement, together with the citing of a number of other such adjustments, was seen as an indication of increasing success in the handling of cases by the Committee.

The General Desserts case came to the attention of the Committee when the company revealed a need for women workers for production jobs. Although white women were employed by the firm it was found that no Negroes had ever been tried out. An FEPC representative conferred with the head of the company and pointed out the possibility of meeting its labor needs through elimination of any race, creed, color or national origin basis in its employment policy.

Declaring that no such policies had ever been practiced, the firm took immediate steps to emphasize the fact among all possible sources of labor and as a result received applications from Negro women and hired them along with whites to meet its needs.

The FEPC announcement also cited the following adjustments as typical of recent developments in its work:

A New England company advertising for an office worker, in-

These men of ours were mostly quartermaster trucking companies, involving hundreds of our men.

Sees Doom of Liberal Legislation; Express Fear for Future of FEPC

By JOE SHEPHARD

Small hope for passage of liberal legislation and stormy sailing for agencies most closely concerned with the welfare of the nation's colored population appeared in prospect this week following the return of a recalcitrant and unchastened Congress to Capitol Hill.

Declaring that the Seventy-eighth Congress has shown itself more strongly opposed to the administration and to social and labor legislation than any other Congress during the past ten years, competent Washington observers pointed out that there is no indication of any change in attitude on the part of the reconvened body.

"When they went home," said one Federal official, "there were promises that considerable pressure would be brought to bear by colored, labor, and other groups in their constituencies in an effort to bring them around to ways of thinking more in harmony with the desires and needs of the people.

Sees Change for Worse

"These pressures, however, never materialized and the temper of the Congress, if anything, has become more strongly set upon wiping out the labor and social gains of the past decade, curtailing wherever possible the power of the executive branch of the government and elimination of so-called bureaucracy in a sweeping swing toward support of the doctrine of States' rights."

The intent of the Congress at least to challenge the power of the executive branch was borne out immediately following the reconvening of the body on Tuesday when it swung into swift action to halt the impending "father draft" slated to begin October 1.

House Bares Its Fangs

On the House side, Military Affairs Committee Chairman Andrew May (Ky., D.) introduced a bill which would halt the further draft of fathers and release those already in the service.

On the Senate side, opposition to the drafting of fathers was also manifest, although action was less precipitate than that taken in the lower body.

Senator Arthur Vandenburg (R., Mich.) suggested that drafting of fathers be delayed for several weeks until the matter can be studied by Congress.

Members of both houses declared inability to see the need for the draft of fathers in the United States while Canada is releasing trained fighting men and South American allies have sent no men overseas.

Express Fear for FEPC

Belief that the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee will come under heavy fire from anti-administration Republican and Southern Democrats persisted and was strengthened as the sentiment for support of the doctrine of "States' rights" and elimination of alleged bureaucracy in the Federal Government grew in strength and volume.

This sentiment, which earlier in the session resulted in a coalition of Southern Democratic and anti-Roosevelt Republican forces, has already brought about the elimination of WPA and NYA, as well as a severe curtailment of Farm Security Administration programs.

The hope that pressure of public opinion at home would result in severance of the ties between anti-New Deal Republicans and their Southern Democratic allies was shattered exactly one week before Congress reconvened.

GOP Backs Unholy Alliance

The sanction of the Republican party was placed upon this coalition following a conference of its leaders held last Monday and Tuesday at Mackinac Island, Mich.

In a statement issued following the conference, the party was placed on record as opposed to "rule by bureaucratic decree," the favoring of any element in the republic at the expense of other elements and "the growing invasion of States' rights by the Federal Government."

Haas Blasts Discrimination

Guardian
Boston, Mass.

ds For Square Deal For All Groups

Speaking at the 63rd AFL convention in Boston, Monsignor Francis J. Haas, head of the President's Fair Employment Committee declared that the American Federation of Labor must end all discrimination against colored workers, Jews and other minority groups, both in its own ranks and in employment generally. He forcefully urged the abolition of all color bars and other undemocratic restrictions in unions against minority groups.

"Put yourself in the place of a member of a minority group," he continued. "Be he Colored or Mexican, Jew or Creedist, he wants his full status as an American workingman, and if he finds organized labor leagued against him he will rightfully revolt.

"Would you have it otherwise?" he asked. "Would you have the spirit which founded the American Federation of Labor stamped out among great masses of your fellow-Americans? Must one-tenth of the people of our country be set aside as a special class, with special loyalties that are not the loyalties of the rest of us?

"The interests of this nation at war coincide with the desire of the minority group members to be a part of the trade union movement. The strength of our armed forces must still be increased by two million more men, and our munition industries will need two million more workers. There exists an untapped pool of willing and skilled hands among the minority groups," he declared, in reference to importing outside labor, when a large number of underemployed colored workers are already available.

"I point out to you that there will be one million colored men in the armed services of this country whose integration into the economic life of the United States must be accomplished during the postwar adjustment period." Haas emphasized. "There will be thousands of Spanish American soldiers and returned prisoners of war, some of them who fought at Bataan. There will be tens of thousands of returned Jewish soldiers, and soldiers whose religious convictions are not those of the majority.

"Shall we greet these returned Americans with the grudging question: 'Will some one else get my job?' Or shall we rather say to ourselves: 'Will I help make this country where every man willing to work will have a job, and where none need be barred?' "

Delegates listened to Haas' address with rapt attention frequently breaking out into tumultuous applause.

Although Monsignor Haas revealed this week that he has resigned as chairman of the FEPC to accept a position as Bishop of Grand Rapids, he said he will remain for some time yet as head of the President's committee.

FEPC to Hold Railroad Hearings September 15

Washington Tribune
Washington, D. C.

Charges of discrimination in employment because of race or color, lodged against 23 railroads and 14 labor unions, will be examined by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice (FEPC) at hearings to be held September 15-18, in Washington, D.C. The hearings will be held at the Departmental Auditorium, Department of Labor, Twelfth and Constitution Avenue, Northwest.

Complaints received by the FEPC allege that the practices and policies under question fail to conform to the provisions of Executive Order 8802 as amended by Executive Order 9346, to the detriment of the prosecution of the war, the workers' morale and national unity. Most of the charges involves the question of discrimination against Negro workers. In some cases, workers of Mexican origin are involved. One or more of the several charges involves each railroad and union cited.

Exhaustive investigation by the FEPC has resulted in the compilation of a lengthy list of allegations involving agreements between railroads and unions whereby the effective utilization of available qualified manpower has been hampered because of discriminatory employment practices based on race.

Chief among the practices coming under scrutiny of the Committee is that of considering Negro railroad workers "non-promotables." This is alleged to have been done through the negotiation of agreements between union and railroad which set certain restrictions on the percentage of Negroes which may be employed in a stipulated category.

These agreements, togetther with enactment of union regulations limiting or barring non-white membership serves, it is charged, tend to reduce sharply the number of qualified Negroes employed by the railroads despite an increasing need for such labor.

Telephone Company Hires Girl Clerks in Baltimore Offices

JAN 2 3 1943

BALTIMORE.

Relaxing its heretofore iron-bound restrictive policy against hiring colored persons in white-collar jobs, the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company is now employing fifteen colored girls as clerks in several departments, it was learned this week.

The first few young women were hired two weeks ago, while the others began work Monday as mimeograph and blueprint clerks, and sorting and delivering mail in all departments throughout the company headquarters at 320 St. Paul Place. Others are still being hired.

Declared War Plant by FEPC

The President's Fair Employment Practice Committee recently officially declared the telephone company a war industry and subject to the President's order outlawing discrimination in employment.

The colored workers were obtained through the company's ninety-nine other colored employees, all of whom work in menial jobs.

The new employees are paid $16 a week during the training period and their hours are from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. JAN 2 3 1943

Several of the new employees interviewed by AFRO reporters stated that their working conditions so far were pleasant and that they were receiving utmost co-operation from their fellow workers. It was learned, however, that while the girls are not segregated in their work they are assigned to separate restrooms.

Manager Refuses to Bare Plans

When asked by an AFRO reporter whether the employment of these young women represent a step toward the hiring of colored switchboard operators, jobs for which the company advertises daily, William T. Bannerman, public relations manager, said:

"I can't say what we contemplate doing."

Mr. Bannerman admitted that the young women had been hired to work for the company, but said that he didn't know exactly what they were doing.

A Miss Mullins, personnel worker, sat in on the interview, but said that she preferred that all statements be made by Mr. Bannerman.

He added that the C. and P. monopoly has always hired colored people and will continue to do so. "When jobs are available that we feel that colored persons can do, we'll give them a chance," he said.

When the reporter again asked that Mr. Bannerman make some statement about the company's future plans for hiring switchboard operators, he said cryptically: "I have nothing further to add."

TWE Body Won't Comment JAN 2 3 1943

Officials of the Total War Employment Committee, when asked whether this latest move of the company represents "token employment," said that they were not in a position to comment since they do not know what further steps the company anticipates taking.

In a statement made public Thursday by A. J. Allen, Jr., and Mrs. Lillie M. Jackson, co-chairmen of the War Employment Committee, it was declared that "the poor service of the telephone company is largely due to a shortage of manpower caused by the necessities of war.

"Our committee feels that such conditions might be alleviated by removing the bars to employment because of race, creed, color or national origin.

"Our campaign to break down this un-American policy of the telephone company is, therefore, a step toward winning the war by ensuring that this important service to the government, to war industries and the public is maintained at its highest possible efficiency."

Ask FDR to Set FEPC Rail Hearings

FEB 1 2 1943

FEB 1 2 1943

(Special to the Daily Worker)

BIRMINGHAM, Feb. 11—A resolution petitioning President Roosevelt for an early re-scheduling of hearings on discrimination in the railroad industry, is being circulated by the Southern Negro Youth Congress among organizations for adoption.

The resolution also asks the President that the Fair Employment Practice Committee now under the jurisdiction of Manpower Commission chairman Paul V. McNutt, be "re-established on firm basis with adequate funds and sufficient au-authority to execute the provisions of Executive Order 8802."

Louis E. Burnham, organizational secrtary of the Congress, in sending out copies of the resolution to organizations of white and Negro members, wrote: FEB 1 2 1943

"The successful mobilization of all our manpower for production, and maintainance of a high morale among all groups in our population, depend largely on how effective we make our voices heard in this matter."

Graham Refuses F.E.P.C. Post

WASHINGTON.— (ANP) — Declaring he would not take the offer to head up the FEPC, as much as he would like to, Dr. Frank Graham, president of the University of North Carolina and noted liberal, told the Associated Negro Press Saturday conditions at the labor relations board did not warrent him making the change at present and he felt he could serve best just now by remaining at that post. FEB 1 7 1943

Pressed further for a statement regarding the changed attitude of many liberals toward the Negro as expressed through recent magazine and nation wide activities, Dr. Graham said he felt there was no recession in the opinions of liberals throughout the south.

"The minimum program for betterment of conditions among the whites and Negroes in the South is the repeal of the poll tax; equal pay for equal work; equitable opportunities for schools; equal facilities in public places; equal opportunity to work and fight for our common country."

Dr. Graham was taking part in a program sponsored by the Mutual radio chain and approved by the Office of War Information last Saturday in Washington.

War Dept. Aide Had Often Been Reported Ready to Quit Post

MacLean, FEPC Chairman, Said Headed for Navy Dept. Berth; Three FEPC Lawyers Quit

Dr. William H. Hastie, civilian aide to the Secretary of War, has resigned, effective at the end of this month.

Hardly had this announcement been made when came word from authoritative sources that Dr. Malcolm S. MacLean, chairman of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, had tendered his resignation to accept a post as a special advisor in the Navy Department.

Report of the MacLean resignation came close on the heels of the resignations of Henry Epstein, chief counsel of the FEPC and two of his aides, Dr. Charles Houston of Washington, and Harold Stevens of New York City, in protest against Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt's summary cancellation of hearings on railroad employment discrimination, which were to have been held here next week.

Previous Rumors Recalled

Although there had been numerous rumors during the past few months concerning an impending break of Dr. Hastie with the War Department, his positive scotching of all rumors allayed suspicion that he was not completely satisfied with the fight to integrate colored persons into all branches of the service and abolish discriminatory practices throughout the armed services.

DR. MALCOLM S. MacLEAN

DR. WILLIAM H. HASTIE

JAN 2 3 1943

Dr. Hastie gives no explanation for his sudden action, saying:

"I have no further amplifying statement to make until after my official duties have been terminated."

Judge Hastie accepted the War Department post in June, 1941, after obtaining a leave of absence from Howard University, where he was dean of the law school.

He was born in Knoxville, Tenn., in 1904 . He was graduated from Dunbar High School in Washington, D.C., later attending Amherst College, where he was a ranking student, winning the Phi Beta Kappa key.

Howard Graduate

He later earned his bachelor of laws degree at Harvard University, and earned his doctorate at the same institution, where he served as a member of the editorial staff of the Harvard Law Review.

JAN 2 3 1943

He joined the law firm of Houston and Houston in Washington, from which position he was appointed as a solicitor in the Department of Interior, which post held until 1939, when he resigned to become dean of Howard Law School.

In announcing his resignation from the War Department, Judge Hastie issued the following statement:

"In the past, replying to inquiries prompted by rumors and speculation, I have stated that, if and when I should leave the War Department, the press would receive direct and authoritative information. Accordingly the press is now advised that I have submitted my resignation as Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War, effective at the end of January, 1943.

JAN 2 3 1943

Lautier, Gibson Remain

"I have asked Mr. Louis Lautier, administrative assistant in this office, who has been dealing effectively with matters involving civilian personnel, to remain at his post. It is my belief that he can continue to contribute substantially to gains already represented by the placement and advancement of thousands of colored people and the satisfactory adjustment of many employee grievances.

"I have also asked Mr. Trumar K. Gibson, Jr., assistant civiliar aide, to remain at his post, at least through such transitional period as may be necessary to prevent discontinuity of effort in matters which have been undertaken by this office.

"I wish to state my sincere appreciation for the measure of friendly support and co-operation which my office has received from the press.

"I shall have no further or amplifying statement to make until after my official duties have terminated."

Queried concerning his reported resignation, Dr. MacLean told the AFRO on Tuesday:

"Any word concerning this matter will have to come from the secretary of the committee or from the public relations office at Hampton Institute.

"There probably won't be anything on this until Wednesday."

512 at Hampton

Dr. MacLean revealed that Hampton Institute is accepting a class of 128 apprentice seamer each month from the Great Lakes Naval Training Station in Illinois. Each sixteen weeks, he said, a class is graduated, so that at all times there are 512 men undergoing training at Hampton.

Members of the first graduating class, he said, have all been placed at various naval bases or at other tasks. "The training program," he said, "is an excellent one and going very well at this time. I am certain that it will count heavily in the long run."

A showdown on the future of the FEPC is expected when the committee meets on Friday to discuss Commissioner McNutt's action.

JAN 2 3 1943

At the time that he resigned as counsel, Dr. Houston said:

"It is important for colored Americans to realize the full significance of Paul V. McNutt's action in calling off the public hearings scheduled this month.

"Mr. McNutt di not take snap judgment. He never consulted the committee itself, nor asked the committee what evidence it had. Nevertheless, the question of calling off the hearings was thoroughly discussed elsewhere in government circles.

JAN 2 3 1943

Did White House Order It?

"Information available would seem to indicate that the order to call off the hearing came directly from the White House. No substitute plan in place of the hearings has been offered.

"Colored Americans should immediately protest to the President, to Mr. McNutt, to their Senators and Congressmen the calling off of the hearings, and particularly protest the method by which they were called off without any consultation with the committee beforehand.

"This is not the first time the committee has been so treated. One of the first reforms in government must be a change in policy so that when colored issues come up colored are consulted beforehand and given a chance to register their opinions rather than be kept ignorant until after the action has been taken.

Walter White Lays Gagging of FEPC to F. D. R.'s Secretary

JAN 2 3 1943

WASHINGTON

White House Secretary Marvin McIntyre is partly responsible for the Fair Employment Practice Committee's having to postpone public hearings on racial discrimination in the railroad industry, Walter White declared Thursday.

Mr. White, executive secretary of the NAACP accused McIntyre of "making decisions for the administration on racial issues" while "President Roosevelt is occupied with military problems."

"Self-Appointed President"

He pointed out that the question of the hearings set for January 25 in the capital must have been considered first at the White House, and charged McIntyre with withholding from the President vital information on the discrimination problem.

"McIntyre, of Kentucky, is making decisions with his own particular slant on the race issue," White declared. "In effect, he is setting himself up as self-appointed President of colored people."

Basis for Accusation

This accusation, White said, was based partly on the fact that all recent replies to communications to the White House on racial issues had been signed by McIntyre.

JAN 2 3 1943

While McIntyre refused to comment on White's statements, a White House source said that letters from the NAACP secretary always received the President's attention.

It was also pointed out that a large part of White House mail was signed by the secretaries, but this did not mean that the President was uninformed of the exchange.

Chief Counsel Quits

Meantime, Henry Epstein, chief counsel for the committee and former New York solicitor general, has resigned his post on the committee in protest against postponement of the hearings.

Mr. Epstein, in a letter to Dr. Malcolm S. McLean, chairman of the committee, said that he understood that the hearings scheduled for this month had been postponed indefinitely against the "expressed views of a majority of the committee."

In his letter of resignation, made public Tuesday night at his law offices, 30 Broad Street, Mr. Epstein said that indefinite postponement of the hearings was tantamount to cancellation and such action was a "challenge to democracy."

JAN 2 3 1943

Continuing, the letter said:

Predicts Loss of Prestige

"The sudden cancellation of the hearings without warning or opportunity for discussion by the President's committee is, in my judgment, an irreparable blow to our committee's prestige and must result in loss of public confidence in its effectiveness."

Stating that "evidence at hand presents a picture of grievous discriminatory practices against colored citizens in the railroad industry that cries out for public attention," Mr. Epstein said that "without such hearings, I seriously question whether any appropriate redress will ever be made possible.

JAN 2 3 1943

Assistant Secretary of the Navy Ralph Bard, who was reported to have opposed these hearings, is now understood to have said that the navy is not opposed if McNutt, War Manpower Commissioner, believes they will be helpful.

McNutt Called to White House for Parley

On Revising and Strengthening Committee

FEB 4 - 1943

By KENNETH G. CRAWFORD

PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4. – President Roosevelt yesterday instructed War Manpower Chief Paul V. McNutt to call a conference "to consider a revision and strengthening" of the Fair Employment Practice Committee (FEPC).

In announcing his decision to reconstitute the FEPC, the President praised its past performance in fighting discrimination against Negroes and other racial groups in war industries and said the new agency should be more effective.

He also suggested that hearings in the railroad case be resumed as soon as the new agency is set up: This case, involving the refusal of established unions to accept Negro workers, is considered a test of Government good faith in its anti-discrimination campaign.

FEB 4 - 1943

So the President's order seemed to be a complete victory for groups aroused by McNutt's recent order scuttling the FEPC. McNutt himself is understood to have recommended the conference plan now sponsored by the President.

The White House announcement said:

"The President announced that he had requested Mr. Paul V. McNutt, chairman of the War Manpower Commission, after consultations with the members of the Committee on Fair Employment Practice, to call a conference of leaders of those groups opposing discrimination in war employment to consider a revision and strengthening of the committee's scope and powers."

For nearly two years, the President said, "the Fair Employment Practice Committee and its executive director have done an excellent piece of work, placing workers in war jobs. They, however, have been handicapped by the fact that the members of the Committee were working on a part-time voluntary basis, and did not have powers or personnel commensurate with their responsibilities.

"The President said he considers it advisable, therefore, to review the situation, and that when the machinery has been established to meet the problem, the hearings in th railroad case and in any other cases which may have been temporarily postponed will be continued."

It is understood that an executive order creating a new five-man commission as a branch of McNutt's agency has been drawn up and will be submitted at the conference for the approval of interested groups. Under this plan, all members of the board would be full-time officials and the board would adopt rules of procedure similar to those followed by the National Labor Relations Board.

FEB 4 - 1943

Frank P. Graham, president of the University of North Carolina, now a member of the War Labor Board, has been suggested for chairmanship of the new commission. He is an outstanding progressive.

Daily Worker, N.Y., N.Y.

FEPC Victory

APPRECIATIVE applause greeted President Roosevelt's instructions to Manpower Commissioner McNutt to call a conference for revising and reinforcing the powers of the Fair Employment Practices Commission. It was well-deserved applause, in which both labor and Negro leaders joined.

FEB 6 - 1943

What the President has done is a logical development of the policy which Mr. Roosevelt has always followed. The capitulation of certain government agencies of late to the pressure of the poll-taxers and other backward-looking outfits has been definitely seen to be inimical to the vigorous conduct of the war. The insistence by the labor and progressive movements upon the full functioning of the FEPC has brought out the value which the government's stand against discrimination had already been to the nation's unity and hence to the gaining of victory.

The President's instructions can serve to steam up a renewed campaign against discrimination all along the line. The venom of Jim Crow, can be combatted with added vigor. The hearings in the railroad industry and in other vital sectors of the home front can be carried through, and the people will have to watch closely to see that such proves to be the case. In manpower mobilization also the reservoir of Negro labor can be drawn upon fully, to help the nation in its crisis and to right a shameful undemocratic wrong. Those conservative and ingrown AFL unions which have given the labor movement a black eye by their flagrant discrimination can be made to get into step with our democratic practices.

We look forward with hope to the quick and successful strengthening of the FEPC, for the good work it can do for America.

FDR Stand Assures Hearing on Railroad Job Discrimination

FEB 14 1943

ONE of the most important war acts of President Roosevelt last week was his statement pledging increased powers for the Fair Employment Practices Committee (FEPC).

The President had gone to Casablanca to cement the United Nations for the final assault on Nazism. Returning to America, he found the sabotage of the Fair Employment Practice Committee—and the result had been a break-through on an important home front.

FEB 14 1943

The anti-discrimination front is a vital one in the war against Nazism. That is why it was selected for attack. Here are some of the goals the attackers undoubtedly had in mind to result from thir effort to break the FEPC: Collapse of the railroad hearings, and of the whole program against discrimination in industry. Stemming from that, manpower shortage due to the exclusion of our Negro citizens from the war effort. (We on the railroads know how acute the manpower situation is in our own shops and yards.) Embitterment of the Negro people toward the war and the war effort, confusion, disunity, playing into the hands of Negro "isolationists" who have attempted to separate Negroes from their natural and obvious alliance with the forces of human progress, Negro and white, plus a breaking down of U. S. prestige with colonial peoples in Africa and Asia.

PART OF DEFEATIST STRATEGY

The attack on the FEPC was not an accident. It was not even Jim Crow as usual. It was part of a plan to spread disunity within America and between America and her allies. It was part of a grand campaign which among other features included bigger and better Dies Committees, anti-labor bills, low wages, skyrocket prices and a negotiated peace with the Nazis.

RAILROAD HEARINGS WILL BE HELD

But when President Roosevelt returned to Washington, he found this tatack being met by a storm of protest from all over the country. Letters, petitions, telegrams came into the White House. "Indefinite postponement" of the railroad hearings have served to mobilize the progressive forces all over the country. The FEPC, backed up by popular support, stood together, told McNutt they opposed the postponement and appealed the case to the President. It was in answer to this popular protest that the White House statement declared, "When the machinery has been established to meet the problem, the hearings in the railroad case and in any other cases which may have been temporarily postponed will be continued."

FEB 14 1943

That represents a victory. It means a long step toward throwing back those who sought to spread disunity by breaking down the anti-discrimination front.

President Roosevelt called on McNutt and the Fair Employment Practice Committee to arrange a conference, inviting representatives from all groups and organizations interested, to discuss the reconstitution of the FEPC. This airing of the situation suggested by the President is vitally necessary. What has been the matter with the FEPC up to date? How have its powers been inadequate? The conference must discuss these problems and work out a plan to solve them. On such a basis the FEPC can be given new life, with strengthened popular support behind it.

These are the issues before it. But, above all, the issue is one of popular support. The FEPC failures in the past have ben due to lack of unified mobilization of wider progressive forces behind it.

STOP, LOOK AND LISTEN therefore urges all groups and organizations to concentrate on the coming conference. Send delegates. Insist that the necessary steps be taken to revive the FEPC: an independent committee, not under control of the War Manpower Commission; appropriation of adequate funds, full time, paid members; a larger and more aggressive investigating staff; establishment of permanent regional bureaus; increased powers to enforce its decisions. Pledge your support to the President on his statement.

All this goes not only for rail workers. It goes for all Americans. Unless the FEPC succeeds in holdng the railroad hearings, it will never have a chance to hold hearings in your industry.

JAN 30 1943

It was with profound shock that I read about War Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt's action to suppress the hearings on anti-Negro discrimination in the railroad industry. Discrimination — the frank allegaton of superiority over one's fellowmen, and the denial of a man's right to work which is his birthright—is inseparable from the Fascist concept of of the "herrenvolk" and the Fascist policy of tyranny and human subjugation. By discouraging public action against those employers who violate the very things for which we are fighting, the War Manpower Commission undoes all that Americans have labored to achieve throughout their democratic history. It makes the war we are fighting a farce. It makes the lost lives of our young heroes a criminal waste.

Simultaneous with the news of the postponement of the F.E.P.C. hearings comes the report, by the New York State War Council Committee on Discrimination in Employment, that "in New York City, where Negroes form approximately 6.1 per cent of the population, they comprise 26 per cent of all unemployed persons." What recourse have Negroes, and members of all minority groups, if they can no longer look for aid to a committee appointed by the President of the United States for the safeguarding of their right to work and to live?

Representatives of railroad labor organizations are endeavoring to force abandonment of the public inquiry because, as they put it, it would cause "friction" among railroad workers. But on what basis have these organizations concluded that the American working man is prejudiced and bigoted, when, as a matter of fact, we have figures to prove the contrary? According to a questionnaire circulated by the National Urban League among white workers in a typical American city, only 3.1 per cent preferred not to work with Negroes. If, on the other hand, the assumption of the railroad brotherhoods is correct, then we have not yet learned how to work and to live in harmony. If the assumption of the railroad brotherhoods is correct, then who are we to teach Fascists the American way of life? If the assumption of the railroad brotherhoods is correct, then what is the American way of life?

Perhaps the time has come for us to ask for an explanation, in concrete terms, of what we are fighting for. Until yesterday, we thought that we were fighting truly for the ethnic democracy of which Vice - President Wallace spoke in his memorable address of November 8th, 1942. If that is not so, if we are at war merely to win a military victory over a foreign power without regard to correcting racial and religous injustices then we are fighting an imperialistic war. Then let us all lay down our arms and join the ranks of Hitler and Hirohito since they are the acknowledged champions of hatred tyranny and oppression. Let us tell our friends and neighbors that we are fighting an imperalistic war. But let us not tell the soldiers on our battlefronts. For our Army and Navy, unlike our business firms, include all kinds of men—black, white and yellow, Christ an and Jew.

It seems to me that, under the terms of the President's regulation, Chairman McNutt can have no alternative other than to carry out the expressed will of the American people for equal opportunity for all men, regardless of race, color or creed.

Citizens Protest Exclusion Policy To WMC FEPC

FEB 20

Pittsburgh Courier
Pittsburgh, PA.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Feb. 18—(ANP)—Negro citizens of Birmingham prepared for an all-out battle against discriminatory hiring practices in war industries as the Bechtel-McCone Parsons Airplane corporation announced extensive training plans for prospective workers in its $15,000,000 modification plant now under construction adjacent to the municipal airport.

A delegation representing the Negro Citizens Committee on Jobs and Training, reporting an interview with Kenneth Hawkins, manager of industrial training, and G. S. Hammill, personnel director of the corporation, stated that the results of their discussions were "unsatisfactory in the extreme."

Headed by Wilber H. Hollins, local president of the NAACP, the delegation includes James E. Jackson Jr., secretary of the committee, and Louis E. Burnham, organizational secretary of the Southern Negro Youth Congress. Hollins reported that the corporation gave no evidence of the intention of training and hiring Negroes and that the citizens committee has placed the matter before the regional office of the War Manpower commission in Atlanta and the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices.

USING WHITE PUBLIC SCHOOLS

FEB 20 1943

On the same day of the interview, Hawkins and Hammill issued an announcement to the press indicating that 2,500 Birmingham men and women will be trained by March 15. Approximately 1,500 workers have been inducted into the training courses already—but not one Negro. The corporation, which has its headquarters in California, will eventually hire 17,000 people in the Birmingham plant 60 per cent of them women who have had no previous industrial experience.

The corporation officials announced that the facilties of Paul Hayne, Phillips, Ensley, Woodlawn, Bessemer and Fairfield high schools—all white instutions—are to be used in the training program. Vernon Douglas, city director of the state vocational training system, is charged with the task of supplying the company with skilled personnel from these schools. They are expected to devote 48 hours a week for a period of four weeks to three months, depending on the skills in which they are being instructed. After training they are to be immediatley placed on production jobs as aircraft welders, assemblers, armament mechanics, sheet metal workers, and in many other capacities.

PLAN MASS MEETING

Hollins stated that in order to give the appearance of compliance with the provisions of Executive Order 8802 the corporation has been issuing applications to Negro jobseekers. "However," he declared, "these applications have been placed 'on ice' for to date not a single Negro has been assigned for training. The immediate job of our committee is to 'unfreeze' these applications of hundreds of Negro applicants so that this discriminatory trend may be nipped in the bud. We also feel that the time for War Manpower commission and the FEPC to act is now, rather than waiting until an all-white labor force has been recruited to bring charges of violation of federal policy."

The citizens Committee on Jobs and Training is preparing a mass meeting in order to bring the facts in the case before the attention of the entire Birmingham community.

Negroes 'Not Cultured' So They Can't Be Bus Drivers

"Pittsburgh Courier"
Pitts. Pa.

FEB 20 1943

WASHINGTON— Refusing to hire Negro bus drivers because "they do not have the years of cultural experience behind them" E. D. Merrill, president of the Capital Transit company, is continuing his "lily white" employment policy in defiance of an FEPC order.

While white women applying along with some 50 odd Negroes have already completed their training and gone to work, Merrill admitted to a delegation from the Committee on Jobs in Public Utilities that no colored men have been hired. His excuse was that applications had not been fully investigated as yet.

Merrill said, "White people have had generations and generations of experience in this sort of thing, especially the taking of fares from the public."

Mrs. Margaret Holmes, a member of the committee, pointed out that one of the colored applicants was a young man whose father owned a bus line and who had an unusually good record for careful driving. Merrill recalled his application and said that he was one of those who was still under investigation.

Merrill could not envisage any immediate large scale change in his employment policy, expressing the opinion that Negroes will have to be absorbed very gradually.

Charles H Houston Resigns As FEPC Special Counsel

JAN 29 1943

WASHINGTON, D. C. — In protest against the cancellation of the FEPC railroad hearings, Charles H. Houston has resigned his position as special counsel for the FEPC.

Houston was appointed by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice to serve as one of the three attorneys for FEPC in the investigation of discrimination against Negro railway workers.

The hearings, scheduled to be in January 25, were cancelled by Paul V. McNutt, chairman of the War Manpower Commission under which agency the former independent FEPC now operates.

In his letter of resignation written to Dr. Malcolm S. MacLean, chairman of the FEPC, (who has since resigned) Houston said: McNutt's action followed the traditional pattern of sacrificing the Negro whenever an attempt to do im justice antagonizes powerful eactionary forces in industry and abor."

JAN 29

"The railroad industry, the railroad unions and the government tself are afraid to permit these public hearings to be held because they know the charges of discrimination are true."

In connection with his resignation and the cancellation of the railroad hearings, Houston issued the following public statement:

"It is important for Negroes to realize the full significance of Paul V. McNutt's action in calling off the public hearings scheduled this month by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice regarding discriminations against Negro railway workers.

"Mr. McNutt did not take snap judgment. He never consulted the Committee itself, nor asked the Committee what evidence it had. Nevertheless the question of calling off the hearings was thoroughly discussed elsewhere in government circles.

"Information available would eem to indicate that the order to all off the hearing came directly from the White House. No substitute plan in place of the hearings has been offered.

The Government

JAN 29 1943

"In Washington the government does not proceed on a course with even keel, but tacks to one side or the other according to the dominant pressure at any given time.

"In 1941 the dominant pressure was "The March on Washington" and Executive Order No. 8802 was the result.

"Today, with the war going better for the United Nations, the reactionaries are getting up off their knees and asserting their influences. Right now there is a definite swing to the right in government. Reactionary Southerners and conservative Republicans are major influences in determining policy. The result in part is the action of Mr. McNutt calling off the public hearings.

"The railroads and the railroad unions were not the only people worried at the prospect of these public hearings. The government itself was worried because certain actions of the National Mediation Board and the National Railroad Adjustment board would have been seriously questioned.

"The National Mediation Board has been a party toward negotiating some agreements seriously restricting Negro employment and destroying Negro seniority rights on the railroads. The National Railroad Adjustment Board has been almost consistently anti-Negro.

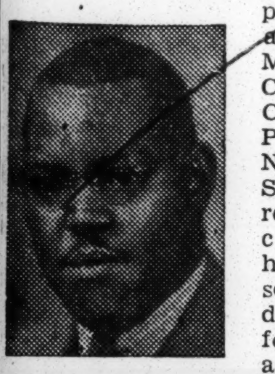
The Globe Trotter

By Cliff Mackay

Born July, '41; Killed Jan., '43



THERE IS NO point in fooling ourselves. That "indefinite postponement" announced by Manpower Commission Chairman Paul V. McNutt in the Southern railroad job discrimination hearings sounded the death knell for the only agency in the whole federal government, whose activities were directed toward making real to millions in America some of the things promised in the almost forgotten Atlantic Charter.

Born under the most intense pressure ever exerted by Negroes on the federal government, the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices, came to being on July 18, 1941, suffered a staggering blow after the "mistake" of trying to make democracy work in the South at the Birmingham hearings last June, then signed its own death warrant by announcing that the vicious campaign against Negro workers on Southern railroads would be investigated.

The execution date was Friday, January 8, 1943, when Mr. McNutt, under whose protecting (?) wing the FEPC had been placed, over the protest of committee members announced that the railroad hearings would not be held January 25 as had been scheduled.

JAN 24 1943

EIGHTEEN MONTHS' STRUGGLE

Eighteen turbulent months have come and gone since the FEPC came into existence. They were months marked by constant changes of personnel, persistent attacks on its work by those more interested in keeping Negroes "in their place" than winning the war, limited powers and still more limited budgets, and finally the complete destruction of what little potency the committee had boasted.

Behind the emasculation of the committee is a strong coalition of reactionary forces, aided and abetted by frightened administration stalwarts anxious to appease a hostile congress. The actions of both were based on faulty premises.

The reactionaries, whose growing power in Congress the administration fears, have the mistaken idea that the war can now be won without breaking a single link in the economic chain they have forged, not only around Negro and poor white workers in America, but with which they have exploited native workers in Africa, China, Burma, India and all the other world outposts where their industrial tentacles have extended.

FAILED TO LEARN

The New Dealers, apparently, did not observe well the fate that inevitably meets all attempts at appeasement. Certainly ample opportunity has been given them to do so, what with the records of Lord Chamberlain, the Cliveden Set, the Munich Pact and other prime examples of such recent date before them.

The very fact that both of these politically opposite groups can find common ground for unity when it comes to the question of justice for the Negro certainly bodes evil for the kind of world they would fashion and the unstable peace they would design after this conflict is over.

For say what you will, the supreme test of the sincerity of America's professed adherence to the doctrine of freedom for all peoples, lies in whether or not this freedom is willingly extended to the thirteen millions of color within her borders.

BLOW TO DEMOCRACY

No greater blow to the faith held by millions of oppressed peoples in America as world leader of universal liberty, could have been delivered than McNutt's postponement of the railroad hearings. For here was a case of economic injustice with roots extending all the way back to World War 1.

For the President's Committee to have stepped in and righted the great wrongs that are being perpetrated against a people solely on the grounds of color would have been a major victory against forces in America whose philosophy differs not one bit from those of this nation's enemies. It would have been a defeat for the Axis right here on the home front.

Both the Southern railroad operators and the big railroad brotherhoods knew that they could ill afford to have public light thrown onto the dirty, behind-the-scenes trickery and foul play they had resorted to in freezing Negro workers out of jobs they had traditionally held.

SEVENTEEN LOSE LIVES

They did not want the public to know that seventeen Negro train firemen have given their lives, not fighting the Axis, but in the bitter struggle with the unions which had conspired to seize these jobs for white members.

The eight railroad brotherhoods did not want to become a matter of public record the fact that they exclude Negroes from membership, both by constitutional clause and "white only" rituals. And the joker is that under the Railway Labor Act, amended in 1934 and 1936, these brotherhoods were empowered to act as sole bargaining agents for the very men, to whom they denied membership and for whose jobs they were plotting.

Neither the railroad operators nor the brotherhoods wanted made public the agreement signed on February 18, 1941, that signed the death knell to the future employment of Negro workers under the guise of a "non promotability" contract. The agreement is that the railroads will not hire any firemen who cannot be promoted to engineers, which simply adds up to the understanding that no more Negro firemen will be employed. A simple little Hitler-like trick, isn't it?

NONE HIRED SINCE 1929

The truth is not a single Negro fireman has been hired since 1929. Every time one quits or dies, his place is taken by a white man. Of course this wasn't true when the jobs were paying $60 a month. But the wages were put on par with other railroad workers during World War One and then the fight for these jobs began. During the quarter century interval it has been estimated that Negroes lost 100,000 jobs and approximately a billion dollars.

JAN 24 1943

This is the not so pretty kettle of fish based on fascist racial beliefs, which Mr. McNutt in knifing the FEPC sought to protect. It is the last-ditch effort of hostile forces to halt the onward march of democratic employment policies in American industry.

It is also the first indication of the fight we face to keep our hard-earned gains after the war. Its lesson is that we cannot depend upon whom we think are "good white folks," government or anybody else to keep the eternal vigilance in our behalf. That is our job; the determination to defeat those who would keep us chained must come from within ourselves.

The fight must be waged now with greater ferocity than ever before. Now is the time, not later, to remind and to keep constantly reminding an America, fighting to restore freedom to others, that we too, cherish liberty — and that we are determined to share in the peace, just as we are sharing without complaint in the terrific price of blood, sweat and tears that must be paid to achieve that peace.

Paul McNutt Is Disturbed Over Turn Of Events

Reorganization Of Entire Committee Now Necessary

JAN 24 1943

WASHINGTON — (SNS) — War Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt, who recently inherited the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee, appeared disturbed Saturday, because:

1. Three officials of the FEPC have resigned, making a reorganization necessary.

2. A protest was lodged by members of the FEPC against his "indefinite postponement" of hearings scheduled for next week to inquire into charges of discrimination against colored persons in the railroad industry.

3. A public complaint from Secretary Ickes' solid fuel office charges that a manpower shortage is hampering the war effort.

FEPC officials disclosed Saturday that three members of the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee — Chairman Malcolm MacLean, Hampton, Va., Mark Ethridge, Louisville, Ky., newspaper executive, and Colonel David Saranoff, New York, resigned making it necessary for McNutt to reorganize the committee. Maclean, president of Hampton Institute, has accepted a commission in the United States Navy.

JAN 24 1943

The FEPC originally set up by President Roosevelt as an independent, seven-man group to combat racial and religious discrimination, expressed "very strong feeling" that its hearings should be "rescheduled and held as soon as possible."

McNutt, who has said the postponement was ordered so the War Manpower Commission could take "full action" of an unspecified nature to end any discrimination found in the railroad industry, promised to give the recommendation "every consideration."

Failure to hold the hearings as scheduled has caused much concern among colored and white leaders. A mass meeting is scheduled to be held here today at Vermant Avenue Baptist church in direct protest to the recent ruling of McNutt in connection with the railroad hearings.

Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, had this to say:

"Because the decision which is now made will profoundly affect the course of things to come, we renew our request that the FEPC be restored to its completely independent status."

The Ickes' complaint was that, despite appeals to the W. M. C. since last summer, it has provided "little or no" help to five far Western states in getting at least 2,000 experienced miners to dig coal needed in the Northwest because of a fuel shortage. The complaint openly called upon McNutt for action.

JAN 24 1943

In regard to the railroad matter which involves hundreds of Negroes, A. Philip Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, declared:

"In view of the fact, Negro workers whose toil, sweat, tears and blood have laid the rails and crossties, shoveled tons of coal, fired the coal-burner engines and worked like slaves to build and maintain the railroads of the South, are now being kicked off their jobs and their seniority rights disregarded, the calling off of these FEPC hearings that were intended to investigate and put a stop to this racial discrimination, is shocking, amazing and disturbing to the Negro people of the country."

Since the issuance on June 25, 1941 of Executive Order No. 8802, forbidding discrimination in the employment of workers or in government because of race, creed, color or national origin, the FEPC has brought about the employment of thousands of Negroes in many industries hitherto closed to them.

Yet during this same hopeful period, competent and experienced Negro firemen have been steadily eased out of their jobs in open defiance of the President's order, and without regard to the consequent impairment of both war-essential rail service and interracial relations.

This ruthless dispossession of Negro workers from some of the best jobs they have ever had is being accomplished under the terms of an agreement entered into February 28, 1941 between the Southeastern Carriers Conference Committee and the all-white Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen. The latter is permitted to "represent" the Negro Firemen even though it does not admit Negroes to membership in the union.

This was a test case of far-reaching significance. Not only was it to be a show-down in the fight of over 2,000 Negro firemen to keep their jobs. It was to be a show-down for Executive Order No. 8802 and for the Committee itself which will have to fight for its life when the budget of the War Manpower Commission comes up for Congressional approval next March.

Many informed observers believe that a serious crisis in race relations impends if the present progressive trend in the unions, in industrial management and in the field of public opinion, is checked or reversed.

McNutt Hears FEPC Appeals; President Is Asked to Step In

"P. M. Daily"

Lawyers' Guild Charges Another Inquiry Was Squelched By State Dept.

JAN 15 1943

New York, N.Y.

The National Lawyers' Guild has called on President Roosevelt to re-create the Fair Employment Practices Committee (FEPC) as an independent agency with complete autonomy to investigate discrimination as its members see fit.

In a letter signed by Martin Popper, national executive secretary, the Guild submitted a double-barreled complaint to the White House to back up its plea for executive action.

¶ It protested against Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt's action suppressing the FEPC's probe of anti-Negro discrimination in the railroad industry, and asked FDR to countermand McNutt's order.

¶ It charged that on a previous occasion, when the FEPC was eager to investigate segregation and mistreatment of Mexican workers in the Southwest, "certain persons" in the State Dept. intervened and got the probe suppressed.

Guild Proposed Inquiry

The letter disclosed that the Guild proposed the Mexican inquiry "to combat Fascist propaganda in the Southwest" and that the FEPC was ready to go ahead, when word came from the State Dept. that the Mexican government was opposed to the investigation.

To refute this, the Guild sent FDR a copy of a letter from Ignacio Garcia Telles, Mexico's Secretary of Labor, expressing pleasure that the hearing was contemplated and pledging full co-operation.

"We immediately forwarded a copy of this communication to the State Dept., the FEPC, and the Co-Ordinator of Inter-American Affairs, believing this would dissipate any misunderstanding as to the position of the Mexican government," said the Guild.

Bad Situation Unchanged

"Nevertheless, these hearings never have been held and the situation in the Southwest remains as serious as it ever was.

JAN 15 1943

"We believe the pressures which were responsible for cancelling these hearings came from the same basic sources as those responsible for the present ruling to cancel the hearings in the railroad industry."

Attempting to identify "the basic sources of pressure," the Guild asserted:

"They are the advocates of the American version of Hitler's Aryan philosophy—the doctrine of 'white supremacy.' They are a few industrialists who care more about maintaining their profits under the system of discrimination than they do about a people's victory.

JAN 15 1943

"They are the political representatives whose powers are based upon the continuation of poll taxes, white primaries, lynch terror, and discrimination. They are the Dixons (Governor Dixon of Alabama) who refuse to produce for war rather than permit Negro citizens to participate in our war effort.

"They are the Martin Dies, the Eugene Coxes, and the filibustering Sen. Connallys who sabotage the will of the people. They are the representatives of these forces in the executive agencies of government who are stymying our production program and encouraging discrimination in the armed forces."

Groups Opposing WMC Ban on Railroad Probe Descend on Washington

PM's Bureau

JAN 15 1943

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt has agreed to meet today with representatives of groups opposing his ban on the Fair Employment Practices Committee's (FEPC) exposure of anti-Negro discrimination on the railroads.

Delegations were en route to this city from Detroit and New York to participate in the session with McNutt and to appeal for reconsideration of his action. The Manpower Commissioner's willingness to confer with these spokesmen stirred hopes in some quarters that he might be persuaded to reverse his decision.

McNutt has been under sharp fire from Negro, labor, and liberal groups throughout the week for ordering the FEPC to "postpone indefinitely" its hearings on Jim Crow in the railroad industry, as practiced by both railroad management and rail labor unions.

A new attack on McNutt's stand was issued last night by A. Philip Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters and nationally known Negro leader.

JAN 15 1943

In his first public declaration since the hearings suddenly were "postponed," Randolph called McNutt's move "the greatest blow to Negro morale that could be deliveral at this time."

Randolph declared:

"It is a threat to democracy and plays directly into the hands of the Axis powers. The Negro people will insist that there is no substitute that the White House or McNutt can think of that will take the place of these public hearings and the continued existence of the FEPC."

Randolph is the head of the March on Washington movement, an organization set up by anti-discrimination groups which intermittently have threatened to stage a protest procession to the Capitol. However, his statement made no reference to such pilgrimage.

JAN 15 1943

Labor resentment over scuttling of the railroad probe was reiterated yesterday by Walter P. Reuther, vice president of the United Auto Workers, CIO, in a sharply worded telegram to McNutt, demanding that the hearings be allowed to take place.

Sustained Protests Urged By League In FEPC Throttling

Officials Call For McNutt To Reconsider His Drastic Action

NEW YORK, N. Y.—(SNS)—The National Urban League this week urged its local branches and and Negro and white leaders throughout the country to continue "for many weeks" their protests against cancellation of the Fair Employment Practice Committee's hearings on racial discrimination in the railway industry. The League pointed out that Washington officials are more impressed by a steady stream of mail and telegrams written by protesting citizens than they are by a flood of correspondence that rises up at a given moment and then subsides.

The Leagues' advice followed action by its own Executive Board that was reported to President Roosevelt and the War Manpower Commissioner McNutt in letters signed by William H. Baldwin, President of the National Urban League. The letters protested postponement of the hearings and asked for immediate reconsideration.

JAN 24 1943

To President Roosevelt Mr. Baldwin wrote:

"Our Board has been increasingly disturbed over apparent trends toward immobilization of the Committee's authority. The decision to postpone the Washington hearings has shocked millions of Americans, and the disillusionment which they feel has, no doubt, been communicated to you by numbers of other groups.... The full participation of Negro manpower in an all-out war effort is so paramount an issue that it must retain a major claim on the attention of our national leaders."

To Mr. McNutt Baldwin declared:

JAN 24 1943

"The policies of railway managements and the railway brotherhoods which bar Negro workers from employment in an important transportation industry have long been a disgraceful blot on the nation's employment record. During this war crisis moreover, these policies have become a deterrent to effective prosecution of the war—not only in aggravating labor shortages, but also in impairing the morale and unity of our citizens. Members of our Executive Board have had a chance to observe the bitter disillusionment and cynicism which the War Manpower Commission's action has occasioned among our Negro citizens.

JAN 24 1943

The National Urban League's Executive Board is composed of outstanding white and colored citizens. The officers are William H. Baldwin, President; Hubert T. Delaney, Vice-President; Sadie T. M. Alexander, Secretary; Mrs. Alfred H. Schoekopf, Treasurer; and L. Hollingworth Wood, Chairman of the National Committee.

WAR PLANT PRACTICE ENDS

Inquiries into or Reports on Race, Creed or Color Are Barred

MAY 26 1943

Elimination of a private investigation" system through which war plants ascertained the race, creed or color of applicants for employment, despite the government's ban on such questions, was disclosed yesterday when Edward Lawson, acting examiner-in-charge of the New York regional office of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, announced results of an investigation concerning a number of agencies retained by some of the biggest war plants in this area.

At the request of the Committee on Fair Employment Practice, the Office of the Provost Marshal General has inserted in all war contracts held by the private investigation agencies in question a clause forbidding any inquiries into or report of the race, creed or color of any investigated person, except with the permission of the committee.

FEPC

FDR Fear Of Dixie Bloc In Congress Stymied FEP

JAN 23 1943

(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON — Fear of "big business" railroads and the Southern bloc in Congress were admitted as reasons for cancellation of FEPC hearings on railroad discrimination by a spokesman for Paul V. McNutt to a protest delegation of Negroes and whites last week.

The delegation, made up largely of Detroiters, met with McNutt and Fowler Harper, deputy director of the War Manpower Commission. Harper met the delegation first, and while subjected to a barrage of questions, sometimes heatedly, he "got along" with the group.

The tenor of the meeting changed, however, upon McNutt's entrance. Some of the members of the delegation accused McNutt of being "paternalistic and insulting" in his attitude. After a general statement, McNutt refused to discuss or divulge any reason behind his decision. Some members referred to the WMC head as "Adolph" McNutt.

The railroad hearings, which were to start next Monday, were called off by McNutt two weeks ago despite oppostion of committee members.

JAN 23 1943

"McNutt in Middle"

Harper, speaking for McNutt, declared: "He has felt that in the other cases you could get by with the FEPC method. In the Capital Transit case, you could get by with it. The balance which tried his judgment was a question in which the stakes were terrific—whether the program could go on or not.

"I need not remind you that the work and activity of the committee is under fire. McNutt is in the unenviable position of being in the middle. He is under fire by the groups he is trying to help and those who are not in sympathy with those efforts."

JAN 23 1943

Sheldon Tappes, representing the ..d Local 600 of U.A.W. in Detroit, ..id Harper: "You have the nerve to tell this body that the southern railroads are so powerful they can defy the government. I don't believe that. I have been informed that the chief of the nation in times of war has certain executive powers and authority. And I know this President's committee's directives can be carried to the White House and the President can see that they are carried out. He has the army and navy to see to it. I can't conceive of a union defying the government, nor a corporation doing it. I know the government has the right to take them over."

JAN 23 1943

McNutt Explains

McNutt, when he finally arrived to see the group, told them he was interested in results. That this problem had taken a great deal of his time, probably more than any other. He said he felt his method was best and that "you are going to have to trust my judgment on that." He expressed his interest in minority groups and his desire that they have their place in the sun. "For that I will fight as long as I live—and I am fighting," he declared.

He urged the group not to tie his hands, or to make it impossible for him to do what he wants to do for them.

Referring to charges that he had political ambitions, he declared that he had had a good many things in his life. What happens to him, he said, is not important, but what happens to all of us is vitally important.

"I have undertaken a job which I know is political suicide. I know I cannot please all the people. My job is to help win the war," he declared.

"Not Passing Buck"

McNutt expressed the opinion that the committee would not be destroyed by this action. He stated further, however, that out of present discussions "will come something that will be completely satisfactory to all concerned."

He refused, however, to discuss any of the background of his decision to postpone the hearings. He told the group: "I felt it unwise, and therefore decided they should not be held at this time. I do not care to go further." He did add, however, "I have never passed the buck at any time in my life, and I am not now."

James Carey, secretary of the C.I.O., and Hoyt Haddock of the C.I.O. Maritime committee and a member of the C.I.O. legislative body, both voiced a warning that the C.I.O. may withdraw from the FEPC as a result of McNutt's decision to cancel the hearings. Carey told Harper: "The question that strikes us as of prime importance is: Does the head of the commission act without the consultation and approval of the representatives of the Fair Employment Practice committee?"

JAN 23 1943

Can't Sit By

"We can't sit by and let such action pass," he declared. "Phillip Murray, president of the CIO, is a member of that committee, represented by John Brophy. We cannot permit his name to be connected with it if that is the way the committee is to act. Governor McNutt should provide us with the answer."

Haddock told McNutt: "They (the CIO officials) have said that unless the FEPC is permitted to proceed with these hearings that they will seek to disband the FEPC. They will tell you that later."

Most of the speakers for the delegation urged McNutt to take them into his confidence. Rev. Horace White, pastor of the Plymouth Congregational church in Detroit, a former state legislator, and leader of the delegations which came to Washington during the Sojourner Truth housing debacle, told McNutt he felt the group had been treated "a little like children."

He added: "At a time when we need confidence, you refuse it to us. Democracy is built up on confidence — the policy of letting the people know what is happening. We need confidence, and you are denying it to us."

JAN 23 1943

Challenged

McNutt's attitude was most effectively challenged by Natalie Moorman of Washington, representing the minorities workship. She told McNutt that she questioned his sincerity, that she resented his paternalistic attitude, and questioned his wisdom. She declared that she insisted that McNutt and Congress and all the rest remember "that my brother is in camp today, getting ready to give his life because we believe there is a government for the people and by the people. And if we are going to work on Hitler plans, it ought to be made clear."

McNutt made no response. One could have heard a pin drop while Miss Moorman was speaking.

Later, McNutt threatened the group by stating: "You can throw a friend out of your ranks if you want to."

JAN 23 1943

McNutt refused to commit himself on whether the Detroit hearings would be held or whether they, too, would be cancelled at the last minute. He stated that the hearings in Detroit have never been officially scheduled, although there was an announcement that hearings would be held. The question has not come up, he said.

Bard Stand

Horace Sheffield, international representative of the UAW-CIO, who earlier in the day had attended a conference with Assistant Secretary of Navy Ralph Bard, advised McNutt that Bard had stated his letter sent to the WMC requesting cancellation of the Detroit hearings was but a memorandum, and he thought possibly someone was looking for an out.

The delegation's conference with McNutt adjourned when Rev. Charles Hill, chairman of the Citizens Committee of Detroit, who was spokesman for the group, began to express gratefulness to McNutt for the conference. Several of the group, particularly Miss Moorman, openly announced that they would not be parties to expressing thanks after his "paternalistic and insulting" reception.

JAN 23 1943

Among the organizations represented in the delegation were the Citizens Committee of Detroit; the United Auto Workers, CIO; United Transport Service Employes Association; Detroit Council of Churches, Willow Run local of UAW, Ford local of UAW, Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority, Federation of Churches, NAACP of Detroit, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Washington; The Michigan Chronicle newspaper; the Socialist Party of Michigan, Jewish Community Council, East Side Merchants Association, Lewis Business college, all of Detroit; Minorities Work Shop of D. C.; Conant Gardens Political Association; United Office and Professional Workers; Detroit Urban League; National Maritime Union of New York; Negro Labor Victory Committee of New York; CIO Maritime Committee; and the CIO itself.

Forty-one persons were in the delegation. Twenty-eight of them were from Detroit, where the next hearings of the FEPC are supposed to be held, but probably won't.

OHIO PLANT REMOVES BAN ON NEGROES

Stacey Corp. To Employ Workers Regardless Of Race Or Color

JAN 23 1943

By FLOYD G. SNELSON

COLUMBUS, Ohio—Negro workers throughout the Columbus area hailed with joy the announcement this week by the International Stacy Corp., manufacturers of war materials hiring 10,000 employees, that the firm in future, will employ skilled workers, regardless of race or color.

The corporation's training school has been opened to all who show aptitude and a great number of colored workers have already enrolled. Also, negotiations are reported under way to set up a local chapter of the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee.

Local labor leaders have made several attempts to have Negro workers hired by the scores of defense plants of the Columbus area, and a recent survey shows that in many firms, Negroes have been limited to the usual "run-of-the-mill" jobs.

JAN 23 1943

Informed sources also state that colored women are being discriminated against in the program to enlist woman-power in the various war industries and in public utilities. These sources report that the Curtis-Wright Aeronautical Plant, with more than 20,0000 employees, has less than three per cent Negro workers, although their trainee department is said to have enrolled nine per cent colored student-workers, and this number may soon show a sharp increase.

JAN 23 1943

An exceptional case cited is that of the Jeffery Manufacturing company producers of mining machinery, and now engaged making naval ordnance, where 90 per cent of the foundry laborers are Negroes. R. K. Jeffery, president of the firm, and a man who believes in rewarding merit wherever found, has a capable Negro secretary, Harry Alexander, who has worked for Mr. Jeffery for more than 30 years. The company also employs many other Negroes in responsible positions.

It is also reported that here, as in many other sections of the country, labor unions are stopping their discriminatory practices and admitting Negroes to membership.

Still another outstanding Columbus company whose officials are proud of the work being done by the colored workers, both skilled and unskilled, is the Buckeye Steel Castings company. At this plant more than 60 per cent of the total number of employees are Negroes.

Capital Transit Case Postponed

JUN 12 1943

(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Hearing of the Capital Transit Co., labor dispute, several times delayed in the past, was this week again postponed by Msgr. Francis J. Haas, newly appointed chairman of the Fair Employment Practices Committee.

Msgr. Haas made the announcement the day previous to the time set for hearing of the case, and explained that his action was prompted by advice he had received from certain members of the old committee. He announced further, however, that FEPC would retain jurisdiction over the case and would "use all the powers conferred upon it to effectuate the provisions of Executive Order 8802, as amended."

Members Seen Quitting Because He Balked Jim Crow Expose

"PM" 1/12/43

By JAMES A. WECHSLER

PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—A showdown over the future of the Fair Employment Practice Committee (FEPC) appeared imminent today as Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt officially announced that the Committee's hearings on anti-Negro discrimination in the railroad industry had been "indefinitely postponed." (See Page 22 for editorial.)

With its most important exposure sidetracked by McNutt's last-minute intervention, the FEPC was reported headed for oblivion and the whole drive against Jim Crow in war industry reached a sudden crisis.

While members of the FEPC refused to discuss the issue publicly, pending a formal meeting, they were understood to be virtually unanimous in regarding McNutt's move as a challenge to the Committee's existence. Efforts to arrange a session of the FEPC to weigh joint steps were being made. At least one member said privately that he favored a direct appeal to President Roosevelt, while others talked of prompt resignations unless the order was rescinded.

"PM" 1/12/43

Vague on Reasons

McNutt confirmed PM's disclosure, that the hearings had been called off, at his press conference yesterday. Asked whether it was true that the projected attack on the "lily white" union-management coalition on the railroads had been called off, he picked up a prepared statement and read it off. The statement said:

"The Manpower Commission felt that postponement of these hearings would permit more intensive activity by the Commission to insure full utilization of manpower on the railroads."

A reporter asked whether McNutt could explain the reasons for the sudden pigeonholing of the Committee's findings. He replied:

New York, N. Y.

"We felt that if we could take care of the situation this way it would be better. If we can accomplish our purpose in other ways, that's better than by force."

Pressed to explain what "other ways" were being contemplated, the Manpower Chief declined to elaborate. He conceded that the FEPC had not "recommended" abandonment of the hearings, but denied that members of the Committee had opposed the move. A Committee member said later this was technically accurate, because the FEPC had not been given a formal chance to vote on the "postponement."

Action Ends Case

"PM" 1/12/43

Reached by telephone in Chicago, Milton P. Webster, Negro member of the FEPC and official of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, declared:

"Mr. McNutt's statement that no members of the Committee protested his decision is true—because we never were informed that the action was being taken.

"At the last meeting of the FEPC, final plans for conducting the hearings were made and there was no indication of any opposition."

After McNutt had emphasized the Manpower Commission's belief that railroad discrimination could be dealt with through other methods, a reporter suggested that the same argument could be used to cancel all FEPC investigations. McNutt said:

"Not necessarily."

When another correspondent pointed out that the Commission's action was "belated" in view of the fact that the railroad case had been fully documented and witnesses prepared, McNutt said he didn't think so.

McNutt's comments shattered any doubt that the "postponement" was—in effect—the end of the case which Negro groups and other anti-discrimination organizations had hailed as the "key test" of the FEPC's power. The FEPC is a unit of the War Manpower Commission.

The hearings were slated to get under way on Jan. 26, with Henry Epstein, former Solicitor General of New York State, presiding. Jubilant over the impending drive against one of the major citadels of Jim Crow in American industry, liberal and Negro groups had arranged a mass meeting here for Jan. 24 to mark the event.

Elections Responsible

With the railroad exposure—which would have hit both management and unions in the industry—out of the way, there were other indications that the Administration was reconciled to the collapse of the FEPC and was studying different methods for combating racial discrimination.

It was learned that FEPC also had been "asked" to abandon hearings on discrimination in Detroit, advertised to begin early next month.

Some observers suggested that the outcome of the recent Congressional elections had paved the way for the FEPC's decline. What men or measures could take its place is not immediately apparent. In his budget message yesterday, President Roosevelt reiterated his demand for "elimination of restrictions based on sex, creed, or race." The FEPC has carried almost the whole load of the anti-discrimination fight since Pearl Harbor, with limited authority and less money.

Strong protests from organizations committed to the battle for equal rights in war work are anticipated here. Fear is being widely expressed that the scuttling of the railroad hearings will create a wave of resentment among Negroes. If any steps are contemplated to ease this unrest, they are not evident so far.

FEPC to McNutt: 'Reopen Hearings'

JAN 23 1943

By Adam Lapin
(Daily Worker Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—The President's Fair Employment Practices Committee today put before War Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt its protest against his action in calling off hearings on anti-Negro discrimination in the railroad industry.

By unanimous vote the FEPC decided to inform McNutt of "its very strong feeling that the railroad hearings which were postponed last week should be rescheduled and held as soon as possible."

After taking this vote, the FEPC met with McNutt who had gone over the head of the anti-discrimination agency to call off the hearings.

JAN 23 1943

RECEIVE ASSURANCE

According to an official announcement of the War Manpower Commission, FEPC "had a satisfactory conference with Chairman McNutt and received assurance that every consideration would be given to its recommendations."

It is understood that McNutt has been strongly affected by the tremendous popular pressure from labor and Negro organizations against his action in calling off the hearings, and may now be induced to reconsider his decision.

Observers here believed that the final decision on the railroad hearings as well as on the whole future status of FEPC may now be up to the President.

The FEPC is thinking of asking for a meeting with the President and it is hoped that labor and Negro organizations will ask the President to strengthen the hand of FEPC and make it possible for the railroad hearings to be rescheduled.

MORE PRESSURE NEEDED

The impression in informed circles here is that some headway has been made as a result of the campaign to save FEPC—but that the crisis in the agency caused by the calling off of the railroad hearings is by no means over.

Continued support for the FEPC will be needed if it is to have maximum effectiveness in combatting discrimination against Negroes and other minorities in war industry.

A relatively optimistic note was struck by the FEPC in the official announcement put out by the War Manpower Commission. It expressed the opinion "that the policy set forth in Executive Order 8802 continues to be the policy of the administration and will be vigorously enforced.

Daily Worker

"Mr. McNutt assured the committee that the postponement of the railroad hearings did not imply that other hearings would be postponed," the announcement said. "He emphasized that the War Manpower Commission through hearings, negotiations and all other appropriate means, would work toward bringing discriminations to a permanent end."

JAN 23 1943

McNUTT STATEMENT

McNutt himself issued this rather vague formal statement:

"Discrimination constitutes a waste of manpower. It is, therefore, important to the war effort that it be ended."

Re-scheduling of the railroad hearings is considered the first and decisive steps in putting FEPC back on its feet as an effective instrument in the fight against discrimination.

Daily Worker, N. Y.

FEPC, however, faces a number of other important problems. Among them are several resignations including Chairman Malcolm McLean and of David Sarnoff, one of its members. Acting chairman Mark Etheridge is also expected to resign.

Dr. Frank Graham, President of the University of North Carolina and a member of the War Labor Board is being considered as the new chairman of FEPC.

Another problem is a plan for reorganizing FEPC which is under consideration by McNutt and other Administration officials.

According to this plan, FEPC would become a formal board consisting of full-time Government employees instead of as at present a committee which includes leaders of the CIO, AFL and other groups.

The danger in this plan is that it might further destroy the independence of FEPC which is already in jeopardy as the result of its transfer to the War Manpower Commission.

FEPC Resumes Investigations

Washington—The president's Fair Employment Practice Committee decided Monday to "resume vigorous action" in investigating complaints that war industries have discriminated against Negroes in hiring workers, acting chairman Earl B. Dickerson reported.

The committee scheduled a hearing for Detroit on May 24 and 25.

APR 22 1943

The FEPC action was seen significant of the comeback of the committee which was considered virtually doomed by Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt's cancellation of the railroad hearings some weeks ago.

FEPC PROBES KAISER'S FIRING OF 150 NEGROES

Courier
Pittsburgh Pa.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 29—Moved to swift and possibly decisive action by the firing of more than 150 Negro workers at the Kaiser shipyards in Vancouver—on orders of the Boilermakers' union—the Fair Employment Practices Committee, following receipt of a flood of protests, has rushed two representatives to the scene to ascertain the facts and submit recommendations.

Taking advantage of the amended executive order, permitting outside aid, the FEPC has drafted the services of Judge James H. Wolfe, chief justice of the Utah Supreme Court, who has been advised to team up with Daniel Donovan, an FEPC field examiner in Los Angeles.

REFUSED TO JOIN JIM CROW LOCAL

The mass layoffs took place after the Negroes had reportedly repeated their determination never to pay dues or initiation fees to the jim crow auxiliary union created by Boilermakers' Local 72, of Portland, Ore.

At an emergency meeting July 14, the Shipyard Negro Organization for Victory voted to send its president, Julius Rodriquez, and the Rev. J. J. Clow, president of the Portland Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to New York and here, Washington, D. C., to place the case before the FEPC and the National NAACP.

Basis of the current dispute goes back to 1942 when Henry J. Kaiser, ship-a-week builder in Oregon, went to New Yorkand asked for 20,000 men for his yards, after which he received a heavy response from Negroes, [illegible] eventually, were victimized [illegible] the closed shop contract Kaiser holds with the Boilermakers' union. Stormy petrel in the dispute has been Tom Ray, avowed Negro hater, who has been an outspoken objector to Negroes in the union and in the yard. He is president of Boilermakers' Local Union 72.

Upgrading, Use Of Women--Not Exclusion--Problem In Detroit

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.

WASHINGTON, April 8 (ANP)—The employment problem in the Detroit area is primarily one of discrimination against Negroes in upgrading and in the inclusion of Negro women rather than an outright policy of exclusion. Broadly speaking, this is the substance of the report which G. James Fleming, examiner in charge of investigations in that area for FEPC, made last week to Lawrence W. Cramer, executive director, while on a short visit here.

For three months Fleming has headed a mixed staff of five investigators in that area pouring over complaints of individuals and organizations claiming assorted discriminations against various firms holding large war contracts. In their attempts to adjust and settle these complaints they have been aided by representatives of the War Manpower Commission War and Navy departments.

DISTURBING FACTS

Perhaps one of the most disturbing things to develop in this three month period, according to Fleming, was the six "work stoppages" which occurred because of the introduction or upgrading of Negro workers into certain plants. In one instance the stoppages were initiated and participated in by 100 Negroes at the Chrysler Corporation plant who objected to putting all Negro women in as janitresses, and showing a reluctance to upgrade.

At U. S. Rubber 2,300 white women walked out because Negro women were brought in. Fleming felt that the presence of employee counselors [illegible] would have avoided this situation. The air is still tense, however, although work has been resumed.

At Packard Motor Car company there was suspicion of a sebversive movement inspired by an element similar to the Ku Klux Klan.

SIMILAR HAPPENINGS

Other plants which had stoppages were Duplex Printing Company at Battle Creek, Vickers, Inc., and the Detroit Aluminum and Brass company. All were satisfactorily adjusted, according to Fleming, without retreating. It is his opinion that while the top men of the United Auto Workers of America, a CIO organization, have consistently branded these stoppages as "wildcat" strikes, and have been insisting that non-discrimination is the thing, this thinking has not yet altered to any real degree the attitudes of the individuals who make up the rank and file.

"Detroit is faced with the problem of finding sufficient men to do laboring work," stated Fleming. "Wherever it has been possible, Negroes have been taken in at this level and 'frozen.'

FORD INDUSTRY LIBERAL

There was no doubt that the Ford Motor Company is "screening" the Negro women applicants for work out at the Willow Run bomber plant, or that upgrading is slow. Ford does, however, employ approximately 14,000 Negroes. At Willow Run, of the 36,000 now working, 70 per cent are women of which from 150 to 200 are Negroes.

There is practically no unemployment in Detroit and environs, Fleming pointed out. With the drain on white women having grown rapidly, the reservoir of 32,000 Negro housewives will have to be tapped soon if production is to be stepped up appreciably, unless more workers from the south and west are to be imported.

REVEALING FIGURES

These statistics were made available with regard to complaints handled: 256 persons had complaints against 196 war industries and agencies. There were 158 individual complaints by Negroes; 61 by aliens, and 5 by Jews.

Detroit now employs about 1,100 Negroes in the operating division of the transportation system, Fleming commented. There are about 250 women collecting fares.

Father Haas Asks Labor Leaders To Stop Passing 'The Racial Buck'

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 5—As a number of cases in which Negroes complain of being barred from American Federation of Labor unions were scheduled for hearing before the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, Msgr. Francis J. Haas, the committee's chairman, appealed to the AFL to end racial discrimination. Writing for a forthcoming issue of the American Federationist, official organ of the AFL, Father Haas, prominent Roman Catholic prelate and veteran labor conciliator, accused labor leaders of "endless explanations, excuses and justification of discrimination because of race."

UNION LEADERS PASS THE BUCK

In a forthright article, which apparently has editorial approval, Msgr. Haas declared:

"In most cases union leaders 'pass the racial buck' to their membership which, they insist, 'will not stand for Negroes.'

"However this may be, the clear duty of leaders is to lead," he insists, "and in the present case their duty is crystal clear."

On the other hand, the FEPC chairman points to progress on the racial labor front.

"It should not be passed over that. during all the rioting in Detroit, black and white workers continued working in most of the plants without friction; in several instances white workers escorted Negro workers home and protected them from the mob."

AFL NOT ALONE

He also points out that not all unions which bar Negroes and other minority group workers are in the AFL by any means, and neither do all locals follow whatever may be the policies of their international bodies.

On the other hand, he warns that elemental self-interest points in but one direction.

"There are still several major international labor unions which close their doors to Negroes as members, by constitutional, ritual, or tradition and there are hundreds of locals which follow suit," he says.

Msgr. Haas praised both the AFL and the CIO for establishing interracial action committees to develop good will.

ST. LOUIS APPROVES PLAN

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 5—Mayor William D. Becker indicated today that he approved a CIO industrial union plan to prevent race riots in this city.

The CIO proposes that a citizens' committee be organized to investigate employment, housing, transportation, health and recreation facilities.

FEPC Denies Qualified Negroes Were Not Hired

Washington, D. C. Washington Tribune

The following announcement was made by Msgr. Francis J. Haas, chairman of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices Tuesday.

"The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice on July 13, received from its New York office a report that the United Fruit Company had failed to hire qualified Negro Maritime officers who had presented themselves for employment. These allegations have been investigated and have been dismissed for lack of merit.

"The report concerning the United Fruit Company as presented to the New York office, asserted that the company had requested a full crew and that, when qualified Negro officers applied the company had refused to accept them. This was found to be without any foundation in fact. No request for a crew was made by the company. Investigation revealed that a suggestion was made that Negro officers, not specified as to persons or qualifications, be hired by the United Fruit Company. Upon report of the full facts to responsible officers of the company, a readiness by the company to employ qualified Negro officers was expressed.

"In the course of its investigation of this case, the committee found that about 25 Negro officers are presently serving in the Merchant Marine and that the total number of qualified Negro officers, including the 25 afloat, is less than 50. Due to the shortening of training time for officers from 36 to 18 months, more qualifying Negro officers are becoming available. The committee found that the United Fruit Company has employed unlicensed personnel without regard to color. With respect to the licensed personnel, the committee has received assurances from the United Fruit Company that any qualified officer meeting the requirements of the War Shipping Administration will be employed without regard to race, color, creed or national origin."

Push Wide Campaign For Permanent FEPC

Defender
Chicago, Ill.

(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON — Representatives of 18 labor and civic organizations in two-day conference perfected plans this week designed to convert the President's Fair Employment Practice committee, from a "duration" to a permanent government agency with increased scope and power.

Under chairmanship of A. Philip Randolph, director of the March on Washington movement and the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, the delegates joined by 100 colored and white leaders set up an organization to be known tentatively as National Council for Permanent FEPC.

A ten-member inter-racial executive council has been named to further perfect organization and the program of action. An immediate step is introduction into both houses of Congress, a bill "to prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, creed, color, or origin." This bill already prepared in detail by a nationally known attorney who volunteered his services was read to the conference and approved by vote.

Propose 'Court'

The bill, to be introduced immediately by a sympathetic senator and representative, provides for conversion of the present FEPC into a "Court of Fair Employment Practices" to consist of a presiding judge and six associate judges, to be appointed by the President with Senate approval for a term of seven years. Provision is made for re-appointment or replacement of one judge each year. The court, whose member judges shall receive $10,000 a year, shall report in full to Congress at close of each fiscal year.

The proposed court would be empowered to issue federal orders correcting discriminatory employment practices where they have been proved to exist after proper investigation and hearing. It would also be empowered to subpeona required witnesses, and to petition U. S. Circuit Courts of Appeal for enforcement. The court's greatest control, however, would be its power to withhold government contracts from all firms violating the spirit or letter of the non-discriminatory law.

Meanwhile, the National Council for Permanent FEPC has drawn up a tentative constitution and set itself the ambitious budget of $25,000 a year, believing that the organization must have capable adequately paid personnel to direct what doubtless will be a hard and bitter fight. Membership is open to all interested individuals and responsible organizations.

Probe Ship Yards

The executive council as selected in conference is: A. Philip Randolph of Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, Winifred Raushenbush of American Civil Liberties union, Thurman Dodson of March on Washington, Sam Barron of Textile Workers, Thomasina Johnson of A.K.A., Lena Brissette of Catholic Welfare council, Monroe Sweetland of CIO, Committee on Discrimination, Judge W. C. Hueston of Elks, Nat Mancoff of International Ladies Garment Workers and H. A. Dawson.

With the hearing into the railroad complaints over, the FEP is leaving its special counsel staff to mull over the testimony while it turns its attention to the promised hearing on the west coast into the complaints involving the payment of dues by Negro shipyard employes into an auxiliary unit of the boilermakers union, AFL affiliate.

While no date has been announced, it is understood that the committee has agreed to hold the hearings about the middle of November. About two days are expected to be spent in the Portland, Ore., region, and one day in Los Angeles area, with a brief break in between.

Union Main Offender

As it did in the case of the railroads, the FEPC is employing outside counsel who along with its own staff of examiners will get the complaints and procedures into shape. The man who will head this staff, said to be an able lawyer, has not been publicly named yet although it is understood that the committee's invitation to him has been accepted.

In keeping with the committee's policy, the companies involved in the complaints have not been named. The union, however, is considered the primary offender with the companies, about four, looked to as willing accessories.

It is through the operation of a closed shop agreement between the boilermakers and the companies that the firing of a large number of Negroes came about in July. The Negroes were organized into jim-crow auxiliaries of the union because the boilermakers' constitution does not permit other than whites to hold membership.

By being set up in this separate unit, the Negroes complained that they were being discriminated against in that they have not been permitted to participate in the affairs of the union although they are required to pay dues. In hearing the evidence in these cases, the FEPC will be testing that section of the executive order defining restrictive membership clauses of labor unions as an act of discrimination.

Haas to Leave FEPC Today

PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18.—Bishop Francis J. Haas will take leave of the FEPC (Fair Employment Practice Committee) at today's meeting just six months after he accepted the job of reorganizing the Committee and renewing the drive to end discrimination in war plants.

Hass, who recently was named Bishop of Grand Rapids, will be succeeded at the FEPC by his assistant, Malcolm Ross. Ross is expected to be sworn in tomorrow.

FEPC To Get Complaints Of Navy Yard Workers

OCT 14 1943

Daily World
Atlanta, Georgia

BROOKLYN —(A N P)— After listening to a series of complaints lodged by employees of the Brooklyn navy yard on discrimination a committee of workers was formed to call upon the United Federal Workers of America, foremost navy yard union, for assistance. The charges were voiced in a meeting called jointly by the Brooklyn Urban League, the National Negro congress, and the Brooklyn council.

Chief greivances were that officials of the yards refuse to upgrade Negro workers, and segregate and force them to labor under unequal working conditions. Formal complaints will be filed with the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices against the yards.

Samuel Risk, a local FEPC examiner, was introduced by Lorenza F. Davis, industrial secretary, Brooklyn Urban League, and Edward Strong, executive secretary, National Negro congress, co-chairmen, and advised the complaining workers how to prepare and file complaints. He promised protection of the workers from reprisals and pointed to the security with which Negro workers testifying in Washington against the railroads enjoyed.

Civic, fraternal and labor groups have indicated an interest in the Brooklyn Navy situation and promise further support to the workers. Among these organizations represented at the meeting were the Central YWCA, New York State Conference of Negro Youth, and the NAACP.

Seek Quick Action On FEPC Head

Philadelphia Tribune
Philadelphia, Pa.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The resignation of Bishop Francis J. Haas from the chairmanship of the PEFC is seen as a serious setback for the Committee.

President Roosevelt is being urged to fill the vacancy without delay, if the Committees' effectiveness is not to be diminished.

"The great harm done" in the interval between Dr. Malcoln McLean's resignation and Bishop (then Fr.) Haas's appointment was cited by the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties in a letter to the President.

In addition, two of the employer members, it is said, may also resign. One, Samuel Zemurray of the United Fruit Company, is slated to join the Office of Foreign Economic Administration. The other, P. B. Young, Sr., publisher of the Norfolk Journal and Guide, is said to be not in the best health.

Washington Post
Washington, D. C.

President Roosevelt's prompt appointment of a new chairman to his Fair Employment Practice Committee should afford encouragement and reassurance to all minority groups. Plainly, he intends that the committee shall move ahead with its program of exposing and eradicating discriminatory employment practices. It is of first caliber importance that it do so. For wherever these exist they constitute a barrier to the full utilization of our manpower and a stain upon our democratic pretensions.

The selection of Malcolm Ross to succeed Monsignor Francis J. Haas at the helm of FEPC should strengthen the confidence of all minority elements that their rights will be vigorously supported. Mr. Ross has had a decade of intensive practical experience in labor relations. As secretary of the FEPC since its reorganization he has already familiarized himself with its problems and contributed much to their solution. It is an excellent appointment, made solidly on a merit basis and gives promise of useful fruits.

At the press conference following the initial meeting of the new committee, Fr. Francis J. Haas, chairman, referred to Haas and Ross as his "assistants.' The Great Game of Politics

Observer
1943

By FRANK R. KENT

Very Bad Timing

IT DOES seem that this is a poor time needlessly to stir up class conflict and race hatred. Particularly is it a poor time to do so in a way to handicap industries vital to the war effort—industries which are being prodded to greater production, pleaded with by Mr. Nelson and Mr. Wilson, of the WPB, to put on more steam, warned by the President of the peril in "letting down."

YET, IT IS difficult not to feel that the course one government agency is at present following is in conflict with the pleadings of Mr. Nelson and the warnings of the President. This agency is known as the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices. Little has been printed about this committee. It was appointed, under pressure of various Negro organizations two years ago, but was reorganized and revived about two months ago. It is now headed by the Rt. Rev. Msgr. Francis Haas. There are three labor members—John Brophy, of the CIO; Milton P. Webster, of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, and Boris Shishkin, of the AFL. The other three members are supposed to represent industry. They are Miss Sarah Southall, superintendent of personnel and social service of the International Harvester Company; P. B. Young, of the Norfolk Journal and Guide, and Samuel Zeemurray, president of the United Fruit Company.

—o—

ONE MIGHT think from its personnel that the committee is slightly weighted against industry and this notion is sustained by its program which has been recently revealed. For example, the committee last week summoned to Washington heads of twenty-odd railroads of the country and several railroad unions to answer charges of discrimination against Negroes in the matter of promotion as well as employment. In addition, a number of companies and firms engaged in highly important war work have been charged with discrimination because they segregate the white workers from the Negro workers.

—o—

NOW, SO far as the railroads are concerned, most persons are willing to give them credit for doing a very fine job under exceedingly difficult circumstances. They are burdened by the war travel and freight almost to the breaking point. Not in our history has any American industry been subjected to such a strain. Regardless of the merits of the matter, to force the officials of these roads to drop their work and come to Washington, there to defend themselves against absurd charges of practices "detrimental to the prosecution of the war, the workers' morale and the national unity," hardly seems in the national interests at this time. What all that means is that there are positions in the railroads open to white men but not open to Negroes.

THE COMMITTEE disregards completely the facts that the railroads employ a percentage of Negroes higher than the Negro percentage of the whole population. What it insists upon is that, in the matter of promotion, there is "social discrimination." The fact, of course, is that if discrimination exists it is due far more to the attitude of the railroad unions than to the railroads—and that any attempt to alter the system would be resisted more strenuously by the unions than by the management. It takes no particular insight to realize that any serious effort to force a change in the situation would result in trouble of a serious kind. It is not surprising that the railroads should assert that this agitation of alleged discrimination against Negroes because of their race, at this time, when "all of our manpower, managerial skill, ability and best efforts are being expended in forwarding the general welfare in the prosecution of the war, can have no result other than to bring about dissension, lower the morale of the workers and adversely affect national unity."

AS TO THE factories, the charge is not made that they do not employ Negroes as well as whites but that they segregate them. One firm summoned by the committee actually employs 52 per cent Negroes and only 48 per cent whites, but they work in separate rooms. This the committee regards as "unfair practices" and wants it stopped. The operators of these factories say that if the committee thinks this "unfair" they are perfectly willing not to segregate the whites from the blacks if the committee will guarantee them against race riots, walkouts and a stoppage of work. Regardless of its merits, this is an exceedingly poor time to add to the burdens of the railroads and to industry generally by pressing this issue—especially as the "discrimination," if it exists, is one about which management can do nothing without risks of the greatest kind.

THE TRUTH, of course, is that this committee has an impossible job. It was appointed because, just as the labor leaders saw in the war an opportunity to extend their power, the Negro leaders felt it presented an opportunity for the "social advancement" of their race and there were threats of a "march on Washington" if something were not done to break down "discrimination." Now, if the committee does nothing, the Negro leaders whom it was named to appease will resent it; and if it does anything, it risks slowing down the production which the President, Mr. Nelson and Mr. Wilson are trying to speed up. Father Haas is an earnest and sincere man, described by his friends as a "moderate," but that word would be misapplied if used to describe some of the other members.

—o—

BUT, AGAIN, aside from the merits of the matter and regardless of whether discrimination exists, the timing of these charges and hearings is pretty bad. The same thing can be said of the effort now being made to make a national issue of the North Carolina Negro, who, on "advice of counsel" refused to permit his draft board to induct him into the army unless he could go into a "mixed regiment." There being no such thing as a mixed regiment, this was equivalent to refusing to be inducted at all. His counsel held that thus the whole question of "racial discrimination" in the armed services can be brought before the Supreme Court, and they are busily engaged now in trying to get publicity for the case on the ground that it will become a "national issue." The effect of this upon army morale would hardly be beneficial.

Samuel Zemurray, Multi-Millionaire Fruit Magnate, Newest FEPC Member

Pittsburgh, PA. Courier

By JOHN P. DAVIS
(Staff Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, July 8—Meet Samuel Zemurray, president of the United Fruit company and new employer-member of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice! There are only two lines about him in "Who's Who in America," but his record and that of the company he heads could fill pages.

Zemurray is a man of mystery, whose financial operations extend over the entire Western hemisphere and to the vast continent of Africa. No one knows how wealthy he is, but his company is the largest of its kind in the world.

BACKGROUND OBSCURE

Little is known about his early background. An official OWI release describes him as a Polish immigrant. An earlier account states that he is a Roumanian, who came to this country and began as a fruit peddler first on the waterfront at Mobile and later at New Orleans. From these beginnings, he founded his own company, importing tropical fruit, and became the "Banana King of the World." In 1932 he sold his company to the United Fruit company and became its president.

How successful he was as a businessman can be judged from the fact that the profits of $5,000,000 a year earned by the United Fruit company in 1932 rose steadily under his management until in 1939 the company made a clear profit of more than $14,000,000.

GIGANTIC ENTERPRISE

Zemurray's United Fruit company is big. It controls two-thirds of the world's banana supply. It owns land in every section of the Western hemisphere. In January, 1942, his company owned more than 680,000 acres of improved land and more than 2,600,000 acres of unimproved land—a total of more than three million and a quarter acres—or more land than there is in the State of Massachusetts. The company owned 1,422 miles of railroads, 350 miles of street car lines, 2,900 miles of telephone lines and radio stations in Hingham, Mass., Miami, Fla., New Orleans, La., Panama, and in Costa Rica. It had sugar refineries in Eastern Cuba and Jamaica, a hotel in Jamaica, and extensive properties in Guatamala, Honduras, Colombia, Cuba, Nicaragua, Ecuador, and the Bahamas. It owned the "Great White Fleet" of 61 ocean-going vessels.

NOT FRUIT ALONE

The company has not restricted its operations to fruit. It has begun extensive experimentation in production of rubber, hemp and other tropical commodities. It has 92,000 acres of sugar cane under cultivation. In 1937, it received from the United States, nearly $4,000,000 in satisfaction of its claims for carriage by its steamship lines of United States mail.

Zemurray's hand has been close to many Latin-American governments. His company has a contract with the Government of Colombia for the leasing of a Colombian railroad. It has a contract with the Government of Costa Rica for control of the Costa Rican banana crop, under the terms of which it is to develop 9,000 acres of land in bananas, build harbors and two railroad lines, and expend roughly $10,000,000. The contract, entered into in 1938, provides that the Costa Rican government shall not charge an export tax of more than two cents per bunch on bananas.

HIRES THOUSANDS OF NEGROES

Zemurray's company employs more than 80,000 persons — many tens of thousands of them Negroes in Jamaica and other parts of the Caribbean. And back of this fact is one of the most interesting of the stories about him. Quite recently, Zemurray has been most active in recruiting Jamaican Negro farm labor for transportation to the United States to meet an acute shortage of farm labor in this country. His United Fruit company [illegible] set up recruiting stations in the inerior plantation sections of the island. There are two versions as to why Zemurray interested himself in this problem. One is that he has recently lost a son, killed in action in North Africa and that, concerned over the serious shortage of farm labor, he gave his expert knowledge of recruitment to solve the problem. A less complimentary version is that the United Fruit company, unable any longer to ship its banana crop to world markets, found itself burdened with thousands of unemployed Negro plantation workers, whom it would have to feed, and that it used the device of shipping them to the United States, where they were needed as a method of bailing out of a difficult situation. It is known that the expenses of United Fruit company foremen and staff were paid by the War Food Administration in return for their services in recruiting Negro workers.

CORNER BANANA MARKET

But, perhaps the strangest story about Zemurray is that of his close association with a member of one of the bluest of Boston blue-blood families, Thomas Jefferson Sprague Coolidge, Harvard Phi Beta Kappa, president of the First National Bank of Boston, former Undersecretary of the Treasury, professor at Harvard college, and chairman of the board of directors of the United Fruit company, of which Zemurray is president. Together the Boston blue-blood and the Roumanian (or Polish) immigrant have cornered the banana markets of the world, have controlled the economic, if not political destinies of dozens of small Central and South American countries and have built a financial empire of huge proportions.

Now one member of that combination will try his hand at solving the problems of discrimination which keeps a good three-quarters of a million Negro men and women out of war jobs, and which debars another two million from full use of their skills. His name is Samuel Zemurray.

Haas Sees Labor Destiny Tied To Racial Attitude

Defender
Chicago, Ill.
OCT

TORONTO. — The postwar destinies of labor unions, in the opinion of Mgr. Francis J. Haas, chairman of the Fair Employment Practice Committee, are going to depend in large measure upon their attitudes toward workers as a whole, regardless of race, creed, color or national origin.

"No enlightened trade unionist can be satisfied with merely having a job for himself," Father Haas told a convention of the United Rubber Workers here last week.

"Rather, he must be interested in employment for all who want to work, and in production for the needs of mankind."

Father Haas said he fully realized that the rubber workers' union had taken a firm stand against discrimination, but he added:

"To you, as representatives of trade unionism in general, I do present the idea that racial tolerance is not a negative code of behavior, but rather is an affirmative issue upon which all American labor will some day be called on to make the basic decision whether or not to cut across the habit of excluding as members those not belonging to the majority racial group.

"There cannot be a strong labor movement where there are pockets of the unorganized who want work," he said. "If white Americans want to hold their gains, if they want to hold onto their high standards, they cannot afford to leave their flanks exposed to the competition from the unorganized and unwanted, who, in the very nature of things, will be less friendly to those who shut them out."

President Praises Monsignor's Work Heading Committee on Fair Employment Practice

OCT 16 1943

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15—President Roosevelt accepted today the resignation of Mgr. Francis J. Haas as chairman of his Committee on Fair Employment Practice and named his deputy, Malcolm Ross, a former Southern newspaper man, as his successor. Mgr. Haas was recently appointed Bishop of Grand Rapids.

The committee is the principal Federal agency dealing with the race question and is engaged mainly in establishing and maintaining fair working standards for minority groups in war plants.

"I am not surprised that his Holiness Pope Pius XII has called you to this high position," the President wrote in his letter accepting the resignation. "In all the posts of responsibility in which you have served your Government you have shown a humanity and skill which both church and country greatly need in these difficult days."

Mgr. Haas offered to be of what assistance he could, and the President replied:

"I am taking literally your offer to let us continue to share your wise and warm-hearted counsel in dealing with this great and continuing problem of fair practices in employment for all the people of America."

Mr. Roosevelt also wrote to the committee expressing regret over the chairman's departure and informing it of the arrangement that he continue as counselor.

"I am happy to report that FEPC as now reorganized is running along smoothly," Mgr. Haas said in his letter of resignation. "While the problems ahead, both now and after the peace, are almost overwhelming, I am certain that with the help of the vast majority of the American people you will meet them."

Mr. Ross has been with the Government about ten years, for a while as public relations man for the National Labor Relations Board. Born in New Jersey, he later worked as a reporter on The Dallas News, The Louisville Courier-Journal and The New York Morning World.

JAN 23 1943

The Committee demanded restoration of the Railroad hearings scheduled for January 25th. These hearings indefinitely postponed on orders of McNutt without consulation with members of the FEPC. Although the conference had been arraigned with McNutt, the delegation was met by Fowler Harper, Deputy Chairman of the War Manpower Commission who attempted to pacify the irate Detroiters with explanation of McNutt's action.

Harper, when asked for clarification by James and Mr. McNutt proposes to do everything within his power to combat discrimination.

In answer to questions as to whether McNutt acted without consulting the members of FEPC, Harper stated that "McNutt consulted with a staff member (presumably Cramer) who was to consult the committee." He further stated that he was aware of the committee's present untenable position, and agreed that this is the first action without concurrence of the committee.

According to Harper, the reasons which compelled the cancellation of the hearing were strength of the Railroad Brotherhoods, the anbership for direct protests to Washington.

Publishers Ask FDR To Act on Race Bias

JAN 25 1943 PM New York, N.Y.

Publishers and editors of Negro newspapers from as far west as Oklahoma met in New York yesterday to demand that President Roosevelt order the Fair Employment Practice Committee (FEPC) to hold its cancelled hearing on race bias in the railway industry.

JAN 25 1943

The meeting, held at the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People offices, suggested that FDR supplement his executive order creating FEPC to plug the alleged loophole cited by Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt as justification for abandoning the investigation.

JAN 25 1943

Their statement said:

"Mr. McNutt declared that the railroads held no war contracts and might not be within the jurisdiction of the Committee. We declare that if the railroads are not technically subject to the jurisdiction of the Committee, the President should supplement his Executive Order 8802 to bring them within its scope"

Answer Expected By February 1

JAN 27 1943

By AL WHITE

WASHINGTON.—(ANP)—Members of the Fair Employment Practice committee met here Friday with Paul V. McNutt, manpower commissioner, and for the first time sat in and discussed with the person to whom they are responsible the pertinent matters relating to the present and future status of FEPC.

Present were Mark Ethridge, who is acting chairman; Messrs. Brophy of CIO; Shiskin of AFL, Webster and Dickerson. Malcolm MacLean, who recently resigned as chairman, was present nor was Col. David Sarnoff also a recent resignee.

As a result of the conference, a statement was issued in which it was stated the committee strongly urged McNutt to reschedule the hearings on the railroads and asked that the hearings be set for an early date.

"SATISFACTORY" CONFERENCE

JAN 27 1943

It was further stated a "satisfactory" conference had been held, or that it was as such with the members of the committee. This, it is believed, refers to the manner in which Mr. McNutt received the group and frankly discussed with them the problems before them.

However, there has been no retreat from the stand taken regarding the railroad hearings. Mr. McNutt promised his committee he would take their recommendations under consideration and an answer is expected by the group when it next meets on Feb. 1.

JAN 27 1943

Although McNutt had assumed full responsibility for the cancellation of the hearings without explanation it is being generally thought that some explanation is due the minority groups as to what caused the cancellation and who was behind the agitation for such action. Since the committee itself was not advised of the change, why did McNutt so suddenly on Jan. 9 decide it would not be advantageous to hold the hearings? If he were given orders, the committee and the minority groups are entitled to know who gave the orders and why.

JAN 27 1943

SINCERITY DOUBTED

The sincerity of the whole thing now is doubted by many who felt the last order was the first attempt to wreck the committee. The underhand methods used against the members of the committee as well as the public are resented and the general public feel it is entitled to an explanation more satisfactory than that given a newspaper by Mr. McNutt--"for strategic reasons."

JAN 27 1943

As usual in these governmental cases, the attitude and actions of the head of the Department is reflected right down the line and there are no underlings who go against the will of the head.

Discussing the matter of replacements, it is possible that Col. Sarnoff and Dr. MacLean will be replaced as soon as the fundamental matter of reorganization, much discussed in the past few days can be settled.

GRAHAM MAY BE NAMED

Prominently mentioned as the successor to MacLean is Dr. Frank P. Graham, president of the University of North Carolina, a well known liberal now on leave serving with the government here in Washington.

Dr. Graham's presence would add much to the committee.

Despite the blow caused by the cancellation of the railroad hearings, the Detroit matter is said to be rapidly getting into shape under the direction of Examiner G. James Fleming. Mr. Fleming was in Washington for a brief visit and to make a report on his findings. He returned to Detroit Saturday. At present, these hearings will go on as scheduled, unless there is a sudden determination by someone to call them off because of "strategic" reasons.

Persons in the service feel the present status of the FEPC has not been jeopardized and that the committee will go on in spite of political pressure and expediency.

Reports of protest meetings held in various parts of the country are beginning to find their way to Washington and even right in the capital itself, there have been meetings which have adopted and sent resolutions to the President and McNutt protesting the cancellations of the railroads he hearings.

WHY HAVE THE FEPC?

JAN 22 1943

It looks as though there is a good deal of old time, buck-passing politics being carried on in this matter of getting Executive Order 8802 enforced.

To see to it that his Executive Order was enforced, the President appointed as "policeman" for enforcement the Fair Employment Practice Committee (FEPC). The members of this committee have gone up and down the land, looking in on war industries and finding plenty of cases where industrialists are giving only lip service to enforcement.

Here in Nashville, at the big airplane factory where there has been in force a persistent policy of racial disc ation ever since the plant was establ d, we find that the Government has issued an order demanding that the discrimination "cease and desist," and the press notice, describing the reaction of the factory owners, is that they intend to obey the President, seeing that their policy es not meet his approval. There is virtual apology, so the press indicates, by the industrialists for having carried on racial discrimination, and apparently they are about ready to issue a "card of thanks" to Mr. Roosevelt for finding out and reminding them that they haven't been paying any attention to his 8802.

But the daily paper interview with the factory owners has something in it that shows they are halted between two opinions: they don't know whether it is better to obey President Roosevelt forthwith or to have respect for some sort of local laws and customs which frown upon giving skilled colored men and women jobs while there are white workers of that class on the premises... Now it would be an easy thing to charge industrialists with being unpatriotic when they persist in a racial discrimination policy, but it is unfair to do so, when we find discrimination being practiced in the Government Employment offices and on projects where Government money is being spent to train persons for war industries.

We know a young, ambitious colored man, a graduate of a well known college, who had an idea that a big advertisement carried in daily newspapers, was one which invited him to apply for work in a shipbuilding plant. The advertisement, carried last week, asked for "trainees, apprentices and helpers." It did not specify they should be white, and so the young man had no hesitancy in going to the Employment office to seek one of the jobs.

He was told that no orders had "come through" for colored applicants, and there was no information available with regard to when any such order would come through.

Of course there is general knowledge of the fine training course for radio mechanics that is being given at Hume Fogg school, apparently under city administration auspices, but one for which the city is being reimbursed by the Federal Government for all the money spent to train the students and also to pay them good salaries while they are being trained.

JAN 22 1943

Colored boys cannot get this training in Nashville. But we understand there is such a course available for Nashville citizens in faraway Florida, and at the colored Florida A. and M. college of that state. We are sure that most of our young colored men, wanting this valuable radio training, are as dumb as we in one particular—they can't see why a Nashvillian, of good and regular standing in his city, should be compelled to go to far-away Florida for training that other Nashvillians are getting here at home, and being paid $80.00 a month to go to the training school.

And, so you see, the Government can blame industrialists for racial discrimination and in turn industrialists can blame the Government for setting a racial discrimination example in its employment offices.

JAN 22 1943

And so this question: Isn't the FEPC one of the most unnecessary appendages, to the nation's war effort?

Ramdolph Says President Sacrifices FEPC To Dixie

"Informer" Houston, Texas

By A. P. Randolph

NEW YORK CITY—It is reported from reliable sources that Paul V. McNutt, administrator of the War Manpower Commission, telephoned Lawfence Cramer, secretary to the President's Committee On Fair Employment Practice, that orders had come down from the boss, meaning the President, to postpone indefinitely the hearings on discriminations on account of race, color, religion or nationality in the railroad industry, scheduled to be held January 25th, 26th, 27th, in Washington, D. C.

In view of the fact, Negro workers whose toil, sweat, tears and blood have laid the rails and cross-ties, shoveled tons of coal, firing the coal-burner engines and worked like slaves to build and maintain the railroads of the South, are now being kicked off their jobs and their seniority rights disregarded, the calling off of these hearings by FEPC that were intended to investigate and put a stop to this racial discrimination, is shocking, amazing and disturbing to the Negro people of the country.

It is a grave blow to national unity and plays into the hands of the Axis powers by indicating to the hundreds of millions of people of color, our allies, that this is the sample of justice they may expect from the United Nations.

Slap In Face

It is a slap in the face of, and an insult to, upwards of twenty millions of Negro Americans. It makes them feel that the President is surrendering to the race-prejudice-mongering political demagogues of the South of the stripe of Bilbo and Rankin of Mississippi, Talmadge of Georgia, Governor Dixon of Alabama and Martin Dies of Texas.

Pres. Roosevelt stated in the famous White House Conference on discriminations on account of race, color, religion or nationality in the defense industries and the government, which was attended by Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson, Secretary of the Navy, Frank Knox, Walter White, secretary of the National Association For the Advancement of Colored People, Aubrey Williams, director of the National Youth Administration, Anna Rosenberg of the Social Security Board, Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia, Knudsen and Sidney Hillman, co-directors of the Office of Production Management, Frank R. Crosswaith, chairman of the Negro Labor Committee of New York City, Layle Lane, vice-president of the American Federation of Teachers and the writer, that some government agency is needed to which may be presented complaints of discrimination.

Under Executive Order 8802, he established such an agency which is charged with the responsibility of investigating discriminations in defense industries and the government and taking steps to eliminate them. Such is the responsibility and function of FEPC. But if the hearings of discriminations in railroads are to be summarily and indefinitely called off after months of careful preparation for them, then there is only one conclusion Negroes can reach, namely, that FEPC is useless and that it can no longer be looked to for help.

It seems to show further that FEPC was just a sop, an appeasement, in the first place to stop the March On Washington for jobs and justice in defense industries and the government.

JAN 23 1943

All Negro leaders and organizations are urged to send telegrams and make long distance calls to the President requesting him to step in and save FEPC from destruction by Southern Negro phobists by ordering the railroad hearing by FEPC to go on as scheduled.

Harlem Rally Cheers Call To Back FEPC

JAN 27 1943

Daily Worker N.Y.C.

Harlem's fighting Congressman, Vito Marcantonio. Monday night told 1,000 working men and women, mostly Negro, that he intends to introduce in the House of Representatives this week a bill creating a committee to replace the Fair Employment Practice Committee. This new committee, Marcantonio told the cheering audience, would have power to subpoena and to bring into court any employer who, having been summoned to explain his discrimination against Negroes or other minorities, had disobeyed the summons.

JAN 27 1943

Mr. Marcantonio was the principal speaker at a mass meeting called to protest jim crow job practices by the railroads. The meeting was held in the Abyssinian Baptist Church, 132 W. 138th St., under the auspices of the Peoples Committee, of which City Councilman Adam Clayton Powell is chairman, and the Negro Labor Victory Committee, headed by Charles A. Collins.

"I intend to call upon the Judiciary Committee of the House to grant my bill a hearing," Marcantonio said. "Such a hearing will bring the facts about the FEPC—the facts we have vainly tried to get from Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt — out into the open."

Congressman Marcantonio was preceded by Ashley Totten, secretary-treasurer of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, AFL; Theodore A. Jackson, secretary of the Negro Labor Victory Committee's sub-committee on railroad employment and president of the Dining Car Employees Union, Local 370, AFL; Charles A. Collins, business agent of Local 6, Hotel and Club Employees Union, AFL, and executive secretary of the National Negro Congress; John Beecher, formerly New York representative of the FEPC and now on the staff of the New York Post; Dr. Algernon Black, co-chairman city-wide Citizens Committee on Harlem; Councilman Adam Clayton Powell.

Mr. Totten's pessimistic picture of the Negro's relation to the anti-fascist war, including his statement that "we'll be patriotic but we'll get rid of Hitler here first" and his reference to people "who can hardly speak English" keeping Negroes out of jobs, was offset by Mr. Collins' analysis of the domestic and foreign political situation, with the Negro's place in it.

"McNutt has hurled the challenge in our face and we'll take it up and hurl it back," Collins cried, amidst shouts of approval.

A resolution unanimously adopted and sent to the President demanded that the FEPC railroad hearings be held as scheduled and that funds be allocated for making the FEPC an independent body.

JAN 27 1943

That resolution and Congressman Marcantonio's promise to press for a new and powerful FEPC represented definite action by the mass meeting.

Dorothy K. Funn, of the Negro Labor Victory Committee, was chairman.

FEPC to Meet

FEB 8 1943

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7.—The President's Fair Employment Practices Committee will meet the week of Feb. 8 with War Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt to discuss the President's instructions to call a conference "to consider a revision and strengthening" of the FEPC. The railway discrimination hearings postponed by McNutt will probably be rescheduled.

Capital CIO Asks Renewal Of FEPC Quiz

MAY 20 1943

(Special to the Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, May 19. — The Washington Industrial Union Council has telegraphed War Manpower Commission Crairman McNutt and other officials protesting cancellation of Fair Employment Practices Committee hearings on discrimination practiced by the Capitol Transit Co.

Charges that the company discriminates against Negroes as bus, street car operators were to have been heard by the FEPC, then were cancelled.

"We feel that this case rightfully belongs under the jurisdiction of the FEPC and that any attempt to weaken the authority of the FEPC is a nattempt to prevent the full utilization of our nation's manpower," says the wire, signed by Joseph D. Phillips, CIO president.

Action was taken by the Council following a delegated meeting at which the matter was discussed.

FEPC

Were Powers Of Body Sabotaged?

"Daily World"

By ALVIN E. WHITE

1/13/43

WASHINGTON.—(ANP)—The Most vicious set-back the Negro people of the United States have received a recent years came Saturday morning, when Paul V. McNutt, War Manpower commissioner, acting, it is said, upon instructions, ordered the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices to cancel the scheduled hearings set for January 25-27 when the railroads of the south were to be called upon to explain their discriminatory practices against Negro firemen.

"Daily World" 1/13/43

Fep

Culminating a series of secret conferences, the order came as a bombshell to the members of the staff of the FEPC who had been working diligently compiling material to be used in the public hearings.

This had been looked forward to as the one great acts the FEPC could perform, striking at organized labor which consistently has through certain railroad unions barred and eliminated Negroes from jobs they had long held.

PRESSURE BLAMED

Atlanta, Ga.

Blame for the action, cannot be placed, but it is widely discussed that pressure from congress on the White House may have had a great deal to do with the calling off of the hearings, which would have undoubtedly shown deep roots discriminatory practices against Negroes.

No one will assume the blame for giving the order, it is "one of those things" which will be accepted. Some say the complexion of the new congress and the uncertainty of legislation before that body caused misgivings as to holding the hearings at this time. Whoever is responsible is as guilty of a "stab" in the back as was Italy and Japan only this time, it was not a stab by a foreign enemy, it was a stab by enemies from within

For weeks ever since the hearings were planned, there has been an air of suspense and uncertainty about them. The FEPC as such went ahead with its plans, engaged Jacob Epstein of New York, Charles S. Houston, Washington's brilliant Negro lawyer, and others to conduct the case, only to have them suddenly dashed away.

CLIMAX OF SETBACKS

This cancellation is the culmination of a series of events transpiring since the peurile Birmingham hearings, in which the FEPC almost lost its pants emerging in a "barrel" as far as prestige and glory were concerned. Vacuous statements as to the great benefits accuring from this hearing have failed to materialize.

These hearings were held on June 18-20. Since that time, no public hearings have been held. One excuse or another leading up to the cancellation. In El Paso, Tex., where a public hearing was to have been held, the state department is said to have been the influence prohibiting these proceedings. They pointed to the Mexican situation as the reason. There has never been a clean cut explanation or statement as to why these hearings were never held.

When John P. Davis wrote the head of WMC relating to the [illegible] ing of hearings on treatme[illegible] corded blind Negroes asking [illegible] a public hearing be ordered, [illegible] was informed that the commit[illegible] itself was the one to make [illegible] hearings.

When the President wrote Walter White of the NAACP on the matter of transferring the FEPC back to an independent status, White was told the committee was placed under WMC to strengthen and to revitalize it, giving the group its own budget (which since has been emasculated to a mere name), so it could function of its own free will. The President further told Mr. White that the Committee had a free hand to do its job effectively, which was a task in front of it

These two statements do not stand up according to the latest order from the committee is in this instance robbed of its autonomy and forced to do the bidding of higher-ups whether they are in the White House or in congress. The committee's hands have been tied and tied by unseen powers.

HAS HAPPENED BEFORE

On the surface it would appear that a powerful clique operates through certain agencies to halt proceedings when the FEPC gets too close to the core of the situation. It has happened before as in the El Paso business and it is happening here with the railr[illegible] cases. There is no doubt bu[illegible] it may happen in Detroit. [illegible] there are nasty rumors already afloat. A hearing has been ordered in Detroit for February. Perhaps it won't be held either.

It stands to reason that some strong influence is wrecking the FEPC and the executive order the Presiden issued concerning discrimination.

Not once since there has been a President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices has the entire committee as such visited the White House to discuss its problems with the chief executive. In every instance, only the chairman, Dr. Malcolm MacLean, president of Hampton, and Lawrence Cramer. executive secretary, have visited the White House and then it is reported they discussed matters with Kentucky born Marvin McIntyre, the President's secretary.

The time has come for the committee itself to meet and decide whether this is to continue or to have a meeting with the President letting him say just what the committee's functions are and how far they can go. Then, if they are satisfied to serve under those conditions, it is up to them.

Nothing less than a full committee visiting the White House could achieve this result.

STATEMENT WITHHELD

Saturday afternoon, the Associated Negro Press correspondent in Washington visited Lawrence Cramer and confronted him with the story he had learned relative to the cancellation of the hearings. Mr. Cramer would not be quoted, nor would he give any statement. He did advise, however, that the correspondent attend Commissioner McNutt's press conference on Monday to get the prepared statement. Usually such handouts are given and have been carefully worded and prepared to allay any suspicions that may arise.

However, it remains that the railroad hearings, one of the greatest opportunities the Negro has had for some justice from governmental authorities purportedly interested in his welfare, have been cancelled and the loser as usual is the loyal long suffering Negro citizen especially the one residing in the deep south.

An accounting should be rendered. Despite the war effort and any such subterfuges that may be offered, the Negro definitely is being gypped in this move and sypped at the instance of his bitterest enemies, the bourborn south. Whatever was the cause, whoever gave Commissioner McNutt his instructions, the Negro is the ultimate loser.

Will the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices continue?

McNutt Calls FEPC Action 'Strategic'

"P. M. Daily," New York N.Y.

JAN 22 1943

By GORDAN H. COLE

PM's Bureau

PM Exclusive

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—Paul V. McNutt, chairman of the War Manpower Commission (WMC) today defended on grounds of "good strategy" his action in postponing public hearings by the Fair Employment Practice Committee (FEPC) into charges of racial discrimination on Southern railroads.

McNutt, whose intervention in the FEPC proceedings has evoked wide protest from church, labor, and liberal groups, told his side of the story for the first time in an interview.

The manpower director pledged that there would be "no retreat" and "no softpedaling" in the campaign to bring wider job opportunities to Negroes.

Expressing his resentment over the sharp pressure that has been brought to bear on him by Negro organizations in the last 10 days, McNutt warned that Negroes and their supporters, "have got to recognize me as their friend and not crack me on the head every time my neck is out."

He ordered the railroad hearings postponed, he said, solely because he believes that "direct negotiations may yield better progress."

JAN 22 1943

Here are McNutt's views:

¶ The FEPC has no strict legal authority to enforce its orders except for those employers whose war contracts contain non-discrimination clauses.

¶ The railroads have no war contracts except, possibly, in the sense that Government officials buy railroad tickets and those tickets constitute a contract.

"Why get caught out on the end of a limb on one of the doubtful cases when there are so many positive ones?" McNutt argued. "The other firms (under FEPC scrutiny) have contracts with no discrimination clauses."

JAN 22 1943

McNutt stated flatly that the FEPC would decide when it would conduct hearings and that his intervention in the railroad case is "not a pattern."

He indicated that the possibility of the committee conducting hearings in Detroit, Cleveland, or St. Louis is to be decided by the Committee, not himself.

However, McNutt admitted that with only four members remaining on the Committee—the chairman, Malcolm MacLean, and two members, Mark Ethridge and Col. David Sarnoff, having submitted their resignations—possibility of reorganizing the Committee is under consideration.

One reorganization plan being studied would substitute for the present committee of volunteers representing various groups a full-time paid committee comparable to the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB). On the NLRB, all three members are public representatives rather than representatives of labor or the employer.

His decision on adopting this plan or reconstituting the present Committee will not be made, McNutt said, until the idea has been sold to the Negro groups.

McNutt repeated his pledge to fight for fair employment practices and for an end of racial discrimination on the job.

He explained that he had been in that fight for a quarter century and added: "I don't intend to change my mind on this subject."

JAN 22 1943

In McNutt's record are these facts:

¶ In 1918, when he was an Army major, he was commander of a brigade of 2000 Negro troops at Camp Jackson, outside Columbia, S. C.

¶ In the years immediately following the war, McNutt fought the Ku Klux Klan in Indiana in the days when it was neither politically expedient or professionally wise to be known as anti-Klan.

¶ Later, he became the first Governor Indiana to appoint a Negro to a major state board.

JAN 22 1943

¶ In the poll tax fight last year McNutt sounded off briefly, but specifically, against the poll tax in a Labor Day speech in Southern Virginia—where the poll tax is not a theoretical issue.

CIO Race Relations Committee Asks More Money For FEPC's Use

Houston [illegible]

JAN 2 3 1943

WASHINGTON. —(ANP)— More money and authority for the FEPC in its fight to secure Negro employment in war industries are asked in a statement released by the CIO Committee on Racial Discrimination formed at the fifth annual convention held in Boston last November.

The committee consists of James B. Carey, chairman and secretary-treasurer of the CIO; Willard S. Townsend, secretary and president of the United Transport Service employes; James J. Leary, secretary-treasurer of the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter workers; Ferdinand Smith, secretary of the National Maritime union and Boyd L. Wilson, member of the execution board, United Steelworkers of America. Says the statement:

"The existence of discrimination against Negroes and other minorities is not only a continuing blot on American democracy, but even more seriously a drag on the total mobilization of all our people needed to win the war against Axis slavery.

"Every war industry and plant in the country is crying for more manpower, desperately needed to keep the weapons of war flowing out to the offensive fighting fronts of our armed forces and our allies.

JAN 2 3 1943

"Negro Americans are as anxious as any to work for victory, just as they are fighting for victory in the Army and the Navy. To follow employers or any other agencies to bar them from jobs is worse than unjust—it is an active help to Hitler.

"The CIO, in setting up the committee on racial discrimination at its November convention, moved to implement in industry and government the policy it has always held to in its own ranks—of absolute apposition to discrimination in any form, and of complete equality of opportunity for all.

"This policy has been made national in the executive order of the President No. 8802 and in the setting up of the Fair Employment Practices committee. The CIO concurs fully in these steps, as it concurs in every move to promote national unity in winning the war.

"At the same time, we must point out that the job of wiping out racial discrimination is far from complete, and at the present rate of progress will scarcely be completed in time to make full answer to the needs of all-out war, or to the needs of a people's peace.

"Too often mere lip-service is given to the principle of equal opportunity. Too often an employer or a whole industry, ordered to stop discrimination against Negro workers, has evaded the order by offering token employment to a handful in place of opening jobs to all who are qualified. Or again, Negro workers are of their experience or training.

"Of course there are notable exceptions to these disruptive practices. The exceptions, however, could easily become the rule if the national policy were made completely effective. This cannot be done as long as the Fair Employment Practices committee lacks sufficient funds and sufficient personnel to do the needed job.

"At present time, the FEPC lacks funds and personnel to do the necessary following-up on each of its orders. Trained, paid investigators are needed to patrol every section of industry where discrimination is suspected or found. More cooperation from other government agencies responisble for war production is needed.

JAN 2 3 1943

"The CIO committee on Racial Discrimination is determined to press for these and all other measures to end this gross injustice and criminal waste of needed manpower. We intend to press for more funds and more authority for the FEPC. We plan to work closely with other government agencies and with employers in the solution of the problem.

The FEPC And The 'Umbrella Man.'

JAN 2 4 1943

THE prestige of the Committee on Fair Employment Practice met a new low last week when Paul V. McNutt, the War Manpower head, cancelled the scheduled hearing of the railroad industry and thus edged upon an appeasement program which renews thoughts of the famed "umbrella man" who in yesteryear sold freedom short on the continent of Europe.

Whatever influence the FEPC had was gained from the consistent and relentless efforts of that body to bring into the open the malignant and cancerous evils that mushroom American industry with a prejudice that belies the principles of democracy. Its prestige was dependent upon a program which was as uncompromising as truth.

The "postponement" of the hearing was indeed a dirty deal for the colored people in America. It is characteristic of an attitude in official Washington which may have more than serious effects upon the future of American democracy and upon the rights of 13,000,000 colored people. We saw the handwriting on the wall when the poll tax bill was strangled when western and eastern senators teamed up with the despicable renegades of the southern oligarchy. We saw evidences of an appeasement policy in other acts and when combined convince us that a pattern of conduct is getting under way to sabotage the fight for freedom that Negroes are now waging. That Paul V. McNutt has become a party to such a plan leaves us fabbergasted; absolutely flabbergasted.

However we do not think the FEPC is dead. Nor do we think it need fold up. It still can be saved but we doubt that it will be resusticated under the influence of an army paragon whose political ambitions transcend his ideals of right and justice.

JAN 2 4 1943

We said it before and we say it again: The FEPC should be restored to its original status lest its purpose, its aims, and its aspirations be lost in the pool of political machinations and lily-white appeasement. Indeed, the Negroes of America view with disgust the philosophy of an "umbrella man."

What FEPC Would Have Heard--IF

"Daily worker," New York, N.Y.

JAN 3 - 1943

By Eugene Gordon

Willard S. Townsend, international president of the United Transport Service Employes of America, CIO, has just issued a statement covering testimony he had intended giving at hearings on railroad discrimination against Negro workers. Those hearings, which were to be conducted by the Fair Employment Practice Committee, beginning Jan. 25, were arbitrarily postponed by Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt.

Mr. Townsend is a Negro. The union he heads embraces principally dining car waiters, Pullman laundry workers, Pullman shop workers, Red Caps, station attendants and train porters. Mr. Townsend's statement shows him to be intimately acquainted with all the other kinds of work Negroes are restricted through discrimination by railroads. He avoids the growing tendency in some quarters to place responsibility for discrimination equally on the railroad brotherhoods and on the railroad management. He shows why responsibility rests cheifly on railroad management.

BLAMES LINES

Progressive union leaders and thinkers, "without reservation," condemn the anti-Negro clauses in constitutions of most Railroad Brotherhoods, Mr. Townsend declares. He does not believe, however, that those "lily-white" provisions are the actual causes of discrimination.

"After all, railroad employers have hired 91 per cent white workers and 9 per cent Negro workers and carefully segregated the Negro workers into the 17 least desirable occupations out of 123," he said. "The Brotherhoods do not have the closed shop—it is forbidden by law in the railroad industry—and if the railroads were not the prime movers in their discrimination, they would be free to hire qualified Negro workers."

Mr. Townsend believes that the discriminatory clauses in the Brotherhoods' constitutions "are basically a reflection of the railroads' position." He says he knows that "among the members and even officers of at least several of the Brotherhoods, there is considerable sentiment against these clauses."

"If once the railroads ended their discrimination, the Brotherhoods would soon follow suit," according to Mr. Townsend, who added: "I do not mean to condone their clauses. In my mind there can be no possible excuse for a color bar in any labor union. But I want to isolate the real cause and put the blame there."

JAN 3 - 1943

JIM CROW AGREEMENTS

The president of the United Transport Service Employes of America says that in the South the railroads have made a series of agreements "which put their discrimination squarely down on paper." There being a number of Negro firemen in the South, the railroads have agreed in writing to cease hiring them and to hire only white firemen "until at least 55 per cent or more of the firemen are white."

JAN 3 - 1943

Mr. Townsend quotes one such agreement, signed by the general superintendent in behalf of the Florida East Coast Railway Co., to whom the UTSEA has protested that it violates the Railway Labor Act. That agreement, Mr. Townsend insists, "practically institutionalized discrimination against the Negro."

Nobody can escape the railroads' boasts, paid for out of their swollen war profits, the union leader declares, about the swell job they are doing in spite of the strain put on their facilities by war work. "The war work they are doing would be much grander" if they used qualified manpower without discrimination, he said.

NAACP Urges FEPC To Hold Detroit Hearings

DETROIT, Michigan — Informed that the FEPC was considering ~~postponement of~~ cancellation of the Detroit hearings, the Detroit Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People wired Attorney Earl B. Dickerson, acting chairman, to hold the hearings as scheduled.

The NAACP telegram was signed by Dr. James J. McClendon, president of the branch and the executive secretary, Gloster B. Current. The Labor Committee of the Association also wired the committee urging that the hearings be held on the scheduled date, May 24-25.

TEXT OF NAACP TELEGRAM

"The Detroit Branch of the NAACP urges that the hearings of President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices proceed on scheduled date. Employment practices in this city will be dealt a staggering blow if the committee presents the evidence it now has. The morale of war workers and those seeking employment will be heightened by holding the hearings."

Educator Put At Head Of Group To Eliminate Discrimination

WASHINGTON, May 28—(AP)—The old and recently inactive committee designed to prevent discrimination in employment because of race, creed, color or national origin was scrapped Friday by President Roosevelt and replaced by a new and autonomous body.

It will be the duty of the present committee, the executive order said, to eliminate discrimination by all employers, federal departments and labor unions, the latter in the matter of memberships.

To head the new committee the president selected a veteran of labor disputes, Msgr. Francis J. Haas, dean of the school of social science of Catholic University, a member of the original National Labor Relations Board, a special conciliator for the labor department since 1935, and a participant in the settlement of about 1,500 labor squabbles.

In reconstituting the committee the chief executive removed it from the jurisdiction of Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt and gave its new chairman authority to appoint personnel and "power to promulgate such rules and regulations as may be appropriate or necessary to carry out the provisions of this order."

The committee as originally established had independent status, but was placed under McNutt when his authority was broadened to embrace selective service and other phases of the manpower problem. The group's activity has been at a virtual standstill since the "indefinite postponement" by McNutt of investigations scheduled for January into charges of discrimination against Negroes by railroads.

Restoration of the committee's independence meets demands of various Negro, labor and religious organizations which have protested McNutt's postponement of the railroad complaint inquiry.

The president ordered that hereafter all contracting agencies of the government shall include in all contracts a provision obligating the contractor not to discriminate against any employe or job applicant because of race, creed, color or national origin and requiring him to include similar provision in all subcontracts.

Mr. Roosevelt will name six other members to the committee which will receive and investigate complaints of discrimination, conduct hearings, make findings of fact, and "take appropriate steps to obtain elimination of such discrimination."

"It is the duty of all employers, including the several federal departments and agencies and all labor organizations in furtherance of this policy and this order, to eliminate discrimination in regard to hire, tenure, terms or conditions of employment, or union membership because of race, creed, color, or national origin," the order said.

Report Changes In Rail Work Since Hearing

Daily World

Find Mexicans Get Promotions On Union Pacific

Atlanta, Ga

WASHINGTON— (A N P)—The Fair Employment Practice committee is progressing on the work of reducing the volumes of testimony taken in the railroad hearings to the "handling point," it was learned last week-end.

Already the cases against about six companies and four labor unions have been summarized, foundings made, and directives drafted calling upon all concerned to "cease and desist" various discriminations. An official statement has not yet been prepared,, however.

Unofficially but reliably it is understood that telegrams have been received from several Mexican workers on the Union Pacific railroad stating that they had since been upgraded immediately after the testimony of one witness against the company had been taken down. The texts of the messages were not available.

The New York Central system has not yet followed up on its suggestion to sit down with the committee and work out a solution nor has there been any break since the hearings ended in any other direction.

ACT NOW OR FEPC IS DOOMED, WHITE WARNS

Atlanta, Ga., World
March 5, 1943

"If we don't make ourselves heard within the next ten days, the Fair Employment Practice Committee is doomed," Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People declared this week in a special statement to the press.

"Determination of FEPC's fate will in large measure decide the fate of the Negro during and after the war," Walter White declared. "The unity of the diversified groups supporting FEPC has startled and dismayed the enemies of the Committee who are now working to scuttle it behind the scenes.

"Only one thing can prevent that disaster—an avalanche of pressure in the form of telegrams to The White House pledging the President support against the reactionary forces in and outside of Congress which are running wild in Washington today in destroying not only FEPC, but every other agency to help the common man, and telegrams to Congressmen and Senators to go to bat for FEPC. We must make it known in the latter telegrams in no uncertain terms that these Congressmen and Senators cannot expect the votes of the Negro and other groups interested in FEPC unless they deliver the goods now. Every minister in the country is urged to preach on and pray for FEPC and to ask each member of his congregation to invest in one or more telegrams. Every branch of the NAACP, the Urban League, the March-on-Washington Committee, labor unions, fraternal, political, and business organizations and other groups is implored to do the same. If we roll an avalanche of expression to Washington that FEPC must be not only perpetuated but given complete independence and personnel, we can win this fight. If we don't make ourselves heard FEPC is doomed. In the final analysis, we will then have only ourselves to blame."

FEPC Orders New Hearings on Bias; Showdown Seen on Its Reorganization

New York, N. Y.
PM

PM's

WASHINGTON, Apr. 21.—The Fair Employment Practice Committee (FEPC) moved today toward a showdown with Administration officials over the future of the anti-discrimination agency.

APR 21 1943

The FEPC has been virtually dormant since Manpower Commissioner McNutt ordered cancellation last January of its hearings on Jim Crowism in the railroad industry. Since that time McNutt has repeatedly indicated that the Committee would be revitalized under a new chairman.

Aroused over the delay in its reconstitution, Earl B. Dickerson, its acting chairman, announced today that the FEPC had fixed dates for new public hearings on discrimination cases. This decision was made Monday at a meeting of four remaining members of the Committee.

The participants at the meeting were Boris Shishkin of the AFL, John Brophy of the CIO, Milton P. Webster of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, and Dickerson, a former Chicago alderman.

Dickerson said the Committee had decided to hold an open session on May 18 to determine why the Capital Transit Co., controlling most of Washington's transportation facilities, has failed to hire Negroes as conductors, motormen and bus operators. This dispute was one of the "hottest" handled by FEPC.

Although Capital Transit formally agreed to comply with FEPC order, it is understood that Negroes still have been unable to obtain employment.

The Committee has also agreed to hold hearings on May 24 and 25 in Detroit, Dickerson said, where members of the FEPC have conducted extensive investigations of job bias against minorities.

Dickerson's announcement is expected to force the hand of Administration officials who have been working on plans for reorganization of the anti-discrimination unit, and may lead to an early decision.

1943

Since the cancellation of the railroad hearings, the FEPC has refrained from any public hearings and the battle against discrimination has virtually collapsed. During the same interval manpower officials have stressed that manpower needs cannot be met this year unless bias against minorities in industries is wiped out.

Asks Further Strengthening Of FEPC

The Daily Worker
New York, N. Y.

(Special to the Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—Further strengthening and support of the Fair Employment Practices Committee has been urged in a resolution to President Roosevelt by the Committee on Jobs for Negroes in Public Utilities, the group which has been leading the fight for Negro bus and street car operators in Washington.

JAN 21 1943

The Committee charges that the "so-called National Negro Council, paper organization of Edgar G. Brown . . . is doing Hitler's business," in proposing that FEPC be disbanded.

"The Negro people will continue to support the Roosevelt war administration," the Committee's message to the President concludes, "and in the very prosecution of this people's war they shall continue to move forward to greater freedom."

FEPC Soon to Probe Discrimination in Detroit

New York, N. Y.

JUN 29 1943

Southern Railroads, Capital Transit Co., Also Face Inquiry

JUN 29 1943

PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Msgr. Francis J. Haas, new chairman of the Fair Employment Practice Committee, today began an unflinching program to combat racial discrimination on war jobs today with three announcements:

¶ That he will visit Detroit, scene of last week's bloody race riots, within the next few days.

JUN 29 1943

¶ That hearings on charges of discrimination will open in Detroit on July 28 and 29, or earlier if possible.

¶ That all pending cases including those against Southern railroads and the Capitol Transit Co. of Washington will be presented to the new Committee members at their first meeting so that they can "decide the order in which they wish to hear these cases."

Msgr. Haas's announcement was the first indication that he intends to continue the Southern railroad and Capitol Transit cases—two of the hottest ever to arise in Washington. Both have aroused so much opposition from Southern Democrats that many Negro leaders feared the Administration had decided to drop the cases altogether.

Announcement of the pending Detroit hearings was even more gratifying to Negro groups.

JUN 29 1943

Msgr. Haas explained that during his visit to Detroit he would examine the six pending cases—two companies already have agreed to comply with the executive order—and also "study several more recent cases which involve large war industries."

The original eight cases which FEPC had expected to hear all involved smaller plants averaging about 1000 workmen. None of the big Detroit corporations--Ford, General Motors, Chrysler or Packard—were involved.

Observers interpreted the chairman's statement to mean that he was prepared to tackle the big corporations if they are found to be violating the President's order on discrimination.

JUN 29 1943

A part of the reorganization of the FEPC, following the mandate given it in the President's executive Order 9346, will be the establishment of 12 regional offices responsible to the committee and situated in the 12 regions of the War Manpower Commission.

Msgr. Francis J. Haas, new chairman of the Fair Employment Practice Committee, who will actively combat racial discrimination.

JUL 27 1943

West Coast Shipbuilders Say AFL Put Them in an 'Auxiliary' Union

JUL 27 1943

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, July 26—The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice asked today for the reinstatement of about 300 Negro workers in West Coast shipyards pending an adjustment of complaints that they had been the victims of racial discrimination. They had been discharged under a closed shop contract, it was alleged, for refusal to pay dues to a separate "auxiliary" union set up for them by the American Federation of Labor Boilermakers Union. About 3,000 Negroes, it was said, have been assigned to the "auxiliary" union.

A question for decision by the President's committee, a new organization set up in May by Executive order and financed currently from the President's special emergency fund, is whether the establishment of a separate union constitutes discrimination because of race, creed or color.

Parties Will Be Heard

The committee, after authorizing its chairman, Mgr. Francis J. Haas of the Catholic University, to request the reinstatement of the dismissed workers, indicated that it would base further action on the nature of the replies received from the companies and union involved as to their reasons for the actions which led to complaints of discrimination.

JUL 27 1943

Turning to another case involving complaints of discrimination the seven-member committee voted to inform the Capital Transit Company of Washington, which has admitted a failure to employ available Negroes on its lines, that it "expected affirmative action" leading to compliance with the President's Executive Order. If such action is not taken, it was indicated, a public hearing of the case will be ordered.

The transit company has maintained that, while it has been willing to employ Negroes, it has been unable to do so because of the attitude of other employes, of public reaction and of inability to obtain trainers for the prospective Negro employes. The committee will meet again in two weeks, and it was indicated that if the company's response was unsatisfactory, recommendations, based upon the suggested public hearing, would be forwarded to the President.

Of seven cases in the Detroit area, the committee reported, four appeared to have been adjusted through expressed willingness of employers to comply with the Executive Order.

300 Possible Cases on File

The committee now has in its files approximately 300 reports from offices of the United States Employment Service throughout the country, describing placement orders submitted by employers which, it is alleged, contain discriminatory specifications.

About 500 complaints of violations of the executive order are pending before the committee. All cases except those now actually being settled, it was said at the committee headquarters, probably will be turned over to the field division for regional handling.

Under the Executive Order a mandatory anti-discrimination

New Birth For FEPC

THE President headed the newly formed Committee on Fair Employment Practice with Monsignor Francis J. Haas, of Catholic University, Washington. The new chairman has had a wealth of experience in the settlement of labor difficulties, although this experience has not carried him far into the realm of difficulties which have their basis in race, creed and nationality, aspects of labor discrimination with which FEPC was dealing vigorously before it was placed under the jurisdiction of War Manpower Commissioner McNutt, and shelved when the Commissioner ordered the proposed inquiry into discrimination by the railroad brotherhoods postponed indefinitely.

Monsignor Haas worked on the original National Labor Relations Board, and as a special conciliator for the Labor Department. Having participated in the settlement of about 1,500 labor disputes, he certainly has firsthand knowledge of the average troubles between capital and labor. In the special field of operations for which the Committee on Fair Employment Practices was established the explosive question of race enters. In certain areas of industry, and of American thinking, this question greatly complicates the task of the newly organized committee, charged with the responsibility of making effective President Roosevelt's now famous Executive Order 8802. Especially is this true in the South, where equality of work opportunity is confused with "social equality." And in the North equality of work opportunity runs counter to some of the same difficulties it meets in the South, especially the same organized labor opposition to the employment of Negroes in certain brackets of industry.

On the whole, we do not believe that the President and his advisers could have found a better man for the chairmanship, considering the limited field from which a choice had to be made. Most big business men eliminated themselves because of the Southern dynamite keg. We are approaching a presidential election year, and few able men in public life were available, for either political or business reasons. Recourse to an able Catholic Churchman, experienced in labor matters and trained in sociology was probably a sound choice. Much will depend upon the full personnel of the committee. At last it has been freed from the throttling jurisdiction of the War Manpower Commission and given a measure of independent status.

Open FEPC Office In Philly

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 2—(ANP)—The regional office of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice (FEPC) which was announced some weeks ago to serve the states of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware was opened Monday in Philadelphia. G. James Felming is the regional director.

The office will be located at 803-4 Stephen Girard building, 21 South 12th street, in downtown Philadelphia, three blocks from the Broad street station of the Pennsylvania railroad and one-half block from the Reading terminal.

Two examiners will work with the regional director, Miss Mildred Greenblatt, Patterson, N. J., who is being transferred here from the New York office of FEPC, and Milo Manley, Philadelphia, formerly of the Pennsylvania Department of Public Assistance. Following the two-year program of the FEPC, the regional office will work to correct grievances growing out of discrimination against war workers because of their race, creed, color, national origin, or alienage, in accordance with Presidential Executive Orders 8802 and 9346, Fleming explained.

As a start, the office will begin with a backlog of about 200 cases being transferred here from the Washington and New York offices.

Manpower Official Declares Employers Must End Bias

JAN 23 1943 "Journal + Guide," Norfolk, Va.

CLEVELAND, Ohio — Declaring that the war made it unwise for employers to allow themselves the extravagant privilege of racial and other prejudices in the employment of their workers, Fowler V. Harper, deputy chairman of the War Manpower Commission, speaking at the annual dinner of the Cleveland Urban League on January 13, called attention to the reservoir of Negro manpower still untouched by many industries doing war work.

"Now some people think Negroes are not as efficient as white workers, but the facts show that this is not true. They can work as hard and as long and as steadily as anybody else, and they can acquire skills as great as others. This is the testimony of employers today who hire Negroes in war plants and who check up on their performance," he declared.

Another untruth, he said, is the idea that white workers and Negroes won't get along together in the same plant.

JAN 23 1943

WORK TOGETHER

"Well, there are thousands of plants and factories all over the country where they are working together and getting along without any trouble at all. I have the feeling that there would be far less trouble between Negroes and white workers if it were not for some of the people who worry so much about trouble between white people and Negroes," remarked the speaker.

Mr. Harper pointed out that industrialists would be called upon in the next few months to surpass production schedules now in operation, and, ventured his opinion, that the program could not be achieved unless the full and complete labor resources of the nation are utilized.

The speaker lauded the recent industrial openings for Negroes in the Cleveland area, but added that the employment was not proceeding as rapidly as the expediences of war require.

He promised that the War Manpower Commission through the local area office, the employment service, and the FEPC would "continue and intensify its efforts to accomplish full and complete utilization of all local labor at its highest skills."

Plan Delegation To Save FEPC

"Daily Worker" N.Y., N.Y.

JAN 25 1943

Formation of a nationwide coordinating organization to save the Fair Employment Practice Committee and to be known as the Associated Organizations on Manpower and Fair Employment Practice, has been undertaken with the support of the National Negro Congress and 17 allied groups as part of a sweeping five-point program to end job discrimination in war industry.

"America is flirting with defeat so long as she fails to mobilize the energies of her millions of Negro workers for war production," Edward E. Strong, newly-elected executive secretary of the Congress, declared in a statement urging Negro and white organizations throughout the country to affiliate with the new body. "The attack upon FEPC is not alone a Negro problem, as those who are attempting to destroy it seem to make it. The attack upon FEPC is an attack not only against the Negro people but upon the war effort itself. It is an assault on the war program foreshadowing the drive of the reactionaries, poll taxers, and two-faced opponents of the war effort in the 78th Congress. The fight to save FECP is a fight to save the unity and morale of the American people."

Other steps in the program, mapped at an emergency meeting of spokesmen from 20 organizations called by the Negro Labor Victory Committee and the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, held in the Hotel Biltmore, New York, this week, include:

1. An emergency national conference of outstanding leaders of both races, to be held in Washington during the next three weeks.

2. Local conferences on war employment and discrimination, to be held in key cities throughout the country.

3. A representative delegation, qualified to speak for the entire nation, to go to Washington to give support to the FEPC and to demand that it be made a completely independent agency, with sufficient funds and powers to do the work expected of it under Presidential Executive Order 8802.

4. Special radio broadcasts over national hookups to mobilize support for the FEPC, and to expose the attempts to hamper the war effort by creating color divisions among the American people.

Race Bias Against Train Firemen to Be Unfolded at Meeting of Protest

JAN 23 1943

A huge mass meeting with the objective of protesting against the postponement of Fair Employment Practices Committee hearings by the railroads against Negro firemen will be held at the Vermont Avenue Baptist Church, 1638 Vermont Avenue, Sunday at 2:30 p. m.

The hearings were cancelled by order of War Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt, under wheose supervision the FEPC comes.

The story of how Negro firemen have been murdered down through the years, otherwise abused, and now facing a ban of employment on Diesel engines through collusion by unions and railway officials is expected to be unfolded.

The mass meeting is sponsored by the Provisional Committee for the Organization of Colored Locomotive Firemen.

Speakers Expected

B. F. McLaurin, national organizer, and chairman of the meeting, will be one of the speakers. Others inculde James B. Carey, international secretary-treasurer of the CIO; A. Philip Randolph, international president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters and of the "March on Washington" Movement;

Dr. Lawrence M. Ervin, chairman of the New York "Move on Washington" unit; Thurman T. Dodson, chairman of the local "March on Washington" unit; Paul Scharrenberg, legislative representative of the American Federation of Labor, and others.

Music will be furnished by the Union Wesley AMEZ Church, which is reputed to be one of the best in the city. Mrs. Elsie Grey Keys is director; Miss Evelyne Clark, accompanist, and Miliford Williams, president.

The local headquarters of the sponsoring committee is at 1812 Ninth Street, Northwest.

FEPC Lawyers Quit; Protest McNutt Stand

"Journal + Guide," Norfolk, Va.

JAN 23 1943

WASHINGTON, D. C. — A showdown on the future of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices appears imminent as the Committee plans to meet Friday to discuss the action of War Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt cancelling the hearings on discrimination against colored workers in the railroad industry.

The action has already been vigorously protested by delegations which have called upon Mr. McNutt in vain for an explanation. As yet he has given no reason for calling off the hearings which were scheduled to begin on January 25.

HOUSTON RESIGNS

Charles H. Houston, prominent lawyer, who was to serve as associate counsel for the committee in the conduct of the hearings, last Saturday submitted his formal resignation to Dr. Malcolm S. MacLean, the committee chairman, as have Henry Epstein, chief counsel, and Harold Stevens, also an associate.

At the same time, Mr. Houston issued a statement sharply attacking the method by which the hearings were called off and urging colored people to protest Mr. McNutt's action to the President and members of Congress.

Mr. Houston's statement in part follows:

"It is important for Negroes to realize the full significance of Paul V. McNutt's action.

"Mr. McNutt did not take snap judgment. He never consulted the committee itself, nor asked the committee what evidence it had. Nevertheless the question of calling off the hearings was thoroughly discussed elsewhere in government circles.

"Information available would seem to indicate that the order to call off the hearing came directly from the White House. No substitute plan in place of the hearings has been offered.

REACTIONARIES ASSERTING INFLUENCE

"Today with the war going better for the United Nations, the reactionaries are getting up off their knees and asserting their influence. Right now there is a definite swing to the right in government. Reactionary Southerners and conservative Republicans are major influences in determining policy. The result in part is the action of Mr. McNutt calling off the public hearings.

SEE MOVE TO KILL FEPC AS ITS CHAIRMAN QUITS

White, Randolph Joined By Many Others In Fight On McNutt Order On FEPC

JAN 23 1943

In a move that stunned lovers of democracy throughout the length and breadth of this nation at war, the Federal Government on Tuesday was revealed to have "kicked" Malcolm S. MacLean, chairman of the FEPC "upstairs," following the latter's unexplained resignation. Shocked beyond measure at the sudden move in the midst of a controversy to preserve the very life of the President's Committee, Negro leaders voiced the grim prediction that no successor will be named and that the removal of MacLean is the first step in a campaign to emasculate the FEPC and render it absolutely helpless in the fight of the Negro to obtain equitable treatment at the hands of industry and labor.

No explanation was made by MacLean of his resignation. Instead, it was announced that he will become Advisor on Negro Affairs to the Navy.

With New York progressive organizations and militant leaders determined to stand by their guns in the all-out campaign to defeat the decision of War Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt in regard to the postponement of hearings of the FEPC on jim crow in the railroad industry, the McNutt office, the President's desk and the mailbags of Congressional representatives were flooded with angry protest this week as The New York Age went to press.

Going over McNutt's head in a direct and pointed appeal to the President, Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, wrote the Chief Executive:

"Because the decision which is now made will profoundly affect the course of things to come, we renew our request that the Fair Employment Practice Committee be restored to its completely independent status," White's letter said.

Asking that Mr. Roosevelt reverse the McNutt order which has kindled heated controversy throughout the length and breadth of the nation, White continued:

"We want you to know that we understand and are deeply sympathetic with you personally because of the difficulties which the making of such a decision will entail. We know the terrible dilemma you face in the 78th Congress......We have been informed of the lobbying being done among members of the Congress by representatives of the railroads who bitterly oppose any action which would attempt to correct the vicious discrimination against Negroes on certain of the public carriers of the United States. But we respectfully submit that any surrender to such forces, or any manifestation of weakness in the face of the barrage from them would be disastrous, not only for the Negro, but for the principles of democracy itself. Temporizing can only encourage those persons who wish to perpetuate the status quo with all its inequalities and discriminations.

Blasts Prejudiced Secretaries

White went on to charge that "certain members" of the Presidential secretariat, "distinctly unsympathetic to Negroes who ask unequivocally for full citizenship status as well as duties, may have given you less than a complete picture of the situation. I have been informed, for example, by distinguished white American visitors to the White House of violently denunciatory statements by one of your secretaries against Negroes who have come to the White House, not as mendicants, but have instead made their requests for righting of injustice against the Negro without subservience. I am informed that Mr. A. Philip Randolph and myself are the particular objects of attack."

"May we again strongly urge," White concluded, "that you restore the Fair Employment Practice Committee to its full and independent status prior to its transfer to the War Manpower Commission."

Meanwhile, final plans were being made in Washington for the holding of one of the biggest protest demonstrations that city has seen, Sunday night, January 24, at the Vermont Avenue Baptist Church. Five thousand citizens, representing every important church, club, civic, labor and fraternal organization in Washington and vicinity and many from out of town are expected to attend.

Speakers who will address the meeting include B. F. McLaurin, Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters; James B. Carey, CIO; A. Philip Randolph, Director, March On Washington Committee; Paul Scharrenburg, AFL; Theodore A. Jackson, president, Dining Car Employees Union; Dr. Lawrence M. Ervin and Thurman L. Dodson.

National organizations like the March-On-Washington Committee, Urban League, NAACP and labor unions and fraternal orders were concentrating on mobilizing their subsidiary bodies throughout the country for the purpose of veritably flooding the White House with protest telegrams and letters.

Among those organizations which have lined up in the all-out fight, in addition to those mentioned above, are The New York City Metropolitan Council on Fair Employment Practice, representing twenty-three organizations; International Labor Defense, National Negro Congress; National Maritime Union; Workers Defense League Socialist Party, and many others.

Is Asked to Reverse Hearing Postponement

the decision which is will profoundly affect se of things to come we w our request that the Fair Employment Practice Committee be restored to its completely independent status," said Walter White this week in a letter urging the President's reversal of McNutt's War Manpower order of the postponement of the January 25th Fair Employment Practice Committee hearing on discrimination in railroad employment.

"We want you to know," said Mr. White, "that we understand and are deeply sympathetic with you personally because of the difficulties which the making of such a decision will entail. We know the terrible dilemma you face in the 78th Congress because of the coalition formed against you and against all liberal legislation by members of the Congress of your own party from the South, and of certain members of the Republican party. We have been informed of the lobbying being done among these members of the Congress by representatives of the railway brotherhoods and some of the representatives of the railroads who bitterly oppose any action which would attempt to correct the vicious discrimination against Negroes on certain of the public carriers of the United States. But we respectively submit that surrender to such forces, or any manifestation of weakness in the face of the barrage from them would be disastrous not only to the Negro but for the principles of democracy itself. Temporizing can only encourage those persons who wish to perpetuate the status quo with all its inequalities and discriminations.

"We know, also, that certain members of your secretariat, who are distinctly unsympathetic to Negroes who ask unequivocally for full citizenship status as well as duties, may have given you less than a complete picture of the situation. I have been informed, for example, by distinguished white American visitors to the White House of violently denunciatory statements by one of your secretaries against Negroes who have not come to the White House as mendicants but have instead made their requests for righting of injustices against the Negro without subservience. I am informed that Mr. A. Philip Randolph and myself are the particular objects of attack."

WHAT NATION'S LEADERS THINK

Arthur W. Mitchell, former Congressman: "A grave and serious injustice is being done Negro morale and the cause of democracy in this country. It would seem to me that the usefulness of the Commission is at an end."

John O. Holly, Future Outlook League: "The stifling of FEPC seems a definite indication that policies of the railroads against Negroes are too shocking to reveal."

Willard S. Townsend, UTSEA president: "We who are committed to an all-out victory find it very difficult, with this definite bias action of the Manpower Commission, to maintain the high morale among Negroes who too, seek only inherent rights of humanity for which all nations and peoples are struggling."

J. W. Holley, Georgia educator: "The postponement of the hearing by order of Paul McNutt certainly indicates that FEPC is limited in power and the Committee should insist on independent action or resign."

Lester B. Granger, Urban League secretary: "It represents successful counterattack by reactionary forces and the way Negroes stand firm to repel this counter attack will determine rate of job progress we shall make during remainder of war."

Dr. Charlotte H. Brown, educator: "A distinct blow to the democracy for which we are encouraging our husbands, our fathers and our sons to die. America cannot win the war by crushing the spirits of our citizens black and white."

A. Philip Randolph, president, Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters: "It is a threat to democracy and plays directly into the hands of the Axis powers. The Negro people will insist that there be no substitute for FEPC hearings."

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21.—Paul V. McNutt, chairman of the War Manpower Commission (WMC), will meet with members of the Fair Employment Practice Committee (FEPC) tomorrow in an attempt to quiet the storm raised by his action in indefinitely postponing the Committee's public hearings into racial discrimination on Southern railroads.

The meeting will be the first held since the railroad hearings were called off indefinitely, and the first since Malcolm S. MacLean resigned as Committee chairman. MacLean, it was learned, also has resigned as president of Hampton Institute, Hampton, Va., to become the Navy's adviser on Negro problems.

JAN 21 1943

With some of the members known to be threatening to resign in protest against what they feel is McNutt's interference with efforts to enforce the national policy prohibiting racial discrimination on all war contracts a stormy session is expected.

Whether McNutt's action in calling off the public hearings under what obviously must have been strong pressure from Southerners in Congress and in the Democratic party is the forerunner of an attempt to kill the Committee entirely is doubted by Lawrence Cramer, executive secretary of FEPC.

JAN 21 19

"I have not yet seen an indication that the chairman of the War Manpower Commission is attempting to put a straight-jacket on the Committee," Cramer told PM.

Meantime, two groups have scheduled public demonstrations protesting McNutt's postponement of the railroad hearings. One on Sunday, by the Committee for the Organization of Colored Locomotive Firemen, will hear James B. Carey, secretary-treasurer of the CIO, and A. Philip Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, AFL. The other, on Monday, will present Max Yergan, president of the National Negro Congress, and Willard Townsend, president of the United Transport Service Employes, CIO.

What Paul V. McNutt Does:

"PM DAILY" NEW YORK, N.Y.

On Jan. 12, less than seven months after his Harlem speech, he announced that the Fair Employment Practice Committee's hearings on anti-Negro discrimination in the railroad industry had been "indefinitely postponed," an order which sidetracked the FEPC's most important exposure and threatened the whole drive against Jim Crow in war industry.

On Jan. 19, he turned away a delegation of 40 leaders of church, labor, and liberal organizations which appeared at his office to protest against the postponement.

On Jan. 20, agreed to meet with members of the FEPC in an attempt to quiet the storm.

What Paul V. McNutt Says:

"PMDAILY" N.Y.N.Y.

From a speech by the War Manpower Director before the Negro Labor Victory Conference at the Golden Gate Casino, in Harlem, last June 28.

"Discrimination—based on anything but a man's sheer worth—must go. Discrimination against every race must go. . . .

"We are not using Negroes enough. . . . There are still too many employers who stipulate on their hiring schedules that certain jobs are barred to Negroes. . . .

"Man's inhumanity to man has been laid heavily upon you. You have suffered grievous discrimination. And, when you demand a re-definition of fundamental American rights, your claims are just and sound. . . .

"Today, America is making up for lost time. From the great reservoir of more than 5,000,000 Negro workers, needed men will be found for the production lines at home. . . . It is unthinkable that our sacrifices shall be in vain. . . .

"We fight today two battles. We fight a battle for the world, a battle for the victory of free men everywhere. And we fight at home the battle of our souls. In every act, in every decision, in every word, our democracy and its ideals hang in the balance."

Emergency Action Needed to Save FEPC

"The Worker" New York, N.Y.

CONSIDERING the publicity that has been given recently to the cancellation of the Fair Employment Practice Committee railroad hearings, it may be well to review the background of this situation and the conditions on the railroads which first led to the demand for such hearings. These are the facts:

JAN 31 1943

American railroads are the backbone of American war production. A year ago, they were laboring under a manpower shortage of 320,000 men. The shortage has increased since then, month by month. To meet the shortage, Negro workers are available. Some, already in the industry, are awaiting promotion; others, outside, are waiting to be hired. But the policies of the companies and of some of the standard railway unions make such hiring and promotion impossible. Such Negroes as are employed in the industry are confined to low-pay, low-skill grades of work. Discrimination excludes the skill, experience and strength of Negro workers from serving their country at war.

JAN 31 1943

For more than a year, the railroad companies have refused to obey the President's Executive Order against discrimination. A hearing by the FEPC stood out as the one available means of solving this deadlock.

American citizens have built on the FEPC and on Executive Order 8802 their hopes for the future growth of democratic practice in American industry. Through the FEPC they hoped for the removal from our life of the Jim Crow hiring office, the help wanted notice "For White Only," and the mobilization of the nation's full manpower for winning the war. For the FEPC by opening jobs to Negroes, could have made possible finally the full participation of all Americans in our country's war effort. It is with such hopes that men can meet the sacrifices that war demands. When the hopes are destroyed, the fighting spirit, the morale, of Americans is destroyed with them.

America is not alone in the war. Victory can come only through the united victory of all freedom-loving peoples of the world. Among our allies are men of every race, color and creed. They are fighting for their freedom from the self-styled superraces of our enemies, the Nazis and the Japanese. At the same time, they are watching with concern the struggle for equal rights of the Negro people in this country.

The order to cancel the FEPC railroad hearings, therefore, is not only a blow at the unity and morale of a large section of our own population; any surrender to the symbols of our enemies is a blow struck at the unity and morale of the whole United Nations.

But the fight is not over. If the unions, newspapers, civil liberties groups, churches and community organizations will get into the fight now, we can save the FEPC. What is needed is a show of public support; call on the FEPC to stand together, to fill this breach in the line; carry the case to President Roosevelt and to the American people. We cannot beat the coalition of reactionaries by retreating.

This reactionary threat to the FEPC rail hearings must be turned from a threatened defeat to a forward victory for the progressive forces. It provides a lesson, and a ringing call to all groups to unite and act now. But the initiative is particularly up to us on the railroads: in every railroad center we must take the lead mobilizing the community to save the FEPC.

Telegrams and letters must advise President Roosevelt that the American people support Executive Order 8802 and the FEPC to the hilt.

Capital Transit Company Notifies FEPC It Will Abide By Order Banning Employment Jim Crow

WASHINGTON, D. C. — The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice was officially notified Wednesday that the Capital Transit Company, which has been declared a war industry, will abide by the directions issued to it to bring the employment policy of the bus and trolley system into line with Executive Order 8802. This order forbids discrimination against war workers because of their race, creed, color and national origin.

JAN 2 - 194

At the same time, the committee's attention was called to the position of the international union of the Amalgamated Association of Street, Electric Railway and Motor Coach Employees of America, on the issue of employing Negroes as platform operators on street cars and buses. Division 689, A. A. S. E. R. M. C. E. A., has a contract with the Capital Transit Company.

International President Writes

W. D. Mahon, international president of the union, an A.F. of L. Affiliate in a letter to J. G. Bigelow, president of 689, urged him to "take into consideration the fact that we are now engaged in a war in which the colored man is called upon to do the same line of duty that the white man is called upon to do."

Mr. Mahon declared that there are colored men who have held membership for years in the union, and stated that "there is no difference so far as I can find out" in the accident record of white and colored operations.

Mr. Mahon's letter, written in response to one from Mr. Bigelow, president of the local union, as given out by the committee reads:

"Your communication of August 4 received, informing me that you were confronted with the race problem in your Division and requesting that I give you information regarding the colored men in other Divisions of our Association.

"In reply I would inform you, first, that our organization is a part of the American Federation of Labor, whose policy is not to discriminate against a fellow worker on account of creed, color or nationality—that's the policy of this organization that you must always keep in mind when dealing with this matter.

"I know of no complaints in our organization anywhere over this matter. There was some little complaint in San Francisco some time ago, but that has disappeared and there is nothing of it at the present time. In many places, colored men are employed in this line of transportation and in many of our organizations there have been colored men for years holding membershiup.

"You ask regarding the records concerning accidents and so on. There is no record by any company that I know of, kept concerning the difference of accidents between colored and white and there is no difference so far as I can find out in that line ofwork. Their rocrds show the same as anyone's so far as their work is concerned.

JAN 2 - 1943

"I again would call your attention to the fact that it is a serious matter. I realize how some of your membership, being Southerners, feel on this matter, but you must take into consideration the fact that we are now engaged in a war in which the colored man is called upon to do the same line of duty that the white man is called upon to do, and any discrimination that would attract public attention, at this time, would be very detrimenal and especially coming out of Washington. So I would suggest that your members realize the situation and try to meet it in line with the policy of the organization."

Cancellation of Southern Hearing Comes as Shock

The Call 1/15/43

By ALVIN E. WHITE

WASHINGTON.—(ANP)—A set back came Saturday morning, when Paul V. McNutt, War Manpower commissioner, acting, it is said, upon instructions, ordered the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices to cancel the scheduled hearings set for Jan. 25-27 when the railroads of the South were to be called upon to explain their discriminatory practices against Negro firemen.

Culminating a series of secret conferences, the order came as a bombshell to the members of the staff of the FEPC who had been working diligently compiling material to be used in the public hearings.

This had been looked forward to as the one great act the FEPC could perform, striking at organized labor which consistently has through certain railroad unions barred and eliminated Negroes from jobs they had long held.

Pressuc From Memb rs

Blame for th action cannot be placed, but it is widely discussed that pressure from congress on the White House may have had a great deal to do with the calling off of the hearings, which would have undoubtedly shown deep rooted discriminatory practices against Negroes.

No one will assume the blame for giving the order, it is "one of those things" which will be accepted. Some say the complexion of the new congress and the uncertainty of legislation before that body caused misgivings as to holding the hearings at this time. Whoever is responsible is as guilty of a "stab" in the back as was Italy and Japan only this time, it was not a stab by a foreign enemy, it was a stab by enemies from within. Jan. 15, 1943

For weeks ever since the hearings were planned, there has been an air of suspense and uncertainty about them. The FEPC as such went ahead with its plans, engaged Jacob Epstein of New York; Charles H. Houston, Washington's brilliant Negro lawyer, and others to conduct the case, only to have them suddenly dashed away.

Birmingham Echo

This cancellation is the culmination of a series of events transpiring since the peurile Birminghas hearings, in which the FEPC almost lost its pants emerging in a "barrel" as far as prestige and glory were concerned. Vacuous statements as to the great benefits accrusing from this hearing have failed to materialize.

These hearings were held on June 18-20. Since that time, no public hearings have been held. One excuse or another leading up to the cancellations. In El Paso, Texas, where a public hearing was to have been held, the state department is said to have been the influence prohibiting these proceedings. They pointed to the Mexican situation as the reason. There has never been a clean cut explanation or statement as to why these hearings were never held.

When John P. Davis wrote the head of WMC relating to the holding of hearings on treatments accorded blind Negroes asking that a public hearing be ordered, he was informed that the committee itself was the one to make the hearings.

A Free Hand?

When the President wrote Walter White of the N.A.A.C.P. on the matter of transferring the FEPC back to an independent status, White was told the committee was placed under WMC to strengthen and to revitalize it, giving the group its own budget (which since has been emasculated to a mere name), so it could function of its own free will. The President further told Mr. White that the committee had a free hand to do its job effectively, which was a task in front of it.

These two statements do not stand up. According to the latest order from above the committee is in this instance robbed of its autonomy and forced to do the bidding of higher-ups whether they are in the White House or in congress. The committee's hands have been tied and tied by unseen powers.

On the surface it would appear that a powerful clique operates through certain agencies to halt proceedings when the FEPC gets too close to the core of the situation. It has happened before as in the El Paso business and it is happening here with the railroad cases. There is no doubt but that it may happen in Detroit, where there are nasty rumors already afloat. A nearing has been ordered in Detroit for February Perhaps it won't be held either.

Time to Act

It stands to reason that some strong influence is wrecking the FEPC and the executive order the President issued concerning discrimination. Jan. 15, 1943

Not once since there has been a President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices has the entire committee as such visited the White House to discuss its problems with the chief executive. In every instance, only the chairman, Dr. Malcolm MacLean, president of Hampton, and Lawrence Cramer, executive secretary, have visited the White House and then it is reported they discussed matters with Kentucky born Marvin McIntyre, the President's secretary.

The time has come for the committee itself to meet and decide whether this is to continue or to have a meeting with the President letting him say just what the committee's function is and how far they can go. Then, if they are satisfied to serve under those conditions, it is up to them.

Nothing less than a full committee visiting the White House could achieve this result.

Will the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices continue?

THE FAIR EMPLOYMENT COMMITTEE

JAN 30 1943

The opinion prevails in many substantial quarters that the action of the Manpower Board in calling off the scheduled railroad hearings without the consent of the Fair Employment Practices committee, has damaged beyond repair the quasi judicial power of the committee.

JAN 30 1943

Since the committee is no longer free to carry out its investigative functions without interference from Mr. McNutt, its Negro members should be realistic enough to sense the liquidation of that body through pressure from southern politicians.

Under the circumstances it is not extraneous to say that the Fair Employment Practices committee has now entered into competition with a circus show under a side tent. It has no more influence now with the hard boiled and hard headed industrialists than has a circus barker. From the point of view of their own respectability, the remaining members of the committee should tender their resignation without ceremony.

PM's Bureau

JAN 1 9 1943

PM Exclusive

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—The U. S. Government appeared to be faltering today in two of its major efforts to make democracy mean something to Negro as well as white Americans.

Malcolm MacLean, chairman of the Fair Employment Practices Committee (FEPC), has quit to take a job as adviser on Negro affairs for the Navy Dept., it was learned.

At the same time, Judge William H. Hastie, civilian aide to Secretary of War Stimson and adviser on Negro problems, announced his resignation.

Negro circles in Washington read into MacLean's move from FEPC to the Navy Dept. the beginning of the end of that Committee and its attempt to enforce the President's policy forbidding racial discrimination in the employment of workers in war plants.

JAN 1 9 1943

Sided With McNutt

Some Negro leaders predict that no successor to MacLean would be appointed by the President and that the Committee would be allowed to die.

MacLean, president of Hampton Institute, a Negro College at Hampton, Va., it was pointed out, is the only member of the FEPC who has sided with Paul V. McNutt, chairman of the War Manpower Commission (WMC), in the latter's suppression of the FEPC's attempt to hear charges of discrimination against the railroad unions.

That he, the most conservative member, should be going, it is felt, means that the more liberal members would certainly have no chance of survival.

The remaining Committee members will meet Friday of this week for the first time since McNutt intervened to cancel the railroad hearings.

The Committee has on its immediate agenda a series of hearings to investigate charges of discrimination lodged against war contractors in the Detroit area.

Malcolm S. MacLean

These hearings have been scheduled for later this month, or early in February. Fear that McNutt also might prevent the Committee from conducting these hearings was dispelled partially yesterday, when McNutt told a press conference that there was no question of postponement of the hearings and that there would be no attempt to block them.

JAN 1 9 1943

Judge Hastie's Resignation

Judge Hastie's resignation from the War Dept. ended a 2½-year struggle to end discrimination in the Army.

Hastie, first Negro to be appointed to a Federal judgeship, was made special assistant to the Secretary of War in October, 1940—a few days before the last national election.

Since he went to work, the War Dept. has hired many Negroes for white collar positions (4000 were taken on in six months last year), a Negro tank battalion has been formed, and there has been no segregation at officers' training schools.

But Judge Hastie was unable to persuade the Army to expand aviation opportunities for Negro pilots. At the present the only aviation training open to Negroes is limited to the school at Tuskegee, Ala., which turns out 33 pursuit pilots a year.

JAN 1 9 1943

FEPC

Hastie also was turned down in his attempt to have the War Dept. issue a pamphlet instructing all troops about respect for Negro soldiers, just as it issued pamphlets instructing the troops on the proper conduct and attitudes toward the English, the North Africans, Australians, etc.

CIO Hits Halt To FEPC Probe

"Daily Worker" N.Y. N.Y.

JAN 1 3 1943

(Daily Worker Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—The CIO today sharply condemned as a "serious blow" at National morale the decision of War Manpower Chief Paul V. McNutt to postpone hearings on discrimination against Negroes in the railroad industry by the Fair Employment Practices Committee.

McNutt was urged by the CIO "to demonstrate his good faith to the minority groups in this country giving the Fair Employment Practices Committee a green light to move ahead at once with its investigation of racial discrimination in American industry."

The CIO made its public protest as both CIO and AFL leaders were understood to be pressing for a meeting of FEPC within the next few days at which the anti-discrimination body could act in a body.

JAN 1 3 1943

It is expected that at this forthcoming meeting a request will be made for a conference with the President to determine whether FEPC will be permitted to function without further interference.

The CIO's protest was made by James B. Carey, secretary of the CIO and chairman of its committee against racial discrimination.

Carey said that McNutt's action in calling off the FEPC hearings on the railroad industry "is a serious blow to the war morale of more than 10,000,000 Negro citizens and to all white persons who know that racial discrimination is a Hitlerite weapon that should be stamped out by believers in democracy.

"Mr. McNutt's announcement constitutes a setback of the first magnitude on the home front of this nation's war effort. Unless speedily corrected, it may well develop into an equally serious obstacle to achieving full unity among all the peoples of the United Nations, regardless of color or creed, in their global war against the Axis."

Newspapermen Map Plans For FEPC Continuation

Meet In NAACP Office In New York January 30

"Atlanta Daily World" Atlanta, Ga.

JAN 2 6 1943

NEW YORK—(S N S)— Negro editors and publishers from as far west as Oklahoma met Saturday at the office of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to plan a campaign for the continuation of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice as an independent government agency for investigation of discriminations against workers in war industries on account of color, creed or national origin. The following statement was issued by the group:

JAN 2 6 1943

"The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice was appointed by President Roosevelt in July, 1941. This month Chairman Paul V. McNutt of the War Manpower Commission postponed indefinitely public hearings which the Committee had scheduled into discriminations against Negro workers on railroads serving as vital arteries of the war effort hauling munitions, troops and war workers.

JAN 2 6 1943

ASK SUPPLEMENTAL ORDER

"Mr. McNutt declared that the railroads held no war contracts and might not be within the jurisdiction of the Committee. We declare that if railroads are not technically subject to the jurisdiction of the Committee, the President should supplement his Executive Order 8802 to bring them within its scope.

"We request the President to direct the Committee to reschedule the public hearings which Chairman McNutt cancelled. Wiping out the color line in war industries is not only necessary for the full use of the nation's non-white allies of the good faith of the American Government in its proclamation of freedom and democracy as the objectives of the war. The attempts of reactionary forces in Congress and certain high-placed government officers to preserve the color line in war industries furnishes fuel for Nazi and Japanese propaganda in Africa and Asia that the four freedoms do not apply to the colored races. The Negro people and the Negro press are one hundred per cent behind the war effort but are determined that democracy shall function at home as well as be a policy laid down for foreign consumption."

Among those attending the conference were: Ira F. Lewis, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Chester A. Franklin, Kansas City, Mo.; Thomas W. Young, Jr., Norfolk, Va.; Roscoe Dunjee, Oklahoma City, Okla.; C. B. Powell, A. C. Powell, and Ludlow Werner, New York City. John Sengestacke, Chicago, Ill.; A. G. Shields, Little Rock, Ark.; Carl Murphy, Baltimore, Md.; Louis Martin, Detroit, Mich.; and Claude Barnett. Chicago, Ill.

Report Work-or-Fight Job Bias To Local FEPC, Workers Told

FEB 13 1943

The issuance of the work-or-fight order applying to men between 18 and 38, deferred for dependency and working in any of 65 nonessential occupations, caused the War Manpower Commission regional office Friday, Feb. 5, to warn that New York employers discriminating against Negroes, Jews, aliens, or other minority groups, would be prosecuted "vigorously."

The drastic order may result in a piling up of violations of President Roosevelt's Executive Order 8802 against discrimination in war industries because almost one-fourth of the cases of violation have come from New York City.

The WMC is asking any persons who are subjected to discrimination, provided they sought jobs on their own initiative, to refer complaints to the FEPC regional office, 11 W 42 st., room 2240.

REPORT BIAS TO FEPC

Workers who are referred to jobs by the United States Unemployment Service and discriminated against should report back to the USES interviewer who sent him out.

FEB 13 1943

Only those complaints originating in New York State will be handled directly by the New York regional office. Complaints against firms in New Jersey or the New England States will be accepted but sent to FEPC representatives in those regions for handling, it was revealed by Edward Lawson, acting examiner-in-charge.

FEPC Probe Here Opens War Jobs

Twenty-five qualified Negro workers, whose applications had been passed over by officials of the Anaconda Wire and Cable Company of Yonkers, N. Y. during a recent hiring campaign, were called in and put to work last month following an investigation by officials of the New York regional office of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice.

Many had filed for the jobs last summer. Despite the fact that they more than met the company's specifications, they had been told to wait until they were called. They had never been called.

Examination of a cross-section of the company's records showed that of 48 typical Negro applicants, 25 met the basic requirements for mill workers and five qualified as inspectors. None of these had been hired.

FEB 13 1943

Following a conference with Edward Lawson of the regional FEPC staff, Veto DeLustro, superintendent of the Anaconda plant, agreed to have all qualified Negro applicants called in and reconsidered. As a result the 25 men and women have since gone to work and many more have been approved for openings as they occur. Of those not hired, many already had found employment in other Westchester County war industries.

FEB 13 1943

According to William A. Pateman, personnel director of the company, the Negro workers "have proven to be competent and loyal employees and fit into our operations."

FDR 'Revives' Fading FEPC; Bill Would Make It Fool-Proof

FEB 13 1943

WASHINGTON—A conference to consider a revision and strengthening of the Fair Employment Practices Committee and the possible re-scheduling of the postponed Southern railroad discrimination hearings were on the Executive docket here this week.

A White House statement released last week contained the following announcement:

"For nearly two years the Fair Employment Practice Committee and its executive director have done an excellent piece of work placing workers in war jobs. They, however, have been handicaped by the fact that the members of the committee were working on a part-time volunteer basis and did not have powers or personnel commensurate with their responsibilities.

FEB 13 1943

"Therefore the President thinks it advisable to review the situation and that, when the machinery has been established to meet the problem, the hearings in the railroad case and in any other cases which may have been temporarily postponed will be continued."

MARCANTONIO SPONSORS BILL

Meanwhile, Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP-N.Y.) introduced a bill which would give the FEPC broad powers to stamp out discrimination in employment by any contractor or subcontractor holding a Government contract.

FEB 13 1943

Also under the Marcantonio bill the FEPC would be empowered to order the hiring or reinstatement of any person found to have been kept from employment because of discrimination.

Negro Is Indispensable Says Secretary Ickes

Sir: In fields and factories and the armed forces, American Negoes are working and fighting for the common cause. They are an indispensable part of our total war effort, and their devotion is beyond praise. Their contribution to the war—their war and our war—is of such a nature that it should go far towards the eradication of race prejudice once and for all.

Hail Victory On FEPC

FEB 5 1943

President Roosevelt's instructions to Manpower Commissioner McNutt to call a conference for revising and strengthening the powers of the Fair Employment Practice Committee brought commendation yesterday from leaders of labor and of the Negro people.

Saul Mills, secretary of the Greater New York Industrial Union Council, CIO, said that the President's order to McNutt showed that Mr. Roosevelt, in having originally set up the FEPC, "wanted a sincere and effective job done to eliminate discrimination in war industries."

"It is unfortunate that the excellent work of that committee was sidetracked for a time," Mr. Mills said, "but now that the FEPC will be reconstituted, we may expect to see this most essential work of investigating discrimination go on even better than before."

The White House statement announcing the President's decision said:

FEB 5 1943

"For nearly two years, the President said, the Fair Employment Practices Committee and its executive director have done an excellent piece of work, placing workers in war jobs. They, however, have been handicapped by the fact that the members of the committee were working on a part-time voluntary basis, and did not have powers or personnel commensurate with their responsibilities.

"The President said he considers it advisable therefore to review the situation, and that, when the machinery has been established to meet the problem, the hearings in the railroad case and in any other cases which may have been temporarily postponed will be continued."

Joseph Ford, administrator of the Peoples Committee, of which Councilman Adam Clayton Powell is chairman, said the President was to be congratulated and that out of the conference should come enough material to break down job discrimination in the railroad industry, "the breaking down of which is so necessary to winning the war against fascism."

FEB 5 194

Ferdinand K. Smith, co-chairman of the Negro Labor Victory Committee, yesterday sent Mr. McNutt a telegram requesting: an appointment "for the purpose of discussing" the President's "demand for rescheduling of the hearings on job discrimination in the railroad industry and your new 'work-or-fight' order and how it affects the Negro people."

BIG VICTORY

The President's announcement was "a tremendous victory for the war effort, for national unity and for Negro rights," in the opinion of Benjamin J. Davis, Jr., executive secretary of the Upper Harlem and chairman of the New York County Communist Party.

Graham Reported Reluctant to Head Revised Five-Man Board

WASHINGTON, Feb. 5.—Plans for a conference of interested groups to reconstitute the Fair Employment Practice Committee (FEPC) and give it broader powers to guard against racial discrimination went forward today within the War Manpower Commission (WMC

FEB 5 1943

However, the precise time of the conference has not been decided. Plans call for creation of a full-time, five-man commission to replace the old FEPC. President Roosevelt approved them yesterday. P.M. Daily

Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt is understood to be casting about for a chairman and other personnel. Frank Graham, president of the University of North Carolina and a member of the War Labor Board (WLB), has been mentioned, but is understood to be reluctant to leave the WLB.

While most groups opposing discrimination in war industry felt hopeful about the turn of events, Walter White, executive secretary of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, was reserved in his comments. New York, N.Y.

"It is gratifying to know that the President wishes the Fair Employment Practices Committee to have more power and more personnel, but it is not clear why a conference of organizations is necessary to accomplish these ends," he said. The NAACP and other organizations already have stated their position.

FEB 5 1943

"The war is not waiting for conferences; workers are needed in industry now. Let the President, without further delay, give the committee such power and personnel as may be necessary for the accomplishment of its vital tasks."

Transit Companies of Other Cities Have Orders from FEPC

Tribune
Philadelphia. Pa

PHILADELPHIA.—Malcolm Ross, chairman of the FEPC, said, after hearing opening statement by the union to effect that committee had picked out Philadelphia and has not directed efforts at other communities:

"It is true that a formal directive did issue in this case. but there have been complaints against other transportation systems and there has been some informal negotiation in those cases.

"This was the procedure used in Chicago with the result that platform men were hired. The facts are that we have intervened in other transit cases and other cases are pending in the informal stage."

Transit Co. Workers Unaware Union Was Jimcrowing Them

RALEIGH (TINY) JOHNSON, employed by Philadelphia Transportation Company as electric welder. Interview by George Crockett, FEPC attorney.

Q—Have you ever taken up with the company this matter of upgrading of colored men to conductors and motormen?

A—Yes, as far back as August, 1941, other employees like myself got together and formed a committee. We saw that there was surely going to be a need for extra help and we felt it an opportune time to go to the company and ask for upgrading. We finally met with Ralph Senter, president of the company, and Dr. A. A. Mitten, chairman of industrial relations.

Ralph Johnson

Q—What was the company's response?

"Further Consideration"

A—They admitted that changes were taking place and said they would give our request further consideration. They also agreed to a further conference and at that time, Wayne Hopkins of the Armstrong Association sat with us.

Q—Was anything done about the union's policy?

A—We were told there were certain seniority rights involved and a suggestion was made that colored motormen and conductors be used only on Lombard Street line.

Q—Was anything said relative o this customs clause in the nion's contract?

A—It was verbally agreed that e company would call in union presentatives relative to this ause, but a misunderstanding deloped and the company felt we ould call in the union.

Q—Did the company ever have a meeting with the union?

A—Not to my knowledge.

Q—Did colored fellows meet with the union representatives?

A—Yes, we met with two members of the executive board.

Q—What was decided?

A—Nothing.

DEC 18 1943

Ask NAACP to Help

Q—What did you do then?

A—We took the matter to the NAACP which held a series of meetings with the union and finally sent a letter to the union asking for upgrading and employment opportunities.

Q—Was the NAACP letter ever taken up?

A—Not that I know of.

Q—Before you had this union did you have any other union?

A—We had a Co-operative Association.

Q—Did colored hold any office?

A—Yes, an executive committee.

Q—Is it your view that this clause in present contract refers to rules and customs of the old co-operative?

A—Yes.

By Clark C. Hodgson, attorney for PRT Employees' Union:

Q—When you were a delegate in the union, did you offer any resolution regarding upgrading of colored men?

A—No.

By Milton Webster, FEPC member:

DEC 18 1943

Q—You state that you're familiar with the operation of the prior co-operative organization's agreement with the company. Was it your idea that when the company referred to past practices it meant race was involved?

One Large Family

A—No, it was my idea we were all one large family.

Q—You're a member of this union that you're paying dues in but the union is freezing you in certain jobs and failing to upgrade you. Did you know that?

A—I did not know that.

Q—Did you know until you heard Mr. Coburn this morning that colored members were limited to certain jobs, colored men's jobs?

FEPC

A—I did not. I knew we couldn't disrupt seniority, but not that.

Q—Is it your opinion that colored men in the union knew of this interpretation of this clause put on it by the union?

A—No, they did not.

Q—You don't think they'll take it lightly and continue to pay dues?

A—No, I know they're disheartened and I'm sure they won't continue to pay dues.

Ruling on Hiring Policies of 22 Railroads, Brotherhoods' Tactics Will Affect 400,000 Rail Workers

By B. M. PHILLIPS

Editor, Baltimore AFRO-AMERICAN

WASHINGTON

A ruling by the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee which completed a four-day inquiry into hiring policies of the nation's top railroads and brotherhoods on Saturday will affect the working conditions of approximately 400,000 railroad workers.

It is expected that the committee, headed by Msg. Francis J. Haas, will review the evidence presented to it last week and because the majority of the twenty-two railroads admitted they discriminated against colored workers on account of race, their cases will be carried direct to President Roosevelt for action.

None of the fourteen labor unions and railroad brotherhoods charged with participating in discrimination against railroad employees appeared before the body when it sat last week in the Departmental Auditorium nor were replies received from three of them, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen and Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

A spokesman for the committee told the AFRO the unions took the position that they were merely parties to the charge and not subject to make formal answers.

Alderman Defends Practice

At the conclusion of the hearings late Saturday, Msg Haas called for statements by the representatives of the railroads.

Sidney Alderman, white, counsel for two of the roads who also made an opening statement on behalf of all the railroads in which he said that the "customs of the South" would not countenance employment of colored people in all types of jobs, defended failure of counsel to cross-examine witnesses.

It was the general feeling that this failure was intended to sabotage the hearings.

"The facts were all brought out," he said, and "there was no need to cross-examine witnesses."

Msg. Haas said that the committee with the evidence before it would "now proceed on the basis of the record and take such action as the committee deems appropriate."

Union Pacific Denies Charges

The Union Pacific Railroad of which William Jeffers, former rubber czar is president, was the only one of the railroads to deny the charges of discrimination and promised an investigation because if true they violated company policy.

Before the hearings ended, he road which is charged with efusing to upgrade persons f Mexican descent and colred people, sent a telegram the committee categorically admitting discrimination ainst Mexicans by stating at four Mexicans had been red, three as helpers and one as boilermaker, jobs which witnesses said had heretofore been denied them.

Bartley C. Crum, chief committee counsel, said that the attitude of the Union Pacific was what might have been expected from a company headed by a man of Mr. Jeffers's reputation of a public servant and that the company's position "constitutes a notable contribution" to the committee.

Mr. Crum declared that there exists a large untapped pool of labor among thousands of able-bodied colored Americans whose full skills and services are denied to the railroad industry by dint of a long history of discrimination which is in violation of President Roosevelt's executive edicts, 8802 and 9346.

Dr. Herbert R. Northrup, former member of the department of economics at Harvard and Cornell and at present a member of the National War Labor Board, was the first witness for the FEPC.

He pointed out that the colored worker is denied a voice in nearly all railroad unions; that his seniority is overlooked; that he is seldom promoted to a better job and that he is limited in the kind of employment he may receive.

"Unless something is done soon, I doubt that there will be a colored fireman or brakeman on the railroads by 1950," Dr. Northrup predicted.

Hits Federal Agencies

Dr. Northrup, author of a book, "Organized Labor and the Negro," soon to be released, stated further that two government agencies, the National Mediation Board and the National Railway Adjustment Board, have sanctioned discrimination by railroads and brotherhoods against colored employees.

Called to the stand Wednesday and Thursday were colored firemen of the railroads who, under questioning by Mr. Crum and his co-counsel, Charles Houston of Washington and Harold Stevens of New York City, related how the railroads' agreement with the brotherhoods and their policies of racial discrimination operate to keep them from being upgraded to engineer jobs and from gaining employment in other capacities, despite their seniority ratings.

New FEPC Holds Its First Session in Washington

JUL 17 1943

Members of the recently organized Fair Employment Practice Committee who held a two-day session at their headquarters in Washington last week. Seated around the conference table are: Miss Sara Southall, supervisor of employment and service, International Harvester Company, Chicago; P. B. Young, Sr., publisher, Norfolk, Va. Journal and Guide; Samuel Zemurray, president, United Fruit Company, New Orleans; Rt. Rev. Monsignor Francis J. Haas, chairman; George Johnson, chief investigator; John Brophy of the Congress of Industrial Organizations; Milton P. Webster, international vice president, Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, Chicago; and Boris Shiskin, American Federation of Labor, Washington.

was concerned with discrimination against employees in the dining car and shop divisions of railroads.

Witnesses testified that railroads prohibit colored employees from advancing above laborers' rank in the various shops and roundhouses and that while colored men are permitted to serve as waiters-in-charge and perform all the duties of stewards and even receive stewards' pay, they are not hired and classified as such.

One of these waiters-in-charge, Frank D. Calmore of San Antonio, Tex., who holds a law degree, told how the Missouri, Kansas, and Texas Railroad did not learn he was without "administrative ability and balanced judgment" during the 12 years he acted as waiter-in-charge but discovered this only when he asked for a promotion to steward.

Northwestern Grad Talks

Another witness, Richard W. Smith, a graduate of Northwestern University and for ten years waiter on the N.Y. Central, said that the Joint Council of the International Alliance of Hotel and Restaurant Employees, of which he is secretary-treasurer, is only seeking for colored employees an "equal chance for employment and advancement to jobs for which we are qualified."

The FEPC was scheduled to air bias charges against the railroads on two previous occasions, in December, 1942, and again in January of this year, but these hearings were postponed. Last week's public airing was the first by the recognized committee which has authority under Executive Order 8802 and 9346 to probe discrimination in industries with war contracts.

Members of the committee are P. B. Young, Sr., Norfolk publisher; Milton P. Webster, Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters; Miss Sara Southall, personnel manager, International Harvester Co.; Boris Shishkin, AFL; Samuel Zemurray, United Fruit Co., and John Brophy, CIO.

Hearings Of Great Importance

Daily World

9-12-43

THE FORTHCOMING hearings into discriminatory practices of Southern railroads against Negro workers offers the federal government its greatest opportunity to really prove to the nation's largest minority, many of whose members are frankly skeptical that all this talk about Four Freedoms and the Atlantic Charter, applies to them to the same degree that it does to all other peoples.

Encouched in the secretly drawn Southeastern Conference Agreements between Southern railroads and big railroad brotherhoods, whose membership is limited to white only, but who boldly claim to represent the hundreds of Negro rail workers, are all the elements of injustice, discrimination and inaquality that have plagued black Americans since they were ostensibly freed from slavery and voted constitutional protection.

MACKAY

HEARINGS SIGNIFICANT

The hearings for this season assume national significance. It is one of the very few times that a government agency has moved toward seeing that Negroes actually are accorded some of the guarantees voted as their right with the adoption of the 14th and 15th amendments—amendments which thus far have benefited labor unions, corporations, just about everybody except the black folk they were designed to assist.

Certainly the vicious attacks to which Negro railroad firemen, brakemen and trainmen have been made victims, violates literally and in principal all those noble pronouncements of the Four Freedoms.

How can a man be free from want when his traditional employer gangs up with his fellow workers of a different race to see that he is kicked out of his job? That is what happened on February 8, 1941 when the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, all of whose members are white, and which under the Railway Labor Act was given the right to "represent" all firemen, concluded its insidious agreement with southeastern carriers.

"PROMOTABLE" IS JOKER

This is how this agreement reads in part 1....the proportion of non-promotable firemen and helpers on other than steam power, shall not exceed 50 per cent in each class of service....on each individual carrier." None may be hired on roads which at the time did not hire them. 2. "....all new runs and all vacancies created by death, dismissal, resignation or disqualification shall be filled by promotable men."

The joker of course is the insertion in the contracts of the word, "promotable." Railroad custom dictates that engineers are promoted from the ranks of firemen; conductors from brakemen and trainmen. Real democracy could rule that color should be no consideration at promotion time. But real democracy doesn't necessarily mean democracy American style. As a consequence within the present century no Negro firemen who was recognizable as such has been promoted to engineer, no Negro brakeman or trainman has been made a conductor.

Under the pernicious working of the southeastern agreement Negro firemen have become vanishing Americans. They have been proportionately restricted on the jobs which they have traditionally held, they are barred from work on other railroads, and must be replaced with whites as they are retired, dismissed, or leave for the armed forces to fight for a democracy whose essential protection they have not always enjoyed.

ELEVEN KILLED ON JOB

The eleven Negro firemen who fell victims to the foul bullets of cowardly assassins as they shoveled coal on their runs through the southland certainly never realized President Roosevelt's golden promise of 'freedom from fear.' They were just as much martyrs to the cause of freedom as are the soldiers who sacrifice their lives in our united battle against human oppressors all over the world.

The fight of the firemen then, is clearly part and parcel of the fight against all fascism, whether it be represented by Hitler or by the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers. It cannot be viewed as just another in many recent efforts to drive Negroes from good-paying jobs. It is more than that.

The outcome of the hearings too will influence greatly the economic position of Negroes in the post-war world. It is the first drive to put Negroes out of industrial jobs. The fact that it pre-dates our entry in the war does not matter. It should be plain that if white firemen can get away with their fascist pogrom of racial job exclusion, we stand to lose not only all the job gains made during the war, but many of those employment opportunities which we now view as traditional.

POINT OF STRUGGLE

The hearings thus become the focal point of the impending struggle between those who believe in the basic justice of human equality, and those who profit by the doctrine of "white supremacy" and who lead in the program against black workers.

We are winning against the fascists abroad, it is to be hoped that the decision of the FEPC after the railroad hearings will be the signal of victory against those fascists who make life miserable for black Americans here at home.

THE HORIZON

Clapper Is Unrealistic and Amoral in Condemning FEPC Railroad Action

By P. L. PRATTIS

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa

IT is not to difficult to ignore the patently cock-eyed sophisms of Westbrook Pegler because he aims, not to please, but to displease, to incite controversy. But Raymond Clapper is not Westbrook Pegler. Many Americans are influenced by what they consider the balanced judgment of Mr. Clapper. He is right and impartial on so many issues that you may not be mentally prepared to detect the fact when his train of reasoning begins to run off the track. Mr. Clapper is important to minorities, because, in a sense, he speaks the mind of that considerable group of white Americans who think that they are thoroughly judicial, fair and practical. He, like they, would deny that he has any racial prejudice and he, like they, is against racial discrimination—in principle.

Mr. Prattis

MR. CLAPPER's observations on the directive of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices to the railroads, ordering abolition of the practice of discrimination in employment, and on the railroads' reply to the committee, are not only in error, but they constitute a special problem in themselves.

"Only mischief, disunity and further irritations of race relations can come from the point being pressed by the FEPC that the railroads must open up more operating jobs to Negroes," writes Mr. Clapper.

Obviously, Mr. Clapper is thinking in terms of existing racial prejudice in this country and those who harbor it. He is not one of them. He essays the role of the dispassionate, objective commentator. But he believes that fairer employment practices on the railroads will increase the rancor and resentment among prejudiced Americans and possibly add to their numbers. He ignores the existence of thirteen million American citizens who are victims of this discrimination and the reaction among them to this continued discrimination. In effect, he counsels that it is better to ignore the feelings of these thirteen millions, who simply seek the opportunities due any and all Americans, than to challenge the attitude of color-prejudiced Americans who have sought in every way possible to prevent the Negro from making his full contribution to the war effort.

MR. CLAPPER continues: "Racial discrimination should be discouraged wherever practical . . . But such a doctrinaire and arbitrary insistence on racial equality as this committee insists on, is more likely to aggravate our problem than to solve it."

One wonders if Mr. Clapper has no sense of shame to restrain him from writing that "racial discrimination should be discouraged WHEREVER PRACTICAL." Isn't that the same as saying that it should ONLY be discouraged where practical that it should only be discouraged where those who harbor racial prejudice agree that it should be discouraged? Mr. Clapper is quite willing that we should go the limit in combatting Japanese domination in the Pacific and German domination in Europe, but he would restrict our fight against domination of some Americans to the terms proposed by those who dominate. That doesn't make sense and Mr. Clapper knows it.

HE IS UNREALISTIC

MR. CLAPPER says that the railroads are more realistic than the President's committee because they display more solicitude for existing prejudices. He attributes to the railroads the belief that "it is utterly unrealistic to suppose that problems of such delicacy (of paying all Americans the same wage for the same job and of giving all Americans a chance to advance according to merit) can be solved out of hand by the fiat of the committee."

I believe the committee is more realistic than either Mr. Clapper or the railroads. Simply, racial prepudice, either that shown by Germany or that of the Anglo-Saxon nations, Great Britain and the United States, is at the core of this bloody, destructive global struggle in which civilization is involved. Mr. Clapper will not deny this. He knows that to win the war and the peace we have got to convince the hundreds of millions of colored people in Asia that our future relations with them are not to be characterized by the arrogance and racial snobbery which was true of the past. Most Americans know this. Most Americans are willing to try to prove this, to make some concessions in respect to those peoples far away. But Americans, as a whole, refuse to see the relationship between their racial attitudes at home and their racial attitudes abroad. They fail to understand that as long as their prejudices run rampant at home, they will continue to be suspect in Asia, Africa and South America. Billions of dollars in lend-lease cannot change this fact.

That is the realistic point of view which Americans stubbornly refuse to face.

GIVE SONS, HOLD BIAS

AMERICANS don't want to give up their prejudices. They would rather give up their sons and daughters than to give up their prejudices. Just as Negroes fight for an opportunity to work, they also insist that they be given their chance to die on the battlefront. But racial prejudice, so far, forbids. Negro fighters are kept off the battleships. Negro soldiers are held behind the lines to perform the menial, drudge-like tasks of the Army. Of course, a few Negroes are killed and wounded. But young white America, because of prejudice, is being forced to do a disproportionate share of the dying in this war. The next generation of white Americans is being sacrificed on the battlefield. The next generation of black Americans is not. This shows how stubborn race prejudice is.

DANGEROUSLY CONFUSED

I DEPLORE the fact that Mr. Clapper should refer to the delicacy of the problem. That has been the attitude of Americans ever since this country was born with the stain of human slavery on its flag. As a whole, this nation has never had the moral courage to face the issue of racial prejudice. This issue is a closet of dirty clothes in the house of democracy, the door to which we try to keep closed. There are limits to the capacity of the closet. There'll come a time when dirty clothes will be strewn all through the house. This is the time which Mr. Clapper and others will not see. They do not realize that this sin of racial prejudice weakens the character of the nation, that it is a problem which concerns America, as a whole, more than it does the minorities which suffer from it. Any malady, so insidious, so deadly, must be worked on, no matter how delicate the operation. Mr. Clapper is like the man who would take a chance with the ravages of a disease rather than trust to an operation. Sometimes, such persons are cowardly; sometimes, they are stupid. Mr. Clapper is neither. He is mildly but dangerously, confused.

RAIL CASE

Administration Must Now Take Positive Step In Order to Save FEPC

DEC 25 1943

By HORACE R. CAYTON

Courier
Pittsburgh, P

IT'S up to Mr. Big now. What I'm talking about is the case of the southern railroads who've informed the FEPC that they're not going to abide by its directive. That hot potato is being dropped into the President's lap and personally, I can't figure what he's going to do with it. Here's the story ... but you know it already. FEPC called together the southern railroads, both management and the unions, to explain why the number of Negro firemen had been drastically reduced over a period of the last few years. In the lower end of the Mississippi valley, Louisiana and Tennessee especially, from 1919 intermittently through the summer of 1934 the competition between Negro and white firemen had been better. As one method of controling the competition and of circumventing the seniority rights of Negro firemen was a reign of terror which lasted from 1921 to 1922 with other outbreaks in 1931 and 1934. During this time at least twenty-one Negroes were killed and the effects of this violence were enough to force Negroes to agree to agreements which virtually eliminated them from the industry. Testimony in the four-day FEPC hearing held on September 15 to September 18 brought out the fact that on certain roads firemen, who before the last war, were eighty or ninety per cent Negro had been reduced by 1929 to fifty per cent or less. These reductions were accomplished by continued alterations of contracts between the unions and the roads, with each new change reducing further both the percentage of Negro workers and the type of service and territory in which Negroes could be employed. The violence described above made Negroes willing to accept almost without complaint, these changes.

Mr. Cayton

That's not going to mean much either until the President comes out on this railroad business and gets it straight.

WELL, boys and girls, the point is this—the reaction has set in. There is not much to be expected from Washington from here on out. The question of the position of the Negro has to be settled on the local level. Perhaps a mass movement among Negroes dealing with local questions at a local level may gain proportion so that it may again influence national policy. But it's pretty evident that we're back again where we started from years ago before the New Deal, with the necessity of working on local problems with local groups without looking for much help in Washington.

COMMITTEE TO MEET DEC. 27

All this might seem to indicate that I think the FEPC is dead. Probably no committee in Washington has had more obituary notices than has FEPC. I was talking to one of the members recently and he said they are tired of continually being buried by the Negro press every time there is a crisis — that their friends killed them more often than did their enemies. I don't want to fall into this error, but at the same time if the President and the administration can see their way out of this present dilemma without on one hand, taking a more positive step than they're willing to in the matter of race relations or on the other of antagonizing the solid south, they're better than I think they are. Anyway I'd like to be in the next meeting of the committee which is going to be held in Washington on December 27 to see what comes next.

At the hearing, management made a token representation and the unions didn't even appear officially. After much hullabaloo and fanfare the companies and the unions were instructed to cease and desist their prejudiced behavior. The companies have recently announced that they don't intend to pay attention to the directive and the Committee can take a flying jump into the ocean for all they care.

NOW, what comes next? Well, the only thing for the committee to do is to report it to the President and wait for him to act. From where I sit this puts the President in a tough spot. Not only would all of the gains which have been made for Negro labor be jeopardized if the President does not crack down on the southern railroads, but it will make it impossible for this committee to continue its work of helping to utilize more economically the total manpower of the nation. Just a week or so ago the Office of War Information stated in a release that "Women and non-white persons constitute the greatest reservoir of new workers (for the transportation industry) but so far these have been under-utilized by transportation in general." Said the ODT: "In the case of Negroes, much remains to be done to make possible their promotion into more skilled and into supervisory jobs."

MUST RETURN TO LOCAL PRESSURES

The same day that the railroads announced that they would not abide by the directive of the FEPC, the chairman issued a directive to Tom Ray and his outfit of boilermakers on the Pacific Coast instructing them to stop all segregation in the Boilermakers' Union.

Kansas City Call Mo.

A Job for Citizens Everywhere

With the opening of the important railroad hearings in Washington this week, attention again is focused on the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, popularly known as the FEPC.

The FEPC and its public hearings constitute the most powerful weapon the Negro has today in combatting discrimination in employment. Before FEPC, we merely complained when we failed to get jobs because of our color. With the creation of the President's committee in 1941, we had a government agency which would act upon our complaints.

SEP 17 1943

Although the FEPC in itself has no penal power, its public hearings have the same effect upon industry as an authoritative command to hire Negroes.

A big industrial concern, called upon by the committee to defend its ban on Negro employees, deems it wiser and less embarrassing to put Negroes on their payrolls rather than to take the witness stand in a public hearing and in a trial-like setting explain why it does not hire dark Americans.

Many an industry has made an about-face when threatened with an FEPC hearing. Just last week one of the 26 railroads expected to appear at the hearings opening Wednesday changed its policy suddenly, rather than face the charges.

SEP 17 1943

The FEPC can stay on the job only if it has adequate funds with which to operate. Congress has control of those funds. The people, the voters, control congress.

It is, therefore, up to the citizens, the voters, the taxpayers to see that congress appropriates enough funds for the FEPC to carry on its program—our program.

The FEPC needs $487,000 a year to operate. It has only $130,000 on hand now. It will not be long before the committee must go before congress for a new appropriation.

Upon the action of congress will depend the fate of the committee. In several instances congress has "killed" race relations bureaus of government agencies simply by refusing to appropriate money for those bureaus. The same method can be used by congressmen not in sympathy with the FEPC program to force that independent agency out of existence.

SEP 17 1943

Congressmen like Rep. Starnes of Alabama and Rep. Wigglesworth of Massachusetts must be prevented by the citizenry from denying the FEPC the funds that it needs. Both are on the house appropriations committee. Both were loud in their condemnation of race relations bureaus at hearings last year.

Negroes who are Democrats and newspapers which are Democratic must begin now to tell their Democratic congressmen that they must vote for funds for the FEPC. Likewise, Negroes who are Republicans and newspapers which are Republican must start now to influence their representatives in congress to give the FEPC the money it needs.

There are many Starneses and Wigglesworths in the congress. There also are congressmen and senators who are as fair-minded and just as public officials should be. It is up to the citizens to see that the fair-minded congressmen speak out in committee hearings which usually are dominated by southern congressmen like Starnes.

SEP 17 1943

It was a long, hard job to get the FEPC created and into action. It must be kept at work, no matter what the cost. It has served us well. We must now do our share.

The Same Old Excuse

One excuse which the railroads gave the FEPC for limiting Negroes to certain jobs was that the carriers cannot "undertake to solve the problems presented by the South's attitude toward the Negro."

SEP 24 1943

The spokesman for 18 railroads said that the "prevailing manners and customs of the various sections of the country would not countenance the employment by the railroads of Negroes in all types of positions."

The principal railroad position with which the hearings dealt was that of locomotive fireman. Years ago when the job of fireman was hot, dirty and heavy it was quite within the customs of the South for Negroes to keep up the steam. But with the coming of the Diesel engine, the job of fireman became a "white collar job" with only a button to push instead of a shovel to wield. Likewise, inside the coaches, Negroes work as porters but not as conductors, even in the jim-crow coaches of the South.

Kansas City Call

The customs of the South have too great an influence over the rest of the nation. Hotels up north refuse to house Negro convention delegates for fear of insulting delegates from the South. Qualified Negroes must not hold membership in certain professional organizations because some of the members are from the South and would not understand.

Kansas City, Mo.

Ever since the Civil War the rest of the country has been catering to the whims of the South as if Dixie won instead of lost the war. If after the present war countries all over the world should set their patterns of living to conform with the customs and principles of Nazi Germany, there would be a great uprising of protest.

Yet America, the stronghold of democracy, continues to let the pre-Civil war customs of the South influence life in other sections of the country.

SEP 24 1943

The railroads are following the pattern cut years ago by other big industries, the unions, municipalities and even the federal government itself in setting a limit on the distance Negroes may travel in employment. But in recent years, especially since the war began, many industries and labor organizations have revised their patterns and are using merit instead of color as a basis of employment and membership. The major war plants throughout the country are employing Negroes in technical positions where a few years ago they were accepted only as janitors. Unions are admitting Negro craftsmen to membership in increasing numbers. While instances of discrimination still exist in too large numbers, the general trend is away from a denial of job opportunity because of color. With the railroads, however, the trend is backward, when Negro firemen are displaced each time that a new Diesel engine is attached to a train.

SEP 24 1943

Through the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee, the federal government is attempting to eliminate discrimination in employment based on color wherever it exists. It is helping to change the pattern of employment in America. Negroes are moving up from the traditional "Negro jobs."

The railroads must keep in step. They must not let their policies continue to be more southern than American. If the railroads cannot lead the way, they at least can follow the new pattern instead of clinging doggedly to the old.

SEP 24 1943

LET FEPC INVESTIGATE THE NAVY

The President's order establishing a new Fair Employment Practice Committee states: "As President of the United States and Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, I do hereby reaffirm the policy of the United States, that there shall be no discrimination in the employment of any persons in war industries, OR IN GOVERNMENT by reason of race, creed, or color."

Afro-American

Since July 1, the committee has received 72 complaints against U.S. agencies, 138 against individual employers and 10 against unions. One third of its cases deal with the Government itself, which is a shocking disclosure.

Moreover, the committee held no hearings on the most flagrant case of Government discrimination, that in the Army and Navy. Perhaps it believes itself competent to handle only the Government's civil agencies.

Baltimore, Md.

However, if the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy declares the American policy is no racial and religious discrimination in employment, he makes no distinction between civil and military.

SEP 18 1943

Why, therefore, cannot the President's committee find out why colored women are denied admission to the WAVES?

The Navy ought not be able to avoid an investigation into its discriminatory practices merely by putting its clerks in uniform.

ON THE SPOT

FEPC, Though Sympathetic With Labor, Is Forced to Chastise Unions with Bars

BY HORACE R. CAYTON

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.

ORGANIZED LABOR has put the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee squarely behind the eight ball. The Committee isn't anti-union; as a matter of fact it is, on the whole, sympathetic to unions. The trouble is that unions now are the most recalcitrant when it comes to making concessions to Negro participation in industry. Management, at once adamant against inclusion of Negroes in their working force, is now, because of the labor shortage, glad to get them. In the cases where industry has refused to take Negroes, usually management lets the unions carry the ball for this refusal. Anyway, it works out that in every case which has been brought before the new President's Committee for hearing, that Committee has been placed in the embarrassing position of having to crack down on organized labor and give management a clear bill of health.

Mr. Cayton

It started when the railroad unions thumbed their noses at the hearing before the Committee in Washington. Officially the unions did not even attend the hearing. Management, however, appeared and tossed the ball right squarely into the laps of the labor unions. That's pretty smart on the part of management and labor acted as stupidly as it looked sitting in the meeting at the hearings with dead pan expressions.

KAISER MAKES POSITION CLEAR

Then take the Capital Transit case of Washington, D. C., or the Baltimore Transit case of Baltimore, Md. In each one of these the big hitch was that the streetcar men's union did not take Negro memberships. Again management unloosed on the unions and left the American public and Negro workers to understand that they would just love to have their darker brother around but the unions didn't stand for it. These are three cases which have come before the new committee and put them on the spot.

OF COURSE, the prize case is that of the International Boilermakers on the West Coast, where the commitee is holding the hearings in Portland on the 15th and 16th and Los Angeles on the 20th and 21st. Members of the committee informed me that they [illegible] no difficulty in talking to Mr. Henry Kaiser and that Kaiser put it up squarely to organized labor. He said words to this effect: "We're not only willing to hire Negroes but have hired them in spite of a closed shop contract. This made it necessary for the unions to do something about it and they came up with these auxiliaries. Now, if these auxiliaries are not what you like, that's you again with the union. We've got the men to work and did it in spite of a closed contract, so get after your unions."

COMMITTEE WILL BE ON THE SPOT

Just in case you don't know what these auxiliaries are, let me tell you. These auxiliaries are always attached to a white lodge and the Negroes in them are allowed to have no voice in the election of officers to the white lodge, no business agent of their own or any right to elect members to the national conference which is held (shades of Pegler) once every four years. Just how subordinated the Negro is, is indicated by the method which he would have to follow to change his classification of skill. First, he would have to have approval of his Negro auxiliary. Second, he would have to obtain the approval of the local lodge, the supervising white lodge, and third, the endorsement of the executive council of the international in Kansas City. All of which hokus pokus means that a Negro can't vote in Georgia, if you know what I mean.

SO THE President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices is in the West to examine this situation. They're going to stir up a mess in this union which is not only characterized by race discrimination but rank corruption. Again they will be on the spot; friendly and sympathetic to organized labor but forced to chastize it openly while management stands aside and looks "holier than thou." Sometimes I think that certain internationals in the AFL are needlessly and pointlessly committing suicide by their failure to use even common sense when it comes to the problem of Negro workers.

PHILADELPHIA—In his opening statement, Malcolm Ross, FEPC chairman, told the 200 persons present that no statements would be accepted from the floor.

Thomas H. Ringgold, 19 N. 42nd Street, a fire insurance agent, amazed the audience when he stood and told the committee he felt it was a public hearing, that majority of those present were taxpayers and supported the transit company and had a right to speak.

Chairman Ross reiterated that no statements would be accepted from the floor but that he could make his thoughts known in writing to the committee.

Congressmen Get Letters Asking Support Against President's Committee

WASHINGTON

All Representatives and Senators were sent a letter signed by Ernest E. [illegible]s, chairman of the Southeastern Conference, the 16 railroads that refused to obey the FEPC non-bias directives, this week, asking Congressional support against the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices.

The chairman of the Southeastern Conference asked that its press release the full text of its letter of response to the FEPC, a summary of the FEPC findings and directives to the railroads, and Sidney Alderman's statement (made the opening day of the hearings), all be read into the Congressional Record, to aid in an understanding of the railroad's position in connection with the FEPC directives.

Government's Washroom Policy

News and Courier, 16th.

The present policy of the Roosevelts' administration, acting through and by the war labor board (WLB), is that colored persons and white persons be compelled to wash their faces in the same basin.

White workers in the Point Breeze Western Electric company's plant, Baltimore, went on strike "in protest against the use of washroom facilities in common with negro workers." Another agency of the Roosevelts' government, the "fair employment practices committee" (FEPC), advised the company that "the discontinuance of common facilities for negro and white employes in the Point Breeze plants would be a backward step which would lead to discrimination against negroes." Then WLB refused to order separate facilities.

So, the government, your government, the same that South Carolians three times have helped to vote into office, holds that the washing of faces in the same basin by white persons and colored should be compulsory.

Your government is ordering the electric company to cease and desist from maintaining separate washrooms for white and colored persons.

If your government can do this and be sustained in it by the votes of you South Carolinians, your government can make compulsory use of the same bathrooms by the two races in your homes. It declares that separate wash rooms in the Point Breeze plants would lead to discrimination against negroes.

The News and Courier clings to the opinion that separate washrooms in the Point Breeze factories and in Johnsmith's house should be permitted, that government should not command to the contrary—but The News and Courier is looked upon as a "reactionary," a "tory" by most of the politicians in office, federal and state, in South Carolina.

In the Point Breeze factories the washrooms for colored workers should be in no way inferior to those provided for white workers. The separate facilties for the two races should be equal in every respect.

In Charleston, in South Carolina, are hundreds of thousands of colored people who do not wish government to force this question upon the two races.

Government's agencies are lighting fires of racial antagonism.

Government agencies are aiding and abetting the organization of "Ku Klux Klans," which become outlaw gangs and which The News and Courier condemns.

The administration's Washroom Policy can be made effective by an army. The administration will not be able to find an army of Americans North or South to make it effective.

Senator Guffey, New Deal and Roosevelt Democrat, accused Southern senators of entering into an "unholy alliance with Republicans."

Southern Democrats, led by Byrd, Bailey, Smith and Rankin, will enter into alliances, holy or unholy, to save the white race to which they belong.

Political alliance of Southern white people with the Guffeys, Marcantonios, Hagues, Walter Whites, Wageners, all their breed, is alliance for the promotion of miscegenation and bastardy.

Malcolm Ross Appointed FEP Head By Roosevelt

Defender
Chicago. Ill

By HARRY McALPIN
(Defender Washington Bureau)

OCT 23 1943

WASHINGTON — Malcolm Ross, as predicted by the Defender last week, has been named by President Roosevelt as the new chairman of the Fair Employment Practice Committee.

He succeeds Bishop-elect Francis J. Haas, recently appointed by Pope Pius XII as Bishop of Grand Rapids, Mich.

Following the suggestion of Bishop Haas, who in his letter of resignation on October 7 asked the President to name his successor at the same time he accepted the resignation "in order that there be no interruption in the work of the committee," the President named Ross as chairman in his communication to Bishop Haas.

It was believed the committee was about to lose two more of its members. P. B. Young, one of the two Negro members of the committee and publisher of the Norfolk Journal and Guide, is in ill health and has been advised by his physicians to cut down on his activities. His resignation in the near future is almost certain.

Samuel Zemurray, president of the United Fruit Company of New Orleans, has been appointed deputy director of the Office of Foreign Economic Administration. He has assured the committee, however, that he has no intention at present of resigning from the FEPC.

Lauds FEP Work

The President, in his letter accepting Bishop Haas' resignation and naming Ross the new chairman, said "the increasing usefulness of the FEPC, as reorganized under your direction, has been a source of great satisfaction to me, and I am sure, to all thoughtful people who know the importance of the people who know the importance and difficulty of its work." He said he was anxious that there be not the slightest delay in the work of the committee.

The President also wrote a letter to the members of the committee concerning the resignation of its chairman, and commending them for their work. He said, "I want to add here my appreciation for your own part as members of the committee. There are many difficulties before us. I feel satisfied, however, that in you the country has a committee upon which it can depend for wise and determined dealing with this problem which is essential to the fulfillment of the promises of our democracy."

Ross, the new chairman, is a former newspaperman. He is a graduate of Yale university in 1919, and was a member of the staffs of the Louisville Courier Journal and the New York World before he came to Washington. Here he has been in charge of public relations for the National Labor Relations Board and on the staff of the OWI before being made deputy chairman of the FEPC when it was reorganized under Bishop Haas.

SEPARATE HOUSING IN CAMPS' FACILITIES

OCT 30 1943

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa

By SIDNEY WALKER
(Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON — Hitler's Nazis have imposed by decree no more rigid and hate-inspired residence restrictions against Jews and other non-Aryans than custom and understanding among prejudice-dominated white Americans have fabricated to force Negroes to live in separate, slum areas.

That this is true can be proved from the written word imposing these restrictions in civilian life and in the armed forces.

Several weeks ago, The Courier exposed the notorious "ghetto document," the exact words from a book defining the code of ethics of the National Association of Real Estate Boards. This document clearly and shamelessly revealed the intention to prevent Negroes from moving out of the slums, regardless of their culture or financial stability.

The quotation from the Section on Equipment of the Real Estate Broker, by Harry Grant Atkinson and Lester E. Frailey, describing transactions which the reputable broker would not countenance, reads:

"When, for example, in a respectacle (white) neighborhood, a house is wanted for conversion to an objectionable use, no respectable broker will consent to represent the buyer. The latter might be a BOOTLEGGER who would cause considerable anoyance to his neighbor; a 'MADAM' who had a number of 'call girls' on her string, a GANGSTER who wanted a screen for his activities by living in a better neighborhood, a COLORED MAN OF MEANS who was giving his children a college education and thought they were entitled to live among whites; but no matter what the motive or character of the would-be purchaser, if the deal would instigate a form of blight, then certainly the well-meaning broker must work against its consummation."

ARMY FOLLOWS PATTERN

The Courier has repeatedly called attention to the separateness and segregation of garrisons for Negroes in the armed forces. This segregation, in the same camps, is visible to the naked eye. This week, The Courier is in a position to publish an official Army order defining this segregation and exposing it as a part of pre-conceived Army policy.

From an Army manual, Construction for Colored Garrisons, chapter 31, paragraph 263, page 144, The Courier reproduces the following instructions to camp commanders:

"a. Basis—Construction of welfare and recreational facilities for colored troops is provided on the same basis as if THE COLORED CONTINGENT FORMED THE GARRISON OF A SEPARATE CAMP OR CANTONMENT and in accordance established for camps in general and will be based on the strength of the colored troops.

"b. Theatres — Where the strength of the colored contingent is too small to warrant construction of (separate) theatre facilities, they may be accommodated in the theatres provided for the post.

"c. Post Exchanges — Where the colored contingent is too small to warrant authorization of a standard type exchange building and LOCAL CONDITIONS necessitate SEPARATE exchange and recreation building, type OPK-1 is authorized for construction."

It will be noted that the above order refers to welfare and recreational facilities, but its apparent necessity is derived from the fact that the COLORED CONTINGENT does form the GARRISON OF A SEPARATE CAMP OR CANTONMENT in most installations.

LOCAL CONDITIONS MUST PREVAIL

It is also to be noted that the Army bows to prejudiced local conditions in the application of the practice of separateness. Even on federal property, LOCAL CONDITIONS must prevail.

The foregoing revelations from practices prevailing in civilian life and in Army life undoubtedly force a lump to the throat of every American Negro who must face the supreme test in his country's present struggle for survival. They are the cold, blunt, tragic facts.

They tell him not only that he is thought to be an inferior and a pariah, but that it is the low intention of many Americans to keep him so.

FORGE CHAINS HERE AT HOME

This condition cries out loudly for remedy by those Americans who are aware of the irresistible forces motivating the men fighting this war.

The men fighting the war are finding it difficult to become incensed about Nazi de-humanization of Jews when an equally condemnable system of depressing a minority prevails at home.

America cannot justify her claim as freedom's leader so long as the chains are forged to prevent the development of a minority at home because of its color.

Can't Force Railroads to Hire Firemen, Brakemen—Fenneman

BALTIMORE

"The War Manpower Commission cannot force the railroads to hire colored men as brakemen and firemen regardless of the President's FEPC's (Fair Employment Practice Committee) recent directive to cease discriminatory employment policies.

Lawrence E. Fenneman, Maryland WMC director, made the above statement in an AFRO interview Wednesday.

"Our job is to refer persons who are qualified, regardless of race or color, to the companies for jobs," he continued.

"As to whether the men are hired or not, that is beyond the limits of the commission," he emphasized.

Mr. Fenneman advised that persons who are denied jobs by the railroads should file complaints with the FEPC for action.

Aiding Lily-White Drive

To offset what looms as an imperiling of operation of war industries and port transportation due to the shortage of railroad men, the War Manpower Commission has been active in the promotion of a campaign to attract workmen here.

Efforts were made by WMC officials, together with heads of railways and unions, to seek out-of-State labor to ease the serious shortage of railway men, and white women are being employed as brakemen despite the ban on colored male help.

War industries were canvassed this week in attempts to persuade them to lend extra help to railroads so that freight and production would not be held up in Baltimore.

Permission has been granted the companies to utilize soldiers and sailors in part-time jobs.

Railroads Defy FEPC

However, officials of local companies refused to consider the hiring of colored men as brakemen or firemen in direct defiance of FEPC orders this week.

Charles Schwab, white, superintendent of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, told the AFRO Wednesday that "colored men are accepted only as laborers or baggage room attendants."

He refused to make a statement as to the reason for the company's violation of FEPC orders in denying employment to skilled colored workers.

Strange Justice Bared In Fuller And Colman Cases

Courier · Pittsburgh, Pa.

NOV 20 1943

By SIDNEY WALKER
(Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON—Cock-eyed justice may not prevail in the Army, but a mixture of the Articles of War and ordinary, well known prejudices [illegible] strange concoctions which may well give rise to questions concerning the operation of courts-martial.

The military trials of Chaplain Luther Fuller and Col. William T. Colman are cases in point.

FULLER DISILLUSIONED

Fuller, a lieutenant addicted to the strange belief that one American is entitled to the same rights as another, was returned from the South Pacific where he was serving with a colored unit and was tried on a variety of charges, all under the Articles of War. It seems as though Fuller had stood up for his rights and had encouraged enlisted men to stand up for theirs. An Army court ruled that he had pursued this course further than was good for the service and has recommended his discharge from the Army. At present, he is a patient in an Army hospital at Fort Dix, N. J.

RACKETS EXPOSED

Colman was commander of Selfridge Field, Mich., an Air Force base. He was tried, among other things, for shooting a colored chauffeur, Pvt. William McRae, while under the influence of liquor. His trial also brought out the fact that there had existed a racket of selling rights, privileges and promotions at Selfridge Field.

The court-martial found Colman guilty of careless use of firearms and ordered him reduced in rank from temporary colonel to captain. This verdict and penalty were so outrageous that the public demanded further action by the War Department. The War Department has acted, formally retiring Colman from the service, presumably with pension.

STRANGE PARADOX

In the first instance, a colored officer, for an offense about which there might be great and fundamental difference in judgment, is recommended for discharge without honor and without pay.

In the second instance, a white officer, for an offense of fact, about which there cannot be the slightest difference in judgment, is recommended for retirement, and with pay.

The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette comments editorially on the case of Colman, as follows:

"RETIRING" A CAPTAIN

"By retiring Captain (formerly Colonel) William T. Colman, the War Department indicates that it takes a much more serious view of officers shooting privates than the court-martial which merely ordered the former commandant of Selfridge Field reduced in rank.

"Whether this action will satisfy the American public which thought the slap-on-the-wrist judgement of the court-martial was outrageous, is doubtful. Had a colored private shot a colonel, the only 'retirement' he would get would be in a prison cell. And it doesn't seem right for an officer to be retired presumably on an Army pension after committing an offense for which a private would have paid with years of hard labor."

No one can review the Fuller Colman cases without asking how much color influences verdicts in Army courts-martial.

FE C Hears Philly Union's Objection

By B. M. PHILLIPS

PHILADELPHIA

Employment of colored men as motormen and conductors by the Philadelphia Transportation Company as ordered by the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee (FEPC) would disturb the "status quo" and "impair transportation of war workers," a panel of the committee was told here Wednesday. DEC 18 1943

Occasion was an hour and a half public hearing in City Hall to hear objections from the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Employees' Association (PRT), an independent union, as to why the FEPC directive of November 17, ordering upgrading and employment of colored workers in jobs as conductors and motormen, should not be put into effect immediately.

Union Delays 40 Minutes

The hearings were scheduled to begin at 11 a.m. but were delayed 40 minutes while representatives of the union rewrote one page of their five-page defense.

Sitting as a penel to hear the case were Malcolm Ross, chairman, and Milton Webster of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters. Some 200 persons crowded the Commons Pleas Court where the hearing was held.

The union statement in addition to the veiled threat about disruption of transportation, argued against enforcement of the order, on the following grounds:

Violates Customs Clause

1. It violates the "customs" clause in union's contract with the company;

2. The Philadelphia Transportation Company is not a war plant, has no contract with a government agency and is not subject to FEPC;

3. Education rather than force in the form of a directive is needed to secure employment of colored conductors and motormen;

4. There is no idle manpower in the Philadelphia area;

Service Adequate Now

5. The service of the transportation company has been adequate for the needs of the people of the city and war industries located here;

6. The order of the FEPC is discriminatory as no similar directives have been sent to transit companies in Baltimore and Pittsburgh which has no colored operators;

7. Hiring of colored men would affect the seniority rights of white employees;

8. One thousand members of the union and employees of the company are in the armed forces and the employer-employee relationship should not be changed in their absence.

Frank M. Coburn, secretary-treasurer of the PRT, under cross-examination by George W. Crockett, FEPC attorney, admitted that the customs clause in the union's contract with the company prohibits employment of colored men in jobs other than they now hold.

He said that the 500 colored employees of the company are eligible to pay dues and have full membership in his union but that despite this the "status quo" cannot be changed and colored men placed in "white men's jobs."

Union Stand Surprise

Raleigh Johnson, a colored employee of the company and a member of the union, said first knowledge he had that this was union policy was during the hearing.

He stated that other colored employees and members of the union were under the impression that the clause in the union-company contract was designed to protect seniority rights.

Mr. Johnson added that he was positive colored employees would not continue to support a union which sought to restrict them to certain jobs.

In his opening statement to the committee, Chairman Ross called attention of all parties to the necessity of ending dscriminatory hiring practices in line with the President's order.

Need All Workers—Ross

"This nation," he predicted, "stands to suffer greatly if we are to permit the screening out of the war effect of 22 million Catholics, 4 million Jews, 3 million South Americans, 13 million colored and several million foreigners simply because an employer or worker wishes to discriminate."

The FEPC panel rendered no decision at the conclusion of the hearing, but Chairman Ross admonished the union representatives and the company that "when the decision is handed down everybody will view his responsibility very seriously."

Ross Cautions Union

The purpose of the FEPC, he added is to "advance the war effort and nothing else."

Statements from the local NAACP which has led the fight for transit jobs and other civic groups were admitted into the record.

The NAACP is sponsoring a huge mass meeting December 19 at Town Hall to further spur its campaign.

The Rev. A. Clayton Powell, Jr., NYC councilman, will be the speaker.

FEPC Head Says All Must Share Responsibility

By Malcolm Ross, FEPC chairman:

I feel impelled to make one remark about the union's statement that it "cannot accept responsibility for chaos and impairment of the transportation of war workers if the FEPC directive is carried out."

I urge with all the earnestness I can command that everybody view his responsibility very seriously. The purpose of this committee is to advance the war effort. Nothing this committee is doing is motivated by anything else.

I mentioned the Chicago case before, where quiet discussion with FEPC ended with employment of colored conductors and motormen.

We (the FEPC) will not accept the implication that the responsibility rests on the committee. Mr. Coburn, you and your union have had a just chance to act quietly and you failed.

The responsibility rests with all the parties concerned. I think this thing is better done by quiet campaign. We hope that as a result of this hearing nothing in the war effort will be impaired.

Noah Walters Gets High Union Post

NEW YORK — The appointment of Noah H. Walter as co-manager of the Laundry Workers Joint Board of Greater New York, Almalgamated Clothing Workers of America, was announced recently by Frank Rosenblum, executive vice-president.

Mr. Walter, also chairman of the N.Y. State CIO Committee Against Discrimination, has, during the past ten years, served as organizer, business agent and, for seven years, assistant manager of the laundry workers' group.

The joint board, which he helped establish in 1937, represents more than 20,000 workers of both races.

Union Head Says Colored May Pay Dues but Can't Be Motormen

FRANK M. COBURN

Secretary-treasurer Philadelphia Rapid Transit Employees' Union; interviewed by George W. Crockett, FEPC attorney:

Q—You say in your prepared statement that your union doesn't discriminate. Do you mean you admit colored to membership?

A—Yes.

Q—Do you mean you promote colored?

A—Yes, if it doesn't disturb employer-employee relationship.

Q—So the union does discrim-mate?

A—That's a matter of opinion.

Q—What does this so-called custom clause in your contract with the Philadelphia Transportation Company mean?

A—Colored won't replace white and white won't replace colored.

Q—Will that mean the number of colored remains static? How else will you get more colored employees?

A—By creation of additional jobs.

Objects to Colored

Q—Would the company consult the union relative to hiring of streetcar operators?

A—Yes.

Q—Would the union object to employment of colored men in jobs?

A—Yes, at the present time.

Q—What would be the basis?

A—We're being forced into something without our consent.

Q—You admit the union does dictate whom it shall and shall not employ?

A—Yes, the union dictates to the company. It must follow our contract.

Q—Were any communications you received covering employment of colored referred to the delegates? What action was taken?

A—Yes. No action was taken.

Q—On page 2 of your prepared statement you say "Education can change the opinion of free men. Force never enjoys lasting peace." What do you mean by that?

A—I feel the subject requires considerable educational activity for the purpose of breaking down prejudice.

Q—Prejudice on the part of whom?

A—Anyone.

Q—Do you mean prejudice on the part of the union against employment of colored?

A—No, for employees.

Q—Has the union ever done any educational work.

A—No.

Q—You recall a conversation with the NAACP in which you requested an opportunity to go back to the union and work it out? You were given 10 days.

A—I recall the conversation. The understanding was that no publicity be given but that agreement was violated.

Q—Did the NAACP give you he required time to go back to he union and get them in line?

A—No, we had no meeting. The executive board gave it consideration. I recall we did have 10 days but our meeting was about 11 days after that meeting.

Q—It is your view that the com- ittee, before it issues a direc- ve, should engage in an educa- onal campaign?

A—Yes, if it requires an ex- anation.

Q—What do you mean explana- on, didn't you have an explana- on concerning this directive before it was issued?

A—That's right.

Q—As a matter of fact, you made suggestions relative to wording of this directive, didn't you?

A—I don't recall.

Q—You say here on sheet two of your statement "No representations have been made that there is available manpower in the Philadelphia area." What's the basis for that statement? Is anyone supposed to make representations to you?

A—No.

Q—As a matter of fact you don't know what the manpower situation is? Have you ever made any study of it?

A—I happen to have been actually going out to find out. I have knowledge of ads in the paper.

Q—PTC runs ads for manpower, conductors and motormen?

A—Yes.

Q—So there are vacancies in the Philadelphia Transit Company?

A—Well, I don't know.

Must Change Contract

Q—But if there are vacanies your union would not permit the company to fill them with colored?

A—Not without changing our contract.

DEC 19 1943

Q—What is the basis for the statement you made that "the service rendered by the Philadelphia Transportation Company has been adequate for the needs of the people in the Philadelphia area and the war industries located there? Can service be adequate when the company is advertising for additional employees?

A—I would say it could.

Q—But the company feels it needs extra employees, don't you think so?

A—No, I don't. Maybe they want to get a reservoir of workers to take care of service demands.

Q—You say in your statement that the FEPC directive would affect seniority of workers. How does it?

A—Directly it doesn't, but by implication it does by setting the date for the company to examine its employment records. The date you set is June 25, 1941.

Q—That date is the day the President's first executive order was handed down. So that in effect is asking you to go back to that date and check employment records. Now that you understand that you can say it affects seniority rights?

A—That depends on the lists.

Union Asks Committee Not to Enforce November 17 Directive

PHILADELPHIA—Two members of the Fair Employment Practice Committee (FEPC) sat as a panel Wednesday to conduct a public hearing here to listen to objections from Philadelphia Rapid Transit Employees' Union (PRT) to a Nov. 17 directive from the FEPC ordering them not to interfere with employment or upgrading by the company of qualified colored persons to jobs as motormen, conductors, platform attendants, cashiers, and guards.

Would Disrupt Transportation

The union told the FEPC panel composed of Chairman Malcolm Ross and Milton P. Webster, who conducted the hearing in City Hall, that enforcement of the directive would disturb the "status quo" and "disrupt transportation of important war workers."

The PRT Union also contended that the order should not be carried out because of the following reasons:

1. It violates the "customs" clause in union's contract with the company;

Company Not a War Plant

DEC 18 1943

2. The Philadelphia Transportation Company is not a war plant, has no contract with a government agency and is not subject to FEPC;
3. Education rather than force in the form of a directive is needed to secure employment of colored conductors and motormen;
4. There is no idle manpower in the Philadelphia area;
5. The service of the transportation company has been adequate for the needs of the people of the city and war industries located here;

Charge Order "Discriminatory"

6. The order of the FEPC is discriminatory as no similar directives have been sent to transit companies in Baltimore and Pittsburgh which have no colored operators;
7. Hiring of colored men would affect the seniority rights of white employees;
8. One thousand members of the union and employees of the company are in the armed forces and the employee relationship should not be changed in their absence.

Transit Co. Union Objects to Colored in White Men's Jobs

By Milton Webster, FEPC member, to Frank C[illegible]urn, secretary-treasurer Philadelphia [illegible] Transit Employees' Union.

Q—In y[illegible] statement you say "The PRT Employees' Union cannot accept responsibility for the chaos and impairment to the transportation of workers to and from war plants which we feel will surely follow any attempt to enforce this directive at this time." Would you enlighten us on what you mean by that?

A—It is my opinion from my observation and contact with union members that they would not at this time accept such a radical change.

Q—Do you mean they'd defy the President's order?

A—I can't say.

Q—Well, what would they do? Would they quit, beat up the men or what?

A—I don't know.

Q—Are you familiar with contracts of this nature? Do you know that clauses like the customs clause in your contract are in all contracts of this kind?

A—No, I'm not familiar with it.

Q—Do you know these clauses have nothing to do with races?

A—I don't know.

Q—There are 500 colored members, 127 of them porters. Are they all members of your union?

A—No, not all but they all are eligible.

Q—Do they enjoy the same privileges and pay same dues?

A—Yes.

Q—But then your union has written a contract which limits these members from holding jobs as conductors and motormen?

A—It means the status quo must remain.

Q—What do you mean status quo? Was there any other union on the scene when your union came and drew up this clause?

A—No.

Q—Then the status quo orginated with your union and your union takes dues from colored members but discriminates against them?

A—We would take the same position if the company hired white men for colored men's jobs.

Army Officers Spread Southern Racial Attitudes

NOV [illegible] 1943

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa

By EVELYN SHERRER, New York Bureau

NEW YORK CITY—A story of the subtle influences of southern Army authorities, southern-inoculated Canadians and general jim crow-itis was told this week here by a former truck driver on the Alaska Highway, recently released from duty because "someone" decided that Negroes should be limited to manual labor.

Charles T. Augustus, instructor at the Yvonne Beauty school here, before he went to Canada, cited the tale of his Northern adventure from beginning to end, and expressed bitterness at the evidence of jim crowism in a land heretofore oblivious to the system which would allocate Negroes to a position of inferiority.

LEFT IN AUGUST

Augustus left New York in August with 50 other Negroes, all employed through the United States Employment Service of the MHKCBC (Metcalfe, Hamilton and Kansas City Bridge Construction Co.), At Edmonton, B. C., they were met by a company representative, who announced to the entire group of workers, "I'll take charge of the colored boys." The Negroes, according to Augustus, immediately asked why there should be this special consideration for the "colored boys." They were advised to see the Provost Marshal, Capt. R. Shaeffer. Shaeffer embarked upon a discourse on the penalties and [illegible] for rape, theft, etc. Augustus pointed out that the Marshal's attitude antagonised the Negroes, and for the first time, gave them an inkling of what might be in store for them.

"FOR COLORED ONLY"

Once in Edmonton, the group was not allowed to bunk in the camp for construction workers, said Augustus, but made quarters in the local school or else sought rooms in boarding homes. The mess halls did not serve colored.

At Dawson Creek, B. C., the Army barracks where Negroes were lodged were marked "For Colored Only." In the mess hall, certan tables were marked "this table reserved for colored men only."

Seven of the Negro workers were sent back to Edmonton, one of whom was Augustus; one checker, five laborers and one truck driver. Negroes here were working two miles from the place they were to eat; white workers were [illegible] mile away from mess; but the Negroes were not allowed to eat at the white mess hall; consequently a great deal of time was spent in transportation to and from mess. This was eliminated by the Army authorities, who maintained that too much time was being wasted by the colored outfit. They, therefore, brought cold sandwiches to the colored workers, so that they could remain on the jobs.

Texts of Statements on Railroad Hiring

DEC 18 1943

Afro-American
Baltimore, Md.

WASHINGTON

The texts of the statement by sixteen Southern railroads to the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices and the reply of Malcolm Ross, chairman of the committee, follow:

The statement by the railroads:

This is the joint response of those of the undersigned railroads which are parties to the Southeastern Carriers' Conference of "Washington" agreement, responding to your Summary, Finding and Directives dated Nov. 18, 1943, directed against those railroads and the Brotherhoods of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen with reference to that agreement, and is the joint and several response of all and each of the undersigned railroads to your respective Summaries, Findings and Directives of the same date directed against each of the undersigned railroads and various railway labor organizations regarding various other matters.

These railroads have no response to make to your findings and directives addressed exclusively against various railway labor organizations and dealing with their practices concerning failure to admit colored workers to their membership, or to consult them in representation of employees, etc.

These railroads are engaged, with all their energies and abilities, twenty-four hours a day and seven days a week, in carrying on the most vital business of transportation in the public service and in the prosecution of the war effort. They are contributing their part to the total war effort of the railroads of the country, which has been acclaimed as an unprecedented accomplishment by all branches of the government and of the armed services.

The manpower situation on these railroads is not preventing their most excellent accomplishment in this regard. This accomplishment has been achieved by peaceful and harmonious relations with railway labor and by patriotic and whole-hearted co-operation between these managements, labor and the shipping and traveling public.

Responsibility Repudiated

We wish it to be clearly understood that any disruption of these peaceful and harmonious relations and of this patriotic co-operation which may result from your committee's directives is not the responsibility of these railroads.

The employment relations of these railroads are governed by collective bargaining agreements reached under the controlling procedures of the Railway Labor Act. Any change in these agreements is a matter of immediate and vital concern to our employees of various crafts and classes and to their organizations and representatives, as well as to these railroads.

Railroads are forbidden by law to interfere in any way with the self-determination or self-organization of their employees and are entirely without power to dictate to their employees, or to affect by unilateral action, any changes in such agreements. Such changes are controlled by, and can only be accomplished by, the procedures of the Railway Labor Act.

It is wholly impracticable, and indeed impossible, for these railroads to put into effect your committee's directives addressed against them.

Any attempt on their part to comply with those directives, for instance, to promote colored workers to locomotive engineers or train conductors, would inevitably disrupt their present peaceful and co-operative relations with their employees, would antagonize the traveling and shipping public served by them, would substitute conditions of chaos for the present condition of harmony, would result in stoppages of transportation and would most gravely and irreparably impair the whole war effort of the country.

These railroads cannot assume the responsibility for precipitating such disastrous results.

"Unrealistic" Supposition

These railroads are ready at any time to confer with their employees of various crafts and classes to ascertain whether, under the orderly and controlling procedures of the Railway Labor Act, any more generally satisfactory solution of the racial problem of employment can be worked out by mutual agreement.

However, frankness compels these railroads very respectfully to state to your committee that it is utterly unrealistic to suppose that these railroads and their employees can agree to comply with the breadth of your directives or that problems of such delicacy, controlled and governed by a special act of Congress, can be solved out-of-hand by the the fiat of your committee's directives.

A number of your findings and directives against some of these railroads undertake to deal with classes and crafts of railway employees which were given no notice of your charges or hearings, which were not represented, and which were given no opportunity to be heard, and with practices concerning such classes and crafts as to which railroads were given no hearing. Manifestly, such findings and directives are wholly lacking in due process of law and for that reason are without legal effect.

And, finally, with great respect the railroads submit that your committee was and is wholly without constitutional and legal jurisdiction and power to make and issue the directives which it made and issued, and for this reason the said directives are without legal effect.

Statement by Ross

The reply by Mr. Ross:

The question of preventing colored railroad workers from being used by the carriers at their top skills is a war problem of the first order.

Evidence at the FEPC hearing showed a shortage of 850 firemen on American railroads, this at a time when trained and experienced colored firemen were unemployed and the carriers were preferring to take on green hands, simply because there has been for years a sometimes tacit and sometimes formal agreement between the railroads and the railroad unions to decrease the number of colored firemen and give the jobs to white workers.

This is no question of colored workers seeking to displace whites. Colored firemen were the accepted majority for fifty years on Southern railroads, until automatic stokers and diesel-powered engines changed the dirty, heavy work into desirable jobs.

Racial prejudice is not at issue here. White Southern engineers have for decades had decent working relationships with colored firemen. Sidney Alderman, counsel for the railroads at the FEPC hearings, stated: "I certainly do not mean to contend that anything in the South would interfere with the employment of colored men as firemen on locomotives."

The firemen problem, and the problems of up-grading, job assignations and seniority rights of colored workers in the operating divisions and the shops were the subject of four days of FEPC hearings in September.

The railroad unions chose to ignore the hearings. The carriers made a perfunctory appearance. Their letter now makes a bid for public disapproval of FEPC by viewing with alarm alleged pretensions of colored men to be engineers and conductors.

Issue Declared Dormant

The plain fact is that this issue—necessarily covered because complaints were received and no rebuttal offered—is dormant and could remain so if the railroads offer justice to colored railroad men in the classifications where reason and public police both urge it.

Certainly it is not the part of candor to seize upon the most delicate issue in order to avoid the many basic problems squarely placed before the railroads.

The Southeastern Carriage Conference agreement, which the committee found in violation of Executive Order 9346, was concerned with the hiring and use of colored men as firemen and not with their promotion from firemen to engineers.

The railroads now advance obligations under the Railway Labor Act as barriers to changing the discriminatory Southeastern Carriers' Conference agreement.

There is no conflict of jurisdiction here. The agreement was reached with the brotherhoods in 1941, and by mutual agreement it can be altered or discarded.

In asking both parties to make this move, the FEPC is not suggesting anything which cannot be done in conformity with the Railway Labor Act and the procedures adopted by the National Mediation Board.

There are extremely serious racial problems on American railroads. The FEPC did not invent them. It tried, honestly and with the war need for railroad workers in mind, to find out what is wrong and to direct remedial action.

The carriers complain that its directives were too broad, branding them as "impossible and impractical." Let no carriers' move to remedy discrimination was made until these matters were publicly examined. The chance to talk this dilemma through with FEPC has been present ever since the hearing.

Action by Four Roads Cited

Four railroads did so. The Virginia Railroad compiled and relieved itself of a complaint against it before the hearings began.

The Union Pacific did so during the hearings. The Pennsylvania Railroad and the New York Central are in amicable and co-operative discussion with the FEPC looking toward solutions. The way is open to the remaining sixteen carriers.

The FEPC is an American committee, trying to help fight an American war. Its duty is to prevent discrimination against any worker, whatever his or her race, creed or nationality, who would be an acceptable war worker were it not for preconceived prejudice.

We may not be able to wipe out discrimination overnight, but where war manpower needs are at stake we can and shall try.

To change bad practices now is not "impossible and impracticable." Secretary McAdoo, in 1918 equalized the pay of white and colored firemen as "an act of simple justice." A like need for war manpower inspired that change.

The rails today are giving extraordinarily fine service to wartime America. The FEPC believes that the granting of overdue rights to colored railroad men, far from being a cause for disorder, could be so managed as to improve service and to raise the morale of tens of thousands of colored Americans who have their own stake in winning the war quickly.

The committee's directives are described as being broad. They extend no further than the problem raised, not by FEPC, but by complex economic and human agencies groping through prejudice and intolerance toward a working democracy of which we need not be ashamed either at home or abroad.

It will take time to raise the structure laid down by the committee blueprint. Not to start now is to acknowledge defeat.

16 Roads Challenge FEPC's Authority, Refuse to Obey Its Anti-Bias Directive

B U L L E T I N

WASHINGTON

Refusal of Dixie railroads to abide by an FEPC order to end job dscrimination may place President Roosevelt in the position of using his war powers to enforce the directive, as he did in the case of Montgomery Ward's defiance of a WLB order to sign a CIO union security contract.

WASHINGTON

Malcolm Ross, chairman of the Fair Employment Practice Committee, in a statement issued Monday, denied the contention of sixteen railroads in a letter to the FEPC that it would be "impossible" for them to cease discriminating against colored workers.

The railroads and terminal companies denied the jurisdiction of the FEPC to issue the directives forbidding discrimination toward workers on the carriers and refused to comply with the committee's non-bias orders issued November 24.

This action by the railroads is in open defiance of President

Roosevelt's Executive Order 9346 which forbids any contractor doing business with the Federal Government to discriminate against employees or job applicants on racial or religious grounds.

DEC 18 1943

Charging that the FEPC was "utterly unrealistic" in attempting to solve delicate problems of interracial relations in the Southern States "by fiat," they said it is "wholly impracticable and, indeed, impossible" for them to put the FEPC order into effect.

The letter states that "any attempt, for instance, to promote colored men to locomotive engineers or train conductors" would disrupt their present peaceful relations with their employees, antagonize the public, halt transportation and impair the war effort.

Playing to Galleries—Ross

Branding the letter "a bid for public disapproval of the FEPC by viewing with alarm alleged pretensions of colored men to be engineers and conductors," Mr. Ross said this issue is dormant and could remain so if the railroads offer justice to colored railroad men.

The letter to the FEPC pointed out that railway labor relations are controlled by the Railway Labor Act and that changes in contractural relations between the railroads and labor unions can only be accomplished under that act.

The open challenge from the railroads are the outgrowth of FEPC hearings held here in September during which twenty-two railroads and seven unions were cited for discrimination against colored workers.

Signed by 16 Roads

Railroads that signed the letter are:

Atlantic Coast Line, Atlanta Joint Terminals, Central of Georgia, Georgia Railroad, Jacksonville Terminal, Louisville and Nashville, Norfolk Southern, Frisco, Seaboard, Southern, Chesapeake and Ohio, Gulf, Mobile and Ohio, Norfolk and Western, Illinois Central, Yazoo and Mississippi Valley, and Gulf and Ship Island.

DEC 18 1943

Among other railroad unions against which the directives were issued were: Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, International Association of Machinists, International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Shipbuilders and Helpers of America, Order of Railway Conductors, and Brotherhood of Railway Carmen.

South Sets Pattern For Navy Treatment Of Negro Sailors

OCT 23 1943

Courier

Pittsburgh, Pa

(Review of Courier Fight on Navy Policy — Page 13)

Remember Dorie Miller, Charles French, Leonard Harmon? They were Negro messmen serving their country in the present war. But they were "Messmen Heroes," too. Next Wednesday . . . October 27 . . . America will celebrate Navy Day, traditional observance in honor of Theodore Roosevelt. Next Wednesday . . . October 27 . . . The Pittsburgh Courier is asking America to remember the men mentioned above. The Pittsburgh Courier is also asking that this day be set aside to pay fitting and silent tribute to 13 unsung naval heroes of the USS Philadelphia. It was their courage in writing a letter to this newspaper five years ago, which served to spark a campaign against the Navy's discrimination policy, which today envelopes the entire nation.

NO DAY FOR FINE SPEECHMAKING

Navy Day, this year, is deeply significant. In the second year of the war and the sixth year of The Courier campaign for the full and complete integration of Negroes into every branch of the armed services, it is time that we once again open the books and balance the ledger sheets. This Navy Day is not . . . for us . . . a day of fine speechmaking, bugle blowing, band playing or precision drilling. Rather, it is a day of solemn purpose and high intent . . . a day to rededicate ourselves to the fight for real democracy in the Navy.

The Navy must be divorced from the unregenerate South. Our boys who toil and sweat on the seven seas must be given due recognition. The entire pattern of Navy policy must be thoroughly checked and exposed. A race which can produce naval heroes must be given its place in the sun. But the record so far reveals that Dixie still rules the U.S. Navy. Here are some incontrovertible facts to support this statement:

HERE IS THE RECORD

TODAY . . . there is not a Negro commissioned officer serving in the Navy. There is not even a colored physician or minister.

TODAY . . . no Negro attends the Naval Academy at Annapolis, although the cadet enrollment at this institution has been doubled.

TODAY . . . no Negro college has been accepted under the Navy V-12 program.

TODAY . . . with but one exception, no Negro has been accepted for the Navy Reserve training program at a white college.

TODAY . . . not a single Negro has been admitted to Naval aviation. All a colored youth can do is play "nursemaid" to a Navy plane engine at some shore installation.

Trained seamen, graduates of the naval school at Hampton institute, are assigned to ammunition depots as stevedores.

Graduates of Great Lakes Training school are not permitted to serve on seagoing vessels except as stewards or scullions.

Many inductees, [illegible] in as apprentice seamen, are forced into the messman branch or into construction labor battalions.

Discrimination runs riot at every naval establishment.

Sailors who protest the treatment accorded them are charged with mutiny . . . a serious offense during wartime. This follows the pattern set five years ago when the 13 sailors who wrote The Courier were DISHONORABLY DISCHARGED.

OCT 23 1943

NAMES SHIP FOR NAVAL HERO

On the other side of the ledger, and showing that some progress has been made, we review the following gains:

Two schools, Great Lakes and Hampton, train Negro sailors for duties in the deck or engineer departments of the Navy.

One camp at Great Lakes was named in honor of Captain Robert Smalls colored naval Civil War hero.

A destroyer-escort vessell, the USS Harmon, was named posthumously in honor of Leonard Harmon, a Texas youth, and a mess attendant, who distinguished himself in the battle of Santa Cruz.

Seven mess attendants have been honored by the Navy for bravery during the present war.

Bernard Whitfield Robinson, a medical student at Harvard university, was commissioned an ensign in the naval medical reserve on June 27, 1942, and will be called to active duty when he graduates on 1944.

OCT 23 1943

Colored seabees . . . naval construction battalion . . . were recently praised by five U.S. Senators upon their return from the Pacific war zone.

COAST GUARD BEST SERVICE BRANCH

Brightest spot in the Navy picture focuses on the U.S. Coast Guard, a branch of the Navy during wartime. The Coast Guard has two colored commissioned officers holding the rank of ensign. There is no discrimination in the training or assignment of Negro and white sailors in this branch of the service. The men are promoted according to their abilities, and are serving on combat vessels guarding convoys, transporting troops to war areas and serve as crew members of the shore patrol.

This picture contrasts sharply with that of the U.S. Marines, who opened their doors to Negroes for the first time on May 30, 1942. Colored marines train in a separate camp at New River, N. C. The marines have consistently refused to commission a Negro . . . the highest rank now held by a colored marine being that of a buck sergeant.

Yet today, fighting combat units of the Marines are serving in the Pacific area and are standing guard in Philadelphia and on the West Coast.

A Congressional investigation is needed. Write your congressman or senator on NAVY DAY . . . October 27 . . . and give him the facts. Demand action. The Army and its policy is bad enough . . . but something must be done . . . at once . . . about the Navy.

Pursuit Of Democracy

We Can't Afford to Be Indifferent to Abuses of Soldiers

BY MARJORIE McKENZIE

Courier

Pittsburgh, Pa

IT SEEMS to me that our national organizations are sleeping one of the most urgent current issues facing Negro Americans. The abuses, conviction and lynching of Negro soldiers in the South is a [illegible] which we must not tolerate any longer. The press has done its part in exposing and protesting the facts. Now there must follow organized group action, which means putting pressure on the War department to discharge its obligation to protect Negro soldiers wherever they may be—in the South or the South Pacific. The restrictions and indignities of Jim Crow Army service are burden enough, but the least any soldier ought to demand and receive is respect for the uniform of his country.

NOV 20 1943

Miss McKenzie

Cases such as that of Private Bell, who was awarded a four-year sentence by the civilian authorities of Starksville, Mississippi, for having defended himself against four white hoodlums, and that of the unnamed Negro soldier who was shot last week by an Illinois mob, deserve the absorbed attention of every Negro group which lays claim to leadership. Apparently, the senses of the people can become dulled to outrage. We seem to have arrived at a stage of callous indifference which requires that not one Negro but several must be drawn and quartered simultaneously before we will do anything about the incident but give it a screaming newspaper headline.

As the rush of military events clearly indicates, the war is not going to last forever. If we do not insist on being provided with the ordinary precautions against danger that are taken for the safety of other soldiers, if we do not demand an equal opportunity to fight and therefore, to share victor's spoils, we shall not be able to press our demands with much success in the post-war period.

MEANWHILE, in the relatively brief space of time that remains of armed conflict, with the world talking even now about the future, our organizational leaders are spending most of their time rehearsing their plans to leap from the bosom of the New Deal into the arms of Wendell Willkie. They haggle over terms and discuss the Negro vote as if it were a bolt of goods which they will deliver at the proper time to the highest bidder. Naturally, what happens next year is important and who promises what is part of that picture. But this problem is hot now and it also may be considered political in the sense that its solution lies in the hands of a Democratic administration which will be up for re-election.

ARMY CAN PROTECT MEN IN UNIFORM

It is, therefore, obvious that we are operating in reverse. We are using very bad technique since law and justice and duty are all on our side. The democratic process inducts Negro men into the Army and stops being democratic right then and there. There are, in fact, numerous charges that even induction methods are irregular in the South. The Army puts our men into uniforms, which white civilians in Mississippi may dare, without military interference, to force them to take off. The Army sends our men to foreign fronts to unload barges, drive trucks and cook meals for white soldiers, who dare to criticize us for not being allowed to fight.

IT IS my firm conviction that we can do something about these things if we do not continue to rely upon the Negro press to fight the battle alone. The Army can protect its uniform from ridicule if we convince the Army that we intend that it shall be protected. There are all kinds of federal laws, including one for treason, which sanctify olive drab. The South believes the Army is joking when it sends Negro soldiers into dangerous backwooods country without arranging for their defense. The Army thinks we are joking when we do nothing about the beating and killing of Negro soldiers but write newspaper stories. If our leaders continue to sit out this problem, meanwhile engaging in esoteric discussion of the relative value of this or that political strategy, we shall continue to neglect the proper area for social and political action and fail to use our real political weapon.

The U. S. War Department announced last week that Capt. William T. Colman will be retired under public law No. 190, on grounds of "unfitness for duty," thus making it possible for Colman to receive a pension of $1,125 a year during retirement.

Resurrection For FEPC

Courier

Pittsburgh, Pa.

NOV 20 1943

The President's insistence that his non-discrimination order for government contractors and federal departments is mandatory, amounts to a resurrection of the Fair Employment Practice Committee which Comptroller of the U. S. Warren had virtually killed.

It seems to us that the President had no alternative except to make this clarifying statement or go back on his own order, but nevertheless, all lovers of justice and fair play commend the forthright manner in which he faced the issue raised by the North Carolinian.

The President's statement will have a most salutary effect on the whole question of the employment and upgrading of Negro workers in war industry.

Those industrialists who had been planning to ignore the Executive Order if they chose, now realize that they must obey it or suffer loss of their contracts.

Others who were wavering as a result of the Warren ukase will have to snap back [illegible] line.

The morale of colored Americans which had sunk to a new low as a result of Warren's decision will be tremendously lifted by this re-affirmation of the principles of democracy.

Mr. Roosevelt's action in this case will more effectively spike Axis propaganda than a ream of OWI releases.

Busy as the President is these days, I believe every Negro should send him a brief message of gratitude, either by letter or postcard, for keeping the faith.

However, we should not lose sight of the fact that the FEPC will never be able to do what it wants to do and what we want it to do until a federal law is passed under which contractors who ignore its directives can be punished by fine and/or imprisonment.

Ruling by Comptroller General on Executive Order 9346 Stuns Nation — Ross Seeking Opinion from Attorney General on Decision

NOV 6 1943

WASHINGTON—Topping all other developments in the FEPC tangle which resulted last week when it became known that the Comptroller General of the United States, Lindsay C. Warren, had issued a ruling on October 7, which—if allowed to stand—would practically destroy the usefulness of the FEPC, was a flat denial by the White House, given in writing to The Pittsburgh Courier, that President Roosevelt or any other White House official had anything to do with the ruling or knew of it prior to last week's newspaper accounts.

"PRESIDENT KNEW NOTHING ABOUT IT"

Replying to a question presented by the Washington Bureau of The Pittsburgh Courier, Stephen Early, secretary to President Roosevelt, wrote: "I can tell you in all frankness that, until he saw a story about this ruling in the newspapers, the President knew nothing about it. It is a fact, also, that no White House official had anything to do with the ruling. It was not asked for by anyone at the White House. And, this includes Director James F. Byrnes, Office of War Mobilization."

Meanwhile—as protests from every section of the country against the decision of Comptroller General Warren flooded the White House—the method by which FEPC Chairman Malcolm Ross will seek to save the powers of his committee became apparent. Last Saturday Ross authorized the following comment on the ruling:

"The Comptroller General has recently held that the obligation imposed by Executive Order 9346 upon contracting agencies to incorporate a non-discrimination clause in each contract awarded by them was not a mandatory requirement but merely a directive.

"In view of the doubt which this ruling has cast upon the powers and duties of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, the committee is seeking consideration by the Attorney General of the scope and meaning of the Executive Order."

WASHINGTON — Vigorously protesting the decision of Comptroller General Lindsay Warren in the Southwestern Bell telephone case, in which the former North Carolina congressman waived the FEPC anti-discrimination, clause, several national organizations wired President Roosevelt this week and urged him to correct the unfair ruling.

Organizations protesting to the President were:

The Negro Labor Victory committee, National Negro Congress, New York CIO, Non-Sectarian Anti-Nazi league, National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and the Socialist Party.

MAY ASK BIDDLE TO RULE ON OPINION

An interpretation of the Ross statement makes it clear that the strategy of the FEPC will be to have Attorney General Francis B. Biddle rule that government agencies must include non-discrimination clauses in all government contracts. Such an opinion would be binding on these agencies and the blow of the Warren ruling would thus be averted.

Informed sources here indicate that it is a practical certainty that Biddle will render an opinion favorable to FEPC. The Early letter to The Pittsburgh Courier, referring to the question of the future of FEPC raised by the Warren ruling, stated that "steps are being taken to look into this phase of the question."

All available information here leads to the conclusion that the ruling of Comptroller General Warren was completely without the knowledge or consent of high-ranking administration officials. Although Warren rendered the opinion on October 7, in answer to a request from the Director of the Division of Central Administrative Services under date of September 11, FEPC officials knew nothing about it until last week.

WARREN'S RULING WOULD DOOM FEPC

First knowledge of the ruling completely stunned them. With a hectic background of numerous chairmen, months of uncertainty as to status, numerous delays of vital hearings, and a growing backlog of unsettled cases, the announcement of the Warren ruling, that government contracting agencies need not insist upon a non-discrimination clause in government contracts, where the person or firm involved refused to agree and where the services sought by the contract could not otherwise be obtained, came as a blow which many observers felt marked the final death of the FEPC. It was pointed out that the Warren opinion was far-reaching, in that it affected not only the future ability of FEPC to enforce its non-discrimination orders through pressure upon government agencies to withhold contracts from jim-crow employers, but as well covered the whole vast network of government contracts, many of which even before FEPC was created, contained anti-discrimination clauses.

Observers pointed out that only recently the National Housing Agency had announced that in 1942 Negro construction workers, protected by non - discrimination clauses, earned 33 million dollars on government housing construction, or 12 per cent of all payroll expenditures in this field.

BYRNES CLEARED OF ANY PARTICIPATION

Until the denial of any knowledge of the ruling, made by Director James F. Byrnes, of the Office of War Mobilization, and quoted in the Early letter to The Pittsburgh Courier, there were many who claimed that the whole episode was a "frame-up" concocted between Byrnes of South Carolina and Warren of North Carolina.

From Richard R. Brown, director of the Central Administrative Services, The Pittsburgh Courier last Friday received confirmation of the Byrnes' statement that he did not ask for and never saw the ruling. "The request was made of the Comptroller General by me," said Director Brown, "and Mr. Byrnes is on no way responsible for it."

Brown, who disclaimed emphatically any anti-Negro bias, pointing out that he had formerly assisted Aubrey Williams of the NYA, and that in his present agency, more than 50 per cent of the 2,000 employees in Washington are Negro, said that the ruling was requested after his office had had extreme difficulty in getting contracts signed for government space in buildings in Southern cities, in securing contracts for water facilities from the Water Commission of the city of Atlanta, Ga., and in the case of contracts for telephone service from Southwestern Bell Telephone Company. "I do not anticipate that we will leave the non-discrimination clause out of more than six to ten contracts," he said.

He admitted, however, that on October 16 he had notified regional offices they might proceed, where necessary, to sign contracts without the non-discrimination clause, and that several such contracts had been signed.

WARREN BARRED NEGROES FROM HOUSE RESTAURANT

Informed persons, pointing to the anti-Negro bias shown by Mr. Warren, when a member of Congress from North Carolina, during which time he barred Negroes from the House Restaurant, claimed that the ruling came as the result of pressures from Southern politicians, hostile to FEPC, and from organizations of real estate operators.

In partial proof of this contention they pointed to a news letter of the National Association of Building Owners and Managers dated September 27. A part of this letter read: "The Association is protesting the anti-discrimination order (affecting government leases) . . . while the basis of our objection will be that the lease is not the kind of contract intended by Executive Order 9346, we should be in a position to support our arguments with some tangible evidence that the new requirement is causing trouble around the country." The letter went on to state that the association would seek aid from Comptroller General Warren and the Director of Space Control of the Central Administrative Services. It is significant that precisely from George A. Wilson, Space Control Director, and Comptroller General Warren came the "relief" sought by this organization. Mr. Wilson on Saturday admitted that the Washington lobbyist of the association had been in touch with him, but declined to answer any questions on how the ruling came to be requested of the Comptroller General.

General Counsel to the Comptroller General, J. C. McFarland told The Pittsburgh Courier las week that the framing of the rul ing was a purely routine affair. H denied that it was the result o pressure.

FEPC Receives Credit In Settling Mill Dispute

OCT 30 1943

WASHINGTON.—Credit for considerable aid in bringing about the settlement of a labor-management dispute which had threatened to cause a total shutdown of the 14-Inch Mill of the Jones and Laughlin Steel corporation plant at Aliquippa, Pa., was given to the Persident's Committee on Fair Employment Practice by representatives of the U. S. Conciliation Service of the Department of Labor in correspondence revealed by the FEPC this week.

FEPC action in the case was begun after formal complaints were filed with the committee's regional office in Philadelphia about the middle of September. The case was closed September 28.

FEPC FAIRNESS PRAISED

A letter from Charles R. Ward, commissioner, in the Pittsburgh office of the Conciliation Service, to the FEPC Region III office, expressed thanks for the committee's co-operation and praised the FEPC representatives in the case of his "fairness and keenness in being able to judge the right and wrong side of the case." The FEPC representative was Milo A. Manly.

Working with the Conciliation Service and the FEPC on the case were other governmental agencies concerned, and involved in the discussion were the plant management and Local 1211, United Steel Workers of America, CIO. The basis of the original dispute was a disagreement between management and union over upgrading policies in the 14-Inch Mill. A charge that the management had refused to upgrade two Negro workers because of their race brought the situation to a head.

The company personnel in the 14-Inch Mill is almost entirely Negro and throughout its plants the Jones and Laughlin Steel corporation employs about 12 per cent Negroes in a number of capacities

Discriminatry Complaints Against Negro Shipyard Workers Given FEPC Hearings

NOV 27 1943

LOS ANGELES, Calif. — Complaints alleging employment discrimination against Negroes in shipyards in the Los Angeles area were examined by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice in public hearings, November 19—20.

The hearings, open to the general public, convened at 10 a.m. daily in the Embassy Auditorium, 834 South Grand avenue, Los Angeles. Six of the seven members of the Committee sat at the sessions.

Notified by the Committee to appear at the hearings were representatives of the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Ship Builders and Helpers of America; Subordinate Lodge No. 92, and Auxiliary Lodge No. A-35; the Metal Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor; the Pacific Coast Metal Trades Council; the Los Angeles Metal Trades Council; the California Shipbuilding Corporation; Western Pipe and Steel Corporation, and the Consolidated Steel Corporation, Shipbuilding Division.

Specific allegations included:

(1) That Negroes have been given employment at lower grades of employment and have been refused employment at the higher skills which their training, qualifications and ability warranted;

(2) That Negroes have been refused advancement to higher skills or branches of employment after their work, training and experience warranted such advancement;

(3) That Negroes who were perfroming useful services in shipyards were down-graded despite the fact that they were performing their work in a successful and satisfactory manner;

(4) That many Negroes have sought to join the Union, but were denied membership in the Union, although qualified in every way; that the Union had requested the discharge of persons without membership, and that employers had honored such requests by actual discharges of Negro workers;

(5) That many Negroes have joined Auxiliary Lodge No. A-35 under threat of discharge if they failed to do so, although Auxiliary Lodge No. A-35 does not give its members equal rights with the members of the subordinate lodges.

Dr. George M. Johnson, FEPC Deputy Chariman, directed preparation for the hearings at which Attorneys Marvin C. Harrison of Cleveland, O., George E. C. Hayes, of Washington, D. C., and Benjamin Dreyfus of San Francisco served as special counsel for FEPC. They were assisted by Attorney Ernest Trimble, Hearings Commissioner of the Committee staff.

LOS ANGELES—The vital need for a federal law which would provide the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee's executive orders with "teeth" was never more apparent than during the FEPC's shipyard-union hearings here Friday and Saturday, November 19-20.

Officials of the AFL's shipbuilding unions completely ignored requests that they be present to answer charges of violations of Executive Order 8802 and subsequent amendments. Thirteen of the organizations, as well as local and national officials, were notified of the hearings, but none appeared, nor did th[illegible] any way respond. The commi[illegible] lacke[illegible]er to compel their attendance.

Notified by the FEPC to appear at the hearings were representatives of the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Ship Builders and Helpers of America, Subordinate Lodge No. 92 and Auxiliary Lodge No. A-35, the Metal Trades [illegible] the AFL, the Pa[illegible]Coast [illegible] Trades Council, the Los Angeles Metal Trades Council, the California Shipbuilding corporation, Western Pipe and Steel corporation, and the Consolidated Steel corporation, shipbuilding division.

JIM CROW ADMITTED

These defense plants were represented by attorneys and personnel managers who denied charges that Negroes were being discriminated against, either in hiring or upgrading, although the companies, in a sense, admitted the union's jim crow policy against Negroes, they stubbornly disclaimed responsibility, averring that interference into internal union affairs would make them liable to Wagner Labor Relations Act violations.

George E. C. Hayes, special counsel, presented the FEPC's case, followed by co-counsel Marvin C. Harrison. A parade of witnesses, male and female, was heard, who testified to their bitter aversion to joining and belonging to a jim crow auxiliary and to the various limitations placed upon their respective skills by the shipbuilding companies.

TELLS OF ANTI-RACE BIAS

Others called to the stand included Dr. Herbert R. Northrup, economist and Detroit Labor Relations board member, who told of the anti-race Boilermakers' policy. George Oll, United States Employment service manager of Long Beach, Cal., spoke of the refusal of Consolidated Shi[illegible] accept certain [illegible] o[illegible] ski[illegible] Negroes until he called its attention to Executive Order 8802 and later amendments. Assemblyman Augustus F. Hawkins, lone colored member of the California Legislature, testified that he had learned by experience gained working in shipyards that the CIO did not discriminate against Negroes in shipyards, as did the AFL. He did allow, however, that the CIO yard in question might have been more alert to upgrading of skilled colored workmen. Hawkins said, "Race discrimination is demoralizing to Negroes and harmful to the war effort in general."

HARMONY POSSIBLE

Evidence that Negro and white workers could work together harmoniously was advanced by William Maas, president of the Pacific Sound Equipment company, who explained that at least half of his employes are Negroes and, that, further, the company has a colored woman foreman and two Negro inspectors. Walter Williams, former Cal-Ship employee, who was the first FEPC witness, told of his fight and that of the shipyard workers' committee fo[illegible]ual participation agai[illegible]m crow auxiliary, [illegible]p and he also told of how th[illegible] instituted a job action picket line, but, later, voluntarily withdrew their fight because it was harmful to the war effort.

CAL-SHIP LAWYER CHALLENGED

With Consolidated and Western Pipe and Steel resting their cases, the brunt of the discrimination charges are assumed by Cal-Ship, through Russell A. Bergman, industrial relations manager, who is himself a lawyer. He testified that Cal-Ship had tried, in every way possible, to comply, both in letter and spirit, with "8802." He admitted instances of bias, but said Negroes have been given the same industrial opportunities as others, citing launchings of the "Booker T. Washington" and "Paul Laurence Dunbar" as examples to prove public recognition of the race. Questioned as to the number of colored foremen in the yards, Bergeman contradicted the statement that there were only two. He admitted, however, that there were no Negro female clerks or office help o his knowledge.

The FEPC's counsel, Mr. Harrison, and Mr. Bergeman engaged in a legal battle of wits when the former sought to force admission that the President's executive order superseded any master agreement the company might [illegible] a union. Har[illegible] insisted that the companies are morally bound to go beyond whatever contracts exist with unions in opposing race discrimination. Bergeman finally admitted that Cal-Ship would like to see all employees 'on an equal footing."

That sizeable numbers of colored shipyard workers are involved in this big labor controversy is attested by the fact Negro employment with various West Coast firms exist in the following proportion: Cal-Ship 4,067 workers of the plan't gross, of 40,000; Western Pipe and Steel, 800 of 13,000, and Consolidated, 1,500 of 20,000. Of the total of all shipyard workers the Boilermakers' union controls the hiring of fully 65 per cent. Negroes co[illegible]cent of all the n[illegible]ed during the past three months.

The President's FEPC personnel at the local hearings numbered John Brophy, Milton P. Webster, R. A. Southall, Boris Shiskin, P. Bernard Young, Sr., and Chairman Malcolm Ross.

Marcantonio Presses For Action on Permanent FEPC

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Representative Vito Marcantonio (ALP-N.Y.) this week in Congress took steps to secure an early vote o[illegible] (H[illegible]1722) to give permanent legal status to the President's Com[illegible]e on Fair Employment Practice. He filed a resolution requesting the House Rules Committee to report his bill for a vote to the floor of the House. This is a technical step prior to the filing of a discharge petition, which when signed by 218 members of Congress will force a vote on the measure, as was the case with the Marcantonio anti-poll tax bill.

The New York congressman made clear that he was taking this action as a result of the recent ruling of Comptroller General Lindsay C. Warren, that the Executive Oder 9346 creating the FEPC was only a directive and not a mandatory order.

"Enactment of my bill," said the congressman, [illegible] settle the question once and for all; it will put teeth in the FEPC and make it impossible for the Comptroller General or anyone else to prevent full enforcement of anti-jim crow regulations in employment in war industries,"

Father Haas Resigns

Kansas City Call Mo.

Father Haas has resigned and the FEPC is without a chairman again. Since it began to function, the President's Committee has been without a chairman and full membership about as much of the time as it has had a complete board.

We hope that a successor to Haas will be appointed immediately and that the work of the committee will not be interrupted as it was for months after the resignation of the first chairman, Malcolm S. MacLean.

Warren Pulls The Switch

Courier

Pittsburgh, Pa

NOV 6 1943

The Fair Employment Practices Committee, which might well be dubb[illegible]Franklin's Football," has been finally ele[illegible]ed by that patriotic Tar Heeler, Controller of the United States, Lindsay C. Warren.

The FEPC had long been in the twilight zone between life and death, revived ever and anon, only to sink back into a state of suspended animation whenever confronted by any fundamental issue.

Not long ago it was dragged from its death bed to stage the hearings concerning racial discrimination practiced by the American railroads and organized railroad Labor, and promptly returned to its death-like slumber.

Now Mr. Warren (who used to be in charge of the .ly-white House restaurant, if memory serves us right), has ended the tragi-comedy which has alternately roused and dashed Negro hopes that the moral force of Presidential Orders 8802 and 9346 might compel employers (including the Federal Government!) to practice that democracy concerning which so much has been said in high places.

The North Carolinian pulled the switch on the FEPC when he decreed the other day that Government contractors need not obey the President's Order in all cases: i.e., they could do as they choose—which is what they have always done in the South and numerous places elsewhere in the country.

The Gentleman from North Carolina says Order No. 9346 is "directory" rather than "mandatory", and can be disregarded where insistence upon it might interfere with the U.S. obtaining vital goods or services.

Thus, the view held by some of our biggest contractors, by the South generally, by the Communists and others finally prevails, and it substantiates the contention of The Pittsburgh Courier from the beginning that only a federal law can succ[illegible]lly cope with the problem of racial discri[illegible]tion in war industry.

While [illegible] FEPC has undoubtedly had some influence for the good, it is crystal clear that mere moral suasion is not enough when dealing with people unmoved by moral arguments when and where the question of color is concerned.

One factor that cannot be ignored in considering the reason for Warren assuming the role of executioner is the political one.

There is an election next year, the stakes are higher than any in our national history and the Democratic Party is determined to stay in office, despite the definite GOP swing.

Under the circumstances it does not feel that it can afford to antagonize the Solid South, the big employers and the craft union moguls by insisting upon non-discriminatory treatment of the Negro war worker . . . which is why so many previous efforts have been made to kill the FEPC.

It is ridiculous to assume that the President is unaware of these maneu[illegible]

Clearly the time has arrived for Negroes to stop wasting time b[illegible]ging for more power for the deceased FEPC, and [illegible] start contending for a federal law providing fines and imprisonment for war contractors discriminating against workers because of color, race or religion.

It ought not be difficult to find Congressmen and Senators willing to introduce and back such legislation at this political juncture.

Capital Transit Company Still Evading FEPC Order

Refuse To Employ Negroes

Father Haas Testifies Against Firm

OCT 15 1943

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — The hope here is that the appearance of Msg. Francis J. Haas, chairman, Fair Employment Practice committee before the public utilities commission last Tuesday will have put a serious crimp in the application of the Capital Transit company to convert 52 of its old two-man crew streetcars for operation by a single person.

The application is based upon a desire of the company to put on more cars and at the same time use what little labor there is available. The commission decided to postpone its decision pending a study of the matter by the street car men's union.

Unexpected Witness

A totally unexpected witness, Msg. Haas, who wi[illegible]ly be replaced at [illegible] head of FEPC, read from a [illegible]epared statement in which he said that there is a pool of 328 Negroes available at the offices of the United States Employment service who could be used to run trolleys if the company would employ them.

He pointed also to the successful use of Negroes in the capacity of trolley operators in Cleveland, Detroit, New York, Buffalo, Tulsa and San Francisco, stating that there is a total of 2,053 Negroes employed in that capacity. His full statement was as follows:

"The jurisdiction of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices extends to all of the employment policies of the Capital Transit Co., which concerns discrimination because of race, creed, color or national origin. The company is, at the present time, under a directive order of FEPC to recruit, hire and upgrade all qualified workers according to executive order 8802.

Some Progress Made

"This directive which was issued Nov. 28, 1942, specifically requested the company to hire Negroes as platform men. Since June of this year, in conferences with FEPC, the company has indicated its willingness to comply with the requirements of executive order 9346 which amends order 8802.

"Since June the [illegible]mittee has been in close touch with the company in an attempt to help it comply in a manner most conductive to good public order. Our latest information from the company indicates that some progress is being made.

"The committee was advised by the USES Oct. 4, 1943, that there is currently a pool of 328 potential Negro applicants who are classified as bus drivers, or in related classifications such as chauffeurs, taxicab drivers, tractor and truck drivers, etc. The USES also reported at the same time that between May 10 and Oct. 1, 1943, 300 Negro applicants having the basic qualifications for platform men were offered referral to the Capital Transit company.

Eight Accepted Referral

"However, the USES further that only eight of this number accepted referral, the others stating they believed nothing would be gained by making application until the problem had been settled.

"Of the eight who have been referred one has been rejected and the applications of the others are pending. I might add that I was informed by USES yesterday that if any of the present employes of the company were to stop work in opposition to th[illegible]employment of Negroes, such workers would not be able to get certificates of availability for employment elsewhere.

"I would like to indicate something of the experience of other cities regarding the employment of Negroes as bus and streetcar operators, conductors and motormen. Reports received by the committee within the last month from Cleveland, Detroit, New York, Buffalo and San Francisco, indicate that there is a total of 2,053 Negroes employed in these capacities.'

FIREWORKS AT OREGON HEARINGS

NOV 27 1943

Courier

Pittsburgh, Pa

By HERMAN HILL
(Pacific Coast Bureau)

PORTLAND, Ore.—Under the fi[illegible]g probe by President Roosevelt's Fair Employment Practice Committee of hiring and upgrading policies at the Henry J. Kaiser shipyards, defense lawyers for Local 72 of the AFL Shipbuilders and Boilermakers' union, Charles Robison and K. C. Tanner, admitted the union's guilt in barring Negroes from membership, but disclaimed its total responsibility for this discrimination and placed the major blame, instead, on the shoulders of the International Brotherh[illegible]in Kan[illegible]ty, Mo.

Testify[illegible] for the policies of Kaiser's three local yards, Edgar F. Kaiser, general manager, and his counsel, Gordon Johnson, alleged that the corporation had complied with both the letter and the spirit of Executive Order 8802 and the later FEPC dictums.

BLAME INTERNATIONAL

In laying the blame for Local 72's discriminatory methods—which barred Negroes from full-fledged membership in lieu of affiliation with a jim crow auxiliary—the union lawyers branded the union's executive council, he[illegible]d by J. A. Franklin, as th[illegible]lty party, charg[illegible]hat it had included in the constitutional ritual a clause which barred "others than whites" from membership.

DEFEND LOCAL 72 HEAD

Tom Ray, regarded as an avowed Negro hater because of his vigorous opposition to awarding Negroes full-fledged membership in the boilermakers' union, was defended by Robison, who asserted:

"Tom Ray is for economic equality for all. He will go as far as the constitution will allow him. He has lived within the structure of his house, but his hands are tied."

Robison labelled Franklin, the international executive, a "pious fraud," who practiced "lip service only" and instigated the setting up of jim crow auxiliaries.

While defending Ray, Local 72 president, a degree of criticism was directed at Tom Crowe, international representative, and even William Green, AFL president, for their "wolves in sheep's clothing" attitude on the Negro question. The non-discriminatory resolution offered by J. P. McGowan, international vice president, in Boston, was termed just more lip service.

Although it had b[illegible]requested to have representati[illegible] the two-day hea[illegible]s, Monday and Tuesday, November 15-16, the International Boilermakers union had no representative present. The FEPC likely will seek to have President Roosevelt call the powerful international into a special conference before its national convention in January. Meanwhile, it is assured, the FEPC probe of hiring and upgrading policies at the Kaiser yards will continue.

PLEA FOR DEMOCRATIC POLICIES

In opening the two-day hearings here by the FEPC, Marvin C. Harrison, special counsel, opened the government's case with an impassioned 3,000-word statement, in which he declared the government's case involved the national policy of equality of employment opportunity without regard to race or color—against practices which have seriously hindered the full mobilization of manpower for the war effort.

However, in its final significance, it is obvious that the case involves, directly and centrally, the right of minority groups to sell their labor in the open market, without discrimination from either employers or unions, because of race, creed or color. This right is so basic

COURIER ANALYZES FEPC'S RAILROAD DECISIONS

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa

WASHINGTON—If the directives of the FEPC to a score or more of railroads and railway labor organizations can be enforced, there [illegible] a new day for Negro railroad workers. This is the unanimous reaction of observers here this week to the news of the sweeping orders issued against discrimination in railroad employment by the committee.

At the same time sober observers expressed the fear that publication of the directives was only the first round in a long and bitter fight to win equal treatment for Negro railway employees.

SEES BATTLE TO HALT COMPLIANCE

There seems little doubt that the committee and the administration will be subjected to tremendous pressures in the attempt to prevent actual operation of the committee's orders. Already there are indications that poll tax congressmen on Capitol Hill have shown an interest in the directives and will enter the battle to halt their enforcement.

Presence in Washington last Saturday of legal representatives of ten Southeastern Ca[illegible]nished strong indication [illegible]sibility of the committees' directives being attacked in the courts through injunctions restraining the FEPC from enforcing its directives.

If injunctions were granted by a court, the whole enforcement of the directives could possibly be delayed for several months.

[illegible]ERN LINES WILL MAKE PEACE

At present there seems to be three distinct groups whom the committee will have to face: the Southeastern Railway bloc, the Northern and Western lines, the unions. The Southeastern bloc, as already indicated, may test the power of [illegible]ommittee to enforce its order, wh[illegible]e time relying upon "politica[illegible]raising" by such die-hard poll taxers as Rankin of Mississippi, Connally of Texas, and others. The Northern and Western lines, not acting as a bloc, seem likely to make their peace with the committee as the New York Central, Union Pacific and Pennsylvania seem to be doing at the present time. The latter group is impeded by the solid bloc of railway labor unions which have not been represented at the hearings, have made no answer to any charges, and have completely ignored the committee. The danger may well lie mostly with this last group, representing se[illegible]million tightly organized wh[illegible] railroad workers.

Significant in the directives is the fact that at [illegible]e does the committe issue a[illegible] order insisting that Negroes be admitted to membership in the jim-crow unions. This issue is skirted by the directive which insists that Negro workers be given equal opportunity in choosing and conferring with a bargaining agent to represent all the workers of a particular craft.

RULING IGNORED ALL WITNESSES

This concession to the jim-crow unions may promise confusion in the future. Unless Negroes are permitted free and equal membership in the unions, then the problem of selecting a bargaining agent under the Railway Labor Act is rendered most confusing by the committee directive. For equal opportunity to choose a bargaining a[illegible] must carry with it the righ[illegible] only to choose on[illegible] standard national railwa[illegible]or crafts as that agent, but the right to reject such a craft organization and to campaign among Negro and white workers for another representative.

The hesitant approach of the committee towards the powerful labor unions is due, in the opinion of some persons here, to the insistence of Boris Shiskin, AFL representative, that their internal affairs are not subject to committee jurisdiction. Such a position was taken at the AFL convention in Boston in October.

Significant also is the fact that the committee neglected to order employment or upgrading of a single individual worker who testified that he had suffered discrimination.

However careful the committee has sought to be in its approach to the problem, the strong feeling here seems to be that [illegible] until the President hims[illegible]icates his full intention to back up his committee's action, taking over the operation of [illegible] railroads by the government [illegible] necessary, can there be assurance that the directives will be enforced.

At the same time in Congress a bill giving FEPC full power to enforce its decisions moved one step further towards passage last week when Congressman Vito Marcantonio, its sponsor, filed House Discharge Petition Number 18, to force a House vote on the measure. Two hundred and eighteen signatures are necessary to force such action.

Congress Should Be Asked To Enact Into Law the Power and Scope of FEPC

A NECESSARY and timely organization of force has stemmed from and been activated by the March-on-Washing[illegible]ovement to give permanency, scope and power to the work of the Preside[illegible] Committee on Fair Employment Practice. This is a line of action which challenges the active. effective co-operation of all groups interested in the future of minorities in this country whether they agree with all the proposals or all the methods of the tough-minded intransigents of Seventh avenue. It is a foregone conclusion that unless something is done now to make FEPC stronger, it will grow weaker. Mr. Townsend of the Transport Workers' union has said that FEPC is dead. That is not true. The Committee is sick. It must have treatment. It must be revitalized. As such mechanisms in government go, it is in its infancy. A sick child may become a healthy adult. That is the objective to be sought for FEPC.

Mr. Prattis

If the mortal blow to the President's Committee had been delivered in the railroad hearings, it would have been our fault. We are the ones who have insisted that this infant Committee take on all comers. It could be argued that we have pushed the Committee, impatient for results, for victories, which the Committee has not had the strength to deliver. Sometimes prizefighters are rushed along in the same wa[illegible] brilliant futures spoiled [illegible]ore the young fighte[illegible] developed.

WE SHOU[illegible] KNOW VIEW OF CONGRESS

THIS WRITER is more and more persuaded to believe that money and power and scope for the Committee must be sought through Congress. Once more, as in the Reconstruction Period, the Congress must be asked to take a stand for fair play. It refused in the earlier days by rejecting a national civil rights bill. But times have changed. The question must be asked again. If a majority in Congress does not feel that any action should be taken to keep open the door of economic opportunity for all Americans, we should know it as a fact. The only way to find out is to place before Congress a bill to enact into law provisions for guaranteeing to all Americans the open door to jobs, public and private.

The present Congress may reject such a measure. But this is not the Congress to end all congresses. If it does reject the bill, we can separate our friends from our enemies and return again. But we will never get anywhere if we don't make a start.

The future of the FEPC can and should be made a determinant for Negro political action. There is nothing that means quite so much to all Negroes wherever they live. This is a line of action on which our political leaders, the press, the church, and all other organizations should unite.

There will be many who will fear to put the Congress to the test. They will fear that possible defeat in Congress will doom the Committee. We should not think of defeat. We should think of ultimate victory.

EDUCATION MUST BE MADE ACTIVE FORCE

OUR WHITE FRIENDS, and many colored leaders, have great faith in the educative process so far as race relations are concerned. Educ[illegible]n help. But ther[illegible] be [illegible]positive, conscious [illegible]ort to educate. Who is trying to educate Americans to appreciate one another? Where is the great, educative process in action? Is the national government taking any bold step out in the open to promote education for interracial unity? Are the State governments promoting such education? What tangible, existing process do these viewers with alarm refer to when they speak of education?

If you don't wish to handle racial matters by government fiat or decree, this writer will settle for education if you will activate a program of education. If the President or the Congress do not wish to tell the American p[illegible] that they must not perse[illegible]minorities, this writer will b[illegible]atisfied if, for a starter, they'll invest the price of one battleship into education to combat racial prejudice.

Debate on FEPC will be educative. If Congress will give the FEPC the backing of law, the Committee itself, with punitive power held in reserve, can become one of these educative factors that are talked about.

By all means, let us seek strength for FEPC from Congress instead of bewailing its obvious illness.

Kansas City Call

FEPC Settles 232 Cases in October; 1,713 Still Remain to Be Solved

Kansas City, Mo.

Although 232 cases of alleged employment discrimination were closed during the month of October, 1943, the active case load of the President's Committee on Fair employm[illegible]Practice reached [illegible]igure of [illegible],713 cases o[illegible]v. 1, Malcolm Ross, chairman, said this week.

Of the 232 cases closed in October, 62 cases, or 28 percent, were adjusted satisfactorily, Mr. Ross reported. Thirty-one percent of the cases were dismissed on merits, 25 percent for insufficient evidence, 6 percent for lack of jurisdiction, and 10 percent of the cases were withdrawn by the complainants.

Mr. Ross said there had been a 30 percent increase in the active case load since Sept. 1, 1943, and credited this rise to the establishment of various regional offices of the committee.

Prior to this reorganization, all of the Committee's cases were processed by a small staff in the national FEPC office in Washington, D. C. Nine regional and two sub-regional offices are now functioning in New York city, Philadelphia, Washington, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Atlanta, Kansas City, Dallas, San Francisco, and Los Angeles.

The fifth region, embracing Cleveland and Detroit, had the largest case load—366 active cases on Nov. 1, Mr. Ross declared. The third region (Philadelphia) was next w[illegible]17 cases, while [illegible] sixth region (Chicago) w[illegible]third with 220 cases. The New York office listed 136 cases; Atlanta, 126; Kansas City, 95, and Dallas, 76. Approximately 25 percent of the 1,713 cases listed on Nov. 1 had been pending for more than six months, the chairman stated.

Cases are not docketed by the FEPC unless a complaint alleges discrimination in employment because of race, creed, color of national origin.

Atlanta City Council Asks Ouster Of FEPC Office And White Director

Defender
Chicago. Ill. 1943

By HARRY McALPIN

(Chief, Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The City Council of Atlanta, Ga., has passed a resolution which seeks the closing of the regional office of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice there, and orders the regional director, A[illegible]ce Hunt, white and Virginia-born, to leave town.

The reason: FEPC's regional office is located in the Forsythe building, a downtown office structure, and the City Council is opposed to any Negroes working in the building other than as janitors.

It is reported that a petition was drawn up by occupants of the building objecting to Negroes being brought in. There are no Negroes in the FEPC office yet—the only occupants being the regional director and his white secretary. But the report spread that FEPC hires Negroes in clerical and professional capacities.

Sponsor Radio Program

Besides carrying the petition to the City Council, the occupants of the building, who are themselves federal government employees, sponsored an hourly broadcast over an Atlanta radio [illegible], stating that FEPC plans to bring Negro white-collar workers into the Forsythe building. All eight stories of the building are under government lease.

This climax to Atlanta's action followed a two-week effort on the part of Representative Ramspeck (D) of Georgia, Democratic whip of the House of Representatives and chairman of the House Civil Service commissioin, to get FEPC to move out of the building.

In an exclusive interview with the Defender, Ramspeck said he had tried to get hold of Chairman Malcolm Ross of the FEPC several days ago, but Ross was then in California and Oregon for the Boilermaker hearings.

Following this effort, Ramspeck was in Georgia to see his mother, who underwent an eye operation, and at that time, he said, he became acquainted with the problem at first hand. He was then approached by citizens and urged to put a stop to FEP[illegible]lanta.

[illegible]ence Threat

"What FEPC proposes to do," said Ramspeck, "will be harmful to all concerned. There are no separate toilets in the Forsythe building for Negroes, and there is no place in the vicinity for Negroes to eat."

To insist on carrying out the plan, he declared, will set race relations in Atlanta back 25 years. It may even lead to violence.

"You can't force this kind of thing down the peoples' throat," he stated. "FEPC has done a good job of putting Negroes to work in factories and war plants. I am glad to see that. I think Negroes deserve a chance to make a living. But, it is a different proposition when you try to force them into offices with whites. There it is more of a social relationship, and the whites are not going to stand for social equality."

He insisted he was depicting conditions as they exist, not a theory. He said his own personal attitude toward Negroes is one of helpfulness.

Lack of Education

Ramspeck told the Defender that Georgia has more Negroes, numerically, than any other state, though some states have proportionately more Negroes. In Georgia and in the city of Atlanta, N[illegible] are about one-third of the [illegible]ation.

"We have so[illegible]ne people among our Negroes. Some of them have nice businesses, but they are in Negro neighborhoods," he pointed out.

The masses of Negroes, however, are not educated beyond the fourth grade, according to the Congressman. He maintained, however, that Georgia has done as good a job in this respect as its available money would allow. The state, he claimed, spends a larger percentage of its per capita wealth for education than does New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio, or any others in the North.

He admitted not much high school training was provided for Negroes, but said this was one reason he supported the Federal Aid to Education bill, which was killed by political trickery of the Republicans led by Senator Taft of Ohio.

Talks To Ross

He also voted for the Wage and Hour Law, he said, and was criticiized by Georgians fo[illegible] doing so. They claimed the la[illegible]d primarily benefit Negroes, who would become u[illegible] if they earned too much. "But I want to see everyone's standard of living raised," Ramspeck declared.

"I have laid off the FEPC," he said, "but now I have to line up on one side or the other. In politics, you can't forever keep quiet. The City Council of Atlanta has called on me and other elected representatives to get FEPC to withdraw. I realize I can't stop them, but I have made the attempt."

He said he talked with Chairman Ross last week about the situation.

"This fellow Saunders in South Carolina had the right idea," he stated. (Ramspeck admitted afterward he was [illegible] to C. C. Spaulding of the North Carolina Mutual Life Insurance company, in Durham, N. C.) "Saunders said in an article in Readers' Digest that Negroes are foolish to seek equality because there is no such thing. He was right. All whites are not equal. All Negroes are not equal. I have heard of a case in New England where Negro residents objected to bringing in outside Negroes to work in war plants.

"Negro leaders are trying to push too far in too many wa[illegible] continued. "Negroes have made remarkable progress since slavery. But trying to go too fast by force will set them back. You can't do it by force."

Race relations, he said, have been very good in Atlanta. "There may be a few cases where Negroes are discriminated against, but on the whole, they know how to get along."

Officials at FEPC had no comment to make beyond saying they had received nothing offcial on the situation, and so far as the agency is concerned, everything remains "as is."

There is apprehension [illegible]me quarters that a concerted move might be developing to kill FEPC. On Dec. 3, Rep. John Rankin of Mississippi declared on the house floor the committee "is doing everything it possibly ca[illegible] drive the white pe[illegible] South out of the D[illegible]atic party."

"When they go out and attempt to force every private enterprise in the south to accept Negroes, force them to employ Negroes and promote them," he declared, "they are simply creating dissension." Further he added: "This so-called Fair Employment Practice committee is really a rump organization without any legal authority, and should be abolished at once."

While objection is being raised in Atlanta to mixed staffing [illegible] regional office, Carl[illegible] [illegible]ta[illegible]da, acting regional [illegible]r operating out of Dallas, is proceeding with no apparent difficulty. The case load there is 120.

FEPC Members Meet and Decide on Five Points

Call
Kansas City. Mo DEC 17 1943

WASHINGTON. — (ANP) — The President's Committee on Fair Employment practice met Saturday, with two members absent, discussed and reached decisions in the following matters:

1. Confirmed the date of Dec. 8 set for hearing evidence in Philadelphia that a clause in the contract between the Philadelphia Rapid Transit system and the employes' union discriminates against Negroes in that it bars their employment.

2. Announced that it was awaiting the outcome of court proceedings instigated in San Francisco out of which came the injunction prohibiting the firing of 150 Negroes employed at the Marineship Company yards, Sausalito, Cal., regardless of the terms of the closed shop agreement with the boilermakers' union. Further hearing before Justice Roche was scheduled for [illegible]6.

3. Promised that "action of a public nature" will be taken against Capital Transit company, Washington, within two weeks if the committee's director to hire Negroes is not complied with. This is anniversary week for the case.

4. Declared that the Pennsylvania railroad and the New York Central system are "still in the position of considering ways of adjusting their employment policies to fall in line with the executive order." The 30 day period given the companies to comply terminates on Dec. 23.

5. Confirmed the report that an agreement had been reached with the Railroad Retirement board, now handling recruiting for the railroads, whereby Negroes would be referred for jobs just as anyone else. Refusal of the companies to hire them, Chairman Malcom Ross of FEPC, said will allow the offended individuals to file complaints of discrimination.

A source close to the committee declared that counsel for the complainants in the west coast injunction proceedings filed "an interesting brief." This source revealed that not only is the executive order one of the props in the complaint, but that a "strong support" is the citation of the U. S. Circuit court that "the right to earn a livelihood is an inalienable right of property entitled to protection by the constitution."

Boris Shishkin, AFL representative on the committee, took the occasion to point to the "rigging of prices" and the "setting up of special brands for inferior goods" for marketing in Negro neighborhoods. Shishkin is co-chairman also of the labor policy committee of the Office of Price administration.

He poi[illegible] out that [illegible] exclusion of Negroes from price control and rationing boards had come to the attention of the FEPC sometime ago, and that the matter was referred to him for attention in view of his position with OPA. He was therefore announcing some of his observations.

"I have recommended to the OPA to make special effort to continue to look into this problem," he said.

Atlanta Council Wants FEPC Office Closed

ATLANTA.—(ANP) — Declaring that the employment of white and Negro personnel to work side by side in downtown Atlanta office buildings would set a "horrible precedent," the Atlanta city councily Monday adopted a resolution calling upon Georgia congressional representatives at Washington to "insist upon the removal of the newly established southeastern regional office of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices."

The "race situation," said the resolution adopted by the Atlanta council, ostensibly at the instigation of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, "can best be handled by local people. The activities of this committee in other parts of the south and particularly in Alabama have resulted in building up racial animosities."

Adopted and signed by [illegible] the 14 members of council, the resolution is expected to reach Mayor William B. Hartsfield's desk for action late Tuesday.

The Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, observers say, is interested in keeping Negro workers out of skilled jobs so that there will continue to be a labor reservoir, thus keeping Atlanta from being classed as a labor shortage area and bringing about a mandatory 48-hour week.

FEPC Officials Weigh Negroes' Working Ills

FT. WORTH, Texas—(ANP)—At a meeting Thursday [illegible] FEPC officials and the Tr[illegible]d Employment [illegible]ttee of the Negro Welfare council, it was urged that the USES refer all applicants to available jobs to the various Fort Worth plants, regardless to race, creed or national origin. The conference, held to gather general facts on the employment situation for Negroes here, was attended by Clarence Mitchell, national represenattive, Dr. Carlos E. Castaneda, regional director, and L. Virgil Williams, regional field examiner of the FEPC, and James R. Ellis, Fort Worth area director of the WMV and member of the Training and Employment committee.

The conference revealed that Convair is now asking for 50 Negro men, 25 to be added to the janitorial department and 25 to be placed in semi-skilled and skilled departments. After discussing Convair's willingness to employ 250 Negro men in the Buck Wing division, where airplanes are made, the Negro Welfare council representatives asked FEPC officials to recommend that 250 of the Negro men now serving as janitors, be replaced by women.

FEPC

Northern employers are closely watching the developments in the case of the sixteen recalcitrant railroads. If the Administration fails the race and democracy by showing the FEPC's gums and not its teeth, layoffs can result. This will be true in many plants where colored people were hired only under duress.

A move is under foot to test the constitutionality of the FEPC in the Supreme Court. Informed people close to the sixteen Nazi-like railroads operating in the USA intimate that this will be the last resort in the attempt to sabotage the FEPC.

The sixteen railroads are, in practice, no different from the other roads. It has been tacitly agreed that the Southern roads will carry the Swastika ball for their Northern counterparts. Most of the Southern roads have financial ties with the Northern ones anyhow.

The Administration does not want to drop the FEPC. In dropping it, the Solid South would lose some of its anti-F.D.R. feeling, but the Administration would lose the colored vote. It is a question of which is more valuable. Considerations of honesty and fair play are entirely incidental.

Nor does the Administration want the FEPC to be Supreme Court tested. The NRA died in the Supreme Court. On the other hand, the Administration does not want to show weakness in dealing with the Southern Senators, but neither does it want to risk the threatened Civil War in the Democratic party.

Already several English-speaking, Nazi-minded Southern Senators have threatened to create a third party. Jumping on the Administration with both feet they suggest a lily-white, Southern Democratic party.

Such a party would get a great deal of support from Southern States. If the new party were created its obvious effects would be: retention of the poll tax; more repressive legislation against colored people; further disfranchisement in primary and general elections; pellagra and low pay for all industrial workers in the South.

It would also make good propaganda for the Nazis and Japs, widen the gulf between the James and Potomac Rivers and the rest of America.

The new party would also lose national political patronage, but could win several seats in both Houses. The Administration is violently opposed to any splinter Democratic party.

The Southern Congressmen, who hate Roosevelt because of the FEPC, and so-called "coddling of colored workers" and higher wages, are glad to have a chance to slap at the White House and pay more attention to that than anything else except the tiring job of keeping down colored people.

Army

The hinted Congressional investigation on the non-use of colored troops in the US Army will be held only if it is politically expedient. It will not be conducted out of love for the colored soldier or any high beliefs in democracy. It will simply be administered as required to garner race votes.

The investigation, or series of speeches will be led by an ill assorted group of Congressmen who will use this as an instrument to do a bigger job: defeat Roosevelt and blackball Willkie. One of the men who will probably lead the investigation figured in the trial of Nazi Agent George Sylvester Viereck. Another is said to have let fascists use his franked envelopes and inserted Nazi talk into the Congressional Record.

Colored officers have been criticized in Congressional toilets and smoking rooms. "They are too conceited, too superior to their men and woefully unable to maintain proper officer-enlisted man status. They are unaccustomed to authority and abuse it. Only the highest type white officer should be sent to command colored troops. Colored troops are apt to be more indolent, more addicted to crap shooting and more AWOL than whites."

Food

Since a group of white and colored CIO delegates ate in the Capitol restaurant a sign has been posted and guards stationed at the doors. The sign says that the facilities of the cafe are for employees only.

Truth of the matter is that David Lynn, architect of the Capitol, and nominally in charge of the cafes, is afraid that more colored people might come in to eat. Obviously, Representative Dawkins's staff can eat in the hallowed halls, but other colored people are prohibited.

The rule, which once forced out white visitors too, is not now strongly enforced although the sign remains in place. White visitors do eat there now, but the rule is till rigid in regards to dark Americans.

The Senate Office Building makes no pretenses; simply refuses to serve colored people. If you ask "Why?", when you are refused you don't get an answer. An automatic "Sorry, we cannot serve you," is the reply.

David Lynn says this is to conserve food. "There is a food shortage and we must limit service to employees of the building." Contradiction: A colored person may buy as much food as he can carry out of the place.

FEP Vs. Dixie Railroads Battle Placed On President's Desk For Final Verdict

DEC 25 1943

Defender
Chicago, Ill

By HARRY McALPIN
(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON. — Undeclared civil war on the racial issue has broken out on Capitol Hill.

With undisguised rebel shouts, Dixie poll taxers in both branches of Congress are on the war path here determined to axe the Fair Employment Practices Committee and with it every government agency that has taken any steps to crack down on race discrimination.

Augmented by a GOP congressional group that Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP, N.Y.) have labeled "Rankin Republicans," the Southern Democrats have threatened an open break with the New Deal if President Roosevelt upholds the FEPC in its order to the nation's railroads to halt job discrimination.

Behind the Dixie bloc is the solid power of the railroad lobby in Washington and certain segments of AFL unions who are determined to keep Negro workers off the railroads except in menial capacities.

Pressure On FDR

They are already exerting pressure on the White House to force the President to back water on the all-important war issue. Meanwhile, the FEPC headed by Malcolm Ross has put the entire matter of railroad employment on the President's desk for final decision after issuing a resounding blast against the "doubtful patriotism" of the Southern railroads.

The President is expected to turn to the FEPC problem the moment he has settled the emergency strike situation in the railroad industry There has been some talk of government seizure of the roads to settle both the strike threat and the FEPC dispute in one move.

In taking up the question the President is expected to seek the opinion of Attorney General Francis Biddle before deciding his course.

Conference Soon

No comment was available at the office of the Attorney General on the FEPC's "cease and desist" order which has been defied by Southern railroads. Although he could go into the court with a request for a bill in equity to seek enforcement of the directive, it was indicated that no action was contemplated pending a canvass of the situation.

A conference with the Attorney General may be arranged soon on the order, which was issued without preliminary consultation with him.

While the attorney general has held that the President's war powers as Commander in Chief of the armed forces are exceedingly broad, Federal legal circles are unofficially discussing the advisability of any action by the President in the railroad case and, if action is deemed advisable, how far he should go in invoking executive sanctions.

Federal Sanctions

It was also pointed out that the President or the FEPC could recommend that Federal agencies take sanctions. For example, the Railroad Retirement Board might be asked to refrain from referring jobseekers to the affected carriers and the War Production Board and the various procurement agencies might be requested to cancel contracts with them.

Because the FEPC was created by executive order and not by statute, it has no way of enforcing its directives. The War Labor Board was in a similar situation last summer before passing of the War Labor Disputes Act, which provided sanctions.

A bill to make the FEPC a statutory body has been offered in the House by Representatives Vito Marcantonio of New York, who is now pressing by petition for a vote on the measure.

Union Defies

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen informed the FEPC the union will not comply with an order to stop limiting its membership to white persons only.

Brotherhood President D. B. Robertson, in a letter to the committee, also said the FEPC had no legal authority to "direct the abrogation of agreements" regarding employment relations between the union and certain railroads, among them the Southeastern Carriers conference.

Meanwhile Rep. Howard W. Smith, (D., Va.) has taken up the cause of 16 Southern railroad corporations, and railway labor unions, which FEPC ordered to stop discriminating against Negro employes.

As chairman of the House committee investigating executive agencies, Smith is threatening to turn loose his staff on the FEPC to ferret out the ways, if any, in which the campaign against discrimination is violating the Constitution.

The anti-labor Virginian revealed that his committee is "considering" such an investigation, explaining that he had received several complaints "that the FEPC has been issuing directives without authority for some time."

Two other poll-taxers promptly joined in the attack. Rep. Robert Ramspeck (D., Ga.) said he felt FEPC "is doing more harm than good in trying to force employment of Negroes on railroads where they will be brought into contact with a public which in a large part resents their employment." Rep. Hugh Peterson (D., Ga.) reported "considerable agitation" over the FEPC order in his district.

The Congressional attack on the FEPC was led by Rep. John Elliott Rankin (D., Miss.).

Lambasts Railroads

It followed a brief speech by Rep. Marcantonio who lambasted the railroads for refusing to comply with an order "in keeping with the war effort."

The New York Congressman charged that the railroad corporations had misrepresented the FEPC order in a letter to all congressmen.

Rankin arose immediately and hotly described the FEPC as a "rump organization" and urged that it be "cleaned out."

The Mississippi poll taxer attacked the "shocking statement" by Marcantonio and charged that "some groups in New York headed by PM" were leading a movement "to harass the white people of the South, who are trying to keep the transportation system going."

"These people are stirring up race trouble in the South as no other before has ever done," Rankin cried. "They have taken it upon themselves to assume Hitler power, Mussolini power over the Southern railroads, which are carrying the burden of the war effort."

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, said he had no comment on the FEPC directive, but pointed out that there had been no change in the policy of the AFL or its affiliates on the Negro union problem since the matter was discussed at the federation's convention two months ago.

Mr. Green recalled having said then that the solution to the problem lay in education, not in force, that only a few AFL unions were charged with discrimination and that the federation directly chartered federal unions of Negroes.

City Council of Atlanta Wants FEPC Office Closed

Kansas City Call

ATLANTA. — (ANP) — Declaring that the employment of white and Negro personnel to work side by side in downtown Atlanta office buildings would set a "horrible precedent," the Atlanta city council Monday adopted a resolution calling upon Georgia congressional representatives at Washington to "insist upon the removal of the newly established southeastern regional office of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices."

Race Situation

The "race situation," said the resolution adopted by the Atlanta council, ostensibly at the instigation of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, "can best be handled by local people. The activities of this committee in other parts of the South and particularly in Alabama have resulted in building up racial animosities."

Adopted and signed by 11 of the 14 members of council, the resolution is expected to reach Mayor William B. Hartsfield's desk for action late Tuesday.

The Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, observers say, is interested in keeping Negro workers out of skilled jobs so that there will continue to be a labor reservoir, thus keeping Atlanta from being classed as a labor shortage area and bringing about a mandatory 48-hour week.

Chief objection was that "mixed employment of the races' was untenable. The office, with jurisdiction over Georgia, South Carolina, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Tennessee, was opened on Nov. 24 with A. Bruce Hunt, Virginia-born and educated, as the regional director.

Hunt had not even organized his staff when the council passed the resolution. It was planned to hire two field examiners. The offices are located in Atlanta's one skyscraper.

All the papers in Atlanta carried the story and, according to information received here, the local radio stations plugged the action all day.

Discuss Resolution

Hearing of the resolution, Chairman Malcolm Ross of FEPC declined to discuss it. The committee was awaiting a "crystallizing" of sentiment in Atlanta.

From a reliable source, however, it was learned that Ross had contacted the White House, but it could not be determined what was said or done or with whom he talked since the President was known to be out of the country.

It is also understood that he called upon Rep. Robert Ramspect of Georgia to discuss the resolution. Ross would neither confirm or deny this, and when reached for comment, Congressman Ramspect said he had not yet received a copy of the resolution and therefore could say nothing.

There is apprehension in some quarters that a concerted move might be developing to kill FEPC. On Dec. 3, Rep. John Rankin of Mississippi, declared on the house floor the committee "is doing everything it possibly can to drive the white people [illegible] South [illegible] of the Democratic party."

"When they go out and attempt to force every private enterprise in the South to accept Negroes, force them to employ Negroes and promote them," he declared, "they are simply creating dissension." Further he added: "This so-called Fair Employment Practice committee is really a rump organization without any legal authority, and should be abolished at once."

While objection is being raised in Atlanta to mixed staffing of the regional office, Carlos Castaneda, acting regional director operating out of Dallas, is proceeding with no apparent difficulty. The case load there is 120.

BISHOP HAAS AND THE FEPC

Defender
Chicago. Ill

47d

Monsignor Francis J. Haas has resigned the chairmanship of the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee. He has been appointed to and has accepted the post of Bishop of Grand Rapids. His successor has not yet been named by the President.

The resignation of this fighting Catholic prelate from the Committee to end discrimination in industry raises some interesting questions. For example: Is the bishopric of the city of Grand Rapids of greater significance now in this period of war than the Fair Employment Practices Committee? We believe this evaluation must be made. We feel the answer is No, and although we do not regard Haas' resignation as fatal to the work of the Committee or that the good Monsignor is the only one who can do a good job as head of FEPC, he has in a short time done excellently and the program which he projected holds, we believe, the possibility of still greater results.

The FEPC leadership is an extremely important war job. It is an anti-fascist job. It is the job against un-American and subversive activities in our war industries such as the Dies Committee might perform if it were not itself un-American but were truly seeking for subversive elements. There are many who do not want a good job done in this direction. They are the enemies within.

Another question: Were the recent railroad hearings which exposed the jim-crow policies of 22 companies and the railroad brotherhoods and opened to our sight ~~large~~ reservoirs of workers who were discriminated against because of their color, the reason for the elevation of this Catholic leader? Did Haas go too far? We know the railroad operators were particularly incensed at this hearing. Their un-American jim-crow policies served only to show how detrimental such policies are to the interest of the nation.

Were these railroad operators able to influence the Catholic hierarchy and secure Haas' elevation to a bishopric? To those who have noted the failure of the leading Catholic figures to carry on an aggressive fight against the jim-crow policies of their own schools this question looms large. Surely Haas was not the only churchman who could have filled the Grand Rapids bishopric with honor at this moment.

We believe it is a dangerous bit of appeasement to have men removed by promotion or otherwise from positions where they are effective in fighting against the internal workings of fascism to positions where they are removed from politics. Haas is needed in the political arena at this time. We need some of "God's angry men" and we need more men of God to get angry.

But now a new leader is to be chosen. The FEPC has a gigantic war task to perform. No weakling will be tolerated at its head.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Dec. 23 (ANP)—Employment of colored conductors, motormen, cashiers, bus drivers and platform attendants by the Philadelphia Transportation company, as ordered November 18 by the Fair Employment Practice committee under executive order 9346, hit a snag Wednesday when the Philadelphia Rapid Transportation Employes' union, PTC's bargaining agent, protested the hiring directive.

DEC 26 1943

The protestation, in which the union said the employment of Negroes in the higher-graded positions would bring about a condition of chaos and impairment, was given a City hall meeting attended by 300 or more citizens. Over 100 had to be refused admittance, due to lack of space.

DEC 26 1943

The union maintained the enforced hiring of colored people for the upper level of positions in the PTC organization would discriminate against the union, would be a tragic mistake and should of necessity be preceded by an educational program of integration among those already in the company's employ.

FEPC Chairman Malcom Ross presided over the meeting. Sitting with him was Milton P. Webster, international vice-president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, AFL.

The NAACP made a statement to the effect that Negroes are employed on the mass transportation systems of New York, Brooklyn, Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit, Tulsa and Chicago. Raleigh Johnson, colored PTC welder, told of efforts of Negro employes to get the company to make qualified Negroes trolley or bus operators.

DEC 26 1943

Intimidation of the injection of jim crow, should colored employment be put in operation, was made when Raleigh T. Senter ,president, and Dr. A. A. Mitten, chairman of the PTC committee on industrial relations, said the company might consider such employment on the Lombard street line, where most of the riders are colored.

Senter and Mitten did not make these statements at the meeting. Apparently, the two PTC executives had made these uncertain declarations to Johnson, who repeated them in speaking of the fruitless results of the Negro employes' efforts to urge the company to upgrade them.

Expert Labor Organizer Analyzes The Situation

DEC 24 1943

CHICAGO, Ill., Dec. (Special — The pertinent question facing America today is whether the FEPC will prove the instrumentality in breaking this vicious employment practice. Much of the support of this Committee has been drawn on the asssumption that it would eliminate many of the weak areas in our transportation problem.

Rests Case

The 16 southern railroads are resting their case on the so-called Railway Labor Act. The Railway Labor Act is an act of Congress which provides for the disposing of matters relating to conditions of employment and wages. Recently, the Supreme Court in the case of the Switchmen's Union of North America vs, the National Mediation Board, made the decision which stated in substance, that the rulings of the National Mediation Board were absolute inasmuch as the Federal Courts could not take jurisdiction. It might be interesting to note that the National Mediation Board is a Federal Agency created by the Railway Labor Act. With the FEPC unable to enforce its directives. the Railway Labor Act controlling the conditions of employment. and the Supreme Court granting dictatorial powers to the National Mediation Board, the Negro railroad worker finds himself much in the same position as Dred Scott, the runaway slave, who had entered a free state and was ordered back to slavery by the United States Supreme Court. The Negro railroad worker today, actually becomes an industrial fugitive in an industry of opportunity if this decision of the Supreme Court holds sway.

We pointed out sometime ago, that the FEPC was created not out of a keen desire to insure the full partication of Negroes in the war employment, but rather out of the political necessity on the part of the present administration to placate the growing insistence of the Negro communities for greater opportunities in the field of war employment. It was upon this false political placating premise that Executive Order 8802 was issued.

Explains Congress Actions

Following the announcement of the southern railroads rejecting the FEPC order to cease discrimination, Congressman Howard W. Smith of Virginia, immediately broke into print with the statement that an investigation would be made of the FEPC to determine its powers. This again glaringly reveals that the real enemies of fair employment practices and full utilization of Negro manpower, are the same ones who have used this war emergency to harass labor, fight price control, destroy the National Resource Planning Board, destroy the Farm Security Administration, adopt the Smith-Connally Bill, impede anti-poll tax legislation, and supply opposition to post war international cooperation based on equality of nations and people and many other points which translate the Four Freedoms into actual practice. Our present congress is, perhaps, the most anti-labor, anti-Negro and anti-progressive since 1870, when the Northern Republicans controlled by the railroads and other industrial interests joined with the Southern plantation Democrats to defeat the real purpose and aims of the Civil War and Reconstruction.

DEC 24 1943

However, despite the trials and tribulations of the FEPC, a more dangerous threat to the democratic processes in the railroad industry is obtained in the granting of absolute powers to the National Mediation Board by the Supreme Court through an interpretation of certain sections of the Railway Labor Act. Since this is possible, we emphatically question the constitutionality of that section of the Act which grants this unlimited power to a Federal Agency and denies the right of court review of decisions that in all practical purposes supports the sixteen southern railroads in their organized attack upon the FEPC.

DEC 24 1943

The implications of this challenge to industrial democracy in the railroad industry, takes precedence over many of our immediate problems and should become a "must" for all labor, progressives and liberals interested in ushering in a new day for all in American industry.

FEPC And WMC Agree On Methods Of Procedure

WASHINGTON, D.C.—The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice and the War Manpower Commission have agreed on methods and procedures to prevent overlapping of authority in enforcing the ban on discrimination in employment in war industries on account of race, color, religion or national origin.

The agreement, announced by Chairman Paul V. McNutt of the War Manpower Commission and Monsignor Francis J. Haas of the Fair Employment Practice Committee, was signed on August 2, and will be put into effect "as soon as feasible." It provides that:

1. If any inter-agency dispute arises in any regional office of either agency and cannot be settled by the chairmen, it shall regional directors, it shall immediately be referred to specially designated adjustment officers in the central offices of the War Manpower Commission and the Fair Employment Practice Committee.

SEP 11 1943

2. If any inter-agency difference involving questions of procedure arises and canot be adjusted in the above manner, it shall be referred to the two chairmen for final disposition.

3. If a difference involving questions of policy cannot be settled by the hcairmen, it shall be submitted to the President for settlement.

SEP 11 1943

4. If any such differences involve questions of interpretation of the executive orders under which the two agencies are operating, they shall be referred by the two chairmen to the Attorney General for a ruling by which the two agencies shall be bound.

Lynching the FEPC

Afro-American Baltimore, Md

When lynching States send lynch-minded Representatives to Washington, it is to be expected that they will apply the lynch technique to the job of running the Government.

That is exactly what is happening on Capitol Hill today, where Dixie Congressmen and Senators are howling for a probe of the FEPC, as an aftermath of the decision ordering Southern railroads to discontinue discrimination against colored workers.

So we are treated to the spectacle of Congress's wanting the policeman arrested for trying to bring the criminal to justice. As usual, Dixie is on the side of the lawless.

The railroads are engaged in keeping competent workers out of employment on the basis of color alone, and in complete defiance of the President's executive order.

But do any of the holier-than-thou Representatives who make so much pretense at fighting the war of democracy raise their voice in condemnation of the undemocratic practice of denying the right to work to fellow Americans? No, all they want to do is crush the agency through which the President has attempted to iron out the imperfections of our hypocritical system.

But what more could we expect from a bunch of interlopers, who themselves, hold office only by defrauding the majority of the people they pretend to represent out of their franchise?

They are holding office through the slimy tricks of poll taxes and lily-white primaries, and use every subterfuge to keep the intelligent soldiers of the nation from using the ballot, which they know only too well these fighting men would utilize to pry them out of their long-abused places of power.

They know that the fighting men on far-flung fronts of the world are not too busy killing Japs and Germans and crushing fascism abroad to recognize the rising tide of fascism at home, and that the advocates of this home-front fascism are taking advantage of the soldiers' absence to get a stronger hold on the nation while the latters' backs are turned.

Proof of this is seen in the following excerpt from Yank, the official soldier publication:

> We take our views on the post-war race problem from the founders of the United States, who believed that all men were created equal. No man has a right to talk about giving any American that which he already has by inalienable right.

With ten million young men under arms dedicated to this proposition, and with their number growing constantly, waiting for the opportunity to come back home and put those theories into practice, it is understandable why the die hards and the poll tax exploiters are quaking in their boots, and are trying to get in all of the dirty work they can before the day of reckoning comes.

It has been truthfully said, "Old men write with ink, but young men unwrite with blood."

If President Roosevelt is sincere in wanting to see America a democracy in fact, he need but turn toward those, both in the armed services and on the home front, who are victims of the frightened disfranchisers, and help these people get their voice.

Up To The President

Simultaneously with the report that 16 American railroads and the various railroad unions had defied the order of the Fair Employment Practices Committee to end discrimination and jim crowism against Negro workers, came news that President Roosevelt had returned from a series of historic conferences abroad.

Mr. Roosevelt returns to find a lustily bawling infant on the White House doorsteps, and it will be interesting to see what tactic he will evolve for extricating the Administration from this latest dilemma.

The President has said that the orders of the FEPC are mandatory, but the American railroad executives and rail union heads have chosen to flout those which the committee has given.

Of course the President could take over the railroads, as did his mentor, President Wilson, but this is unlikely.

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa

Equally unlikely is his resort to the alternative of having Federal agencies take sanctions against the recalcitrants in order to force them into line because of possible interference with the war effort.

In other words, it is a question of either granting the Negro railroad workers a square deal with the fear of revolt on the part of the railroads and rail workers interfering with the war effort, or of ignoring the demands and complaints of Negro workers, maintaining the status quo, and so once and for all torpedoing the FEPC beyond rescue.

If we are to judge the future by New Deal action in the past, when confronted with similar dilemmas, the FEPC and the Negro workers will be abandoned again.

Indeed, there are many indications of such a step being taken, such as the threat of Representative Howard Smith's special House committee to investigate the FEPC "if his group received formal complaints" against it, and a wail from the irrepressible Rankin of Mississippi that the FEPC is "a rump organization" that should be "cleaned out" because "these people are stirring up race trouble in the South as nothing before has ever done. They have taken it upon themselves to assume Hitler power, Mussolini power, over the Southern railroads which are carrying the burden of the war effort."

President William Green of the American Federation of Labor added to the general pessimism about the future of the FEPC by pointing out that the recent convention of his group contended that the solution to the problem lay in education, not in force.

Whenever leading Americans begin stressing education as a solution to knotty racial questions, you may be sure that nothing fair and forthright is going to be done about them; and when the Rankins and their ilk turn thumbs down on anything that will give Negroes a square deal, it is unlikely that the White House will buck them very hard.

The entire history of the Negro relations of the Administration from Boulder Dam, the NRA, the TVA, right down to the present military policy, bear eloquent testimony to the unwillingness of the White House to go "down the line" for high principle, except in its foreign policy.

Meanwhile the FEPC, apparently endowed with new life and courage, goes blandly about its way ordering the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers and all its lodges at Portland, Ore., and Los Angeles, to stop discriminatory practices; telling five West Coast shipbuilders to reinstate Negro workers discharged because they refused to pay dues to jim crow auxiliary unions, and issuing similar orders to firms in the New York area.

This may be mere whistling in the dark, but the spirit is to be commended highly at a time when every other government agency is cravenly ducking and dodging the issue of common fairness for Negro workers, while periodically expressing loathing for similar practices in Axis countries.

It is obvious, however, that the FEPC cannot prevail against the forces arrayed against it when it has nothing more than moral force and Presidential prestige behind it, especially when the White House shows no disposition to strengthen its hand.

What is needed and has been needed from the first is a federal statute to punish violators of the committee's non-discriminatory directives, and until such a law is passed, the whole business will remain a farce and a Negro morale killer.

Those who insisted upon and hailed the issuance of Presidential orders and the appointment of the powerless committee should have seen from the beginning that its orders would be so many scraps of paper, but instead they ignorantly hailed it as the greatest Negro advance since the Emancipation Proclamation (which was not saying much since the Proclamation emancipated nobody!)

If color discrimination is to be ended by government contractors, there must be a federal law prescribing specific penalties for its violation, and such a measure is the bill introduced recently by Rep. Marcantonio of New York and since buried in the Judiciary Committee whose chairman is a reactionary Texas Democrat.

With sufficient signatures, that bill will be forced out of committee and on to the House floor for a vote, and it will probably be passed.

We can only guess how it will fare in the Senate with its filibustering Southern minority, but if the resultant fight has the same effect on the reactionary South as did the various NAACP-sponsored anti-lynching fights, far more progress will be made than the FEPC has so far achieved.

The FEPC has done its best by persuasion. Now it must have force behind it.

FEPC Can't Do It All

Kansas City Call

When the regional office of the FEPC was established in Kansas City a few weeks ago, many citizens rejoiced that "now we can get some action without writing to Washington." They were right and they were wrong. They don't have to send their complaints to Washington but they still "have to write" them.

Submitting a complaint in writing seems to be a task which many persons look upon with distaste. They don't understand why they can't just tell somebody their trouble and have it acted upon.

Kansas City, Mo

All government agencies, and particularly those which handle grievances, have a certain procedure which they are bound by law to follow. They cannot vary the procedure to suit anyone's convenience. They cannot go into action until that procedure is followed.

In the case of the FEPC, no investigation can be made into the discriminatory hiring practices of companies except on the basis of a specific complaint. One hundred persons may suffer discrimination at a single plant and they may "talk at the big gate" constantly but until one of them decides to file specific information as to time and place, names and dates, the FEPC can take no action. It is much the same as filing a lawsuit. If one person is injured by another, he cannot collect damages by merely talking about it. He must file a lawsuit, setting down all the facts in logical, orderly fashion.

The FEPC cannot take action on the basis of broad general complaints. When a person submits a complaint it should include specifically the name of the company which the complainant feels discriminated against him, the dates when application for employment was made, and details of the interview which seemed to indicate the refusal of employment was made on the basis of race, creed or color.

With this information, the FEPC can go into action at once but when some of the facts are missing action is delayed until they are supplied.

Every day, the FEPC receives letters from complainants which it is necessary to follow up with additional correspondence in an attempt to secure the specific facts needed to begin an investigation.

The Kansas City office of the FEPC was set up to serve the four-state area of Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma and Arkansas. Persons living in those four states can get immediate action on their complaints if they submit all the details in their first correspondence. The FEPC can be effective only if the people it serves cooperate fully.

FEPC Fired Big Shell.

NOT many weeks yet remain for the 20 railroads and 7 railroad unions to come to a decision about ending discrimination against men because of their color or creed.

Chicago, Ill

Even 16 year old white youths have been shown jobs on several of these lines by older Negro employees, yet Negroes must remain as virtual menials, because prejudiced railroad officials and labor unioneers have decreed an undemocratic discrimination against Negroes becoming locomotive engineers and the like. Colored firemen have been diminishing steadily without replacements for the past decade. Thep have been gradually shunted out of the employment picture in that category.

The FEPC has now given these railroads and unions 30 days, two weeks of which have already expired, to end their discrimination.

It will prove very stupid of these railroads and unions to persist doggedly in their current practices. Their schedules have already been markedly delayed in recent months because of inadequate and improperly trained personnel. Men on the far-flung battle fronts are the real sufferers from this unpatriotic malingering carried on by these railroads and their unions.

It is to be urgently hoped that if the President's Executive Order 9346 is not carried out at the end of 30 days, that the President himself will step in and implement the decree of the FEPC. If this is done, the authority of the body will be so fixed and dramatized that subsequent orders will be obeyed with full knowledge of the discredit that will attend wilful violators of FEPC orders.

SIGNIFICANCE OF FEPC

Informer Houston Texas

The FEPC has opened regional offices in Dallas with jurisdiction over Texas, Louisiana, and Mississippi. A Mexican is in charge,—on leave as a member of the faculty of the University of Texas. The specific accomplishments of the FEPC and this regional office may not be large, but the significance of the movement and machinery is great and far-reaching.

We are making progress when the heretofore terribly hide-bound South is willing to listen with tolerance to the establishment of a federal agency whose special function is to bring to account injustices and discriminations against the Negro population.

PRIVATE INDUSTRY HARD TO CONTROL

Informer Houston Texas

Executive Order 8802 and Order 9346 which strengthened it have been responsible for noticeable increase in the employment of numbers and kinds of Negro workers where government contracts were let. Discrimination in industry where there are no government contracts and where the man power situation will allow is just as rife as ever. The recent hearing of testimonies on the non-promotion and non-hiring of Negroes policies of the several railroads is significant only to the extent that the problem has been opened up and aired. Our hope for change in these artificial practices varies directly with the amount of public airing of them we can secure.

If the Non Partisan Council for a Permanent FEPC can secure for minority groups the much needed enactment of a Fair Employment Practice Act, it will be a second emancipation for Negroes. Such emancipation, if effected, will be economic rather than physical.

Railroads' Solid Color-Line Broken

PM
New York, N. Y. COLE

PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, [illegible]pt. 18.—A direct appeal by President Roosevelt requesting the railroad labor organizations to give Negro and Mexican railroad employes full privileges of membership and complete protection for their jobs is being considered as the ~~next~~ step in the campaign to end racial discrimination on the railroads.

Presidential intervention to bring pressure on the unions to change their policies is expected if corporations do not [illegible] their employment policies as a result of public hearings just concluded by the FEPC (Fair Employment Practice Committee).

First break in the solid front of the carriers to upgrade or employ colored workmen in any position above that of [illegible]on laborer or menial came during the hearings when F. E. Burkhages, personnel officer of the Union Pacific Railroad, announced his company was prepared to do something about the complaints involving that road.

Burkhages' statement was:

"The summary of complaints of which we are advised by the FEPC would suggest the existence of conditions not recognizable within the employment policy of the Union Pacific Railroad. The summary suggested a failure to employ persons of Mexican birth or parentage in positions available to them on the basis of their qualifications.

"Examination of our employment rosters on file with the Committee discloses the inclusion therein, in almost all of the many types of positions covered, many persons whose names indicate Mexican birth or parentage. It will be understood, therefore, that such an investigation as we were able to make prior to the hearing into the very general allegations of the summary of complaints gave us no reason to believe that there could be any basis in fact for those allegations.

Only Denial

"Since the hearings have developed specific instances of alleged discriminations we have obtained from the Committees counsel the details of the alleged specific instances. These we will fully investigate with a view toward the speedy correction of any situation inconsistent with the company's policy."

The important part of the statement is the indication that the Union Pacific denies that it maintains a policy of discrimination. No other railroad involved in the hearings has denied it discriminates.

Some members of the Committee predicted that other railroads would follow the lead of the Union Pacific.

Should the carriers agree to stop discriminating, the railroad labor unions would be left as the sole violators of the executive order.

Union Bias

Three railroad brotherhoods refuse to enroll Negroes.

Many of the unions representing maintenance and repair employes refuse full membership to Negroes.

Failure of the hearings to get adequate attention in the newspapers or on the radio was a great disappointment to all Negro organizations and most FEPC officials. The New York Times and PM were the only newspapers attempting to give adequate coverage of the hearing. The Times, after missing the Washington edition with the story on the first day, thereafter extended itself to tell the details of the hearings.

MADISON, Wis.—(ANP)—Five different audiences—on and off the campus of the University of Wisconsin—heard G. James Fleming, regional director of the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee, Philadelphia, in a two-day visit to this city Tuesday and Wednesday.

Fleming, an honor graduate of the university, discussed labor problems as they affect minority group workers and was heard by faculty members Tuesday evening, and by the American Association of University Women, the Union Forum and the Madison branch of the NAACP on the following day.

NOV 20 1943

"Although there have been what may be called tremendous gains in the fair employment of colored workers, the millennium has not been reached," Fleming declared, "and industries are still following discriminatory patterns in their selection of help."

Still Forced to Fight

The exigencies of the war and the great demand for labor of all kinds have eased the barriers, Fleming said, but there is still considerable waste of talent and experience in the higher skills and colored workers must fight for upgrading and promotion.

RAIL CONTRACT IS RULED UNFAIR

10 Lines [illegible]outh, [illegible]nion Told Operating Plan Is Discriminatory

DEC 1 1943

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30—(AP)—Ten Southern railroads and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen Tuesday were advised that their operating contract unfairly discriminates against Negroes and must be voided.

The president's Fair Employment Practice Committee, handed down its ruling after studying testimony taken at hearings in September.

The contract between the rail union and the railroads "is designed for no other purpose than to cut down the employment of Negroes as firemen and to increase the hiring of white persons in these positions," the FEPC held.

Malcolm Ross, FEPC, said the contract limits the hiring of firemen to "promote men," and specifically designates Negroes as non-promotables, which effectively debars them.

The FEPC decision raises a legal point which the railroad counsel in September said would put them "in the middle" and force them to violate the edict of the National Mediation Board (railway) which approved the contract FEPC voided. The railways, under the congressional act covering railway labor disputes, are required to conform to rulings of the mediation board.

The mediation board said the FEPC ruling, which in effect challenges the board's authority, "would be studied." No other comment was forthcoming.

The railroads, under terms of the FEPC decision, have the choice of voiding the contract and defying the mediation board, or conforming to the existing contract and defying the FEPC order.

The railways ordered to void their labor contracts are the Atlantic Coast Line, the Atlanta Joint Terminals, Central of Georgia, Georgia Railroad, Jacksonville Terminal Company, Louisville & Nashville, Norfolk Southern, St. Louis & San Francisco, Seaboard Air Line and the Southern Railway.

Tie Job Bias With Philly Rail Disaster

Courier

SEP 18 1943

NEW YORK, Sept. 16—Tying the tragic Philadelphia railroad disaster to refusal by the railroads to hire Negro workers, Dr. George Marshall, chairman of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, wrote Msgr. Francis J. Haas, chairman of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, that FEPC's forthcoming hearings on discrimination in railroad employment have the staunch support of patriotic Americans throughout the country.

Charging that the very railroads on which recent accidents occurred persistently discriminate against and refuse to upgrade Negro and other minority workers, Dr. Marshall said: "Not only are the safety of our people and the efficiency of our war effort at stake, but the democratic principles for which we are waging this war are threatened by this practice."

~~Daily Worker~~
New York N.Y.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 6.—A permanent regional office of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice is now opened in the Empire State Building, 350 Fifth Avenue, New York City, it was announced today by Monsignor Francis J. Haas, chairman of the Committee. The office will receive and investigate complaints of discriminatory employment practices in war industry, labor unions, and government agencies, serving the states of New York, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Maine, Vermont and New Hampshire.

SEP 7 1943

Edward Lawson, former executive of the National Urban League for Social Work Among Negroes and managing editor of the magazine Opportunity, has been appointed regional director in charge of the office, Father Haas announced.

Jurisdiction of FEPC covers discriminatory employment practices by a private employer engaged to any extent in war work, a government agency, a war training school or a labor organization. Valid complaints may involve refusal to hire, refusal to train, refusal to promote, refusal to register for or refer to a war job, discrimination in wages or working conditions, or refusal to admit to union membership or to issue a work permit. Complaints must be substantiated by evidence and only those which appear valid on the surface, and within the jurisdiction of the Committee, will be accepted for investigation and adjustment.

Key Witness Jailed Just Before FEPC Hearings

NOV 27 1943

Crime Was That He Joined Union and Earned Promotions As a White Man

LOS ANGELES, Calif.—Madison (Tony) Doram, former Baltimorean, who was scheduled to be one of the key witnesses before the President's FEPC investigating discrimination in coast shipyards, began serving a thirty-day jail term two days before the hearings opened here Friday.

Doram was sentenced last July in Municipal Court on a charge of assault growing out of a dispute with a white worker who called him n—r.

An appeal was taken and after four months' deliberation, including a rehearing, he was sentenced to begin his term November 17. The FEPC hearings opened November 19.

Thought He Was White

Supporters of Doram allege that the assault charge was the climax of a long campaign to get him out of the Boilermakers' Union, to which he had been admitted on the assumption that he was white.

They say that this campaign began soon after he was advanced from janitor to welder at the California Shipbuilding Company, and it was discovered that he was colored.

Both the union and the company were charged with discrimination before the FEPC, and Doram was scheduled to testify about the inside workings of the union and the company's policies.

Say Charge "Trumped Up"

Attorneys for Doram allege that the charges which culminated in the jail term were "trumped up" because, following the incident, the two workers were both absolved by company police and it was some weeks later that any court charges were filed.

Doram, who came here three years ago with his family, began work at Calship in February, 1942, as a janitor. Several weeks later he was allowed to take welder training, and promoted. On March 25 he was initiated into the Boilermakers' Local No. 92.

In his off hours he took other training to prepare for advancement to burner and later was promoted to burner instructor. In the meantime, in September, the union learned that he was colored, refused to accept further payment of dues.

Told to Join J.C. Auxiliary

When he went to the union office to inquire about it, he was instructed that in the future he must become affiliated with Auxiliary A35, the jim crow auxiliary for colored union members.

This auxiliary union pays lower benefits and has no vote in the union council.

Vince M. Townsend, Jr., now attorney for Doram, said that because the FEPC had no subpoena power, it was impossible to allow Doram to testify. He indicated that some further action may be ktane in the case.

Ask FEPC To Probe Baltimore Utilities

BALTIMORE, (ANP) — The Fair Employment Practice committee has been asked to investigate the allegedly biased hiring policies of two Baltimore public utilities, the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone company and the Baltimore Transit company.

The request was made by the Total War Employment committee, an organization fighting alleged discrimination against the employment of colored workers in certain job classifications by the two companies.

This group conferred twice with members of the FEPC in Washington last week. While no details of the conferences were disclosed, it is believed that a public hearing on the charges of discrimination against Negro workers was asked.

Union Says Concern Deliberately Refusing To Hire Black Workers

DETROIT — (ANP) — Charges that the Ford Motor Company is violating the President's order prescribing discrimination in the employment of Negroes were made last week by the Ford Local 600 (CIO) in a brief filed with Fr. Francis J. Haas, chairman, FEPC.

"The present policy of refusal to place Negro applicants is in fact a contributing factor to the 'racial tenseness 'of which the Ford management is apprehensive," stated the document. It charged further that the company is "pursuing a policy deliberately aimed at denying jobs to hundreds upon hundreds of Negro workers, a large number of them trained at skills sorely needed in war production in the Rouge plant."

The union also accused the motor company of aggravating the housing shortage, transportation and food situations by hiring migrant labor it had advertised for in Kentucky and Tennessee newspapers, while denying work to available Negroes.

Pointing out that during the racial disturbances of June 21, not one incident occurred at the Ford plant, the union's statement scoffed at the company's expression of "racial tenseness" and charged that the present attitude of the manufacturer repudiates his claim that he hired Negroes because he was "a friend to the Negro people."

The union asserted that the em-

Kaiser Company Union Appear Before FEPC For Refusing Negroes Into Membership

AUG 14 1943

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Charging the Kaiser Shipbuilding Company, Portland, Oregon, and two lodges of the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Shipbuilders and Helpers of America, A.F. of L. with collaboration in the wrongful dismissal of more than 300 Negro workers from the Kaiser yards and at Portland, Oregon in deliberate violation of the new Executive Order 9436, complaint was filed late last week with the Fair Employment Practice Committee in Washington on behalf of the Portland Branch NAACP and the Negro Shipyard Organization for Victory. Appearing in person before the FEPC to file the complaint was Frank D. Reeves, member of the NAACP legal staff.

The NAACP legal committee described the case as "a major assault on practices of discrimination in labor union membership which are seriously impeding the war effort by restricting the use of thousands of needed Negro workmen.

The discriminatory "lodge" was worked by the simple expedient of denying Negroes membership in the local lodges of the Boilermakers and Shipbuilders Union which have a closed shop agreement with the Kaiser Company and facing them with the alternative of joining a Jim Crow "Auxiliary Lodge" which has no real status in the Brotherhood or with discharge from their jobs, according to the complaint. The "Auxiliary Lodge" is alleged to have been chartered in December, 1942 although up to the date of the complaint no officers or trustees have been elected, no meetings have been held, no charter has been issued and the auxiliary, "in fact and in law", has remained wholly without organization. The complaint asserts further that the entire auxiliary lodge scheme is designed "to deprive Negro workmen of economic security, equal participation in collective bargaining, and the several rights, privileges and benefits which are incidents of membership" in the lodges holding contract with the Kaiser company, and therefore is an untonable arrangement to the Negro employees. Membership in the so-called "Auxiliary Lodge" is limited to "colored male persons."

Specifically named in the complaint as having been discharged because they would not comply with the joint dictum of the Kaiser company and the International Brotherhood lodges were Claude E. Johnson, Jr., and Lee Anderson. Named also were Sidney Wolfe and Fred Perry, who, the complaint states, are now being employed in jobs beneath their skills.

Rev. J. J. Clow, president of the Portland NAACP branch and Juilus Rodriques, President of the Negro Shipyard Organization for Victory, came East to Washington [illegible] New [illegible] and presented the matter orally [illegible] the FEPC, and later enlisted the assistance of the national legal department of the NAACP and the Negro Labor Victory Committee to prepare a formal complaint for presentation.

The Test of the New FEPC

SEP 18 1943

The new Committee on Fair Employment Practice faces its greatest test this week with the opening of its hearings on discrimination against Negroes and Mexicans by 23 railroads and 14 railroad workers unions.

The FEPC can blast jim crowism and discrimination, and demand that the collusion between railroad employers and organized employees against colored labor cease at once, or it can make some mealy-mouthed compromise which will leave the problem approximately as it is.

The new FEPC got off to a bad start by blessing the jim crow set-up at the Mobile, Ala., shipyards.

It now has a chance to redeem itself.

If it does not do so, the hopes of millions of colored workers will be blasted, Ku Klux elements will be strengthened and the cause of democracy and national unity will suffer its greatest defeat.

FEPC Gets Evidence On Ford Employment Prejudice

SEP 8 1943

Daily World

DETROIT—(A N P)—Documentary evidence was presented to the FEPC last week by L. A. Jordan recently elected recording secretary of Local 50 showing that the Ford Motor company is violating the President's directive to industry to stop discriminating against Negro workers. The complaint of Jordan follows closel similar charges made several weeks ago against the automotive concern.

Jordan estimated that approximately [illegible]000 white, southern immigrant workers have been employed at the Ford W[illegible] Run plant in contrast to 900 Negroes. There are about 30,000 workers at the huge bomber plant.

Citing case after case in which Negro women had been refused jobs by employment office personnel while whites were being imported at the expense of the company, Jordan said: "The Greyhound bus stops in front of the bomber plant and you can see hill billies getting off with sacks of clothes in their hands and Tennessee mud clinging to their shoes and they are signed up immediately.

A survey conducted by the union official revealed that most of the white workers [illegible] less than two years of high school training and most have had no pr[illegible] tory work experience. Many of the Negro applicants he stated, are college trained and have highly developed skills but are overlooked by the company.

Workers Excluded

SEP 17 1943

The long-deferred hearings into discriminatory employment practices by the country's railroads are now being conducted by the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee. These hearings should have been held long ago. Scheduled for last January, they were postponed at the instance of War Manpower Commissioner McNutt, who had jurisdiction of the FEPC at that time. They revolve around the touchy and distasteful issue of race discrimination. The new FEPC, reorganized and granted autonomy by executive order last May, is to be commended for grappling with the issue forthrightly and unemotionally.

In a certain sense, these hearings are ritualistic. This is not to say that the FEPC has approached them in anything other than an objective and impartial spirit. But the evidence of discrimination against Negroes is apparent to the naked eye of anyone who has ever traveled on the railroads of the United States. Indeed, the railroads themselves openly acknowledge that discriminatory practices are written into their agreements with railway labor organizations. And the labor organizations, primarily responsible for the discrimination, have not even seen fit to attend the hearings. No doubt their leaders are somewhat ashamed to avow publicly the means by which they have sought to exclude Negroes from railroad jobs.

What has been taking place in the railway industry during the past two or three decades is a systematic and progressive elimination of colored workers from all save the most menial tasks. This elimination has been brought about through a policy of excluding nonwhite members from the Railroad Brotherhoods which have negotiated closed-shop contracts with the managements. These are the ugly facts, and the FEPC hearings can serve only to give them much-needed publicity. What will count will be the recommendations of the FEPC when the facts are on file.

Apart from the obvious violence done to democratic principles by the current practices of the railroad industry, there is an urgent practical need at this time for wider utilization of Negro skills. Early this month Joseph B. Eastman, director of the Office of Defense Transportation, called for a vigorous recruitment program to meet the critical shortage of railroad manpower. He urged utilization of the services of women, of Mexican workers and even of war prisoners.

Reverse Evolution In Railway Employment

SEP 17 1943

The issue which is the subject of the hearings being held in Washington by the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee is one which should stir every fair-minded American and in particular every fair-minded Southerner. By collusion between railroad managements and railroad unions, chiefly in the South, the Negro is being denied equality of economic opportunity in railroad employment and even in some cases is being systematically shoved out of it. The inspiration obviously comes from the unions, since the southern carriers freely employed Negroes before the rise of the unions in their region and, in fact, employed for example more Negro locomotive firemen than white.

The case of the firemen, incidentally, serves very well to illustrate what the Negro has suffered. Even in the days when Negroes were employed without hindrance as firemen, they received smaller pay than white firemen, but a worse irony was that as the fireman's job became less arduous with the introduction of mechanical stokers on steam locomotives and with the increased use of Diesel-electric locomotives, this was when the fireman's job became coveted by white men and the easing of the Negro out of it regardless of his qualifications began. It was a Negro's job when it was just hard and sweaty. It became a white man's job as it got fancier. There were more than 5,000 Negro firemen employed in 1910, considerably fewer than 2,500 in 1940.

The record is full of injustices, of cases of Negroes doomed to "non-promotable" status, of agreements arbitrarily limiting the proportion of Negroes who may be employed in relation to total personnel, and of rules effecting the displacement of Negroes by white men which clearly look ultimately to absolute exclusion of Negroes from railroad employment. Even the dining car waiter, whose jaunty faithfulness has long been familiar to travelers, is denied hope of becoming dining car steward, and instances are of record where the Negro waiters under him have had to teach a new white steward how to do his work. [illegible] this is unjust at any time it becomes utterly outrageous in a time of manpower shortage.

There is no question of the Negro's capacity for railroad employment or of the ability of white and Negro railroad employes to get along together in the South. These things have been demonstrated. In dealing with the larger problem of which this is a part, the "orderly evolution" prescribed by the Southern Railway's attorney, SIDNEY ALDERMAN, is certainly desirable. No general solution can be imposed by legal fiat. But when we get down to cases, here we find one where evolution is steadily operating in reverse, evoluting the Negro out of, not into, a chance to earn his bread and stand on his merits as a worker.

10 Southern Railroads Told to Void Job Pacts

Courier-Journal
Louisville, Ky.

DEC 1 1943

Dispatches.

Washington, Dec. 1. (Wednesday)—Ten southern railroads and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen today were advised that their operating contract unfairly discriminates against Negroes and must be voided.

The President's Fair Employment Practice Committee handed down its ruling after studying testimony taken at hearings in September.

The contract between the rail union and the railroads "is designed for no other purpose than to cut down the employment of Negroes as firemen and to increase the hiring of white persons in these positions," the F.E.P.C. held.

Large Point Raised.

Malcolm Ross, F.E.P.C. chairman, said the contract limited the hiring of firemen to "promotable men" and specifically designated Negroes as non-promotable, which effectively disbars them.

The F.E.P.C. decision raises a legal point which the railroad counsel in September said would put them "in the middle" and force them to violate the edict of the National Mediation Board (railway) which approved the contract F.E.P.C. order voided. The railways, under the Congressional act covering railway labor disputes, are required to conform to rulings of the mediation board.

The mediation board said the F.E.P.C. ruling, which in effect challenges the board's authority, "would be studied." No other comment was forthcoming.

The railroads, under terms of the F.E.P.C. decision, have the choice of voiding the contract and defying the mediation board or conforming to the existing contract and defying the F.E.P.C. order.

Order Affects L. & N.

The railways ordered to void their labor contracts are the Atlantic Coast Line, the Atlanta Joint Terminals, Central of Georgia, Georgia Railroad, Jacksonville Terminal Company, Louisville & Nashville, Norfolk Southern, St. Louis and San Francisco, Seaboard Air Line and the Southern Railway.

The committee also warned the following railroads against discriminatory employment practice:

Baltimore and Ohio, Baltimore and Ohio Chicago Terminal, Chesapeake and Ohio, Chicago and Northwestern, Gulf, Mobile and Ohio, Illinois Central, Louisiana and Arkansas, Missouri-Kansas-Texas, New York Central, Norfolk and Western, Pennsylvania, Union Pacific, and Virginian.

It also warned the following unions to cease discrimination against Negroes in membership regulations:

Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Order of Railway Conductors, Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of America, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, International Association of Machinists, and the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Shipbuilders and Helpers of America.

LOS ANGELES, Calif.—Four unions and two of three war plants charged with discrimination against colored workers in violation of President Roosevelt's executive orders ignored his Fair Employment Practice Committee's public hearings here Friday and Saturday at the Embassy Auditorium.

The unions which did not appear were International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Ship Builders and Helpers of America Lodge No. 92 of the same union and Auxiliary Lodge No. A 35 the Metal Trades Department of the AF of L; the Pacific Coast District Trades Council and the Los Angeles Metal Trades Council.

The Consolidated Steel Corporation, shipbuilding division and the Western Pipe and Steel Company had counsel present but failed to answer charges.

The third, the California Shipbuilding Company (Calship), was present and told the committee that it was following the President's orders, and has instructed its 40,000 workers that discrimination of any kind will not be tolerated.

Russell A. Bergemann, manager of industrial relations for Calship, presented figures to the committee to show that since May, colored employees have jumped from 2,474 to [illegible] and that 40 per cent of new employees now being hired are colored.

Witnesses Tell of Bias

However, a succession of witnesses told the committee that Calship, as well as Western Pipe and Steel and Consolidated, has followed the dictates of the AF of L Boilermakers' Unions and fired colored workers who refused to join jim-crow auxiliaries.

In addition, they stated, colored employees are not promoted in line with the seniority, skills and experience, and the highest paid jobs they hold are journeymen.

Equality in Dues Only

Testimony also disclosed that colored workers who did join the jim-crow Boilermakers' Auxiliary No. A 35 in order to keep their jobs are denied a voice in the operation of their union, are subject to the main lodge No. 92, which appoints their business manager and other officers, and that the only equality is in dues.

Lawyers Urge Action

Carey McWilliams, white, author of the well-known book, "Brothers Under the Skin" and chairman of the Los Angeles chapter of the National Lawyers' Guild, presented a statement to the committee urging that it act quickly to end the discrimination against colored workers and make available additional sources of manpower necessary for the production of more ships.

The statement by McWilliams, presented on behalf of the Lawyers' Guild, also urged the Boilermakers' Union to "clean up its house" and co-operate with the FEPC.

United Fruit Head Absent

All members of the committee except Samuel Zemurray of the United Fruit Company were present for the hearings, which were the first to be presided over by Malcolm Ross, new chairman who succeeded Msgr. Francis J. Haas upon his elevation to the bishopric last month.

Members present were:

Miss Sara Southall, International Harvester Company, John Brophy, CIO; Boris Shiskin, AF of L; P. B. Young, Norfolk Journal and Guide publisher; Milton P. Webster, international vice president, Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters.

Special counsel for the committee who presented the charges and interviewed witnesses were Marvin Harrison, white, Cleveland; George E. C. Hayes, Washington, and Benjamin Dreyfus, San Francisco.

The hearings here followed a two-day inquiry earlier in the week into charges of discrimination by three Kaiser shipyards in the Portland, Ore., area and similar charges against the Boilermakers' Union in that area.

FEPC Hearings On Railroads Greeted Here

SEP 5 1943

Daily Worker New York N.Y.

Msgr. Francis J. Haas, chairman of the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee, was congratulated yesterday in a letter signed by prominent leaders of labor, civic and religious organizations here on the opening of hearings on discrimination in the railroad industry. The hearings begin today and will continue through Saturday. They were termed "a victory for the anti-discrimination policies of our national government."

"The railroad industry has long been a citadel of prejudice and discrimination in the employment and promotion of Negro workers," the letter said. "Many of the leaders of this industry and of certain labor unions operating therein seek to maintain these discriminatory practices, to the detriment of the war effort."

The signers of the letter said they were aware of the fact that "powerful forces in this country, opposed to the fair employment policy of our government," prevented the hearings as scheduled early this year and that such forces even now seek to prevent discrimination against Negro workers in the railroad industry from being brought to light.

PLEDGE SUPPORT

The letter concluded:

"We wish to assure you and your associates that we support fully the democratic purposes of these hearings and are taking constructive steps to interpret their importance to our members and to the public generally. We are confident that the overwhelming majority of the American people want these hearings to lead to the quick end of discrimination in the railroad industry."

First Hearings Expected to Be On Railroads

Daily Worker New York N.Y.

By Eugene Gordon

A permanent regional office of the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee was opened yesterday morning in room 5420 of the Empire State Building, Fifth Ave. and 33rd St., with Edward Lawson, a Negro labor specialist, in charge. This office will receive and investigate complaints of discriminatory employment practices in war industry, labor unions and government agencies from the fist and second regions comprising the states of New York, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Massachusetts Vermont and New Hampshire.

Mr. Lawson said that "some complaints" came in as soon as the doors of the new office were opened. He hinted that this office may later handle complaints from the first region only, that being the state of New York, with the New England states, comprising the second region, assigned another office. There is nothing to indicate definitely, however, whether or when such a change may be made.

The new regional director was formely editor of the National Urban League's magazine, Opportunity. Previously he was an employment specialist with the FEPC when it was under the War Manpower Commission and, before that, head of the New York office of the Negro Employment and Training Branch, War Production Board.

COOPERATES WITH WMC

The new office will work in close cooperation with the War Manpower Commission, according to Mr. Lawson, although no longer a part of it and being a completely independent war agency. The FEPC was reorganized recently and granted broader powers in dealings with employers or others accused of violating Executive Order 8802, which constituted this body. The FEPC is now directly under the supervision of President Roosevelt.

Jurisdiction of the FEPC covers discriminatory employment practiced by a private employer engaged in any plant in war work, a government agency, a war training school, or a labor organization. Valid complaints may involve refusal to hire, refusal to train, refusal to promote, refusal to register for or refer to a war job, discrimination in wages or working conditions, or refusal to admit to union membership or to issue a work permit.

The new FEPC regional director was not sure but felt that the first big hearings of the national body would be those of the railroads, now hanging fire for many months. Scores of complaints on the discriminatory hiring practices of railroads are from the New England and New York regions, Mr. Lawson said.

Complaints, made out on a form which lists the "type of party" against whom they are brought and whether discrimination was because of "race, creed, national origin, lack of citizenship, or other," must be substantiated by evidence. Unless complaints appear valid on the surface and come within the jurisdiction of the FEPC they are not accepted for investigation and adjustment. The regional office has the power to act on all cases independently.

Most complaints, Mr. Lawson said, are on failure to hire. The regional office, he said, will investigate bona fide complaints and, if discrimination against the complaint is found to exist according to the evidence, the office will have authority to ask the FEPC in Washington to hold a hearing.

It happens, however, that public hearings are sometimes unnecessary, the firm under investigation being represented in negotiations along with the FEPC, the labor union (if any) and the complainant.

President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice Directs Lines and Unions to End Curbs

30 DAYS FOR COMPLIANCE

Ruling Stresses Southeastern Agreement and Charts Drop in Jobs for the Race

By LOUIS STARK

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30—The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice has notified twenty railroads and seven unions that in thirty days they must cease all discriminatory practices which result in unfair treatment of workers and job applicants because of race, creed, color or national origin.

If the roads and unions refuse to comply the cases will be turned over to President Roosevelt for enforcement of the committee's orders.

Malcolm Ross, chairman of the committee, made public today the committee's conclusions, based on testimony which showed a sharp decline in the number of Negroes employed in all but the lowest categories during the last twenty years.

Of the twenty railroads cited, ten were directed to set aside the Southeastern Agreement between them and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen. This agreement, effective on Feb. 22, 1941, according to Mr. Ross, is a violation of Executive Order No. 9346 because it was designed to cut down the employment of Negroes as firemen and to increase the hiring of white persons in these positions.

The agreement sought to accomplish this purpose, said Mr. Ross, through setting definite percentages for white and Negro firemen; through limiting firemen's jobs to "promotable" men and then by excluding all Negro workers from promotion.

Railroads in the Agreement

Roads involved in the Southeastern agreement are the Atlantic Coast Line Railway Company, Atlanta Joint Terminals, Central of Georgia Railway Company, Georgia Railroad, Jacksonville Terminal Company, Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company, Norfolk Southern Railroad Company, St. Louis-San Francisco Railway Company, Seaboard Air Line Railroad Company and the Southern Railway Company.

The other railroads involved in alleged discriminatory practices aside from the Southeastern agreement are the Baltimore & Ohio, Baltimore & Ohio Chicago Terminal, Chesapeake & Ohio, Chicago & Northwestern; Gulf, Mobile & Ohio; Ililnois Central, Louisiana-Arkansas, Missouri-Kansas-Texas, Norfolk & Western and Union Pacific.

Charges filed against the Virginian Railroad were settled prior to the hearings and were withdrawn.

Final action in cases involving the Pennsylvania Railroad and New York Central have been held in abeyance pending discussions between the carriers and the committee looking toward adjustment of the complaints.

Union Named by Committee

Unions cited by the committee in its findings included The Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen; Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen; Order of Railway Conductors; Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of America; Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers; International Association of Machinists and the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Shipbuilders, and Helpers of America.

None of these unions appeared at the hearings held in Washington from Sept. 15 to 18, and made no official reply to the complaints lodged against them.

In citing as "unfair" the policies of these unions, the committee declared that the labor organizations were maintaining a policy which "discriminates against Negroes, because of race, in regard to membership, thus rendering it impossible (for said Negro workers) to have any adequate voice or representation with respect to grievances and the negotiation of agreements affecting working conditions, employment policy, practices and opportunities."

In each such instance, the union was notified that it must "cease and desist" from "discriminatory practices affecting the employment of Negroes."

During the hearings, the Union Pacific Railroad, accused of discrimination against Mexicans, persons of Mexican descent, and Negroes, because of race and national origin, announced its willingness to conform to the principles of the executive orders and declared that immediate steps were being taken to investigate the specific accusation against the company. The committee has taken cognizance of this announcement and has revealed that several of the individual cases have been [illegible] adjusted.

Decline of Negro Personnel

Testimony before the committee was that on certain roads, firing forces which, before the last war, were 80 to 90 per cent Negro, had been reduced by 1929, to 50 per cent or less. These reductions were accomplished, the committee declared, by continuing alteration of contracts between the unions and the roads, with each new change reducing further both the percentage of Negro workers and the type of service and the territory in which Negroes could be employed.

The committee summary dealing with the Southeastern Agreement alleged that this contract "restricts the proportion of Negro firemen and helpers to 50 per cent or less in each class of service; prevents the hiring of Negro firemen until the number of white firemen employed is 50 per cent or more and requires the filling of new runs and vacancies created as specified in the agreement by "promotable men" who are not and may not be Negroes.

Practically a[illegible] the Southeastern roads which signed the agreement replied to the complaint in identical fashion. They declared that the operation of railroads in the South required the management to observe the customs, manners and racial, social and economic coditions arising throughout the territory in which the roads operated.

Ruling by Comptroller General in FEPC Called Blow to Nat'l Unity

Washington Tribune
Washington, D. C.

Terming the ruling of Comptroller General Warren that Government contracting officers need not insist on the insertion of fair employment provisions in contracts "a shattering blow at our national unity and the war effort," Joseph D. White, president of the CIO Cafeteria and Restaurant Workers Union here, wrote a letter to Warren demanding a reversal of the decision.

He wrote, "Your action constitutes a flagrant denial of the intents and purposes of our President's Executive Order setting up the Fair Employment Practice Committee, and opens the floodgates for prejudiced employers to exclude thousands of available skilled workers solely on the un-American basis of race, color or religion."

In continuing, he stated "It seems to me that your impertinence has exceeded your wisdom in contradicting a clear and concise order of the President of the United States. You have accomplished in one fell swoop what diehard minority leaders have sought through devious means to do—eliminate the power of the federal government to enforce the 'Civil Rights' Amendments to the Constitution."

Excerpts from the wire sent by Mr. Randolph are as follows:

"I consider the statement of Comptroller General Warren concerning the distinction between 'shall' and 'must' of the Executive Order 8802 as being a distinction without an important difference. The purpose of Executive Order 8802 as issued by President Roosevelt was to provide for full capacity of mobilization of manpower in the country, in order to successfully carry forward the war effort.

"If the effort to mobilize the manpower of the nation is going to be interferred with and restricted by racial discrimination because of some hair-splitting interpretation with respect to the relative meaning of 'shall' and 'must' by the Department of Justice, then a great disservice will be rendered to national unity and the cause of democracy."

The FEPC Is Dead

Lacks Power To Force Decisions

Louisville, Ky.

By Willard S. Townsend

CHICAGO.—The obituary of the much-publicized President's Fair Employment Practices Committee was written in a blaze of glory, pomp and testimony at the railroad hearings held last week in Washington. The burial ceremony was witnessed by an array of "Who's Who in American Professional Race Leadership," who were cast into the unexpected role of pall-bearers at the demise and funeral of another democratic project which never had an even chance in the process of its abortion.

For more than three eventful years, the national government has been satisfied to temporize with the question of full employment of colored workers in war industies. The FEPC was created not out of a real desire to insure this full participation, but rather out of a political necessity to placate the growing insistence of the colored population for greater opportunities in the field of defense and war employment. It was upon this false political premise that Executive Order 8802 was issued. Contrary to other executive orders 8802 assumed the status of a "good will announcement" instead of a positive presidential directive coming from the Commander-in-Chief of our country.

This is not an indictment of the oft-expressed aims and ideals of the Executive Order creating the Fair Employment Practices Committee, but rather an effort to get the record straight on the question of the power and prestige of the FEPC actually to make a recognizable dent in the problem of the full integration of colored workers into American industry.

The instrumentality of the present FEPC with its basic weaknesses and abortive placating purposes is definitely not the answer to the job to be accomplished. Among things needed to gain a toe-hold on the problem of full and fair employment practices is the creation through legislative action of a federal Fair Employment Practices Board with semi-judicial powers similar to the National Labor Relations Board. Such a Board must be a liberal, hard-hitting agency primarily interested in crushing all opposition where the right to equal job opportunity is denied. The movement for such legislation should be a broad movement of all the forces who have a common interest in the democratic process.

The real enemies of fair employment practices and full utilization of colored manpower are the same ones that have used the war emergency to harass labor, fight price control, destroy the National Resources Planning Board, adopt the Smith-Connally bill, impede anti-poll tax legislation, oppose genuine post-war international co-operation and many other efforts that would translate the Four Freedoms into actual practice.

End Negro Ban, RR's Told; Now Let's K. O. Poll Tax

The Worker
New York. N. Y.

(Special to The Worker)

WASHINGTON.—When the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee ordered 22 of the nation's major railroads and seven railroad unions to end their discriminatory practices against Negroes, it struck the heaviest blow against jim-crow in industry yet delivered.

The FEPC order, handed down Wednesday, gave the railroads and unions 30 days in which to comply with the President's order prohibiting the barring of workers from war industry because of race, creed or color.

On Wednesday, too, twelve top leaders of the AFL, CIO and railroad brotherhoods signed an appeal to the Senate to approve a cloture rule to prevent an "irresponsible filibuster" against the anti-poll tax bill. The bill was approved by the Senate Judiciary Committee and is scheduled to come to the floor of the Senate soon. Poll-tax senators have threatened repetition of the filibuster which killed a similar measure last year.

The appeal to the Senate to prevent the filibuster was signed by AFL President William Green, by CIO President Philip Murray, by the Secretary of the Railway Labor Executives Association Julius Luhrsen and by A. F. Whitney, President of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen.

Other signers were CIO vice-presidents [illegible] J. Thomas, Joseph Curran, Sh[illegible] Dalrymple, and Reid Robinson; AFL vice-president Matthew Woll and secretary-treasurer George Meany; and T. C. Cashen and D. B. Robertson, presidents, respectively, of the Switchmen's Union of North America and of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.

The FEPC order against railroad discrimination cited numerous instances of the evil effects of jim-crow on the efficiency of the industry. It bluntly attacked the argument that railroads were simply complying with prevailing southern "customs," and it refused to entertain the theory of "gradual education" on the Negro problem.

The order is considered extremely significant not only because the railroads are among the worst offenders in discriminating against Negroes but because it is on this matter of railroad discrimination that the FEPC was almost wrecked a year ago. At that time the agency was under the jurisdiction of the War Manpower Commission. Commissioner McNutt cancelled hearings on railway discrimination, thereby causing mass resignations from the committee. It was later reconstituted as an independent agency, and is now headed by Malcolm Ross.

The order marks the emergence of the committee as an effective, independent body.

THE EXECUTIVE ORDER FORBIDDING RACIAL discrimination by firms doing business with the government has been grievously weakened by a ruling of Comptroller General Lindsay C. Warren that it was "directory" rather than "mandatory." Warren ruled that in stating that all contracting agencies shall include a non-discrimination clause in their contracts the President obviously did not mean that they must include such a clause. Thus a minor official in the Administration who is notorious for his bias against the Negro has succeeded in nullifying the order which is the foundation of the efforts of the Fair Employment Practices Committee. From the beginning the FEPC has been hampered by the lack of any clear-cut power by which it could enforce the President's order against recalcitrant employers. Its one weapon was the threat of cancelation of contract, a weapon which has now been taken away by the Comptroller General's ruling. The President can remedy the immediate situation by issuing a new order making clear that compliance is required, but the larger problem of enforcement can be met adequately only by legislative action.

Railroads Face Manpower Crisis

Journal & Guide
Norfolk, Va.

SEP 11 1943

IT IS worthy of mention that a statement just issued by Joseph B. Eastman, Director of the Office of Defense Transportation, that the country's railroads face a manpower crisis, and the scheduled FEPC hearings of complaints alleging discrimination against Negroes in railway employment come close together. The hearings start in Washington on the 15th of September and will continue through the 18th.

The statement by Mr. Eastman and the hearings by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice have no direct relation to each other. The hearings, which involve only Southeastern railroads, were originally scheduled months ago.

But Mr. Eastman's warning should give added importance to the hearings. The latter are to deal with the elimination of hundreds of workers — in many cases skilled and experienced workers — solely on the ground of race.

A memorandum reciting some of the circumstances behind this elimination states:

> At one time colored workers comprised the vast majority of switchmen, brakemen and locomotive firemen on Southern roads. Before World War I when the colored locomotive firemen had to shovel tons of coal each trip under adverse conditions in intense heat, with unequal pay, the job was not sought after. Then came the war and government operation with standard hours and equal pay. The return of the roads to private ownership wittnessed the abrogation of many contracts made by the Director-General of railroads, and an increase in labor disputes. Unions entered the field to establish or perfect labor organizations, and it was during this period, also, that colored locomotive firemen were beaten, intimidated and even shot out of the cabs of their engines.
>
> The transportation Act of 1920 was designed to prevent labor disputes but proved ineffective. Then came the Railway Labor Act of 1926, amended in 1934 and 1936, which had a twofold purpose; first, to prevent interruption to railroad operation and the continuity of commerce, and, second, to protect the worker in the exercise of his right to organize and to establish a procedure for collective bargaining. This legislation is mentioned because it is under and by virtue of the Railway Labor Act that the Board of Railway Enginemen and Firemen today assumes to act as sole bargaining agent.

From that point on the story is the usual one of the Negro workers being (1) barred from membership in the unions, and (2) where they are permitted to work as non-union men, or members of an auxiliary union with no rights, they have no participation in the bargaining, nor in determining whether they shall continue to work in the industry at all. In the case of the railroads the Railway Labor Act helps to make this discrimination possible, it is alleged.

Complaint is made that secret and extra agreements are in existence between the labor unions and the carriers, under which colored men have lost their seniority rights and are specifically non-promotable. Having lost their seniority rights, it is charged in the complaints, their juniors, who happened to be whites, have gradually taken their places. This situation is responsible undoubtedly, to some extent, for the crisis in railway manpower which Mr. Eastman sees in the offing. The situation also constitutes, to a large extent, the basis for the exploration of the charges of discrimination the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice will undertake, beginning September 15th.

Fair Employment

Washington, D. C.

OCT 7 - 1943

It is a serious loss to the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice that Msgr. Francis J. Haas has resigned as its chairman. His departure will be felt with particular severity at this time because the committee, re-created only four months ago, had just begun to grapple with its vitally important national problem. It gave promise of helping materially to accelerate the war effort by promoting a fuller utilization of our manpower. And it held out to disadvantaged minority groups for the first time a real hope that the Federal Government would take effective action to end job discrimination against them. Any faltering in the efforts of the FEPC at this time would be genuinely tragic.

Under Monsignor Haas, the FEPC had at long last gotten round to holding hearings on employment discrimination in the railroad industry. The testimony given at these hearings is now under consideration, and the committee should soon be able to report its findings. Hearings into discriminatory practices charged against the Boilermakers and Iron Shipbuilders Union are scheduled for November 15. Locally, there is the problem of our own Capital Transit Co. The FEPC has much important work ahead of it.

President Roosevelt can best insure the continuance of this work by appointing a successor to Monsignor Haas without delay. Another long interregnum such as that

Fair Employment on Railroads

New Republic

SEP 27 1943

The most recent series of hearings before the newly reorganized Fair Employment Practice Committee proves that all the talk months ago about railroad discrimination against Negro workers was probably fully justified. Twenty-two of the major railroads of the United States have been accused of personnel practices which contribute to racial discrimination, in that Negroes are barred from any but menial jobs. The New York Central, the Pennsylvania and the Baltimore and Ohio are included in the group which contends that their policies are justifiable because they reflect the local customs and standards of the regions in which the roads operate.

New York, N. Y

The most important fact in the situation is that the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers is now in the process of dropping all Negroes holding jobs which fall within its jurisdiction. The primary problem of the current hearings is what to do about this. Herbert Northrup, who testified on the first day of the current hearings, summarized the problem very well: "The Negro has become a pawn in industrial relations; employers have used him to fight unions and to depress wages; unions have retaliated by attempting either to limit the employment of Negroes or by driving those already employed from the railroads."

WASHINGTON

The defense of Coast and Geodetic Survey officials against charges of discrimination in the demotion of five colored draftsmen was challenged this week by the Commerce Branch of United Federal Workers Local (CIO).

Appearing before Elmer W. Henderson, FEPC investigator, Oliver C. Short of the Department of Commerce, and Admiral Leo O. Colbert of the Coast Geodetic Survey, said the demotion of the draftsmen to messenger work was the result of a policy of demoting employees who showed no progress in advancing from simple to more complex work.

"Every colored employee of the Coast and Geodetic Survey," Mr. Sherman said, "regards the demotions of these men as part of a deliberate policy to 'liquidate' colored draftsmen of military age so that, should these men be drafted, it will not be required to rehire colored people for drafting work" after the war.

Demands Open Hearing

Robert Sherman, president of the UFWA, Commerce Branch, challenged every point of defense raised by the bureau officials and in a letter to George M. Johnson, assistant to the FEPC chairman, disputed the statements of the officials and called for an open hearing on the case.

FEPC to Fight Railroad Defy

The Daily Worker
New York, N. Y.

By Eva Lapin

(Daily Worker Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 13.—The Fair Employment Practices Committee today accepted the challenge of the 16 Southern railroads who arrogantly refused to obey its no-discrimination order.

The question of barring qualified Negro railroad workers from skilled jobs is a "war problem of the first order," Malcolm Ross, FEPC chairman, declared, adding:

"The FEPC is an American Committee, trying to help fight an American war. We may not be able to wipe out discrimination overnight, but where manpower needs are at stake we can and shall try."

The railroad defiance of FEPC is a direct slap at President Roosevelt's insistence that all government contractors abide by his no-discrimination decree, Executive Order 9346.

FEPC ANSWERS RAILS

Answering the railroad tycoons' assertion that "the manpower situation on these railroads is not preventing their most excellent accomplishment in this regard," the FEPC chairman declared:

"The FEPC believes that the granting of over-due rights to Negro railroad men, far from being a cause for disorder could be so managed as to improve service and to raise the morale of tens of thousands of Negro Americans who have their own stake in winning this war quickly."

Ross pointed to a shortage of 850 rail firemen while trained Negro firemen go unemployed. He added that Negro firemen were the accepted majority for 50 years "until automatic stokers and Diesel-powered engines changed the dirty, heavy work into desirable jobs."

In defying the FEPC directive handed down Nov. 24, the Southern railroads, members of the Southeastern Carriers' conference agreement, declared:

"It is wholly impracticable, and indeed impossible for these railroads to put into effect your committee's directives addressed against them."

In answering the railways' false alarm over alleged pretensions of Negroes to be engineers and conductors, the FEPC said that the real issue was one of upgrading, job assignments and seniority rights of Negro firemen.

The companies, using the Railway Labor Act and the Railroad Brotherhoods, contended that they couldn't interfere with the 50 per cent restriction on Negro firemen in union contracts since railroads are forbidden by law to interfere in any way with the self-determination and self-organization of their employes."

DEC 14 1943

But Chairman Ross made it plain that the "FEPC is not suggesting anything which cannot be done in conformity with the Railway Act."

Ross cited four railroads, the Virginian, the Union Pacific, the New York Central and the Pennsylvania, who are in "amicable and cooperative discussion with the FEPC looking toward solution" and that the "way is open for the remaining sixteen carriers" to do the same.

DEC 14 1943

Riddling the "impossible and impracticable" protests raised by the roads, Ross referred to Secretary McAdoo's action in 1918 equalizing the pay of white and Negro firemen as inspired by a "need for war manpower" which also exists today.

Not to start now to abide by the FEPC decree "is to acknowledge defeat," Ross made clear as he brushed aside the railroads' phony excuses of "chaos" and public "antagonism" which would follow if the order was accepted.

Since the companies have flatly refused to abide by the FEPC order and challenged its constitutionality, it is expected that the matter will now be referred to President Roosevelt for further action.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Malcolm Ross, deputy chairman of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, on Monday assumed the chairmanship of the committee following his appointment to the post on October 14 by President Roosevelt. Mr. Ross succeeds Monsignor Francis J. Haas who resigned following his appointment by His Holiness Pope Pius XII as Bishop of the Diocese of Grand Rapids, Michigan.

The appointment of Mr. Ross, former director of information for the National Labor Relations Board, and staff member of the Office of War Information, was revealed in White House correspondence made public last Friday. He has been succeeded as deputy chairman by George Johnson.

Meanwhile, members of the FEPC announced Monday that a decision in the cases against 22 railroads and 14 labor unions on complaints that they discriminated against Negro employees, will be handed down within the next few weeks. The hearings were completed on September 18.

FEPC Chairman Asks Attorney General Opinion on Ruling by Warren Nullifying Order 9346

Washington Tribune
Washington, D. C.

NOV 6 1943

Malcolm Ross, chairman of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, today made the following statement:

"The Comptroller General Lindsay C. Warren, has recently held that the obligation imposed by Executive Order 9346 upon contracting agencies to incorporate a non-discrimination clause in each contract awarded by them was not a mandatory requirement, but merely a directive.

"In view of the doubt which this ruling has cast upon the powers and duties of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, the committee is seeking consideration by the Attorney-General of the scope and meaning of the Executive Order."

NAACP Drops Probe Of Levy Case; Is Something Hidden?

Daily World

Point Out He Failed to Secure Outside Counsel for Hearing

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(ANP)—Withdrawel of the NAACP from the protest beng made in behalf of the demoted and court-martialed Sergeant [illegible] Levy, serving four-months [illegible] having made certain deregatory remarks [illegible] army oficers, is being construed here as a sign that there is more about the case that has not yet met the eye.

Private Levy, a white soldier, in letters to friends had said that he was being penalized because he dared to speak up to his superiors at camp near Lincoln, Nebraska, about the treatment Negro soldiers were receiving at their hands. As a result, he was hauled on the carpet and told that charges were bein" prefered against him.

Those more inclined to reserve judgment now are pointing out that, while the International Ladies Garment workers, the NAACP, and other liberal organizations had interested themselves in the case none of them had ever seen a copy of the charges and specifications that were presented to Levy. Nor had they seen any of the other data that hed been made available to him.

It is pointed out too that when he was informed that he would be court-martialed, it was his privilege to secure counsel from outside the army to defend him and to cross-examine his accusers. This he apparently did not do.

The feeling is that Levy may have given justification for some of the charges made against him, and seeking to escape punshment, attempted to make himself a martyr, with "mistreatment of Negro soldiers" as his cause celebre.

Phila. Transit Incites Strike Over FEPC Order

The Worker
New York, N. Y.

DEC 5 1943

By Walter Lowenfels

(Special to The Worker)

PHILADELPHIA.—The President's Fair Employment Practice's Committee is about to hold hearings on the refusal by a company union to obey its order requiring the full use of Negroes in skilled jobs on the Philadelphia Transportation Company. The PTC Action Committee is announcing a Victory Drive to culminate in a mass meeting Dec. 19, to gain still wider support for the campaign. The United Peoples Action Committee is making special efforts to obtain the support of still more AFL and CIO trade unions for compliance with the FEPC order.

The fundamental issues at stake over the question of hiring several hundred Negro men and women as conductors, motormen and cashiers are coming out into the open. The campaign has reached far beyond the immediate organizations involved. It is safe to say that there are few homes in Philadelphia where there has not been some discussion of the wider issues involved. The newspapers, which played down the campaign in its earlier phases, are now giving it front page space. Special articles and letters to the editors are printed showing strong sentiment for compliance.

"STRIKE" INCITEMENT

The PTC is engaging in open strike incitement and union-busting tactics over the FEPC order. At the Germantown Depot, John Green, former president of the company union and now Assistant Director of Industrial Relations for the PTC, in addressing the workers on the question of Negro employment, asked them: "Don't you think this is worth a strike?"

Rabid anti-Negro incitement is permitted on company property.

There are obvious signs that the company plans to use its company union not merely to oppose the FEPC order, but to win public sentiment against legitimate unions and that it has strong support in this policy.

Thus the entire progressive movement, and the issues for which the country is fighting a war for national survival, face a decisive showdown over the question of whether several hundred Negro men and women shall be permitted to work according to an order handed down by a direct agent of the President of the United States.

PTC Awaits Union Reply to FEPC Order

Mayor Samuel Still Refuses to Intervene in Fight

BULLETIN

A public hearing on the recent FEPC order to end transit company employment discrimination will be requested by the PRT Employees' Union, Frank P. Carney, union president, announced following an executive committee meeting Tuesday night. The request will automatically delay the effective date of the order, originally November 27.

Although the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee has officially ordered the Philadelphia Transportation Company to cease discrimination against colored employees, the company still wants union sanction before making such a move.

That was indicated Friday by Dr. A. A. Mitten, chairman of the PTC's industrial committee and a member of the board, during a conference with representatives of the NAACP's Action Committee, leaders of the bitter fight to have colored persons employed as motormen, conductors, bus drivers and cashiers.

Union Considers Order

Meanwhile, the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Employees' Union, which also received a directive, held a meeting of delegates last night (Tuesday) to decide whether it will go along with the FEPC order.

Actually, the meeting is the continuation of a stormy, six-hour session last week in which the union's policy-making body wrestled with the question of approving the upgrading and equal hiring of colored workers—and got nowhere.

The FEPC directive, issued on Thursday after several conferences between representatives of the President's committee and officials of the transit company and union, held that present practices are in violation of the President's executive orders banning discrimination because of race, creed, color or national origin.

Order Effective Saturday

Signed by Malcolm Ross, FEPC chairman, the directive ordered the transit company to begin immediately upgrading and hiring colored workers as trolley car operators, conductors, guards, platform attendants, station cashiers "and all other job classifications" from which they were formerly barred.

The order becomes effective Saturday unless the company or the union asks for a public hearing. Such a request would postpone the effective date.

Union Contract Involved

The President's committee found that discrimination against colored employees had been based on the "interpretation" of a company contract with the union which provides in part that "all existing . . . customs bearing on the employer-employee relationship shall continue in force and effect until changed by agreement between the parties."

Designated as an essential industry by the War Manpower Commission and, therefore, subject to FEPC jurisdiction, the PTC was given the following orders:

FEPC Orders

To cease and desist from all discriminatory practices affecting the employment or upgrading of colored persons; to give written notice to the union with which it has contracts that it will cease all discrimination;

To issue written notices to the U.S. Employment Service and all other employment agencies with which it deals, advising them that it will accept workers for all job classifications without regard to race, color or creed;

To instruct all executives who have power to hire or promote that there will be no distinction made between workers because of race, color or creed;

To reconsider all applications for employment, promotion and transfers filed by colored persons since June 25, 1941, date of the Executive Order 8802 which first established the FEPC;

Monthly Report Asked

To post notices in conspicuous places stating that applications will be received from and examinations given to employees asking for upgrading or transfer, regardless of race, color or creed;

To submit to G. James Fleming the FEPC regional director, a report showing that the orders have been carried out, and every thirty days thereafter, report on the number of "white and non-white" persons employed in every job classification.

After the third report, the committee said, the company may ask for a relaxation of the last phase of the order.

Order to Union

The union was simply ordered "in the interest of the war effort" not to interpret any section of its contract as interfering with the employment of qualified colored persons in any job classification.

In a statement to the committee's representative on October 4, the company said that it "would be willing and ready" to hire colored applicants for jobs they have never held "if it were not a violation of . . . the union contract."

Both Pass Buck

The union admitted to a FEPC representative that the "customs clause" in the contract, "in effect" froze certain jobs precluding colored workers from upgrading or free employment.

It denied, however, ever advocating any discriminatory steps and pointed out that "the company has made no formal request that the union state its position with reference to any change in the company's customary employment . . . of colored persons."

Mitten told the NAACP delegation that executives of the company would discuss putting the directives in operation "if" the union made up its mind to accept integration of colored employees.

"Can't Force Union"

"We can't force the men to take into their operating family any men they don't want," said Mitten. "At least, we can't make them like it, so we are trying to do it in an orderly way."

A spokesman for the union refused to predict the outcome of Tuesday's meeting, pointing out that last week's meeting "left everything in the air."

The union does not discriminate in membership and there are eight colored delegates among the 128 representatives. In some cases the colored delegates also represent white employees. The question of upgrading colored workers was brought up last spring, the spokesman said, but was tabled and never got back on the Successor to the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company, PTC owns and operates the entire street railway, trackless trolley and bus system serving Philadelphia. It also operates the city-owned Frankford elevated and Broad Street subway system and the Delaware River Bridge Line.

At present, the company employs 537 colored workers in the maintenance department, ranging from foremen to laborers. Altogether, it employs 10,900 persons.

White Women Used

So acute is its manpower shortage that it has been calling for white women to operate its trolleys. This, it was learned, is also a violation of the "customs clause" but was agreed to by the union as a war measure.

A PTC request that only white persons be referred to the company for positions as motormen was reported to the FEPC by the U.S. Employment Service.

Mayor Refuses to Act

While he and four members of the council are members of the PTC board by virtue of the city's interest, Mayor Bernard Samuel, has steadfastly refused to intervene in the fight against discrimination.

Asked by an NAACP delegation which he tried to duck on Wednesday just what action he had taken to abolish race discrimination as a member of the board, the mayor replied: "I have done a lot of talking.

"I want to know where I tread before asking the board to erase discrimination," Samuel added. "I won't propose a resolution until all steps have been taken."

FEPC Opens Rail Hearings

(Daily Worker Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15.— The President's Fair Employment Practices Committee today tackled the wide-spread discrimination against Negroes on the nation's railroads—at a time when there is an acute shortage of manpower in the industry for the war effort.

The effect of anti-Negro discrimination on the vitally important war job which must be performed by the railroad industry was the theme of the hearings which involved 22 railroads and 14 unions charged with discrimination.

Bartley C. Crum, Special Counsel for FEPC, declared that the hearings are "calculated to add greatly to the manpower on our railroads—so desperately required to meet the wartime demands on their facilities."

Crum sharply criticized the manpower program made public two weeks ago by Joseph B. Eastman, head of the Offices of Defense Transportation, which omitted any reference to discrimination on the railroads.

And Now The Verdict?

The four-day hearings into discrimination against Negro and Mexican workers by 22 railroads and 14 railway labor unions, conducted by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices, ended last week in the Nation's capital.

Atlanta, Georgia

SEP 26 1943

Twenty-two of the major railroads of the country have been accused of personnel practices which contribute to racial discrimination, in that Negroes are barred from any but menial jobs. Seniority rules and percentage allotments have been used over the years to decrease the number of Negroes in the operation of the roads. Negroes who fired the boilers on thousands of the old style hand-fed locomotives have been discarded, now that the driving heat of the Diesel-powered locomotive can be applied by the twist of a wheel in a white hand. The most serious fact in the hearings is that the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers is now in the process of dropping all Negroes holding jobs which fall within its jurisdiction.

The New York Central, the Pennsylvania and the Baltimore and Ohio railroads admit their guilt, but justify their policy of discrimination upon the grounds that they reflect the local customs and standards of the regions in which the roads operate. The Union Pacific railroad admits to unfair practices and pledges to put an end to them. Most of the other railroads, together with the 14 labor unions, with a strange degree of arrogance, admit to the unfair advantages taken against Negro workers, but stated that "racial patterns demanded the exclusion of Negroes from jobs which would place them in control over white employes."

Daily World

Now that the hearings are ended and the facts of discrimination are clearly established and admitted by the major operating lines, what shall the verdict be? Does the committee have the power and authority to call a halt to these practices? Can it deal with witnesses who arrogantly told its members that discriminatory "problems cannot be worked out by any board, politically appointed for appeasement?"

Bartley C. Crum, Chief Counsel for the FEPC, deserves the warmest praise for his forthright stand against such wholesale discrimination against the Negro workers, who saw the railroads through their worst and most critical years. "Today," he said, "the denial of the railroads of equality of job opportunity to Negroes and other minority groups stultifies our moral leadership of the democracies, provides strong material for the Axis propaganda against us, and, as the evidence in this hearing will show, has created a situation which, at this very moment, is seriously hampering our effective prosecution of the war."

Nothing, we believe, will be more damaging to the committee's prestige, past or present, than to submit to the determination of the railroads to continue to practice discrimination and that it is nobody's business at Washington. What shall the verdict be, gentlemen?

A PARTIAL VICTORY

The "worst discriminatory practices", an announcement declares, will be aired at a "monster mass meetng" to be held at Vermont Avenue Baptist Church, Washington, D. C., Sunday evening, September 12, when colored firemen of Southern railroad systems will tell "their own amazing story" of color prejudice. The meeting is held under the sponsorship of a committee authorized by the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters and entitled the Provisional Committee for the Organization of Colored Locomotive Firemen. Others listed to address the meeting are Senator William Sanger of North Dakota; A. Philip Randolph, president, Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters; Dr. Lawrence M. Ervin, of the national executive board, March on Washington Movement; Attorney Thurman T. Dodson, chairman, local unit of the March on Washington Movement; and B. F. McLaurin, international field organizer, Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters.

Boston, Mass

AUG 28 1943

The occasion is in the nature of a celebration of a partial victory. Although duly on schedule several months ago, hearings on the firemen's grievances were abruptly cancelled just before President Roosevelt left to attend the historic conference at Casablanca. The FEPC suffered a tremendous set-back. For months it did not function. Some FEPC members, including its president, resigned. The Administration was accused of kowtowing to powerful railroad interests in the South. Protests against the surrender rang throughout the country. There were insistent demands for the rehabilitation of the FEPC and the rescheduling of the hearings. Rcently th FEPC was reconstituted. The cancelled railroad discrimination hearings are again on schedule and will open in Washington, September 15.

Guardian

Joy over the prospect must be restrained because all of us know the uncertainties that lurk in entrenched race-hatred. There is hope in the experience that good action can come from other causes than a spirit of fair-play. It can come from a rap at the South's pocketbook. The continuing migration of workers from Dixie and the consequent labor shortage may drive Southern railroad magnates to sensible decisions. Even so, there is no certainty that "conversion through "fear of the Devil" will be lasting. A strong law with teeth that actually bite will be required to preserve whatever gains are won at the railroad hearings. Favors, concessions, mean little. Legal enactments to make sure that every gain holds mark the true course of American social progress.

FEPC West Coast Hearing Definite

SEP 10 1943

Daily World
Atlanta, Georgia

WASHINGTON — ANP) —It is pretty definite now that the Fair Employment Practice committee is going to hold a hearing on the west coast to determine specifically whether or not Negroes corraled in a jim-crow local of the boilermakers union are being discriminated against, but more important, to test the validity of union rituals which deny a worker from hoding a job because he cannot become an affiliate of the union.

At the outset when about 250 men were known to have been laid off for failure to pay dues into the auxiliary of the union, the FEPC sent a field examiner and a special invesigator out to San Francisco to size up the situation. Contents of their report have never been disclosed by the committee. Shortly after receipt however, George M. Johnson, assistant chairman of FEPC, flew out to the coast and spent several days.

Following his return the committee announced that it would hold a hearing, indicating that no progress had been made in the overall picture.

Meanwhile, it is understood, a small number of the men are back at work on the condition that they continue to pay their dues. This they are doing "under protest." This means that they are doing what they did before, only saying in addition that they don't like the idea.

Father Haas' Labor Day Message

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.

FEPC Head Urges Neighborliness Toward Minority Group Works

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9 — In a message to all American labor, released this week, Father Francis J. Haas, chairman of FEPC, urged the Labor movement to take responsibility of "developing — in ever-increasing strength — the spirit of neighborliness toward minority group workers."

"We are all workers. We must all be neighbors, working together for victory," he said.

"Out of such a spirit will come increased prestige for labor itself," he declared. "Through complete recognition of the elemental rights of all workers. the Labor movement can and will attain that status as a democratic brotherhood of man, a united movement of the millions of workers pledged to the sacred principles on which this great nation was founded."

The statement paid tribute to "American Labor . . . for holding off the Axis gangsters," and declared that FEPC "has accepted the responsibility to bring about the fullest utilization of all workers in the war effort and to assure every worker to make his fullest contribution thereto." It urged the Labor movement to share this responsibility.

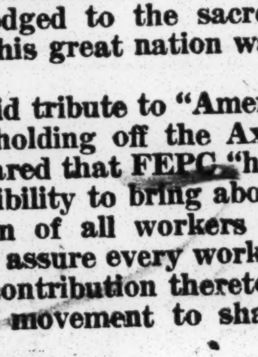
FEPC in Danger

New York, N. Y. New Masses



We don't know what motive lies behind the decision of Comptroller General Lindsay Warren, which virtually cancels the President's executive order prohibiting racial discrimination in war plants. Maybe it just happens that he is a former congressman from North Carolina—or maybe there is more than a coincidence between his recent action and the defeatist policies of the reactionary southern bloc. Regardless of the motive, the effect is certain. The foundation upon which the FEPC has sought to operate, inadequate as it was, is shattered as long as the Warren decree is permitted to stand.

The comptroller general got into the FEPC picture when the Southern Bell Telephone Co. refused to comply with the President's order directing all government purchasing agents to require guarantees against racial discrimination from firms doing business with the government. The company refused to provide such a guarantee, whereupon Lindsay Warren arbitrarily decided that it did not matter anyway and the company could go right ahead with the contract. In effect, he said that the President's executive order does not mean what it says. The order in question was issued by the President on May 27 of this year and is known as Executive Order 9346, superseding the somewhat milder Executive Order 8802. What it says is that "All contracting agencies of the government of the United States shall include in all contracts hereafter negotiated or renegotiated by them a provision obligating the contractor not to discriminate against any employee or applicant for employment because of race, creed, color, or national origin, and requiring him to include a similar provision in all subcontracts." The comptroller general has taken it upon himself to sabotage the entire intention of the order by decreeing that the order is not mandatory.

This shameful arrogation of authority and perversion of democratic policy have been met with the protests which they deserve. It is of the utmost importance to national unity, to the morale and progress of the Negro people, and to the entire war effort that the original intention of the President on this score be upheld. A sharp public rebuke to Lindsay Warren from President Roosevelt carrying with it a cancellation of the Warren interpretation is the minimum the public should demand.

FEPC in Action

New York, N. Y. New Masses

One of the most flagrant examples of racial discrimination in the gigantic American railroad industry. The discrimination hits Negroes and Mexicans, or persons of Mexican descent, particularly, but other groups too suffer from the "racial superiority" myth which permeates the entire industry. It injures every American, white or colored, for by holding back national unity it hinders our war effort. To their shame neither management nor the unions have taken the initiative in wiping out this blot upon national unity. In consequence there has been terrific pressure brought to bear upon the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee to investigate the industry in order to force compliance with Executive order 8802. Counterpressure from the industry itself and from other influences perfectly willing to compromise with victory over the Axis successfully postponed the hearings for nearly a year. At long last, however, the reconstituted FEPC has opened the hearings in Washington, D.C.

Twenty-two railroads and fifteen trade unions are involved. Both parties, management and labor, are guilty; their crime is now being exposed in all its dirty ramifications. Negro railroad workers charge collusion on the part of management and the unions in discriminating against them. Management seeks to lay the blame on the unions, which it claims have insisted on including discriminatory regulations in their work contracts. The phrase "non-promotable," appearing in many contracts, refers to Negroes; it prevents them from rising to the higher ranks of employment. Evidence given so far indicates a wide variety of discriminatory practices. Not only are equal promotion and seniority rights denied, but in instances which have been cited unequal pay for the same work prevails. In other instances Negroes are made to do a certain type of work while being classified and paid in a lower category. Witnesses have given evidence that the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers and other brotherhoods have refused membership to Negroes and forced them to hire special white representatives to handle their grievances befor management.

That this disgraceful state of affairs is grist in the Axis mill is self-evident. The way it is so used has been explained to the committee by Clyde E. Miller of the Institute for Propaganda Analysis. "One of the stronges weapons in the hands of Hitler," testified Miller, "—and American propagandists consciously or unconsciously are following the Hitler pattern—was exploitation of what anthropologists call the myth of racial superiority." The Axis tells the people of the Far East that they "can have no faith in the promise of white Americans when they deny equal rights to their fellow citizens who [illegible]." This type of propaganda, Miller said, was "extraordinarily and almost immediately effective, dynamic, and dangerous."

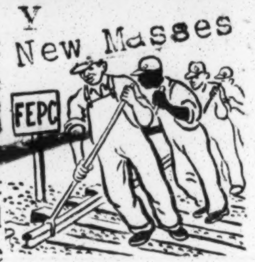
Jim Crow Takes a Fall

New York, N. Y New Masses



We believe that the locomotive of history will run all the more safely and quickly, now that an incompetent and evil employe of the railroads has been tossed off the train. We refer to that age-old wrecker, Jim Crow, who got his walking-papers last week from the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee, which, in its most sweeping order to date, gave both railroad management and unions thirty days to comply with the decision to stop barring Negroes from jobs, from upgrading, and from union membership.

Thus, at one stroke two great advances were made: first, in the direction of eliminating that cancer of our democracy, racial discrimination; second, in overcoming the acute manpower shortage in our crucial transportation industry. And not only in the latter—the ruling will undoubtedly pave the way for maximum employment of Negroes in all other industries.

Needless to say, the proponents of the old—the spokesmen for Southern bourbonism—put up a last-ditch fight. The representative of the Southern Railway insisted that only "gradual processes of education" could eliminate Jim Crow practices. His arguments were crushed both by FEPC officials and by labor's spokesman at the hearings, Frederick N. Myers, vice president of the National Maritime Union. The latter pointed out: "We have a record in our industry of no vessels [illegible], or convoys, because of any disagreement between members of crews on the question of color. Convoy movements are accelerated because of our non-discrimination policy."

Forward-looking Americans immediately welcomed the ruling as a great advance, both toward winning the war and in guaranteeing the peace. They looked to the next big step: the elimination of Jim Crowism in the armed forces. It was generally felt that this railroad ruling will speed measures to give our Negro citizens in uniform the same privileges and rights their white brothers enjoy. There is no doubt that the railroad decision will bring consternation to certain men in Berlin and Tokyo, and their opposite numbers in the United States.

DEC 14 1943

Democracy in America took another big step forward last week. The long, patient, and aggressive campaign by millions of fair-minded citizens against Jim Crow in sports was rewarded by the official statement of policy pronounced by Judge Kenesaw M. Landis, the head of organized baseball. After eloquent pleas by Paul Robeson and other outstanding Negro and white leaders, Judge Landis said: "Each club is entitled to employ Negro players to any and all extents it desires."

As Mr. Robeson af[illegible]d indicated, the way "is now clear for Negro players to enter the major leagues." What remains now to implement Judge Landis' statement of policy is a continuation of the campaign: the fight now goes down to the various cities where sport lovers can urge managers of the local teams to employ outstanding Negro athletes.

(Special to The Worker)

PHILADELPHIA. — A Fair Employment Practices Committee order, requiring the Philadelphia Transportation Company to employ Negroes as motormen, conductors, cashiers, and other skilled jobs, is being issued by the regional office of the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee, according to official sources here.

NOV 21 1943

While no formal announcement will be made by the regional FEPC director, James Fleming, before the end of the month, the company has been given ten days to make provision for Negro workers in skilled jobs.

Meanwhile, the campaign of the Action Committee on PTC Employment, in cooperation with the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, is reaching throughout the city with 25,000 signatures being obtained on petitions demanding an end to Jim Crow on Philadelphia's transit system in the interests of the war effort and to speed up the transportaion service.

At this week's meeting of the Committee, plans were also discussed to throw picket lines around the company's offices if Negroes are not hired for skilled work within the next week or two.

NOV 21 1943

The petition campaign climaxes the mass parade of some 3.000 on City Hall last week, and the big Town Hall rallv earlier in the month.

FEPC Orders Return Of Shipyard Workers

SEP 8 1943

Immediate return to work of the Negroes in West Coast shipyards who had been dismissed for refusal to pay their dues into an auxiliary union local of the Boilermakers' union is being sought by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice (FEPC) as a preliminary move to adjustment of the entire situation, it was announced recently by the committee. As a result of investigation and a conference held in San Francisco on August 20-21, the positions of all parties involved in the dispute have been clarified, the committee reported.

At present attempts are being made to have worked but between management and the union a procedure through which the dismissed workers may be put abck on their jobs at once pending ultimate settlement of the entire dispute.

According to the announcement, the discharge of the workers is explained by the management as being in accord with its contract to discharge any and all workers, regardless of race, creed or color, who do not remain in good standing with the union. The fact that the workers in question, are Negroes, the management insists, has no bearing in the matter.

FDR Knew Nothing of Ruling Against FEPC

NOV 4 1943

(Daily Worker Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 3.—An official denial that any one connected with the White House was in any way involved in the ruling of Controller General Lindsay Warren crippling the FEPC became public today.

In a letter to the Pittsburgh Courier, Negro weekly White House Secretary Stephen Early said:

"I can tell you in all frankness that until he saw a story about this ruling in the newspapers, the President knew nothing about it. It is a fact, also, that no White House official had anything to do with the ruling. It was not asked for by anyone at the White House. And this includes Director James F. Byrnes of war mobilization."

The next move in the FEPC case is now understood to be up to the White House.

NOV 4 1943

FEPC Chairman Malcolm Ross has asked the Attorney General to decide whether Warren's ruling is valid. But this request by the FEPC must be forwarded by the President to the Attorney General if it is to be effective.

Department of Justice officials were expecting momentarily a communication from the White House asking them to look into the matter, but late today they had not yet received word.

16 Southern Railways Defy FEPC Order On Racial Discrimination

News
Birmingham, Ala

Directives Described As Impracticable, Threat To Existing Harmony

DEC 13 1943

WASHINGTON — (AP) — Sixteen Southern rai[illegible] Mon[illegible] the president's committee on fair employment practice, in effect, that the agency is wasting its official breath ordering the railways to cease discriminating against Negro employes.

The 16 carriers declared they would not obey the FEPC directives of Nov. 24 forbidding racial or religious discrimination. The FEPC, the railroads said in a joint letter, "is wholly without constitutional and legal jurisdiction and power to issue the directives, and for this reason the said directives are without legal effect."

The action of the railroads openly challenges executive order No. 9,346 issued by President Roosevelt, which forbids any contractor doing business with the federal government to discriminate against employes or job applicants for racial or religious reasons.

The railroads charged that the FEPC was "utterly unrealistic" in attempting to solve delicate problems of inter-racial relations in the Southern states "by fiat."

"It is wholly impracticable and indeed impossible for the railroads to put into effect your committee's directives addressed against them," the letter to FEPC declares.

* * *

"ANY ATTEMPT, FOR INSTANCE, to promote Negroes to locomotive engineers or train conductors would inevitably disrupt their present peaceful and cooperative relations with their employes, would antagonize the traveling and shipping public served by them, would substitute conditions of chaos for the present conditions of harmony, would result in stoppages of transportation, and would most gravely and irreparably impair the whole war effort of the country. These railroads cannot assume the responsibility for precipitating such disastrous results."

The railroads asserted that railway labor relations are explicitly controlled by the railway labor act, and changes in contractual relations between the carriers and railway labor unions can only be accomplished under the act.

The open defiance of the president's executive order and the agency he created to administer it grew out of hearings held by FEPC in Washington in September.

DEC 13 1943

Seven railway labor unions and 22 railroads were then cited by FEPC on complaint of Negro railway workers that "collusive" contracts between the carriers and the unions barred Negroes from advancement, deprived them of seniority rights and were gradually freezing the Negres out of all work on the railroads.

* * *

THE RAILROADS PUT IN NO DEFENSE AT THE HEARINGS. The rail unions were not represented. Voluminous testimony was taken all tending to show that Negroes of 40 years seniority were "bumped" into inferior positions by white employes with less seniority.

The contract between the unions and the 16 railroads representing the Southeastern Carriers' Conference was placed in evidence by FEPC counsel. This contract limits the number of Negroes w[illegible] be employed by the railroads, designates them as "non-promotable," and restricts their choice of jobs by seniority.

DEC 13 1943

Testimony at the hearings also disclosed that Negroes are barred from membership in the railroad unions, and are prevented from forming effective unions of their own for collective bargaining purposes.

The FEPC, acting under presidential authority, on Nov. 24, found that the Southeastern Carriers' Conference contracts were in violation of the president's anti-discrimination order.

Virginia Line Settles a Case Brought Before FEPC

By Gordon H. Cole

PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, Sept. 10.–A settlement having been worked out, the FEPC (Fair Employment Practice Committee) today dropped its case against the Virginia Railway Co., one of 23 railroads scheduled to come up for public hearings next week on charges of refusing to hire Negroes in any but the most menial positions.

SEP 10 1943

Settlement of the Virginia case does not, however, represent any break in the solid front of the Nation's major railroads against using Negroes in responsible positions.

The Virginia Railway case had been brought to the FEPC by the Association of Colored Railway Trainmen and Firemen, Inc. The only charge filed against the Virginia line, principally a coal carrier, was that it employed 46 car riders, all Negroes, at Sewell Point Coal Pier, Norfolk, Va., at lower wages and under conditions inferior to those which white car riders enjoyed at Norfolk.

The Association withdrew its charges after a settlement was worked out with the aid of the National Railway Mediation Board.

SEP 10 1943

Hearings involving the other 22 lines, including the Pennsylvania, the Baltimore & Ohio, the New York Central and the major lines of the Southeast will begin Sept. 15.

FEPC Finds Roads Guilty

PM New York, N. Y.

PM's Bureau

DEC 1 1943

WASHINGTON, Dec. 1.–The FEPC (Fair Employment Practice Committee) found 23 of the Nation's major railroads guilty of discrimination in a long-awaited decision handed down yesterday.

The FEPC decision held that:

¶ The agreement between 10 Southern railroads and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen is illegal under the President's order. The agreement, the committee found, is designed for no other purpose than to cut down the employment of Negroes as firemen. This object is accomplished by limiting firemen's jobs to "promotable" men and then by excluding Negroes from promotion.

¶ The policy of certain railroad unions "discriminates against Negroes because of race in regard to membership . . . thus rendering it impossible for Negro workers to have any adequate voice . . . respecting working conditions, employment policy, practices and opportunities."

DEC 1 1943

Ordered to Desist

In all, 22 railroads and seven labor unions have been notified by the FEPC that all discriminatory employment practices must be eliminated. In each case a reply was requested within 30 days.

FEPC chairman Malcolm Ross announced that final action in the cases of the Pennsylvania Railroad and the New York Central has been held up until further attempts can be made to win voluntary settlement from these two roads.

Unions cited by the committee in its findings include the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen; Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen; Order of Railway Conductors; Brotherhood of Railway Carmen; Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers; International Assn. of Machinists, and the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers.

DEC 1 1943

Unions Absent

None of these unions showed up at the FEPC hearings.

The railroads subject to the FEPC findings include:

Atlantic Coast Line; Atlanta Joint Terminals; Baltimore and Ohio; Baltimore and Ohio Chicago Terminal; Central Railway of Georgia; Chesapeake and Ohio. Chicago and Northwestern; Georgia Railroad; Gulf, Mobile and Ohio. Illinois Central. Jacksonville Terminal. Louisiana and Arkansas. Louisville and Nashville; Missouri-Kansas-Texas; Norfolk Southern. Mexican Workers On Coast Upgraded Since Charges

WASHINGTON, (ANP) — The Fair Employment Practice committee is progressing on the work of reducing the volumes of testimony taken in the railroad hearings to the "handling point," it was learned last week end.

Already the cases against about six companies and four labor unions have been summarized, foundings made, and directives drafted calling upon all concerned to "cease and desist" various discriminations. An official statement has not yet been prepared, however.

OCT 16 1943

Upgrading Starts

Unofficially but reliably it is understood that telegrams have been received from several Mexican workers on the Union Pacific railroad stating that they had since been upgraded by the company. These upgradings are said to have taken place almost immediately after the testimony of one witness against the company had been taken down. The texts of the messages were not available.

N. Y. Central Waiting

The New York Central system has not yet followed up on its suggestion to sit down with the committee and work out a solution, nor has there been any break since the hearings ended in any other direction. There is the report though that a group of the carriers, mostly northern lines, have had at least one meeting among themselves at which they discussed approaches to the problem.

FEPC To Release Order To Coast Shipbuilders

Following the conclusion on November 20 of a two-day public hearing on charges of employment discrimination in the Los Angeles shipbuilding industry, the President's committee on Fair Employment Practice announced this week that its findings would be made public after a thorough study of all evidence.

DEC 4 1943

The hearings, held in Los Angeles, were highlighted by denials of discriminatory practices by representatives of three major shipbuilding firms — the California Shipbuilding Corporation, the Western Pipe and Steel Corporation, and the Consolidated Steel Corporation, Shipbuilding Division. The Boilermakers' Union, also involved in the charges, failed to make an official appearance at the hearings.

Original charges probed by the FEPC had included the three shipbuilding companies, the International Boilermakers' Union, AFL; Subordinate Lodge 92 and Auxiliary Lodge A-35. Invitations to attend the hearings were sent also to the AFL Metal Trades Council, Pacific Metal Trades Council, and the Los Angeles Metal Trades Council. None of the trade union groups made an appearance.

DEC 4 1943

Maas, testifying to the workability of integration of all workers, said that in his plant Negroes, Mexicans and whites were all employed on equal basis and were thoroughly integrated with the most harmonious and productive results.

Testimony about actual instances of discrimination in employment, upgrading and the union situation were offered by a number of witnesses including Walter Williams, Milton Berryman, Andrew Blakeney, Carl Davidson, Mrs. Ruby Johnson, Christopher C. Kemp, William M. Moore, Antonuia Williams, Dorothy V. Glosson, Joyce Robinson, Elmo Jacobs.

On Saturday morning, (November 20) Carey McWilliams, president of the Los Angeles Chapter of the National Lawyers' Guild, filed with the committee a statement from his organization, endorsing the FEPC hearing and urging full action against discriminatory practices by unions which, the statement declared, "weaken trade unions and imperil as well the fundamental national democracy."

DEC 4 1943

"Auxiliary unions for Negro workers constitute discrimination," the statement declared.

FEPC Regional Opens In Atlanta

DEC 4 1943

A permanent regional office of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice was opened last week at 525-28 Forsyth Street Building, Atlanta, Ga., Malcolm Ross, Chairman of the Committee, announced today.

The new office, with A. Bruce Hunt as regional director, will have jurisdiction in the States of Georgia, South Carolina, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Tennessee. Mr. Hunt, with an initial staff of two field examiners, will receive, investigate, and adjust complaints of discriminatory employment practices involving war industries, labor unions and government agencies.

DEC 4 1943

Following the opening of the regional office, the staff will continue to process approximately 120 active cases which have been handled in the national office of the Committee in Washington.

The Regional Director

Mr. Hunt, who is 35 years old, was born and educated in Virginia. A graduate of the University of Virginia, he practiced law in Roanoke, Va., before his appointment to the Review Staff of the National Labor Relations Board in Washington, D. C., in 1937. Later, as trial examiner and principal trial examiner for the NLRB, he presided over numerous hearings in the South. In April, 1943, Mr. Hunt joined the staff of the National War Labor Board where he served successively as assistant director of disputes in the Tenth Regional Board and director of the Board's Disputes Office in Los Angeles. He is married and has a son.

Red Cross Comes Under FEPC Too

NOV 27 1943

John Lord O'Brian, general counsel of the War Production Board, ruled April 29, 1942, that the Red Cross is a quasi-government agency and therefore its employment policies are subject to review by the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee.

NOV 27 1943

Interpretation was asked by the AFRO this week in view of the fact that the Red Cross not only separates the blood plasma for soldiers on the basis of race, but has kept its organization virtually lily-white.

NOV 27 1943

No Complaints Filed

Commenting on the order, Tuesday, William Maslow, assistant chairman, speaking in the absence of Chairman Malcolm Ross, said:

"I think we have jurisdiction over the Red Cross. Our instruction to our regional directors is that it is an open question.

"Concerning the employment and upgrading of colored workers in the Red Cross organization, that question will not be passed upon until a formal complaint is filed against the Red Cross and no one has yet filed such complaint."

The National Red Cross told the AFRO Tuesday that it jim crows its colored workers but denies there is any other discrimination in hiring, upgrading or providing facilities for 98 colored workers most of whom are overseas. No mention was made of the Red Cross own staff and personnel at home.

FEPC Head Raps Negro Segregation

Daily Worker new York n.y.

(Special to the Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Aug. 24. — The President's Committee of Fair Employment Practice opposes the segregation of Negro workers, chairman Francis J. Haas has announced here.

AUG 25 1943

Chairman Haas's statement was made in answer to a note in the news bulletin of the Employers Association of Chicago, which stated that the FEPC's "Mobile Compromise" gave employers the right to segregate their workers, he said.

"I am surprised that the settlement of a controversy last June at the Alabama Drydock and Shipbuilding Company, Mobile, Ala., has been interpreted to mean that the committee approves the segregation of colored and white as not a violation of the FEPC.

AUG 25 1943

"The committee accepts the accomplished fact of the settlement made in Mobile to end a crisis in war production, except that it cannot approve the segregation of colored workers on the four ways and does not consider that as a precedent."

Marcantonio urged that labor and Negro groups ask their Congressmen to sign discharge petition Number 17 which would bring action on the measure when it is signed by 218 members of the House.

Mobile Compromise By FEPC Hurts In Chicago

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.

AUG 27 1943

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19—(ANP)—If Chicago developments are any indication, the Fair Employment Practices committee's famous "Mobile compromise" is going to dog the Negro's fight for integration from here on out.

Employers in the Windy City have been told through a publication serving the Employers' association of Chicago, under Labor News B[illegible], that so long as FEPC has given the practice its blessings, segregation of workers is all right.

"Segregation of Negro workers from white employees is not necessarily a violation of the anti-discrimination executive order 8802, so long as the FEPC recently approved such a solution of a racial controversy at the yards of the Alabama Drydock and Shipping Co., Mobile, Ala.," the item reads (underscoring theirs).

Retiring Chairman Says Colored Employment Gains Significant

WASHINGTON

Malcolm Ross, deputy chairman of the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee, was sworn in today (Tuesday) as successor to Monsignor Francis J. Haas who resigned the chairmanship on October 7 following his appointment as bishop of the diocese of Grand Rapids, Mich.

The new chairman is looked upon as a liberal and has long been active in labor and liberal circles. He came to the FEPC from the OWI writer's section and prior to that was director of information for the National Labor Relations board.

About 45 years old, he is the author of an autobiography entitled, "Death of a Yale Man." He was born in Hewaks, N.J., and now lives in Vienna, Va., near Washington.

Terming his final press conference his "swan song," Msgr. Haas on Monday, at the FEPC headquarters, cited what he termed the "real gains made by colored people in war employment since the beginning of the war emergency," saying that the percentage of employees had jumped from 5.8 to 7.3.

Johnson Promoted

Coming on the heels of these important actions also was the information divulged by Mr. Ross at the press session that George Johnson, former assistant to Lawrence Cramer, one-time executive secretary of the FEPC, and then secondary assistant to Father Haas, would be promoted to first assistant to the new chairman "upon the basis of his ability and excellent service."

No decision was forthcoming as yet in the all-important railroad hearings, although it was revealed that this case had been under consideration by the committee throughout its Monday session, and Milton Webster, labor representative, took the defensive position that there are "more than 1,000 pages of testimony involved" and that action should not be hurried because of its momentous import.

Young [illegible] Murray to Stay

Both [illegible] Young, Sr., newspaper publisher, and Samuel Ze-Murray, fruit king, denied any intention of withdrawing from the committee, although Dr. Young later admitted that in the light of his approaching sixtieth birthday, and the heavy tax placed upon his health by Howard University and his own business, he had commented to an official of the FEPC that he might be forced to withdraw.

"I certainly will not take such an action before the railroad decision," he said, and "perhaps not then."

Capital Transit Pending

Action is still pending in the Capital Transit case, with no colored motormen or street car operators employed as yet, although Msgr. Haas said something would be done within a few weeks, and a special consultant is working on integration.

Conciliation Service is still at work on the proposed Western Electric strike in Baltimore, to secure separate toilet facilities for colored and [illegible] workers, but the FEPC has taken no further steps, Mr. Ross revealed on Monday. An independent union at the company voted to strike under the recently-passed Smith-Connally Law.

Praised by F.D.R.

President Roosevelt, who in White House correspondence made public on Friday, stated that he would continue to rely on the "warm-hearted counsel" of Father Haas, and commended him for "the increasing usefulness of the FEPC, as reorganized under your direction," declared of the out-going chairman:

"I have received with regret your letter of resignation. With other friends I rejoice in your advancement to the position of Bishop of the Diocese of Grand Rapids. I am not surprised that His Holiness Pope Pius XII has called you to this high position.

"In all the posts of responsibility in which you have served your government you have shown a humanity and skill which both church and country greatly need in these difficult days. I congratulate you on your new opportunities for service and send you my appreciation with my regrets in accepting your resignation."

The appointment of Chairman Ross was likewise made public in this letter.

Had Biddle Backing

Usually authoritative sources in the capital stated that the appointment of Mr. Ross was at the suggestion of Attorney-General Francis Biddle, and [illegible] that his had been the sole recommendation made by Father Haas in his extensive conference with the President two weeks ago. This information could not be verified.

Father Haas, who said that unknown to him, forces had been at work to have him appointed as Bishop since "last may," added to his statement on Monday concerning gains made by colored workers:

Labor Gains Cited

"There is now one colored worker in every 14, among those who are war workers. There is now one government worker in every 11 employees. There has been an improvement in the appointment of colored persons since 1942—checking July, 1942, with July, 1943, there has been an increase from 5.8 to 7.3.

Pointing out that there was yet a gap between the 10 per cent population ration and the present 7.3 total, the Catholic prelate emphasized the improvement. His parting shot was, "Please do not say that the Catholic church took me out of this job."

FEPC Sets the Stage for Rail Hearings

Afro-American
Baltimore, Maryland

WASHINGTON. (ANP)

Barring an eleventh hour about-face, the Fair Employment Practice Committee will raise the curtain here on its delayed-action hearings into the racial discrimination in the railroad industry on September 15, with repeat performances on the 16 and 17.

Of all the hearings that have been conducted in the two-year existence of the committee, none has succeeded so well in being the "cause celebre" of the masses and at the same time the bane of the top-hat pressure boys as the one now about to take place.

When the average person thinks of a colored railroad worker, his first thought is of the redcap, the sleeping car porter or the waiter who brought him his meals. While these are the primary classifications of colored railway workers, they are not the only ones. As late as 1924 they held at least ten other major jobs.

No Reliable Statistics

Exact figures on the employment of colored rail workers have never been complete or even adequate except possibly the estimate made in 1937 by the Railroad Retirement Board, which claimed that of the 1,957,688 persons engaged in rail transportation, 180,535 were colored.

At one time, before and including World War I, colored workers were in the majority on Southern lines as firemen, switchmen and brakemen. Ninety per cent of the firemen were said to be colored at one time on the Seaboard Air Line, Atlantic Coast Line, Georgia Railroad, Louisville and Nashville, and the Southern Railway.

SEP 4 1943

Switchmen and brakemen were in relatively the same position. In the Florence, S.C., yard of the Atlantic Coast Line, all switching was done by colored men; today there are hardly any. Terminal yards in Houston once had 85 per cent colored switchmen, today there are about 15 per cent.

White Electric Workers In Baltimore Plant Out On Strike

DEC 15 1943

Age-Herald

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14—(AP)—A major controversy over the authority of the Fair Employment Practices Committee to order equality of treatment for Negro war workers Tuesday appeared certain to be dumped on President Roosevelt's desk when he returns to the capital.

FEPC orders to end alleged discrimination against Negroes have been challenged by Southern railroads, and others, on the ground that FEPC exceeded its powers.

Meanwhile, members of Congress, the courts and the War Labor Board all were involved in the day's developments as one strike by white workers got under way in a vital war factory.

The War Labor Board, by unanimous action, ordered white strikers at the Point Breeze Western Electric plant in Baltimore to return to work at once or face "all possible action" under the War Labor Board Disputes Act. Point Breeze workers voted to strike Monday night in protest against the use of washroom facilities in common with Negro workers.

The strike was called after WLB refused to order separate facilities. On Oct. 2, FEPC advised the Western Electric Company that "the discontinuance of common facilities for Negro and white employes of the Western Electric Point Breeze plants and the introduction of special facilities would be a backward step which can but lead to discrimination against Negroes."

Rep. Marcantonio (A. L., N. Y.) praised the FEPC and criticized 16 Southern railroads which defied an FEPC order to cease alleged discrimination against Negro railway workers.

Other developments included:

Rep. Rankin (D., Miss.) declared that FEPC was a "rump organization" which was creating unnecessary racial tensions in the South.

THE FEPC TESTS ITS STRENGTH

This week in Washington, D. C., the President's new Fair Employment Practices committee undergoes its first acid test to prove its worth in the slow process of instilling a democratic philosophy in a democratic nation.

The FEPC, as it is generally known, questions the American railroad on its persistence in discriminating against Negroes, denying them job opportunities and promotion rights, and ignoring their righteous demand for removal of lines of demarkation in its placement policy.

It is a peculiar situation that envelopes the FEPC in Washington this week. It is one of those rare occasions when the trial judge—if it can thus be called—is placed on trial alongside the defendant. It is an herculean task the committee is undertaking, tackling an industrial giant with virtually nothing more than a proverbial pop-gun.

While the old committee failed to live up to expectations, presumably because t did not possess the necessary powers, t is our firm belief the revamped body will fail its purpose, if for no other reason than that it should profit by the mistakes of its predecessor.

Certainly, the Negro people are able to look upon their representatives in the past setup as capable men, equipped with the necessary logic and fortitude and endowed with the admirable quality of knowing when and about what to wage a fight. Neither is imbued with the uncontrolled belligerence which ofttimes appears silly and exasperating.

The rest of the membership, as far as we can determine, possess a maximum of common sense, tolerance and understanding, and a minimum of timidity and shortsightedness.

The nation's capital with the aid of the FEPC, for this week at least, can take its place alongside Aberdeen, Md., where every type of army weapon and mobile unit is put through a rigorous grind to justify its existence in a war-crazed world; alongside Maryland and California, where the Glenn Martin plant and Vultee Aircraft subject each plane intended for war use to seam-ripping, wing-smashing tests to determine its worthiness of a part in freedom's struggle.

The new FEPC enters its baptism of fire this week. It can emerge humiliated and disarmed, or it can come out with colors flying and ready for battle. We hope it is the latter. We believe it will be.

FEPC PROBES RAILROAD DISCRIMINATION—The long-awaited investigation of discrimination in the railroad industry got under way Wednesday. Bartley C. Crum, chief FEPC counsel, outlined the committee's case. Bartley's statement, forthright and pertinent, defended the committee's investigation of discrimination in the rail industry during the "crises period of our national war effort" with the remark that it was its firm conviction that this issue must be faced during the war. Outlining the objective of the rail probe, Crum stated its sole purpose is to afford "equality of job opportunity for all, regardless of race, creed or color." Crum concluded with the inspiring assertion that "in doing justice to the Negro railroad worker today we shall both serve the practical war needs and eliminate the evil bigotry and discrimination at home and give heart to the peoples of Europe, and Asia. 'Closed Door' Hearings For Federal Agencies Is Protested

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19—Complaints from private employers that the Government was practicing a form of discrimination in the conduct of its own anti-discrimination drive among federal bureaus, has become a source of worriment to the Fair Employment Practices Committee. The protests have been directed against the FEPC's own procedure, which is believed to have been effected by orders from the White House. It is said that numerous charges of race discrimination against the oGvernment as an employer particularly in Washington offices, are required to be conducted in closed executive session, whereas allegations against private employers are conducted in public.

DISCUSS MATTER

Following a session of the FEPC Monday, Mgr. Francis Haas, chairman of the committee, and George M. Johnson, asistant chairman, discussed the matter with members of the press. They said that complaints had been mounting and that they would carry them to the President and seek his advice on how to deal with the situation.

The matter was brought to the attention of the press with reference to a complaint from Detroit charging one of the governmental agencies there with refusal to upgrade a worker on account of creed. Mr. Johnson, a close questioning revealed that such matters had been handled in this manner since the creation of the old committee.

The members of the committee admitted that such a policy greatly handicapped them in achieving their [illegible].

Protests Hit Warren Ruling Against FEPC

Defender
Chicago, Ill.

NOV 6 - 1943

A wave of protests against the ruling of Comptroller General Lindsay Warren, which curtails the power of the FEPC, surged into the White House this week from interracial and labor organizations throughout the country.

A telegram from the New York CIO to President Roosevelt, said:

"Greater New York CIO Council representing 500,000 workers shocked and aroused by decision of Comptroller General Lindsay Warren nullifying your Executive Order 9346 prohibiting discrimination in government contracts. Warren's decision negates drive to recruit all available manpower. This attempt to weaken your anti-discrimination policy will gravely hinder production by eliminating employment of loyal, competent Negro, Jewish, foreign born workers. Inevitable result of this decision aids Hitler propaganda campaign and weakens American morale. Strongly urge you issue statement interpreting 9346 as mandatory in all war contracts and sub-contracts."

The protest of Edward E. Strong, executive secretary of the National Negro Congress, declared:

"The Congress is deeply concerned over the ruling of Comptroller General Lindsay Warren in the Southwestern Bell Telephone case which, if allowed to stand, effectively abrogates the enforcement power of the Committee on Fair Employment Practice. The action of the Comptroller General is another tragic example of appeasing those un-American forces in industry who insist upon placing their prejudices above the war interest of the nation.

"We cannot and must not fail by permitting the Warren ruling to remain unanswered. We call upon you as the President of the nation and the Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces to answer this challenge of bigotry and reaction by issuing a clarifying statement on Executive Order 9346."

George Marshall, chairman of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, asked the President to "reaffirm our national policy of fair employment and assure FEPC the authority required to carry it out."

"Under the decision," Marshall pointed out, "any employer who is guilty of discrimination may ignore the Executive Order by pleading that compliance would impair war work. Warren's cynical interpretation places the polices of employers, even though they follow the racist practices of the Nazi foe, above the imperative requirements of the war effort that all Americans, regardless of race, creed, color or national origin be utilized in war production."

The Warren statement was "unfit and prejudiced" by Walter White, executive secretary of the N.A.A.C.P., who said in his wire to the White House:

'We respectfully and vigorously urge that you forthwith do whatever is necessary to clarify your intentions expressed in Executive Order 9346." The N.A.A.C.P. telegram further stated, "Recent ruling of Comptroller General Lindsay Warren that your Executive Order is not binding upon war contracts because it is a 'directive' instead of an order virtually nullifies your Executive Order in which you used the explicit statement that 'it is hereby 'ordered.' It would appear to us therefore that such action on the part of a subordinate official is proof of unfitness and prejudice which should be rebuked."

The Negro Labor Victory Committee wired President Roosevelt urging him "to denounce and overrule" the decision of Comptroller General Lindsay Warren relative to Executive Order No. 9346 which has the effect of killing the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee.

The Committee stated that "Warren's decision raises a serious question as to his fitness for "the key office of Comptroller-General.

The wire to President Roosevelt was signed by Charles A. Collins, Executive Secretary of the committee.

Alice Stark, executive secretary of National Council for a Permanent FEPC, declared:

NOV 6 - 1943

"Mr. Warren's statement is an index of the type of postwar reaction which labor and all liberal elements fear. In anticipation of just this kind of threat, a group of concerned individuals established the National Council for a Permanent FEPC. Sens. Wagner and Capper are serving as honorary chairman and William J. Schiefflin is treasurer.

'A week ago representatives of several hundred thousand workers in New York, including such outstanding leaders as David Dubinsky, Samuel Wolchok and A. Philip Randolph met to face the problem and voted unanimously to raise a national fund for this work.

"The objective of the council, which includes the introduction of legislation establishing a permanent FEPC, is a definitive answer to such attempts as this one by Mr. Warren to abort the developing democratic forces which till now have been a New Deal bulwark on the basis of phraseology."

Haas Says CTC Has Moved to Comply with F.D.'s Order

SEP 4 1943

WASHINGTON

The southern railroad hearings involving alleged discrimination toward colored firemen and engineers, the Capital Transit Company's employment policies, and the shipbuilding industries' jimcrow auxiliary unions were the principal cases considered by the FEPC at its Saturday meeting.

street-car conductors and bus operators, Father Haas said:

Mum on CTC Action

"Steps are being taken by the company which satisfy the committee that progress is being made toward compliance with the terms of the Executive Order. Both the company and the union have stated that they are not opposed to the hiring and upgrading of colored workers.

"The committee does not feel that it would serve any useful purpose at present to disclose the nature of these preliminary steps."

Three-Day R.R. Hearings

Hearings in the Southern railway discrimination cases were extended an additional day, to include September 16, 17 and 18, "upon recommendation and request of counsel"; and the committee announced that notices to the railroads and to the unions will be ready next week.

Father Haas said that no date has been set for the hearing which will be held to consider the several complaints of discrimination "by management and the Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Shipbuilders and Helpers of America, through the use of auxiliary organizations."

16 Railroads Defy FEPC's Racial Order

Washington, D. C.
Post

By James F. King

Sixteen Southern railroads yesterday defied the Federal agency established by President Roosevelt to prevent discrimination against Negroes and other minority groups in war jobs and, as if to seek support, sent letters to Congressmen explaining their side of the controversy.

The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice promptly replied that the railroads were dodging the real issue and, unmoved by the carriers' response, demanded that the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers end alleged discrimination against Negro shipbuilders on the West Coast.

Orders Reinstatement

In addition, the President's Committee directed five West Coast shipbuilding companies to reinstate all Negro workers discharged because of their refusal to pay dues to boilermaker auxiliary unions. It also told the companies "to cease discharging or refusing to hire Negroes solely because they had failed to obtain clearance from the union."

Striking at the committee's legal foundations, the railroads said they would not obey the FEPC's order of November 24 because the committee "is wholly without constitutional and legal jurisdiction and power to issue the directives."

In their letter to members of the Senate and House of Representatives, the railroads said "the Committee on Fair Employment Practice was created by Executive Order 9346, which purported to give the committee power to hold hearings and make findings, but contained no provision empowering that committee to issue any directives."

Allegations Ignored

FEPC Chairman Malcolm Ross ignored the railroads' accusations of illegality and declared the primary issue in this dispute is the employment of Negroes as firemen. He said that hearings before the FEPC in Washington in September had been ignored by the seven railway labor unions affected and had been given only "perfunctory" recognition by the carriers.

The railroads' letter, Ross continued, "now makes a bid for public disapproval of FEPC by viewing with alarm alleged pretensions of Negroes to be engineers and conductors. The plain fact is that this issue is dormant and could remain s oif the railroads offer justice to Negr orailroadmen in the classifications where reason and policy both urge it."

War Service Praise

"The railroads today are giving extraordinarily fine service to wartime America," Ross added. "The FEPC believes that the granting of overdue rights to Negro railroad men, far from being a couse for disorder, could be so managed as to improve service and raise the morale of thousands of Negro Americans who have their own stake in winning this war quickly."

The FEPC acvtion in the shipyards case followed hearings last month on complaints that several hundred Negroes had been fired for refusing to pay dues to auxiliaries of the bailermakers' uunion, which according to the complaints took their money, but barred them from full membership.

The companies, all of whom were represented at the November hearings, although the union representatives failed to put in an appearance, contended that they were bound by a "master agreement" with the union by which all workers under the boilermakers' jurisdiction must becomeand remain members of the union.

FEPC Is Praised For 'Thorough Job' At Hearing

Daily World
Atlanta, Georgia

Walter White In Letter Commends Father Haas

WASHINGTON, D. C. (SNS)—the discrimination against Negro Commendation for having conducted the railroad hearings involving employment "on so high a plane" was expressed by Father Francis Haas, Fair Employment Practice Committee chairman, by Walter White, NAACP executive secretary, in a letter which cited the effective work of the entire Committee staff and particularly that of Barclay Crum, Sepcial Counsel, actively in charge of the hearings.

Mr. White's letter expressed the opinion that the Committee's thorough job . . . . . will have very far reaching effect not only in the matter of the employment of Negroes and other minorities on railroads but other industries as well. Vigorous follow up on the hearings, which we are confident will take place, will greatly help to make FEPC the effeceive force for justice in employment which all of us want it to be."

Also contained in the letter were suggestions that:

1. Discriminatory labor union be barred as collective bargaining agents.

2. FEPC recommend to the President the creation of a non-partisian body to replace the National Railroad Adjustment Board to hear complaints of railroad workers.

3. Railroads be directed not only to change their biased hiring policies but that they be required to submit to FEPC a report of their personnel practices with respect to Negroes and other minority groups at stated intervals.

'Mixed Races' In Same Office Is Opposed

Deploring the prospect of "mixed employment of the races" in one or more Atlanta office buildings, City Council Monday afternoon adopted a resolution calling upon Georgia congressional representatives at Washington "to insist upon the removal of the newly established Southeastern Regional office of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices, located in Ten Forsyth Street Building.

The Atlanta office was set up here nearly two weeks ago to investigate and correct grievances arising out of discriminatory employment practice based upon race, color, creed or national origin, having jurisdiction over war industries, labor unions, government departments and agencies in the states of Alabama, Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, South Carolina and Tennessee.

The "race situation," said the resolution, "can best be handled by local people. The activities of this committee in other parts of the South and particularly in Alabama, have resulted in building up racial animosities."

Adopted and signed by some 11 members of Council, the resolution had not reached the Mayor's desk for action late Tuesday. Attaches of the Mayor's office stated that it will probably reach the Mayor on Wednesday or Thursday for action.

LABOR FRONT

By GEORGE F. McCRAY

Pro-Negro Decisions

THE DECISION of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals upholding the fight of Negro workers to reject Jim Crow unionism without loss of collective bargaining rights is our latest victory in the long fight to make equality of opportunity a reality in the United States.

This decision puts an end to a long standing abuse of power by many of our trade unions who seem to be more interested in suppressing the Negro worker than in winning the war. This condemnation of certain restrictive practices among some unions is no more far-reaching, however, than the decision of the War Labor Board, which a few weeks ago, ordered that Negro workers be compensated on the same basis as white workers.

This equal-pay decision could amount to a little revolution in race relations. The South has long insisted upon the exploitative privilege of paying Negroes less than white men for equal work. Often this practice was concealed by placing the white man in charge of the job or by calling the work he was doing by another name even though the actual job was identical to that performed by his Negro companion.

This wage differentian between white and Negro workers was of course, sanctioned by custom and tradition. However, many unions have led successful fights against the evil. But they nor the late General Hugh S. Johnson with all the power of the NRA were able to break down this discrimination against Negroes on a wide front. Now it seems that the unions, backed by governmental policy will eventually be able to stop this systematic robbing of the Negro worker.

FEPC And Closed Shops

IN THE GREAT LAKES discrimination cases, heard in Chicago in April of 1942, on complaint of Negro plumbers and steamfitters, the Fair Employment Practices committee also rendered a historic decision. A few AFL building trades unions had used closed shop contracts with practicall all building contractors to force Negroes out of certain types of construction work entirely. This exclusion had been particularly effective in the case of Negro plumbers and steamfitters. Not even the strenuous efforts of AFL regional organizers were able to move these discriminating unions. Once Mr. William Green himself took a hand, but found opposition strong.

FEPC, just beginning to feel the sting of public criticism, and openly torn by internal conflicts, summoned enough strength, courage, or foresight, to state that closed contracts held by lily white must not prevent Negroes from working in defense employment on the same basis as other men. In substance the FEPC contended Executive Order 8802 was superior to a discriminatory union contract.

The decision was never effectively enforced, but there it stood for all to see. It was up to the President to enforce it. Some discriminatory unions struggled against the decision and openly violated it; a few gave Negroes permits to work,

The dissenting minority—consisting of public members, Wayne L. Morse and Frank P. The race discriminatory charges against the Capital Transit company were preferred by militant Negro and white organizations and leaders, including lobbyists of the Alpha Kappa sorority.

FEPC Rail Decision Great War Victory

DEC 2 1943

Daily Worker New York, N.Y.

By James W. Ford

The verdict of the Fair Employment Practices Committee (FEPC) gives an answer to a long-standing uncertainty which has faced the Negro people. Twenty-two railroads were found guilty of racial discrimination in their employment practices.

When President Roosevelt took power in 1932 the Negro people faced two roads. Some people thought that the crisis they faced was too great to be overcome under the present system of government. Others on the contrary thought that it was possible to approximate solution of grievances of racial discrimination in capitalist society. The FEPC hearing and its final decision has given an affirmative answer in favor of the latter viewpoint.

James W. Ford

If the decision on discrimination in the railroad industry is considered in the light of the economic and social crisis that has faced the Negro people and, now, in the light of the present war, no other conclusion can be drawn than that a radical change in governmental policy under the Administration of President Roosevelt assures equal citizenship rights for the Negro people.

The FEPC decision [illegible] a definite turn[illegible] from the Jim Crow status of Negro workers in the railroad industry. The policy of Southern feudalism was repudiated. The common interests of Negro and white labor unity was sustained. All of this adds up to the fact that the anti-discriminatiory policy of the government is advancing the democratic way of life for the entire Negro people.

Thus a new era has opened up in the relations of the Negro people and the nation. A condition has been created whereby their full integration in American life can be achieved. There is no doubt that the Negro people will fully agree that their advancing position rests on a solid foundation.

EXECUTIVE ORDER

The pattern for the FEPC decision was the President's Executive Order 8802 announced in 1941. Next in line now for wiping out are other discriminatory practices particularly in the armed forces. The FEPC decisions show that these will be tackled and can be eliminated. Thus in the course of this great liberation war the alliance between the Negro people and the democratic win-the-war forces has been set on a firm foundation.

The policies of the government and the position of labor were outlined as follows:

1—The government representative opened the hearing by declaring:

That the policy of the United States is to encourage full participation in the war effort of all persons in the United States regardless of race, creed, color, or national origin in the belief that the democratic way of life within the nation can be defended successfully only with the help and support of all groups within its borders.

That doing justice to the Negro railroad worker today, shall both serve the practical war needs of our nation, and by the same stroke, eliminate the evil of discrimination at home, and give heart to the peoples of Europe and Asia who look to us to see how well the pattern of democracy can be woven.

2—The representative of labor, Frederick Myers, vice-president of the National Maritime Union, declared:

"We have a record in our industry of no vessels missing, or convoy, because of any disagreement between members of crews on the question of color. Convoy movements are accelerated because of our no-discrimination policy.

Against these democratic declarations was the policy of the representative of the Southern Railroad:

"The solution will not be advanced but, rather, will be retarded by too abrupt an attempt to change, by governmental decree, longstanding practices, rooted in the customs of the people. . . ."

This policy was repudiated.

We must now use this victory as a great opportunity to hasten the complete elimination of Jim Crow and racial discrimination in industry, in the armed forces, in all phases of our American life. A heavy responsibility rests upon the organized labor movement and all departments of government to see to it that the enemy's poison is wiped out, that the basis for fifth column provocations is undermined. The war has entered a stage where that is entirely possible. It is achievable because of the agreements of the Moscow conference in which our country has joined with the Soviet Union, Great Britain and China to hasten the shortening of the war and to bring about freedom and liberty to all peoples.

Local Cites Firm's Anti-Negro Policies

Daily Worker New York N.Y.

By Tom Dombrowski

(Special to the Daily Worker)

AUG 25 1943

DETROIT, Aug. 24.—In a brief filed with Monsignor Francis J. Haas, chairman of the Fair Employment Practices Committee, Ford Local 600, CIO, charges violation of the letter and spirit of Presidential Order 8802 in six different respects by the Ford Motor Company.

"The present policy of refusal to place Negro applicant is in fact a contributing factor to the 'racial tenseness' of which the Ford management is apprehensive," asserts the document. It further charged that the company "is pursuing a policy deliberately aimed at denying jobs to hundreds upon hundreds of Negro workers, a large number of them trained at skills sorely needed in war production in the Rouge plant."

The company is accused of aggravating the already serious housing, transportation, food and wartime living situation by hiring migrant labor for which it advertises in Kentucky and Tennessee while discriminating against the Negroes already resident in Detroit.

The statement also repudiates the fear expressed that "racial tension" will be aggravated through the hiring of additional Negroes by showing that during the June 20-21 anti-Negro riots, not one case of violence occurred in the Ford plant. The present attitude of the company completely exposes the fiction created by the Ford Motor Company over the year before the plant was unionized that it hired Negroes because it was a "friend of the Negro people." The real aim was to use the Negro employes against unions and to keep the workers divided among themselves. The Ford drive saw the Negroes in the first ranks of the union, working with the white workers.

The brief charges specifically that the Ford Motor Company:

SIX POINTS

1. Has consistently refused, since April 1, to hire Negro applicants through regular employment channels.

2. Those who do get jobs after long delays only get them after being subjected to the investigations of the notorious "Sociological Department," which pries into the private lives of Negroes but asks only routine questions of other applicants.

3. In many cases Negroe are permitted to fill out application blanks and then told that "they will be sent for," while white applicants of similar skill are being hired at the same moment. There are also cases where Negro applicants have been urged to get jobs elsewhere pending openings at Ford's, which is in direct contravention of the rules of the U. S. Employment Service.

4. The company has repeatedly refused to honor an agreement with the union providing for job preference for the wives, sisters and daughters of Ford workers called to military service, when these women have been kin of Negroes.

5. The company attempts to justify its present policy by citing Negro employment ratio of 19 per cent, but has failed to point out that induction of Negroes, and the rapid hiring of whites, has steadily reduced that ratio.

6. The company further justifies its present policy on the ground that "The tenseness of the present racial situation" makes this policy necessary.

VA. RAILWAY FORGETS BIAS

SEP 18 1943

Courier Pittsburgh Pa.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16—The twice-postponed railroad hearings, conducted by President Roosevelt's Fair Employment Practice committee, had a public opening yesterday (Wednesday) with Monsignor Francis J. Haas, FEPC chairman, in charge. The sessions last through Saturday.

First major devolopment in the scheduled hearing came several days before the actual opening date, September 15, when the FEPC withdrew complaints against the Virginian Railway company and removed its name from a list of 23 railroad companies summoned to appear at the public hearings here.

SATISFACTORY ADJUSTMENT REPORTED

The FEPC's action followed receipt of official notification from the Association of Colored Railway Trainmen and Firemen, Inc., representing the complainants, that satisfactory adjustment had been reached with the Virginian Railway company through the offices of the National Mediation board, Monday, Steptember 6. The complaints had originally been filed in June, 1942, with the FEPC, 46 workers of the association charging, at that time, that the Virginian Railway company maintained unfair differentials in wages and working conditions among Negro and white workers at its Sewall Point Coal Piers, Norfolk, Va. Negroes were classified as car riders, performed brakemen's work, but were not given a standard rate of pay nor granted overtime pay until after 10 hours a day, the complaints charged, but white workers who did the same work, it was pointed out, received a standard rate of pay higher than that for Negroes and, further, received overtime pay for all work over eight hours a day.

Revelation Made By Witness Before FEPC Hearing In Washington; CIO Witness Says Antagonism Disappearing

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(ANP)—Axis broadcasts directed at South America, where there is a large Negro population, Africa and the Far East is making capital of of the treatment accorded black American citizens, it was testified here Friday by Clyde R. Miller, co-founder of the Institute of Propaganda Analysis, appearing as a government witness before the railroad hearing being conducted here by the President's Committee on Fair Employment.

The broadcasts, Miller said, are "immediately effective and dangerous to our all out war effort."

Expected to support Miller's contention when they appear as government witnesses are Otto Tolifcus, New York Tokyo correspondent for a long number of years and William L. Shirer, Columbia Broadcasting System's radio news analysist in Europe. Both experts were slated to testify Saturday morning.

How racial antagonism between Southern white seamen and Negro sailors has disappeared at sea "because torpedoes aren't marked 'for white only' was told the committee Thursday by Frederick N. Myers, vice president of the National Maritime Union, CIO, called as a rebuttal witness to the opening statement of Sidney Alderman, counsel for the Southern Railway and spokesman for the 22 carriers involved in the hearing.

Alderman in his opening argument had pleaded that to decree changes in the present labor customes of the South would disrupt vital war rail services, cause racial friction and endanger lives of the Negro workers.

Myers, who was called to the stand by Bartley C. Crum, FEPC chief counsel, testified that the Martime Union had never recognized the principle of segregating white and colored seamen. Negroes and white seamen work together at the same tasks, are paid alike, eat at the same table and live in the same forecastle, he said.

SEP 16 1943

"We have had no race trouble," Myers told the FEPC members. "White seamen board ships at Southern ports, and accept and are accepted by their Negro shipmates without rancor of friction. The flow of vital war goods has been expedited, rather than slowed by abolition of segregation at sea," he concluded.

1,713 on File November 1st, Chairman Reveals

NOV 30 1943

Atlanta, Georgia

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (SNS) — Although 232 cases of alleged employment discrimination were closed during the month of October, 1943, the active case load of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice reached a peak figure of 1,713 cases on November 1, Malcolm Ross, Chairman, announced Saturday.

NOV 30 1943

Of the 232 cases closed in October, 62 cases, or 28 percent, were adjusted satisfactorily, Mr. Ross reported. Thirty-one per cent of the cases were dismissed on merits, 25 percent for insufficient evidence, 6 percent for lack of jurisdiction, and 10 percent of the cases were withdrawn by the complainants.

NOV 30 1943

Mr. Ross said there had been a 30 percent increase in the active case load since September 1, 1943, and credited this rise to the establishment of various regional offices of the Committee. Prior to this reorganization, all of the Committee's cases were processed by a small staff in the national FEPC office in Washington, D. C. Nine regional and two sub-regional offices are now functioning in New York City, Philadelphia, Washington, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Atlanta, Kansas City, Dallas, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

NOV 30 1943

The Fifth Region, embracing Cleveland and Detroit, had the largest case load—366 active cases on November 1, Mr. Ross declared. The Third Region (Philadelphia) was next with 317 cases, while the Sixth Region (Chicago) was third with 220 cases. The New York office listed 136 cases; Atlanta, 126; Kansas City, 95; and Dallas, 76. Approximately 25 percent of the 1,713 cases listed on November 1 had been pending for more than six months, the Chairman stated.

NOV 30

Cases are not docketed by the FEPC unless acomplaint alleges discrimination in employment because of race, creed, color or national origin.

Retiring Head Of FEPC Make Plea For Negro In Unions

BOSTON, Oct. 14 (ANP)—Addressing the 63rd annual convention of the AFL, Msgr. Francis J. Hass, resigning head of the FEPC, pleaded with delegates to grant Negroes full, union status along with other minority groups. The Catholic priest, who was recently named bishop of the archidocese at Grand Rapids Mich., issued this warning:

"Just as there once existed unhealthy agreements between antilabor employers and anti-labor workers, so there exists a danger that some labor organizations and some employers may combine to restrict the rights of minority group members. Put yourself in the place of such a member of a minority group. Be he Negro or Mexican, Jew or creedist, he wants his full stature as an American working man, and if he finds organized management and organized labor leagued against him he will in some form revolt."

"Would you have it otherwise?" asked Msgr. Hass. "Would you have the spirit that founded the American Federation of Labor stamped out among great masses of your fellow-Americans? Must one 10th of the people of our country be set aside as a special class, with special loyalties that are not the loyalties of the rest of us?"

The AFRO announced the FEPC order in last week's editions. The official order consumes some 163 pages.

Eleven companies and four unions were cited specifically for instances in which they had with wilful intent discriminated against colored workers, reducing the number hired, refusing to promote them or upgrade them.

The Railroad Retirement Board was included in almost every summary, without exception, and all companies and unions are required to report to the FEPC within thirty days what steps have been taken to comply with the directives.

These organizations are also required to give formal notice to employment agencies, public or private, including the Railroad Retirement Board, through which the companies recruit workers or trainees that will accept needed workers in all classifications without regard to their race, creed, color, or national origin.

Father Haas' Labor Day Message

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.

FEPC Head Urges Neighborliness Toward Minority Group Works

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9 — In a message to all American labor, released this week, Father Francis J. Haas, chairman of FEPC, urged the Labor movement to take responsibility of "developing — in ever-increasing strength — the spirit of neighborliness toward minority group workers."

"We are all workers. We must all be neighbors, working together for victory," he said.

"Out of such a spirit will come increased prestige for labor itself," he declared. "Through complete recognition of the elemental rights of all workers, the Labor movement can and will attain that status as a democratic brotherhood of man, a united movement of the millions of workers pledged to the sacred principles on which this great nation was founded."

The statement paid tribute to "American Labor . . . for holding off the Axis gangsters," and declared that FEPC "has accepted the responsibility to bring about the fullest utilization of all workers in the war effort and to assure every worker to make his fullest contribution thereto." It urged the Labor movement to share this responsibility.

FEPC SHOWS UP VICIOUS PRACTICE

DEC 2 - 1943

Up until a few years ago, practically all firemen on southern railroads were Negroes. Some were used as brakemen and flagmen. This was considered the dirty work. But as wages increased in these lines and the southern white laborer began to see that Negroes were holding jobs they wanted for themselves, they decided to eliminate them from the service with the consent and approbation of the Railway Labor board. The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen so manipulated things that that union became the bargaining agency for all employees in that service and instituted a closed shop. They further manipulated a contract providing that Negroes could not become engineers and followed this up with a further provision that no fireman should be hired whom the contract said could not be promoted to an engineer.

As a result of this trickery and chancenery the number of Negro firemen has become almost extinct.

Recently, the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee held a hearing to which was summoned the southern railroads and the unions. The testimony at the hearing fully substantiated the charges. And upon this evidence the committee found that the agreement is designed for no other purpose than to cut down the employment of Negroes as firemen and to increase the hiring of whites in those positions. The agreement seeks to accomplish this, through setting definite percentages for white and Negro firemen; through limiting firemen's jobs to "promotable men," and then by excluding all Negro workers from promotion.

The committee told the unions and the railroads to "adjust the employment policy and practices so that all needed workers shall be hired and all company employees shall be promoted or upgraded without regard to race, creed, color or national origin,' as set forth in Executive Order 9346.

Regarding the southeastern agreement, the FEPC directed "that any agreement entered into between the railroads and the brotherhood, in lieu of the denounced one, "shall contain no provisions or terms discriminating against any employee or applicant for employment because of race, creed, color or national origin."

The committee could find no justification in the argument of the carriers that public resentment would prohibit advancement of Negroes in certain jobs, or their hire for that matter.

Of course, all of these things have been publizised by the Negro Press for years; they have been denounced by the NAACP and other organizations with little notice because the unions and the railway companies have been sufficiently influential to prevent it.

Now that this double cross by the unions, railway companies and the Railway Labor Board has been fully exposed by the FEPC, it is hoped that the practice ceases and that the proper authorities keep watch to see that the order is complied with.

FEPC Probes Into Maritime Industry Bias

Argus
St. Louis, Mo.

DEC 31 1943

NEW YORK, Dec. 27—The National Maritime Union today hailed the newly launched investigation by the FEPC into charges of Negro discrimination in the maritime industry.

The Union expressed its views in a letter to Malcolm Ross, FEPC Director, sent by Ferdinand C. Smith, National Secretary of the NMU, who has just returned from a five-week speaking tour of the West Coast in the interests of promoting greater racial unity. Smith conferred with Mayors Fletcher Bowron of Los Angeles, John Slavich of Oakland, Calif. and William Devlin of Seattle, Wash. All of them, he reported, agreed there is greater need for inter-racial unity and discussed with him at length plans to combat racial discrimination.

Smith's letter to Ross emphasized that the racial policy adopted by the NMU at its inception is a vital factor in the unity prevailing among merchant seamen on NMU ships. "This policy, he pointed out, enables us to maintain the bridge of ships delivering the men and material to all the fighting fronts."

The letter also expressed the hope of the NMU that all sections of the maritime industry, both ship owner and union, "will recognize that the greatest contribution to be made by all the defense of our country and for the speedy winning of the war depends upon a correct approach to the basic problem of Negro discrimination. This means making the fullest use of all available manpower, regardless of race color or creed."

Mr. Smith also stated that he hoped that the FEPC will call to account the railroad operators who have refused to carry out the recent FEPC order barring anti-Negro bias in employment practices.

FEPC Probes Discrimination Of Seamen

Expects to Uncover Rank Jim Crow Tactics of Ship Operators, Owners and Agents

An extensive investigation of discriminatory employment practices in the maritime industry was launched this week by the New York Regional Office of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice (FEPC), according to Edward Lawson, FEPC regional director.

The investigation will cover alleged failure of ship operators, ship owners, shipping agents, and the maritime unions to permit the free employment of qualified Negro seamen and officers on vessels carrying goods to the nation's armed forces and its allies.

The New York Regional Office already has received numerous complaints from Negro seamen who have either been refused employment outright or have been accepted only for certain departments. It has also received complaints from a number of Negro trainees of the Maritime Graduate Stations and from qualified Negro licensed officers.

In the FEPC's drive to eliminate the industry's long-standing discrimination against Negro deck hands, engine room workers, and licensed officers, and against mixed crews, the Atlantic coast regional office of the recruitment and manning division, War Shipping Administration, has agreed to cooperate, Mr. Lawson announced. Discrimination is a problem on American-owned vessels whether operated under the American flag or the flags of Pan-American nations.

ROSS NEW FEPC HEAD

F-L-A-S-H

WASHINGTON, D. C.—George M. Johnson was named deputy administrator of FEPC by Malcolm Ross, newly-appointed administrator. Johnson was formerly assistant administrator of the fair employment agency, and now moves to second in command.

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.

WASHINGTON — As announced in The Pittsburgh Courier last week, Malcolm Ross, deputy chairman of the FEPC, is now chairman, succeeding Monsignor Francis J. Haas, resigned to become bishop of Grand Rapids. Formal announcement of Ross' appointment came at the White House last Friday when President Franklin Delano Roosevelt made public an exchange of letters between himself and Father Haas and a letter written by Mr. Roosevelt to the remaining membership of the committee.

In his letter to Haas, the President said: "The increasing usefulness of the FEPC, as reorganized under your direction, has been a source of great satisfaction to me and I am sure, to all thoughtful people who know the importance and difficulty of its work. You have served your nation well in helping to remove the barriers which hold back not only people as individuals but our full power as a people."

WORK TO CONTINUE WITHOUT DELAY

Continuing, President Roosevelt declared: "I know you will be glad to learn that I am naming Malcolm Ross, your deputy chairman, as your successor. I am as anxious as you are that there be not the slightest delay in the work of the committee and also that the work begun by you may be continued by Mr. Ross, who has worked at your side."

In his letter to members of the committee, expressing regret at the resignation of Chairman Haas, the President told the committee: "There are many difficulties before us. I feel satisfied, however, that in you the country has a committee upon which it can depend for wise and determined dealings with this problem which is essential to the fulfillment of the promises of our democracy."

Urge President To Take Over Southern RR's

New York, N. Y.
Daily Worker

President Roosevelt, under his wartime powers, ought to take over and operate the 16 "Wall St. owned" Southern railroads and terminals which, last Monday, insisted on their "right" to continue to discriminate against Negroes and other minorities in defiance of a mandate by the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee.

That was the substance of statements made yesterday by Charles A. Collins, executive secretary of the Negro Labor Victory Committee, and Edward Strong, executive secretary of the National Negro Congress, on the Southern railroads.

Mr. Collins' statement in the form of a letter to the President, said:

"The Negro Labor Victory Committee feels that this situation has reached the point where a decision has to be made one way or another. We urge you as President of the United States to use your war powers to repudiate and condemn these un-American employers and to issue a final warning to them that these railroads will be taken over and operated by the government if they persist in their refusal to abide by your mandate."

Mr. Strong, for the National Negro Congress, proposed to people's and progressive labor organizations:

"1. Support of the President in all measures that may be taken by him in this matter, including immediate seizure and operation by the government of the 16 railroads defying the FEPC.

FEPC

"2. Immediate support for the campaign to bring the Marcantonio bill for a permanent FEPC upon the floor of the House.

"3. Supporting letters and telegrams by persons and organizations to President Roosevelt and to Malcolm Ross, chairman of the FEPC."

FEPC NAMES NEW MEMBERS; DICKERSON OUT: CRAMER QUITS

Call
Kansas City, Mo

JUL 4 1943

WASHINGTON—The long awaited appointment of the Fair Employment Practice committee, created by President Roosevelt's Executive Order No. 9346 (replacing 8802) has been made, it was learned this week, and Chicago's Earl B. Dickerson, one of the old FEPC's most militant members has been replaced.

Other members, with the exception of Lawrence Cramer, who started out in 1941 as the committee's executive secretary, are the same. Cramer resigned to accept a post in the army. He has been replaced by Malcolm Ross, former member of the staff of the Office of War Information.

Dickerson has been replaced by P. B. Young, conservative publisher of the Norfolk Journal and Guide. Hold-overs from the original FEPC set-up are Boris Shishkin of the AFL, John Brophy of the CIO and Milton P. Webster of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters. Its roster also includes Mrs. Sarah Southall, formerly with International Harvester and now on the War Manpower Commision and a Mr. Z'muray of the United Fruit Growers in New Orleans.

Although the naming of the new committee is not yet official, it is expected that an official announcement will be made shortly, as much criticism has been leveled at the committee because of its inactivity since President Roosevelt named Father Francis Haas as chairman.

Father Haas, apparently cognizant of the widespread dissatisfaction being expressed in many circles because the committee's hearing of several job discrimination cases have been postponed pending appointment of a new FEPC committee, announced that he was leaving this week for Detroit.

He asserted he personally would investigate complaints against some six corporations charged with refusing to abide by the President's new executive order 9346.

If these corporations continue in their refusal to outlaw discrimination, Father Haas stated, hearings will open the week of July 28 or earlier if possible.

It was also revealed that FEPC plans to set up 12 regional offices in the 12 districts now laid out by the War Manpower Commission.

Southern Railroads Defy FEPC; Say Committee Is Without Legal Authority To Issue Any Orders

Age
New York, N. Y.

DEC 18 1943

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Sixteen Southern railways, on Monday, told the FEPC that they would not obey directives of the President's Committee to cease discrimination against Negro employees, as they had been ordered on November 24th following public hearings held here in September.

In a joint letter, the 16 railways, under fire for practices which cut down employment of Negroes as firemen and prevented the upgrading of Negroes, declared that compliance was impracticable, "and indeed impossible,' 'and stated that they did not intend to obey the FEPC which they called "wholly without constitution and legal jurisdiction and power to issue any directives, and for this reason, the said directives are without legal effect."

"It is wholly impracticable, and indeed impossible," the joint letter of the railways said," for these railroads to put into effect your committee's directives addressed against them. Any attempt on their part to comply with those directives, for instance, to promote Negroes to locomotive engineers or train conductors, would inevitably disrupt their present peaceful and cooperative relations with their employees, would antagonize the traveling and shipping public served by them, would substitute conditions of chaos for the present condition of harmony, would result in stoppages of transportation, and would most gravely and irreparably impair the whole war effort of the country."

"Manifestly," the letter continued, "such findings and directives are wholly lacking in due process of law, and for that reason are without legal effect. And, [illegible], with great respect, the undersigned railroads submit that your committee was and is wholly without constitutional and legal jurisdiction and power to make and issue the directives which it made and issued, and for this reason, the said directives are without legal effect."

Ross Speaks Out

DEC 18 1943

In reply to the railroads, Malcolm Ross, FEPC chairman, declared that the railroads by their letter, make "a public bid for disapproval of FEPC by viewing with alarm alleged pretensions of Negroes to be engineers and conductors. The plain fact is that this issue—necessarily covered because complaints were received and no rebuttal offered—is dormant and could remain so if the railroads offer justice to Negro railroad men in the classifications where reason and public policy both urge it. Certainly it is not the part of candor to seize upon the most delicate issue to avoid the many basic problems squarely placed before the railroads.

"The Southeastern Carriers Conference agreemnt, which the committee found in violation of Executive Order 9,346, was concerned with the hiring and use of Negroes as firemen and not with their promotion from firemen to engineers. The railroads now advance obligations under the Railway Labor Act as barriers to changing the discriminatory Southern Carriers' Conference Agreement.

"There is no conflict of jurisdiction here. The agreement was reached with the Brotherhoods in 1941, and by mutual agreement it can be altered or discarded.

"In asking both parties to make this move, the FEPC is not suggesting anything which cannot be done in conformity with the Railway Labor Act and the procedures adopted by the National Mediation Board. There are extremely serious Negro problems on American railroads. The FEPC did not invent them. It tried, honestly and with the war need for railroad workers in mind, to find out what is wrong and to direct remedial action."

"The FEPC," Mr. Ross continued, "is an American committee, trying to help fight an American war. Its duty is to prevent discrimination against any worker, whatever his or her race, creed, or nationality, who would be an acceptable war worker were it not for preconceived prejudice. We may not be able to wipe out discrimination over night, but where war manpower needs are at stake, we can and shall try.

DEC 18 1943

"...The FEPC believes that the granting of overdue rights to Negro railroad men, far from being a cause for disorder, could be so managed as to improve service and to raise the morale of tens of thousands of Negro Americans who have their own stake in winning the war quickly."

While no statement was made as to what future action would be taken, it was predicted that the FEPC will turn the case over to the President for enforcement of its orders. The committee itself has no police powers, but the President can take away war contracts of companies which discriminate.

Kaiser Denies Discrimination In Shipyards Under His Control

Washington Tribune
Washington, D. C.

NOV 27 1943

Testifying at public hearings in Portland, Oregon, Edgar F. Kaiser, general manager of the Henry J. Kaiser shipyard interests in the Portland-Vancouver area, told the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee on November 16, that the employment policy in shipyards under his control is not and has never been discriminatory in violation of the President's Executive Orders.

Following Kaiser's appearance on the stand and making the last speech of the public hearings. Attorney Charles Robison, representing Local 72 of the Boilermakers Union and also Tom Ray, secretary of Local 72, stated for the record that Ray is in full accord with the Presidential Orders and that any discrimination traceable to operation of the union must be blamed solely on the International organization.

The two-day hearings drew an average attendance of nearly 300 persons of both races, including numerous shipyard workers. The opening speeches of counsel were broadcast.

The hearings originated from complaints filed with the committee over a period of almost a year alleging refusal to hire Negroes in certain skills, threats of discharge and firings because of a union agreement which operated, it was alleged, in a manner discriminatory to Negro workers because of race.

Involved in the complaints were the Kaiser Company, Inc., the Oregon Shipbuilding Corporation (in which Kaiser holds an interest); the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Ship Builders and Helpers of America, AFL, Subordinate Lodges [illegible] and 401 and Auxiliary Lodge 32-A of the Boilermakers' Union.

Fight for FEPC

DEC 19 1943

New York, N. Y.

Daily Worker

47d

WHEN 16 Southern railroads defied the order of the Fair Employment Practices Committee to stop discriminating against Negro workers, they revealed that the fight for the President's order prohibiting discrimination in industry is now entering its crucial stage.

For more than a year, the powerful political forces of the Southern reaction, abetted by Republican reaction, managed to keep the execution of the Order largely in check. Now that the FEPC has broken through, they have thrown down the gauntlet of battle. They are challenging the Order in the courts, and they are trotting out the notorious Smith Investigating Committee of the House.

Involved in this struggle is execution of basic war policy. The FEPC demonstrated, with facts that cannot be contravened, that refusal of these railroads to upgrade Negro workers is responsible for a severe shortage of qualified manpower that is hampering vital transportation. The railroads' refusal to take the prescribed steps to correct this condition is, in effect, sabotage.

Just as they have refused to budge in their opposition to vital war measures for added food production and for economic stabilization, so these powerful Southern interests are fighting this phase of the war effort. And just as they have found willing allies among the defeatists and the reactionary GOP politicians in these other struggles, so can they bank on these same allies in their war on the FEPC and the President's Order.

Unfortunately, in this struggle, among those aiding the alliance of tory-GOP reaction, in which is centered all that is anti-labor and pro-fascist in the nation, are certain AFL and railroad unions that persist in their discriminatory policies.

It cannot be said that the order is, therefore, anti-union. It is precisely the opposite. It is directed at wiping out some of the ancient, suicidal policies which play into the hands of reaction.

These unions would be aiding themselves, the entire labor movement, and the entire country if they should carry out the war directive of the nation's Commander-in-Chief.

Won't Obey; Challenges Authority

DEC 18 1943

Open defiance was hurled at the FEPC this week as 16 southern railroads, in a joint letter, told the President's Committee that they would not obey the FEPC directives of November 24, forbidding racial or religious discrimination.

Claiming that the FEPC is wholly without constitutional and legal jurisdiction and power to issue the directives, the railroads said that the directives, therefore, were without legal effect.

"It is wholly impracticable, and indeed impossible for these railroads to put into effect your committe's directives addressed against them," the letter declares.

"Any attempt, for instance, to promote Negroes to locomotive engineers or train conductors would inevitably disrupt their present peaceful and cooperative relations with their employees, would antagonize the traveling and shipping public served by them, would substitute conditions of chaos for the present conditions of harmony, would result in stoppages of transportation, and would most gravely and irreparably impair the whole war effort of the country. These railroads cannot assume the responsibility for precipitating such disastrous results.'

In a prompt rejoinder, FEPC Chairman Malcolm Ross declared that "their letter now makes a bid for public disapproval of FEPC by viewing with alarm alleged pretensions of Negroes to be engineers and conductors," pointing out that the FEPC directives dealt mainly with the refusal of the railroads to employ Negroes as firemen, and pointed out that the railroad unions chose to ignore the hearings which were held before the directives were issued.

"The FEPC believes that the granting of overdue rights to Negro railroad men, far from being a cause for disorder, would be so managed as to improve service and to raise the morale of tens of thousands of Negro Americans who have their own stake in winning this war quickly."

Marcantonio Raps Rankin Defense of Southern Rails

By Adam Lapin

(Daily Worker Washington Bureau)

DEC 15 1943

47d

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14. — The embattled Fair Employment Practices Committee today aimed another major blow at Jim Crow as it ordered five West Coast shipyards and the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, AFL, to cease discrimination against Negro workers.

Marcantonio

Rep. John Rankin, encouraged by his success in defeating the soldier vote bill in the House, got up on the floor to praise the 16 southern railroads for defying FEPC.

Rankin expressed hope that the President "will clean out the bunch of crackpots known as the FEPC" as soon as he returns to Washington.

The Smith Committee of the House has already indicated that it will support legislation outlawing anti-discrimination clauses in government contracts.

Smith said today that his group is considering an investigation of the FEPC.

Influential Southern members have been urging the Smith Committee to determine whether FEPC exceeded its authority.

Rep. Robert Ramspeck, D., Ga., Democratic whip of the House, s he felt FEPC "is doing more h than good in trying to force employment of Negroes on railroads where they will be brought into contact with a public which in a large part resents their employment."

Rep. Hugh Peterson, D., Ga., a member of the Smith Committee said there had been "considerable agitation" over the FEPC order in his district, and "I'm ready to vote for an investigation."

RACE-COLOR BARRIERS

Undaunted by the attacks from the southern railroads and Rep. Rankin, the FEPC stepped in and ordered the boilermarkers to eliminate the membership practices which discriminate against workers on the basis of race or color.

In other words, the boilermakers will have to dissolve the so-called auxiliary locals which they have set up for Negro workers.

FEPC Chairman Malcolm Ross also made it plain that the companies would have to stop hiding behind the Jim Crow practices of the union locals. Ross declared that "the sincerity of the company motives in this case may be drawn in question."

FEPC held hearings in Portland and Los Angeles after it had received several hundred complaints from skilled Negro workers who had been fired or refused employment because they would not abide by the Jim Crow policies of the boilermakers.

The National Labor Relations Board has already warned the boilermakers that they may lose their exclusive bargaining rights at the Bethlehem shipyard in Alameda if they continue to bar Negroes from full membership rights.

5 SHIPYARDS

The five shipyards cited by the FEPC are the Oregon Shipbuilding Corporation, Kaiser Corporation, California Shipbuilding Corporation, Consolidated Steel Corporation and Western Pipe and Steel Corporation.

Rep. Vito Marcantonio of New York clashed with Rep. Rankin on the floor of the House on the FEPC issue. Marcantonio strongly defended FEPC.

The Southern railroads sent their letter of defiance of FEPC to all members of Congress, and are apparently counting on Congress to back them up.

Following Rankin to the floor by a few minutes, Marcantonio branded the defiance of the Southern railroads a "sneak attack" on FEPC.

Rankin promptly obtained the floor to answer Marcantonio, and launch another attack on FEPC.

When Marcantonio attempted to reply to Rankin, he was stopped by a technical point of order made by Rep. Clare Hoffman, Michigan Republican.

Turning to Hoffman, Marcantonio shouted:

"Very nice teamwork, boys."

Marcantonio sent a strong letter to Charles E. Norris, head of the Southeastern Railroad Conference, replying to the letter Norris had sent to Congressmen.

The New York Congressman said that the action of the railroads was "wholly lacking patriotism which should characterize the actions of all Americans and all American corporations in this critical war period in the life of our country."

At the same time Marcantonio asked for 30 minutes to make a full length speech on the soldier vote issue on Thursday.

LIBERTIES GROUP FLAYS RAILROADS

Characterizing the statement of the 16 southern railroads' refusal to comply with the findings and directives of the FEPC as "a frontal attack against the country's wartime anti-discrimination program," George Marshall, chairman of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, urged President Roosevelt today to do everything within his power to see that the decisions of the FEPC are enforced.

Contract Must Be Set Aside

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice has ruled that the Southeastern Conference agreement between the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen and ten railroads is a violation of Executive Order No. 9346 and must be set aside, Malcolm Ross, chairman, announced this week

The agreement, the FEPC ruled, is designed for no other purpose than to cut down the employment of Negroes as firemen and to increase the hiring of white persons in these positions.

The agreement seeks to accomplish this, the committee said, through setting definite percentages for white and Negro firemen; through limiting firemen's jobs to "probable" men, and then by excluding all Negro workers from promotion.

Involved in the Southeastern agreement are the Atlantic Coast Line Railway Company, Atlanta Joint Terminals, Central of Georgia Railway Company, Georgia Railroad, Jacksonville Terminal Company, Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company, Norfolk Southern Railroad Company, St. Louis-San Francisco Railway Company, Seaboard Air Line Railroad Company, and the Southern Railway Company.

TO REPORT WITHIN THIRTY DAYS

Notification that the agreement violates Executive Order No. 9346 and that it must be set aside has been sent to all parties involved, the chairman announced, with requests that the groups report to the committee within 30 days on steps taken to comply with the directive.

The committee has notified 12 railroads and six other unions that all discriminatory employment practices of the railroads and all policies of the unions which result in unfair treatment of workers and job applicants because of race, creed, color or national origin must be eliminated. The 30-day period for reply was set in each case.

The committee cited as unfair the policy of certain railroad unions which, it said, "discriminate against Negroes, because of race, in regard to membership . . . thus rendering it impossible for said Negro workers) to have any adequate voice or representation with respect to grievances and the negotiation of agreements affecting working conditions, employment policy, practices and opportunities." In each such instance, the union was notified that it must "cease and desist from . . . discriminatory practices affecting the employment of Negroes."

23 RAILROADS INVOLVED IN COMPLAINTS

The complaints involved 23 railroads: Atlantic Coast Line; Atlanta Joint Terminals; Baltimore and Ohio; Baltimore and Ohio Chicago Terminal; Central Railway of Georgia; Chesapeake and Ohio; Chicago and Northwestern; Georgia Railroad; Gulf, Mobile and Ohio; Illinois Central; Jacksonville Terminal; Louisiana and Arkansas; Louisville and Nashville; Missouri - Kansas-Texas; New York Central; Norfolk Southern; Norfolk and Western; St. Louis-San Francisco; Seaboard Air Line; Southern; Pennsylvania; Union Pacific, and Virginian.

VIRGINIAN REACHES SETTLEMENT

Shortly before the hearings, the Virginian Railway reached a settlement with its complainants and the charges filed with FEPC were withdrawn.

During the hearings, the Union Pacific Railroad, accused of discrimination against Mexicans, persons of Mexican descent, and Negroes because of race and national origin, announced its willingness to conform to the principles of the Executive orders and

Virginia Lawyer Heads Atlanta FEPC Office

Norfolk, Virginia

ATLANTA, Ga.—(ANP)—Headquarters for the Atlanta regional office of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice opened last Tuesday with A. Bruce Hunt, white, Roanoke, Va., lawyer, as the regional director. The 35-year-old director was born and educated in Virginia, having graduated from the University of Virginia.

The Atlanta office, Mr. Hunt revealed at his initial press conference, will investigate and correct grievances arising out of discriminatory employment practices based upon race, creed, color or national origin, and its jurisdiction will consist of war industries, labor unions and government departments and agencies in the states of Georgia, South Carolina, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee.

The initial staff of the new regional office, the first established in the south, will consist of two field examiners, whose appointment will take place in the near future.

ACTIVE CASES ON FILE

More than 120 active cases originating within this region will be completed in the Atlanta office, Mr. Hunt said. The cases had previously been handled from Washington.

The director indicated he intends to carry out the letter and spirit of the President's executive order which created FEPC in his organizational setup. It is understood that colored applicants have been interviewed concerning work with the regional office, which is located in a downtown office building.

John Hope II Named To FEPC

A Bruce Hunt, Regional Director of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, announced Wednesday the appointment of Mr. John Hope II as a Fair Practice Examiner on the Atlanta staff. Mr. Hunt stated also that he expects to announce very shortly the appointment of an additional Fair Practice Examiner.

Mr. Hope, a native of Atlanta, received his elementary school training in Atlanta public schools and graduated from Morehouse College in 1930. In 1932 he received an M. A. degree in economics from Brown University, Providence, Rhode Island, and has since worked toward a Ph.D. in economics at the University of Chicago. In his graduate work he has studied under Professors Paul H. Douglas, H. A. Millis, and George Bigge. Upon completion of his graduate work at Brown University, Mr. Hope returned to Atlanta for work in the Atlanta University system, where he has served on the economics faculties of Morehouse College, Spelman College, and Atlanta University.

Mr. Hope is the son of the late Dr. John Hope, former president of Morehouse College and later the first president of the Atlanta University system. Like his father, he has maintained an active interest in movements and organizations aiming at inter-racial understanding and good will. During the 30's he served as an advisor to the Negro Workers Council in Atlanta and has served also as advisor to many labor groups. He is a member of the National Panel of Arbitrators of the American Arbitration Association.

White Engineers and Negro Firemen Worked in Harmony Over Fifty Years Ago

Prompted by a letter sent by 16 railroads and terminal companies to the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, Malcolm Ross, the committee chairman, recently issued the following statement:

"The question of preventing Negro railroad workers from being used by the carriers at their top skills is a war problem of the first order. Evidence at the FEPC hearing showed a shortage of 850 firemen on American railroads, this at a time when trained and experienced Negro firemen were unemployed and the carriers were preferring to take on green hands, simply because there has been for years a sometimes tacit and sometimes formal agreement between the railroads and the railroad unions to decrease the number of Negro firemen and give their jobs to white workers.

"This is no question of Negroes seeking to displace whites. Negro firemen were the accepted majority for 50 years on southern railroads, until automatic stokers and Diesel-powered engines changed the dirty, heavy work into desirable jobs. Racial prejudice is not at issue here. White southern engineers have for decades had decent working relationships with Negro firemen. Sidney Alderman, counsel for the railroads at the FEPC hearings, stated: 'I certainly do not mean to contend that anything in the south would interfere with the employment of Negroes as firemen on locomotives.'

The fireman problem, and the problems of upgrading, job assignments and seniority rights of Negroes in the operating divisions and the shops were the subject of four days of FEPC hearings in September. The railroad unions chose to ignore the hearings. The carriers made a perfunctory appearance. Their letter now makes a bid for public disapproval of FEPC by viewing with alarm alleged pretensions of Negroes to be engineers and conductors. The plain fact is that this issue—necassarily covered because complaints were received and no rebuttal offered—is dormant and could remain so if the railroads offer justice to Negro railroadmen in the classifications where reason and public policy both urge it. Certainly it is not the part of candor to seize upon the most delicate issue in order to avoid the many basic problems squarely placed before the railroads.

Executive Order Is Mandatory Agencies Told

Discrimination In War Contracts Held Illegal

WASHINGTON — (ANP)— All government contracting agencies have been notified that the provisions of the executive order and the Fair Employment Practice committee are mandatory, following a letter from President Roosevelt to the attorney general on November 5.

In his authority as President of the United States and as commander in chief of the army and navy, he has ordered that there shall be no discrimination in the employment of any person in war industries or in the federal government because of race, creed, color, national origin or citizenship "This order relates to hire, promotion, tenure, terms or conditions of employment or union membership," an FEPC statement declared.

That the President is not taking any chances with the fair judgment of industrialists and personnel heads was made clear when it was reported that the non-discrimination clause has been inserted in all war contracts and sub-contracts.

The successful prosecution of the war demands the maximu use of all available workers and the democratic way [illegible] within the nation can [illegible] extended successfully [illegible] the help and support of all groups within its borders, is the President's belief.

"We cannot stand before the world as a champion of oppressed peoples unless we practice as well as preach the principles of democracy for all men," he declared in a recent letter to the National Urban league.

FEPC REOPENS NEGRO LOCOMOTIVE FIREMEN'S CASES

Age
New York, N. Y.

SEP 1 1943

The Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters Provisional Committee to organize Colored Locomotive Firemen from its national headquarters at 217 West 125th street, announced Monday that plans indicating a sweeping victory for the firemen are rapidly reaching culmination. The case involving the firemen's fight to maintain their jobs on the railroads, because white railroad brotherhoods are trying to take them away, will be held in the Nation's Capitol on September 15th-20th.

FEPC Scuttled Because Of Case

It is to be remembered that it was the sensational findings of the FEPC investigators in preparing for the original hearings that doomed the first FEPC. The suspension of the hearings shocked and aroused liberals throughout America, and they formed a coalition of organizations to save and re-establish FEPC under the leadership of A. Philip Randolph, whose March on Washington Movement had convinced President Roosevelt of the necessity of issuing Executive Order 8802. The Save FEPC Committee has been successful in getting FEPC re-estabusned, removed from the jurisdiction of Paul McNutts Manpower Commission, and with an increased budget of $540,000.00

47D

A significant factor to bear in mind is that despite the temporary set-back the firemen experienced, the basis of their case is no less pertinent today. Instead, it is felt in some circles, with qualified justification, that the case is more important today than ever before. This feeling is prevalent because of the greater number of facts which have been compiled, and because a victory for the firemen at this time when bias against Negroes and the general reactionary spirit is at its highest peak, would hail a smashing defeat of the biased Railroad Brotherhoods. It also might signal by a precedent, a turn toward a more liberal attitude in America.

Colored Firemen Terrorized

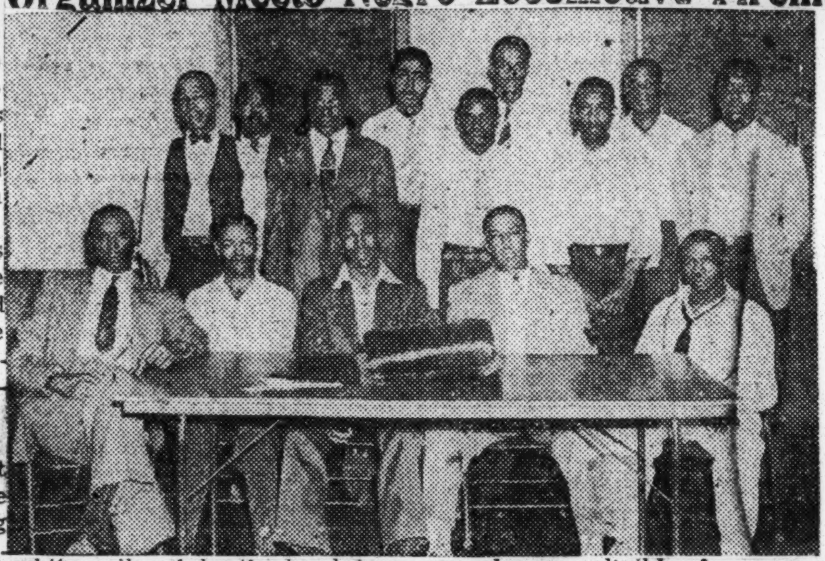
Mr. McLaurin, who is in charge of the organization of the firemen, gathered the necessary facts to substantiate and indict the biased white railroad brotherhoods.

Organizer Meets Negro Locomotive Firemen



SEP 1 1943

Hundreds of firemen from all sections of the country will be in Washington, D. C., September 12 at the Vermont Avenue Baptist Church where a mass meeting will be held to inform the public concerning the FEPC hearings which will be held September 15 to 20th.

The forces fighting the colored them jobs—to crush them. During the past decade, eight Negro firemen have been shot from their engine seats on southern railroads. Negroes have fired the trains of America for more than one hundred years. Firing an engine was usually a job counted beneath the white man's dignity. However, today because of the technical improvements which have made engineering more sanitary, plus better pay for firemen, have made whites desirous of these jobs they formerly scorned. Since World War I brought about improved economic conditions for firemen, the bitter secretive battle to remove Negroes from engines has continued. In fact, D. P. Robertson, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive, Firemen and Enginemen said that he hoped by 1927 no colored face would remain on the left side of a railroad engine's cab.

Of the 16 unions which bar Negroes in one form or other, 8 of them are railroad brotherhoods.

These unions have fought for years to bar Negroes from the railroads. Yet it was only in 1941 that the fight crystallized into the open and the national spotlight focused upon it. In that year, it was discovered the Brotherhoods had signed a non-promotable agreement with the Interstate Commerce Commission, which specified that only employees eligible for promotion would have an opportunity to operate the diesel. The inference is that since Negroes can't be promoted to engineers, they can't be transferred to diesel engines. Th agreement further stated that upon the death of a Negro fireman, a white man must fill his place and that Negroes shall not be given new jobs or new runs. As a result of this policy, the number of Negro firemen has decreased 50 per cent. to a mere 3,000.

Roosevelt Makes Himself Clear In Letter To Attorney-General On Bias Ruling

NOV 13 1943

WASHINGTON (Special)—Moving swiftly to prevent any noticeable breakdown in the operation of FEPC due to the recent ruling of Comptroller General Lindsay Warren, President Roosevelt last week asserted that his executive order requiring a "no discrimination" clause in all government contracts was mandatory and must be incorporated in all government agreements.

47D

Thus did Mr. Roosevelt clear up the confusion caused by Warren's ruling in the case of a government contract with Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. of Kansas City, which had said it would not sign a contract if it contained the "no discrimination" clause.

Oh, Yeah!

The matter was submitted to Comptroller Warren who interpreted the President's order as not being obligatory.

NOV 13 1943

In a letter to Attorney General Biddle, the Peresident wrote:

"There is no need for me to reiterate the fundamental principle underlying the promulgation of the executive order, namely, that the prosecution of the war demands that we utilize fully all available manpower and that the discrimination by war industries against persons for any reason named in the order is detrimental to the prosecution of the war and is opposed to our national democratic purposes.

"I realize the hesitancy of controller general to withhold payments on government contracts in which these provisions have not been included where there is doubt as to whether the order is mandatory. I, therefore, wish to make it perfectly clear that these provisions are mandatory and should be incorporated in all government contracts. The order should be so construed by all government contracting agencies."

In the meantime the National Council for a permanent FEPC, with A. Philip Randolph as director, continues the campaign to secure enactment of federal legislation to accomplish the end.

"Save FEPC" Killed

Following a week of intensive campaigning to secure presidential action, a city-wide "Save FEPC Rally" was set for Wednesday night at Hunter college, under the auspices of the Council Against Intolerance in America. The President's explanation made the rally impossible, and it was called off.

Anti-Discrimination Body Formed Last Year Attacked; Sees Need For New One

By ERNEST E. JOHNSON

PHILADELPHIA, (ANP). — Convening here this month for its sixth constitutional convention, the Congress of Industrial Organizations will have before it at least two important quotations which specifically and definitely affect Negroes. At least one of these will be met with a fight, possibly on the floor of the convention.

NOV 6 1943

Two Major Questions

The first of these will be the question of whether or not the CIO wants to continue the work of its National Committee to Abolish Discrimination. The other is a resolution calling for the establishment of a permanent Fair Employment Practice Committee to cope with industrial discrimination after the war.

47D

Anti-Bias Group

The anti-discrimination committee was established last November when the organization met in Boston. The delegates had deplored the manner in which Negroes were being kept from entering industry at a time when manpower was beginning to go begging.

The men appointed were James B. Carey, chairman, secretary-treasurer of the CIO; Willard S. Townsend, secretary-president of the United Transport Service Employes of America; James L. Leary, secretary-treasurer of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers; Ferdinand Smith, secretary of the National Maritime Union, and Boyd L. Wilson, executive board member of the United Steelworkers of America.

The committee was slow in getting started. In fact, until some prodding developed from the outside nothing was done. Finally attention turned to the selection of someone to do legwork and to give life to the committee. When this became evident, Harry Bridges, West Coast labor leader, came through with the offer to pay the salary of the director for one year providing he was permitted to name the person. His candidate was Revels Clayton.

MSGR. HAAS RESIGNS

NEW YORK AGE
Globe and Independent

OCT 22 1943

The resignation of Msgr. Francis J. Haas, as chairman of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, to become Bishop of Grand Rapids, comes at a time when FEPC has just reached the point where it had risen in the esteem of the general public as result of the public hearings held on railroad management and union discrimination against Negroes. The findings of the committee are under process of preparation and when they come, there is no doubt that they will scathingly denounce both management and labor for the un-American employment practices brought out in the public hearings.

47D

Nashville, Tenn.

FEPC

The resignation is all the more unfortunate at this time because it will deprive the committee of its guiding spirit just as it was beginning to click. There is no doubt that there are many able men and women fully qualified to fill the chairmanship, but it will take a new man or woman approximately the same time it took Msgr. Haas to become fully acquainted with the job in all its ramifications. Assuming that a new chairman is chosen this week, then, it would probably be not before January 1st that he would be sufficiently acquainted with his task to move effectively. Unless, of course, the new chairman were to be chosen from among the six remaining members of the committee or from the executive staff in which event the program of the committee would proceed now as planned without interruption.

OCT 22 1943

In his statement announcing his resignation, Bishop-elect Haas said in part: "In the degree that I know the importance of the work of that committee to the war effort and to our democracy, I leave it with profound regret.

"The terrible needs of war exact, that we use to the utmost the hands and the high skills which Negro citizens, Spanish-Americans, Jews and loyal men and women of foreign extractions, are offering willingly to their country's service. That is the practical side. against which no man who loves his country would knowingly erect the barriers of intolerance or of outmoded industrial habits.

"The essential rightness of the President's Executive Order against discrimination because of race, creed, color, or national origin appeared later to me when I took office as Chairman of the Committee four months ago. In that brief period the close experience with the problems of the men and women who have suffered discrimination at the hands of fellow-Americans have deepened my conviction that this practice must be purged from our national life if we are both to win this war and consolidate our life as a democratic nation thereafter.

"I have full trust in the members of the Committee. It was not known to me until very recently that it would be necessary for me to end what shall remain as one of the most satisfactory associations of my life. The work of the committee is in good hands."

"TO HELL WITH FAIR PLAY" RAILROADS

DEC 16 1943

Sixteen Southern railroads have told the FEPC that it "is wholly without constitutional and legal jurisdiction and power to issue the directives, and for this reason the said directives are without legal effect, and therefore they were wasting their breath when the committee issued a directive forbidding racial or religious discrimination in employment."

They go further in their defiance by dragging in prejudicial statements when the roads assert:

"Any attempt, for instance, to promote Negroes to locomotive engineers or train conductors would inevitably disrupt their present peaceful and co-operative relations with their employees, would antagonize the traveling and shipping public served by them, would substitute conditions of chaos for the present conditions of harmony, would result in stoppages of transportation, and would most gravely and irreparably impair the while war effort of the country."

But striking back equally forceful chairman Ross of the FEPC said, "the primary issue was the employment of Negroes as firemen." This and other problems were taken up at the FEPC hearings in September, he said, but "the railroad unions chose to ignore the hearings," and "the carriers made a perfunctory appearance. The plain fact is that this issue is dormant and could remain so if the railroads offer justice to Negro railroad men.

DEC 6 1943

For years, hundreds of Negroes worked on the railroads as firemen, brakemen and flagmen. With the combination of the unions, Railway Labor board and the railroads the Negro has been shoved out completely.

DEC 16 1943

Unfortunately, the authority under which the FEPC operates is rather weak. The railroads know it and therefore are willing to defy the committee even in a matter of ordinary fairplay to Negro labor.

It makes any thoughtful fellow smile in disgust when he reads about our high officials who are all over the world telling about the wonderful democracy of America and the type of world we are fighting for when at the same time unlimited denial of the little things in life, and even the Four Freedoms of which Messrs. Roosevelt and Churchill boast, are flouted each day.

Then too our boys in the service are offering thier lives if need be for the protection of America—yes the property of these same railroads. Many of the white boys are at a loss to know just what they are fighting for. How much more so must we find the Negro boy with a fight at his front by the enemy abroad and one at his back by the enemies at home, who after all favor the very things for which Hitler contends, wondering just what he is fighting for?

FEPC Not In Accord With Mobile Policy

Philadelphia Tribune
Philadelphia, Pa

Commenting on a bulletin circulated by the Employers' Association of Chicago on August 4, Monsignor Francis J. Haas, Chairman of the President's Committee on Fair Practice, issued the following statement Saturday.

"I am apprised that the settlement of a controversy last June at the yards of the Alabama Drydock and Shipbuilding Company, Mobile, Ala., has been interpreted to mean that the Committee approves the segregation of Negro workers from white employees as not necessarily a violation of Executive Orders under which the Fair Employment Practice Committee operates. In respect to that settlement the full membership of FEPC, meeting for the first time on July 6, 1943, unanimously passed the following resolution:

"'The Committee adopts the accomplished fact of the settlement made in Mobile to end a crisis in war production, except that the committee cannot give its approval to the complete segregation of Negroes on the four ways and does not consider that as a precedent.'"

FEPC Regional Office Opened In Atlanta; A. Bruce Hunt Made Regional Director

Age
New York, N. Y.

WASHINGTON, D. C. — A permanent regional office of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice opened last week at 525-28 Forsyth Building, Atlanta, Ga., Malcolm Ross, chairman of the Committee, announced Wednesday.

The new office, with A. Bruce Hunt as regional director, will have jurisdiction in the States of Georgia, South Carolina, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Tennessee. Mr. Hunt, with an initial staff of two field examiners, will receive, investigate, and adjust complaints of discriminatory employment practices involving war industries, labor unions and government agencies.

Following the opening of the regional office, the staff will continue to process approximately 120 active cases which have been handled in the national office of the Committee in Washington.

Director A Southerner

Mr. Hunt, who is 35 years old, was born and educated in Virginia. A graduate of the University of Virginia, he practiced law in Roanoke, Va., before his appointment to the Review Staff of the National Labor Relations Board in Washington, D. C., in 1937. Later as trial examiner and principal trial examiner for the NLRB, he presided over numerous hearings in the South. NON-DISCRIMINATION AGREEMENT IS SIGNE AFTER "MUST" ISSUE

Way Is Opened For Jobs In The Huge Telephone Company's Employment

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 9—Malcolm Ross, Chairman of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, announced today that the Southwestern Bell Telephone Company of Kansas City, Mo., has signed a Government contract for telephone services to be furnished the National War Agencies in that area. The contract contains the anti-discrimination clause required by Executive Order No. 9346.

Delays Signing

The signing of the contract was delayed when the telephone company questioned whether the insertion of anti-discrmination clause was mandatory. The matter was then referred by the Central Administrative Services, OEM, to the Comptroller General who ruled that the obligation imposed by Executive Order 9346 upon contracing agencies to insert the clause in each contract awarded by them was not a mandatory requirement, but merely a directive.

President Acts

After the Comptroller General's opinion was delivered on October 7, 1943, the President's Committee requested an interpretation of the scope and meaning of Executive Order 9346.

On November 5, President Roosevelt, in a letter to the Attorney General, declared that the anti-discrimination clause was mandatory and should be inserted in all contracts. The President wrote:

"I realize the hesitancy of the Comptroller General to withhold payment on Government contracts in which those provisions have not been included where there is doubt as to whether the Order is mandatory. I therefore wish to make it perfectly clear that these provisions are mandatory and should be incorporated in all Government contracts. FEPC Told Ford "Friendly" Policy Toward Negro Worker Is Double-Talk

DETROIT.—The charge that the Ford Motor Company has been kidding the public on the subject of its allegedly "friendly" policy towards Negro workers was handed over to the FEPC in a brief filed last week with Monsignor Francis J. Haas, FEPC chairman, Ford Local 600, CIO.

Six specific charges of violation of the "letter and spirit of Presidential Order 8802" have already been made public.

In addition, the brief states that the present policy of the Ford company in refusing to place Negro applicants, has only added to the smouldering embers of racial tension which burst into flame June 20 and 21, and which Ford spokesmen have been publicizing as the thing they most feared.

Refuses Negroes

The Ford River Rouge plant is charged in the brief with deliberately refusing to hire Negro war workers in spite of the fact that many of these workers are skilled and trained in spe[illegible] trades.

The importing of white laborers from the South instead of using Detroit's Negro workers, has only increased the serious strain on food, housing and recreational facilities, a major factor in the taut relations between the races here, the brief charges.

The alleged Ford policy of hiring Negroes because the company was "friendly" to the race, was a blind to hide the real aim of using Negro workers as a means of cleavage to split workers and keep the union out of the plant, the brief states.

Plan Boomeranged

The plan boomeranged when Negro and white union leaders began to work together in unified strength, it is charged. The proof that Negroes and whites have been working side by side in harmony, was cinched during the June riots when there was not one reported instance of violence between the two races in the plant.

Railroad Hearings Open In Washington

Philadelphia Tribune Philadelphia, Pa.

By E. Washington Rhodes and William C. Jason

SEP 18 1943

Wednesday, September 15, 1943, is a day which will loom large in the history of integrating colored workers into the economic life of America.

It is the day when the long awaited and often side-stepped issue of the employment and upgrading of colored workers in the Railroad industry will be laid before the Fair Practice Committee at a public hearing in Washington for definite action.

SEP 18 1943

No awaited decision is so all important.

It is the opportunity to make the 14th Amendment mean what it says.

It is the opportunity to translate the words of democracy into concrete acts of democracy.

It is the chance to allay the spectre of unchristian hypocrisy in inter-state commerce and as a corollary it is a challenge to all discriminatory practices in government and public utilities.

To colored Americans, Sept. 15th will go down through the years as a day to be celebrated either as Easter or else as one to be celebrated in sack-cloth and ashes—depending solely on the findings of this committee.

Peoples all over the world will get from the findings of this committee a cue as to what the lot of minority groups will be under democratic policies.

The railroads acknowledge that they are 80,000 undermanned; that they have sought employees from every corner and of every color except from the reservoir of colored labor.

Tragic as this is to the colored railroad employee, who has seen his rights and opportunities wiped away by contracts between the Railroad Brotherhoods and the companies, it is infinitely more so—it astounds the imagination to think that men would attempt to defend this position when the whole world is dependent upon the transportation system of the "arsenal of democracy."

The recent devastating wreck of a crack Pennsylvania Railroad train at Frankford and other wrecks were due to the shortage of manpower. The railroads are strained to the breaking point.

In presenting the case of discrimination against Negroes by the railroads, Bartly C. Crum, Special Counsel, stated, "In common sense, why must w look to women and prisoners of var, when willing workers are vailable? Because restrictions r decades so tied the hands Negro workmen, that neither railroads nor the unions, who s forged these bonds, can nk—even under the spur of r—of how to break them."

Mr. Crum submitted evidence prove that some of these ntractual arguments be- een the unions and the em- oyers were witnessed by an ency of the United States overnment.

The hearings, which began Sept. 15, to determine whether the present wreckless and wanton discriminatory practices of the railroads against Negro workers shall continue, call to memory that it was exactly 81 years ago, less one week, when Abraham Lincoln issued the Emancipation Proclamation as a war measure during the horrors of the Civil War.

History records that event as one of the great steps in human freedom. the FEPC now has the glorious opportunity to give a larger measure of freedom to the railroad workers of America.

George Johnson Gets FEPC

"Top" Position

AUG 14 1943

WASHINGTON.—(ANP)—Organizational structure of the Fair Employment Practice Committee has been just about agreed upon, it is learned reliably, and as matters now stand, George M. Johnson, formerly assistant secretary of the old committee, will share the secondary level of authority with Malcolm Ross.

Ross will exercise authority over the review and analysis division, and Johnson will keep an eye open on the hearings division. Field operations will be a matter of joint responsibility with Ross handling external affairs such as group and public contacts, while Johnson will concern himself with the internal functioning, primarily the business of the regional offices and cooperation with other agencies.

Will Maslow, formerly with the National Labor Relations Board, has been put actively in charge of field operations, and in all probability Harry Baron will do the leg work in review and analysis.

Ted Jones, administrative officer, will continue in that capacity and will continue to handle personnel and budgetary matters.

AUG 14 1943

Out of the six top ranking posts already filled in the committee, Johnson and Jones will be the only colored, and each will have access to the chairman.

Colorful Witnesses Tell Story Of Discrimination

Courier
—Pittsburgh, Pa.—

By JOHN P. DAVIS, Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23—In frequently broken English — but with facts which shocked the consciences of the several hundred auditors at the four-day railroad discrimination hearings of FEPC — scores of Negro witnesses told the story of jim-crowism in the railroad industry. Frank Graves, Memphis, Tenn., a retired fireman of the Southern Railroad, who worked for the company from September 1900 to March 1941, told of his vain attempt to get the president of the company, a Mr. Norris to employ his son. He indicated that, with other Negro firemen about to be retired, he had talked to various company officials urging them to employ Negroes. Finally he sent his son to apply for a job. The son came back and said, 'Dad, they told me they weren't hiring no n---rs."

OLDTIMER PLEADED FOR JOB FOR SON

Continuing his testimony Graves said he sought out Norris. He stated: "I says, Mr. Norris, it is human nature for a man to look out for his son. I know that I have established a record here as a locomotive fireman that would merit my boy a job."

Norris gave him some encouragement so Graves stated that he later spoke with another company official. He testified: "I says Mr. Sypes, the road is as full of coughs as a country dog has fleas and he kind of laughed. I says I don't see a black face. I says what is the trouble.

"He didn't make no answer and I says now I am trying to get my boy hired. I says he is six foot two inches, weighs around 190 and I says he has been two years in college.

"He looked at me and kind of smiled. I says not only him, there is Jim and Ed Horter that is going away just about the same time that I am to leave the railroads, and Emmet Watkins that is going to beat any of us to the grave, which he did. I says he laid off there in the swamps of France, he is not able to work now."

TRAINED YOUTH TURNED DOWN FLAT

But the end of Graves story was that his boy, and no other Negro boys, got the jobs vacated by these Negro firemen with decades of loyal service to the company.

In contrast to Graves was the witness, William C. Raines, Negro Army aviation cadet at the Coffee School of Aeronautics, graduate of Carnegie Technical Institute, with one and a half-year's study of law to his credit before he was drafted. Raines stated that he had worked as a waiter on the New York Central railroad during summer vacations and that when war was declared he sought to get a job as a brakeman. He said he applied at the company employment office and was "shooed away" by a girl in the office. Later, he said, he got a white friend to get an application blank, which he filled in and returned in company with white youths. They were "hired on the spot," he told the committee, but, despite the fact that he wrote the company officials calling attention to his engineering training, he was never accepted.

Through questioning of Raines, P. B. Young, Sr., committee member, brought out that Raines present studies in aviation are infinitely more technical than any tasks he could have been assigned to do as a brakeman.

NMU SPOKESMAN GIVES EXAMPLE

Brought to the stand to rebut the claims of the rairoads that employment of Negroes would disrupt wartime transportation services, Frederick N. Meyers, vice president of the National Maritime Union, declared "The NMU is particularly proud that it has succeeded in wiping out discrimination based on race in the South, where, it is so often said, 'it cannot be done'.

"Discrimination does not exist on the American flag merchant vessels for which the NMU is the collective bargaining agent. Negro and white seamen work side by side, eat together in the same messroom and are quartered in the same fo'csle, and die together on the high seas in defense of America," he declared.

Responding to the question of Bartley Crum, counsel for the FEPC, Myers declared that presence of mixed crews in the merchant marine had had a wholesome effect upon the morale of America's allies. Asked Crump: "Have you any evidence from the men on the ships of how our Allies in this war accept the policy of no discrimination?" Replied Myers: "Yes. The most outstanding case in point is the S.S. Booker T. Washington. When she sailed on her maiden voyage, Captain Mulzac tied up in Cardiff, and the Welsh miners held a big celebration, which was attended by something like 30,000 miners, who turned out to greet Captain Mulzac."

AXIS USE REPORTS FOR PROPAGANDA

The counsel for the FEPC presented two expert witnesses to indicate that reports on jim crow practices in America were being widely used by Japan and Italy to sew disunity among the United Nations allies. The witnesses were Otto Tolischus, New York Times correspondent in Berlin and Tokyo, and Clyde L. Miller, Columbia university professor. Tolischus declared that all Japanese propaganda to India, Africa and Asia was based on the proposition that the white man is oppressing the darker races. Berlin propaganda, he said, used the racial argument in a "triple barreled" attack. First, Berlin declares that America's treatment of the Negro confirms Nazi theories of Aryan superiority; second, that the evidences of jim crowism are given to show that American unity is tottering; and, finally, the propagandists reverse the field and declare that the Negro is "mongrelizing Anglo-Saxon" culture. Miller stated that Japan ceaselessly broadcasts to hundreds of millions of darker races every day the distorted statements about discrimination to prove that the United Nations claim to be fighting a war for freedom is false.

Msgr. Haas Resigns As Chairman Of FEPC To Become Bishop; Report On Railroad Public Hearings Due

OCT 9 1943

Age
New York, N. Y.—

WASHINGON, D.C.—Msgr. Francis J. Haas on Saturday, announced his resignation as chairman of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice to become Catholic Bishop of Grand Rapids.

OCT 9 1943

The Bishop-elect talked over his resignation with President Roosevelt on Friday, but is understood to have made no recommendation as to a successor, saying that such an announcement should come from the President.

In announcig his resignation, Msgr. Haas said:

"The terrible needs of war exact that we use the utmost the hands and the high skills which Negro citizens, Spanish-Americans, Jews and loyal men and women of foreign extraction are offering willingly to their country's service.

"The essential rightness of the President's Executive Order against discrimination because of race, creed, color or national origin appeared clear to me when I took office as chairman of the committee four months ago.

OCT 9 1943

"In that brief period, the close experience with the problems of the men and women who have suffered discrimination at the hands of fellow-Americans have deepened my conviction that this practice must be purged from our national life if we are both to win this war and consolidate our life as a democratic nation thereafter."

Msgr. Hass said he would not leave his office for some days and that the committee was losing no time in acting on charges against railroads and railway unions which just three weeks ago were the object of a public hearing on charges of discrimination.

More than 75 per cent of the complaints filed with the Committee during the month of September, involved alleged discrimination against Negroes in war employment. A marked increase in the total number of complaints received during the month, may be accounted for by the fact that seven regional FEPC offices have recently been opened.

All complaints are being processed by the Committee as rapidly as possible. Those which appear to merit investigation and over which the Committee has jurisdiction are docketed. The others are either rejected or held pending receipt of sufficient further proof to warrant [illegible]. Only valid complaints [illegible] discriminatory employment practices based on race, creed, color, national origin or alienage against employers over which FEPC has juridiction, are accepted for investigation by the Committee.

Utilities Commission Refuses Request of President's FEPC

Washington Tribune
Washington, D. C.

NOV 20 1943

The Public Utilities Commission has granted the request of the Capital Transit Company, permitting it to convert thirty-two of its two-man cars to one-man operation.

The request of the Capital Transit Company had been held up by the P.U.C. following an appeal by former chairman of the Fair Employment Practices Commission, Father Francis J. Haas.

It was the contention of Father Haas that the conversion was unnecessary as long as there was available manpower to operate the two-man cars. The F.E.P.C. head warned the P.U.C. that the motive of the Capital Transit Company was to evade its directive of employing Negroes as operators, conductors, and platform men.

As long as Father Haas remained chairman of the F.E.P.C. the Public Utilities Commission refused to grant the request of the transit company. Father Haas, however, recently resigned to assume his duties as Bishop of the diocese of Michigan. Less than ten days after his resignation, the P.U.C. granted the request of the transit company.

The only member of the utilities commission to agree with Father Haas was Gregory Hankin, liberal member, who said he had reached the conclusion that the transit company had not made full use of available manpower. He gave in to the transit company's reguest, however, defending it on the ground that he felt that the conversion would make available more street cars than to deny the application would.

NOV 20 1943

The Capital Transit Company, several weeks ago, promised the F.E.P.C. that [illegible] would comply with its directive. The F.E.P.C. said it had a working understanding with the United States Employment Service that would deny work to any employee who quit his job because of the hiring of Negroes.

The transit company, however, has yet to hire any Negroes, either as platform men, conductors, or operators, in defiance of the F.E.P.C. directive.

FEPC Rules Agreement Between Railroads And Brotherhood Of Locomotive Firemen A Violation

DEC 4 - 1943

Age
New York, N. Y.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice has ruled that the Southeastern Conference agreement between the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen and ten railroads is a violation of Executive Order No. 9346 and must be set aside, Malcolm Ross, chairman, announced Wednesday, December 1.

DEC 4 - 1943

The agreement, the FEPC ruled, is designed for no other purpose than to cut down the employment of Negroes as firemen and to increase the hiring of white persons in these positions. The agreement seeks to accomplish this, Mr. Ross said, through setting definite percentages for white and Negro firemen; through limiting firemen's jobs to "promotable" men, and then by excluding all Negro workers for promotion.

Involved in the Southeastern agreement are the Atlantic Coast Line Railway Company, Atlanta Joint Terminals, Central of Georgia Railway Company, Georgia Railroad, Jacksonville Terminal Company, Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, Norfolk Southern Railroad Company, St. Louis-San Francisco Railway Company, Seaboard Air Line Railroad Company, and the Southern Railway Company.

30 Days To Comply

Notification that the agreement violates Executive Order No. 9346, and that it must be set aside, has been sent to all parties involved, the chairman announced, with requests that the groups report to the Committee within 30 days on steps taken to comply with the directive.

The Committee has notified 12 other railroads, and six other unions that all discriminatory employment practices of the railroads and all policies of the unions which result in unfair treatment of workers and applicants because of race, creed, color or national origin must be eliminated. The 30-day period for reply was set in each case.

DEC 4 - 1943

The committee cited as unfair, the policy of certain railroad unions which, it said, "discriminates against Negroes, because of race, in regard to membership...thus rendering it impossible (for said Negro workers) to have any adequate voice of representation with respect to grievances and the negotiation of agreements affecting working conditions, employment policy, practices and opportunities." In each such instance, the union was notified that it must "cease and desist from...discriminatory practices affecting the employment of Negroes."

DEC 4 - 1943

The complaints involved 23 railroads: Atlantic Coast Line; Atlanta Joint Terminals; Baltimore and Ohio Chicago Terminal; Central Railway of Georgia; Chesapeake and Ohio; Chicago and Northwestern; Georgia Railroad; Gulf, Mobile and Ohio; Illinois Central; Jacksonville Terminal; Louisiana and Arkansas; Louisville and Nashville; Missouri-Kansas-Texas; New York Central; Norfolk Southern; Norfolk and Western; St. Louis-San Francisco; Seaboard Air Line; Southern; Pennsylvania; Union Pacific, and Virginian.

FEPC Railroad Hearings End In Washington; Only One Of 14 Labor Unions Present At Hearing; Railroad Represented But Silent

AWSHINGTON, D.C.—Details of discriminatory practices by which some railroads and unions have been successfully eliminating Negroes and other minority groups from employment in all but the lowest categories, were unfolded before the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice (FEPC) in a four-day hearing which ended Saturday, September 18. The sessions were held in the Interdepartmental Auditorium, 14th street and Constitution avenue, N.W.

SEP 25 1943

The full Committee h[illegible] evidence by some witnesses, including experts on propaganda who testified on the use made by the Axis nations of reported instances of discrimination against minority groups in the United States.

Following the conclusion of the hearings Saturday, Msgr. Francis J. Haas, Chairman, announced that the Committee would study the complete record before issuing its findings and directives.

Of the 22 railroads and 14 unions cited in the FEPC complaints, 18 railroad companies were represented by counsel at the opening session. Representatives of the other four made their appearance later.

Only one of the unions, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, put in an official appearance, although seven of them notified the Committee they would be represented. The Engineers' group, on Saturday, put on the record a statement that they would make a deposition in the matter within four days.

SEP 25 1943

The Union Pacific R[illegible] of which William Jeffers, former rubber stockpile administrator for the government, is head, officially notified the Committee on Friday of its willingness to conform to the principles of the President's Executivt Orders 8802 and 9346 under which the FEPC functions. F. E. Baukhages, counsel for Union Pacific, issued a statement that the co[illegible] immediate steps to investigate the specific charges made against it.

On Saturday, the New York Central indicated a willingness to cooperate in seeking adjustment of the complaints against it when F. L. Wheeler, general attorney for the company, issued the following statement to the Committee: "The New York Central is willing to sit down any time with members of the Committee to discuss this matter to see if there is some solution."

The other companies represented at the hearing, all of whom had previously filed detailed answers to the separate charges, declined to offer any further evidence at the hearings. In a statement read by Sidney S. Alderman, representing the Southern Railway Company, and to which, he said, all the companies present except the Union Pacific and the Norfolk and Western had subscribed, it was declared:

Railroads Go On Record

"....the railroads involved wish to make it clear to the committee that they recognize and view with sympathy the difficulties of the problem before it, and that they have no wish to place obstacles in its way. In their replies to the summaries of complaint being considered by the committee, these railroads have given you the essential facts...

"....As to the general problem before you—a problem which all the wisdom and statesmanship of America have not yet been able fully to solve—it is the view of the railroads that the solution lies in a gradual and moderate process of education, base on mutual goodwill and respect. The solution will not be advanced, but rather, will be retarded and made more difficult, by too abrupt an attempt to change by governmental decree, long standing practice, rooted in the customs of the people."

An audience of over 400 attended daily, listened in silence as Msgr. Francis J. Hass, FEPC Chairman, officially opened the proceedings Wednesday morning with a short prepared statement in which he declared that the Committee under the authority of Executive Order 9346, had "received complaints.... and directed investigation" on them and would seek to make a "finding of fact."

Special Counsel Bartley C. Crum, in his opening statement, asserted that the proceeding "is completely objective in intent" and that the aim is to "permit the hard facts to speak for themselves."

First witness Wednesday was Dr. Herbert R. Northrup, former member of the Departmnets of Economics at Harvard and Cornell Universities, now on the staff of the National War Labor Board. Northrup declared the Negro railroad worker's plight is both bad and unusual, He criticized the labor unions which either barred the Negro or imposed unfair restrictions on him through their agreements with management. He assailed the railroad managements who, he said, "have used Negroes to weaken unions," and the Railway Labor Act and its administration which, he said, had maintained labor peace on the railroads but only "by tolerating, if not encouraging, discrimination against Negroes and other minority groups." He also criticized the National Railroad Adjustment Board, asserting that it "has denied aggrieved Negroes a hearing, let alone justice."

Propaganda For Axis

Testimony on how Axis propagandists make excellent use of the existence of discrimination in this country was offered on Thursday by Dr. Clyde R. Miller, Associate Professor of Education at Columbia University, New York City, and co-founder, secretary and director of the Institute for Propaganda Analysis. "Japanese and German exploitation of feelings of racial superiority and racial inferiority," said Dr. Miller, "is extraordinaily and immediately effective, dynamic and dangerous."

Otto D. Tolischus, formerly of the New York Times staff and veteran of many years experience as foreign correspondent in Berlin and Tokyo, testified Friday. He produced an official statement of the Japanese government which, he said, cited the American race question and its treatment by the United States government as major points.

Among the other witnesses who testified in detail about instances of unfair treatment of workers and the discriminatory conditions created through agreements between the railroad companies and unions were L. R. Molloy, George Sams, Henry A. Dawson, V. T. Snowdon, Arthur Lewis, Frederick M. Myers, B. W. Steele, William C. Rainer, Joseph C. Waddy, Zettler Z. Clay, A. L. Thomas, George B. Bruce, jr., Joseph Gonzales, Philip Nercado, Ray Abner, Will Whitfield, Ed Sullivan, Joe Munlin, D. H. Hinton, Rufus L. Edards, S. H. Clark, Ben Rhodes, Luther Harris, Alexander Frazier, William C. Donnell, Ed Jackson, Frank Graves and Willard Wilkins.

In addition to Mr. Crum, counsel for FEPC included Attorneys Charles A. Houston, Maceo Hubbard, Harold Stevens and Benjamin Dreyfus. Crum and Dreyfus are white.

The hearings were the first public hearings to be held by the FEPC since its reorganization under Executive Order 9346 last May. Some of the original complaints out of which the hearings were based were filed as far back as June, 1942.

Negro Editors Hear Msgr. Haas Explain FEPC's Functions

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The editors of 20 Negro newspapers, here for a series of conferencs with government officials, on Saturday heard Father Francis J. Haas, chairman of the newly re-created FEPC, and members of his staff, explain the workings of the new committee and answer questions of policy.

Meeting at the offices of the FEPC, 10th and U streets, N. W., the editors were given a graphic description of the functions of the committee and on all matters, except the Capital Transit Company case—[illegible] a sore spot with Negroe not only in the nation's capital but all over the country—were granted permission to quote whatever was said. The Capital Transit Company case was discussed "off the record" because action is still pending.

Comparing the old FEPC, which was instituted with Executive Order 8802, with the new FEPC, created by Executive Order 9346, the newspaper executives learned that very little difference exists between either committee. As a matter of fact, the new FEPC is still without the power of subpoena and can merely request the presence of witnesses, but cannot order them. The committee is empowered to make recommendations to the President.

Op[illegible] on [illegible] annual budget of $4[illegible]0, the FEPC plans twelve regional offices in the 12 regional districts presently housing WMC regional offices, and will work as an autonomous body although it recently signed an operating agreements with the WMC. It is presently in the process of negotiating agreements with the WLB and NLRB and the Maritime Commission.

At the close of the fiscal year, the FEPC will cease to receive its operating funds from the President's Emergency Fund, and will have to go to Congress next year for funds with which to operate. With the las[illegible] of Congress openly hostile to the FEPC, the feeling persists that unless some pressure is brought, the Congress next year will punish FEPC if it is too vigorous in its fight on discriminatory practices against the Negro, by failing to vote funds for its continuance, thereby signing the death knell of the committee.

Texts of the Statements on Negro Rail Employment

New York Times
New York, N. Y.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13—The texts made public today of the statement by sixteen Southern railroads to the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practiecs and the reply of Malcolm Ross, chairman of the committee, were as follows:

The statement by the railroads:

This is the joint response of those of the undersigned railroads which are parties to the Southeastern Carriers' Conference of "Washington" agreement, responding to your Summary, Findings and Directives dated Nov. 18, 1943, directed against those railroads and the Brotherhoods of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen with reference to that agreement, and is the joint and several response of all and each of the undersigned railroads to your respective Summaries, Findings and Directives of the same date directed against each of the undersigned railroads and various railway labor organizations regarding various other matters.

These railroads have no response to make to your findings and directives addressed exclusively against various railway labor organizations and dealing with their practices concerning failure to admit Negroes to their membership, or to consult them in representation of employes, etc.

These railroads are engaged, with all their energies and abilities, twenty-four hours a day and seven days a week, in carrying on the most vital business of transportation in the public service and in the prosecution of the war effort. They are contributing their part to the total war effort of the railroads of the country, which has been acclaimed as an unprecedented accomplishment by all branches of the Government and of the armed services.

The manpower situation on these railroads is not preventing their most excellent accomplishment in this regard. This accomplishment has been achieved by peaceful and harmonious relations with railway labor and by patriotic and whole-hearted cooperation between these managements, labor and the shipping and traveling public.

Responsibility Repudiated

We wish it to be clearly understood that any disruption of these peaceful and harmonious relations and of this patriotic cooperation which may result from your committee's directives is not the responsibility of these railroads.

The employment relations of these railroads are governed by collective bargaining agreements reached under the controlling procedures of the Railway Labor Act. Any change in those agreements is a matter of immediate and vital concern to our employes of various crafts and classes and to their organizations and representatives, as well as to these railroads.

Railroads are forbidden by law to interfere in any way with the self-determination or self-organization of their employes and are entirely without power to dictate to their employes, or to affect by unilateral action, any changes in such agreements. Such changes are controlled by, and can only be accomplished by, the procedures of the Railway Labor Act.

It is wholly impracticable, and indeed impossible, for these railroads to put into effect your committee's directives addressed against them. Any attempt on their part to comply with those directives, for instance, to promote Negroes to locomotive engineers or train conductors, would inevitably disrupt their present peaceful and cooperative relations with their employes, would antagonize the traveling and shipping public served by them, would substitute conditions of chaos for the present condition of harmony, would result in stoppages of transportation and would most gravely and irreparably impair the whole war effort of the country. These railroads cannot assume the responsibility for precipitating such disastrous results.

"Uurealistic" Supposition

These railroads are ready at any time to confer with their employes of various crafts and classes to ascertain whether, under the orderly and controlling procedures of the Railway Labor Act, any more generally satisfactory solutin of the racial problem of employment can be worked out by mutual agreement. However, frankness compels these railroads very respectfully to state to your committee that it is utterly unrealistic to suppose that these railroads and their employes can agree to comply with the breadth of your directives or that problems of such delicacy, controlled and governed by a special act of Congress, can be solved out-of-hand by the fiat of your committee's directives.

A number of your findings and directives against some of these railroads undertake to deal with classes and crafts of railway employes which were given no notice of your charges or hearings, which were not represented, and which were given no opportunity to be heard, and with practices concerning such classes and crafts as to which railroads were given no hearing. Manifestly, such findings and directives are wholly lacking in due process of law and for that reason are without legal effect.

And, finally, with great respect the undersigned railroads submit thta your committee was and is wholly without constitutional and legal jurisdiction and power to make and issue the directives which it made and issued, and for this reason the said directives are without legal effect.

Statement by Ross

DEC 14 1943

The reply by Mr. Ross:

The question of preventing Negro railroad workers from being used by the carriers at their top skills is a war problem of the first order.

Evidence at the FEPC hearing showed a shortage of 850 firemen on American railroads, this at a time when trained and experiencedNegro firemen were unemployed and the carriers were preferring to take on green hands, simply because there has been for years a sometimes tacit and sometimes formal agreement between the railroads and the railroad unions to decrease the number of Negro firemen and give the jobs to white workers.

This is no question of Negroes seeking to displace whites. Negro firemen were the accepted majority for fifty years on Southern railroads, until automatic stokers and diesel-powered engines changed the dirty, heavy work into desirable jobs.

Racial prejudice is not at issue here, White Southern engineers have for decades had decent working relationships with Negro firemen. Sidney Alderman, counsel for the railroads at the FEPC hearings, stated: "I certainly do not mean to contend that anything in the South would interfere with the employment of Negroes as firemen on locomotives."

The firemen problem, and the problems of up-grading, job assignations and seniority rights of Negroes in the operating divisions and the shops were the subject of four days of FEPC hearings in September. The railroad unions chose to ignore the hearings. The carriers made a perfunctory appearance. Their letter now makes a bid for public disapproval of FSPC by viewing with alarm alleged pretensions of Negroes to be engineers and conductors.

Issue Declared Dormant

The plain fact is that this issue—necessarily covered because complaints were received and no rebuttal offered—is dormant and could remain so if the railroads offer justice to Negro railroad men in the classifications where reason and public police both urge it. Certainly it is not the part of candor to seize upon the most delicate issue in order to avoid the many basic problems squarely placed before the railroads.

The Southeastern Carriers Conference agreement, which the committee found in violation of Executive Order 9346, was concerned with the hiring and use of Negroes as firemen and not with their promotion from firemen to engineers. The railroads now advance obligations under the Railway Labor Act as barriers to changing the discriminatory Southeastern Carriers Conference agreement.

DEC 14 1943

There is no conflict of jurisdiction here. The agreement was reached with the brotherhoods in 1941, and by mutual agreement it can be altered or discarded.

In asking both parties to make this move, the FEPC is not suggesting anything which cannot be done in conformity with the Railway Labor act and the procedures adopted b ythe National Mediation Board. There are extremely serious Negro problems on American railroads. The FEPC did not invent them. It tried, honestly and with the war need for railroad workers in mind, to find out what is wrong and to direct remedial action.

The carriers complain that its directives were too broad, branding them as "impossible and impractical." Yet no carriers' move to remedy discrimination was made until these matters were publicly examined. The chance to talk this dilemma through with FEPC has been present ever since the hearing.

Action by Four Roads Cited

Four railroads did so. The Virginia Railroad compiled and relieved itself of a complaint against it before the hearings began. The Union Pacific did so during the hearings. The Pennsylvania Railroad and the New York Central are in amicable and cooperative discussion with the FEPC looking toward solutions. The way is open for the remaining sixteen carriers.

The FEPC is an American committee, trying to help fight an American war. Its duty is to prevent discrimination against any worker, whatever his or her race, creed or nationality, who would be an acceptable war worker were it not for preconceived prejudice. We may not be able to wipe out discrimination overnight, but where war manpower needs are at stake we can and shall try.

To change bad practices now is not "impossible and impracticable." Secretary McAdoo, in 1918, equalized the pay of white and Negro firemen as "an act of simple justice." A like need for war manpower inspired that change.

The rails today are giving extraordinarily fine service to wartime America. The FEPC believes that the granting of overdue rights to Negro railroad men, far from being a cause for disorder, could be so managed as to improve service and to raise the morale of tens of thousands of Negro Americans who have their own stake in winning the war quickly.

DEC 14 1943

The committee's directives are described as being broad. They extend no further than the problem raised, not by FEPC, but by complex economic and human agencies groping through prejudice and intolerance toward a working democracy of which we need not be ashamed either at home or abroad. It will take time to raise the structure laid down by the committee blueprint. Not to start now is to acknowledge defeat.

At the same time, Chairman Francis J. Haas revealed that the appointment last week of Samuel Zemurray, member of FEPC and president of the United Fruit company, to the Office of Economic Warfare (OEW) will not interfere with his continued membership on FEPC.

The extension of the railroad hearings, it was said, had been decided upon at the request and recommendation of the committee's counsel. Notices to the railroads and unions involved would be ready next week, it was revealed also.

The planned hearings in the shipbuilding industry are based, it was admitted, on the current west coast situation where several hundred Negro workers, discharged for refusal to pay union dues into an auxiliary local setup, have carried their case to the committee.

In the Capital Transit case, the committee declared that "steps are being taken by the company which satisfy the committee that progress is being made toward compliance with the terms of the executive order. Both the company and the union have stated that they are not opposed to the hiring and upgrading of Negroes.

The statement indicated, however, that the Committee "does not feel it would serve any useful purpose" at present to disclose the nature of these "preliminary steps."

WASHINGTON, D. FEPC CHAIRMAN DENIES UNITED FRUIT GUILTY

Daily World
Atlanta, Georgia

SEP 3 1943

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — Allegations that the United Fruit company had been guilty of discrimination in the employment of Negro officers on ships supplying the united nations with vital war materials were denied Saturday by Msgr. Francis J. Haas, chairman of the FEPC.

478

Evidence of discriminatory practices on the part of the company were submitted sometime ago by the New York office of the FEPC and Francis Haas revealed at his press conference Saturday that these allegations were without foundation in fact. In support of his contention as revealed by a sweeping survey of the charges, he said:

"The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices on July 13, received from its New York office a report that the United Fruit company had failed to hire qualified Negro maritime officers who had presented themselves for employment. These allegations have been investigated and have been dismissed for lack of merit.

"The report concerning the United Fruit company as presented to the New York office, asserted that the company had requested a full crew and that, when qualified Negro officers applied, the company had refused to accept them. This was found to be without foundation in fact. No request for a crew was made by the company. Investigation revealed that a suggestion was made that Negro officers, not specified as to persons or qualifications, be hired by the United Fruit company. Upon report of the full facts to responsible officers of the company, a readiness by the company to employ qualified Negro officers was expressed.

"In the course of its investigation of this case, the committee found that about 25 officers are presently serving in the merchant marine and that the total number of qualified Negro officers, including the 25 afloat, is less than 50. Due to the shortening of training time for officers from 36 to 18 months, more qualifying Negro officers are becoming available. The committee found that the United Fruit company has employed unlicensed personnel without regard to color. With respect to the unlicensed personnel, the committee has received assurances from the United Fruit Company that any qualified officer meeting the requirements of the War Shipping adminisration will be employed without regard to race, color, creed or national origin."

FEPC Gets Protest Against Bias of Ship Builder and A. F. of L. Union

NEW YORK, August 19—(ANP) The American Civil Liberties union has filed with the FEPC a document in support of the complaint by the Portland, Ore., branch of the NAACP against the Kaiser Shipbuilding company of Portland and two lodges of the Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Shipbuilders and Helpers of America, A. F. of L.

478

The NAACP complains that the Kaiser shipyard and the unions collaborated in the wrongful dismissal of more than 300 Negro workers in deliberate violation of the New Executive Order 9463. The complaint was lodged in Washington by the legal staff of the NAACP.

Discrimination was achieved, according to the complaint, by denying Negroes membership in the local unions of the Boilermakers and Shipbuilders which have a closed shop agreement with the Kaiser company. Negro workers were then faced with the alternative of joining a jim crow "auxiliary lodge", which has no real status in the brotherhood, or with discharge from their jobs.

AUG 20 1943

The auxiliary lodge is alleged to have been chartered in December, 1942, but so far, the NAACP complaint says, no officers or trustees have been elected, no meetings have been held, no charter has been issued and the auxiliary has remained without organization in face and in law.

478

The complaint, supported by the civil liberties union, asserts that the auxiliary lodge scheme was designed "to deprive Negro workmen of economic security, equal participation in collective bargaining, and the several rights, privileges and benefits which are incidents of membership" in the unions which have contracts with the Kaiser company. Membership in the lodge is limited to "colored male persons."

FEPC Probing C. and P. Policies

Afro-American
Baltimore, Md.

BALTIMORE.—The President's Fair Employment Practice Committee is now conducting an investigation of employment policies at the C. and P. Telephone Company, it was learned Monday.

A hearing on charges of race discrimination in employment was held August 28 and it is expected that some announcement on the findings will be made soon.

C. and P. refuses employment to colored women as telephone operators, although a number of the young women who applied and were turned down completed a course in telephone operating sponsored by the Total War Employment Committee.

Conference Requested

This committee, headed by Dr. J. E. T. Camper, chairman, and Calvin Douglass, executive secretary, has requested a conference with FEPC chairman, Father Francis J. Haas.

478

Malcolm Ross, FEPC representative, queried in Washington, Monday, said that the investigation of C. and P. charges is still under way.

Picketing of the C. and P. headquarters on St. Paul Street, which was halted several weeks ago after nearly five weeks, is expected to be resumed unless the conference with the FEPC chairman is satisfactory.

Young women attending graduating exercises of the telephone class voted unanimously to take this action.

JUN 5 1943

WASHINGTON (ANP)–Cornered by White House correspondents just as he left a scheduled conference with President Roosevelt last Tuesday, Msgr. Francis J. Haas, dean of social sciences at Catholic University, here, and well-known labor conciliator, admitted that he had accepted the chairmanship of the Fair Employment Pratice committee.

Owing to the fact that a new executive order is in process of release, but was not yet ready at the time, the news break was considered premature and some of the edge has been taken off the piece of information which has been breathlessly awaited since early in January.

Meanwhile, other developments in connection with the affairs of the FEPC were taking place at such a rapid pace that reporters were busy for two days scurrying about trying to tie up bits of information. Of primary importance, however, was the postponement of two hearings which the committee had scheduled, one of which was to have been held on Tuesday.

Late Monday afternoon this notice was posted on the board:

"The Committee on Fair Employment Practice was today officially advised that a new chairman had been appointed and the committee's reorganization will be effected immediately upon his assumption of the chairmanship.

The committee has therefore been requested to postpone its public hearings scheduled for Tuesday, May 18, in Washington, D. C., on the Capital Transit Company case.

"Pursuant to this request, the committee, at its meeting today postponed the Capital Transit Company hearing from Tuesday, May 18, to Wednesday, June 2. At the same time and for the same reason the committ stponed its scheduled h g in Detroit from May 24 and 25 to June 28 and 29."

Late Monday the Associated Negro Press learned that Fr. Haas was the man who had been agreed upon. The next day the President's appointment list included the name of the prelate. The two men talked for an hour beginning at 11:10 a. m., compelling former chairman of the Democratic National Committee Edward J. Flynn to wait for his turn to see the President.

Fr. Haas was then buttonholed as he left the Executive chambers, and the story was out.

The man who is to head up the committee has a lenghy record in connection with labor work. He hails from Wisconsin, where he was a champion of liberal legislation in a state which has been to the forefront long before the New Deal came upon the scene.

He was a member of the National Labor Board, predecessor to the National Labor Relations Board; member of the labor advisory board of NRA for 2 years to 1935; special commissioner of conciliation, Labor Department, since 1935, and has identified himself with leading social work and sociological societies of the country.

Fr. Haas is an ordained prie of the Jesuit order of the Catholic Church.

FEPC Tells Capital Bus Firm to End Jim Crow

Daily Worker New York, N.Y. 7-28-43

(Special to the Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, July 27.—The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice has notified the Capital Transit Company here that it expects Negroes to be employed on its lines in compliance with the President's executive order, 8802, barring discrimination.

If there is no "affirmative action" soon, it was indicated, a public hearing of the case will be ordered.

If the FEPC really goes through with its directive to Capital Transit, it will be a good indication that the committee, recently reorganized, is now equipped to meet its big responsibilities in cracking down on discrimination.

The company has long refused to employ Negroes as bus and street car operators. FEPC hearings on the complaints were scheduled, then postponed, then rescheduled in May.

The FEPC, now headed by Mgr. Francis J. Haas of Catholic University, will meet again Aug. 9. At the meeting yesterday it was indicated that if the transit company's response was unsatisfactory, recommendations, based upon the suggested public hearing, would be forwarded to the President.

Six New Members Still To Be Named By Chief

Atlanta Daily Atlanta, Ga.

May 28

WASHINGTON, — (SNS) — The old committee on Fair Employment Practice passed out of existence Friday and President Roosevelt set up another designed to insure that persons of every race, creed, color or national origin may have an opportunity ot participate in the war effort without discrimination.

MAY 29 1943

As announced earlier in the week by the Associated Negro Press, Monsignor Francis J. Haas, dean of the School of Social Science of Catholic University in Washington, will head the new agency.

ORIGINAL NLB MEMBER

The educator was a member of the original National Labor Board and has been a special conciliator for the Labor Department since 1935. The White House said he had helped to settle some 1,500 labor disputes.

An executive order setting up the new committee gives the chairman authority to appoint personnel and "power to promulgate such rules and regulations as may be appropriate or necessary to carry out the provisions of this order."

Presidential Secretary Stephen Early said the committee is authorized specifically to enforce the non-discrimination policies.

The Chief Executive decreed that hereafter all contracting agencies of the Government shall include in all contracts a provision obliging the contractor not to discriminate against any employe or job applicant because of race, creed, color or national origin, and requiring him to include a similar provision in all subcontracts.

OTHER MEMBERS TO BE NAMED

Six other members of the committee are to be named by the Chief Executive. It will receive and investigate complaints of discrimination and is empowered to conduct hearings, make findings of fact, and "take appropriate steps to obtain elimination of such discriimaniton."

Mr. Roosevelt's order said "it si the duty of all employers, including the several federal departments and agencies and all labor organizations in furtherance of this policy and of their order, to eliminate discrimination in regard to hire, tenure, terms or conditions of employment, or union membership because of race, creed, color or national arigin."

The President declared there was evidence that "available and needed workers have been barred from employment in industries engaged in war production" to the detriment of the prosecution of war, the workers' morale and national unity solely by reason of their race, creed, color or origin.

The successful conduct of the war, he added, demands the maximum employment of all available workers and "the democratic way of life within the nation can be defended successfully only with the help and support of all groups within its borders."

FEPC Invites Testimony on Navy Yard Bias

Daily Worker

New York, N. Y.

Samuel Risk, examiner for the New York office of the Fair Employment Practice Committee, at a joint meeting recently of the Brooklyn Council, National Negro Congress, and the Brooklyn Urban League, assured Negro workers who complained about discrimination in the Brooklyn Navy Yard that they would be protected from intimidation if they testified. He then proceeded to instruct them in the proper way of filing written complaints.

President over by Edward Strong, executive secretary of the National Negro Congress, and Lorenzo F. Davis, industrial secretary of the Brooklyn Urban League, the meeting was made up of representatives from such leading civic organizations as the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Central YMCA, the New York State Conference of Negro Youth, trade unions, and a large number of Negro Navy Yard workers.

Following a discussion of workers' grievances a number of complaints, embracing refusal to upgrade Negroes, segregation and unequal working conditions, were recorded.

Jobs Committee Confers With President of FEPC

Washington Tribune Washington, D. C.

A delegation from the Committee on Jobs for Negroes in Public Utilities conferred recently with Monsignor Francis J. Haas, chairman of the Committee on Fair Employment Practice. The Jobs Committee which has led the [illegible] for employment of Negro bus and street car operators with the Capital Transit Company is the first group of its kind which has been able to obtain a conference with Father Haas.

W. S. Johnson, spokesman for the delegation, pointed out to Msgr. Haas that local newspapers have carried reports of FEPC conferences with Merrill, president of the Transit Company and expressed the Committee's desire to know the exact state of progress which has been made to assure the hiring of Negro operators.

The delegation was informed that conferences between the entire FEPC membership and officials of the company and the union hav been held. The understanding which resulted from these conferences is that the Transit Company has been given a period of grace in which constructive steps to integrate Negro operators into the present ranks must be reported to the new FEPC. The length of time in which the company must take such steps has not yet been set by the Committee.

Msgr. Haas, Mr. Ross, the new executive secretary and George Johnson, assistant executive secretary, stressed to the delegation the fact that the newly- organized FEPC has many cases yet to be considered and that the Transit Company case has occupied much time in the discussions which have thus far been held by the total committee. Whether the hiring of Negro operators can be effected without the holding of public hearings depends on what the Transit Company accomplishes as a result of the meetings which have been held.

The Jobs Committee urges that qualified men continue to apply to the company for operators' jobs in order that evidence of available manpower be on hand when the period of grace is terminated.

Members of the delegation were Dr. and Mrs. Eugene C. Holmes, Miss Margaret Buffum, Miss Selma Kaslick, Ernest Harper, Miss Mayme Brown and W. S. Johnson.

AFL Urged to End Jim Crow Rules

World-Telegram

New York, N. Y.

By the Associated Press.

BOSTON, Oct. 6.—Mgr. Francis J. Haas, chairman of the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee, pleaded today with delegates to the American Federation of Labor convention to accord full union status to Negroes and other minority groups, and issued this warning:

"Just as once there existed unhealthy agreements between antilabor employees and antilabor workers, so there exists a danger that some labor organizations and some employers may combine to restrict the rights of minority group members. Put yourself in the place of such a member of a minority group. Be he Negro or Mexican, Jew or creedist, he wants his full statute as an American working man, and if he finds organized management and organized labor leagued against him he will in some form revolt."

Monsignor Haas, who is bishop-elect of Grand Rapids, Mich., said the executive order creating his committee held out to minority groups "something akin to what the Wagner Act held out to dominated workers in the year 1935."

The convention also heard talks by Capt. John R. Perry of the Seabees and Edward J. Phelan, acting director of the International Labor Office.

New FEPC Head's Proposal Seen As Discriminatory

Pittsburgh Pa. Courier

MOBILE, Ala., June 17—According to J. L. LeFlore, regional official of the Southern wing of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, consisting of all the local branches of the NAACP in four major States, apparent calm exists at the Alabama Drydock and Shipbuilding company where, two weeks ago, a near-riot resulted when white workers walked off their jobs in resentment of the upgrading of colored welders.

However, Mr. LeFlore reports general unrest among colored people and liberal organizational forces over an announced plan of Monsignor Francis Haas, new chairman of the Fair Employment Practices committee, published in the Mobile Press-Register and other dailies in this section.

TELEPHONE "TIP" HINTED

According to information, these newspapers received a long-distance "tip" from Washington, D.C., that Negroes would be upgraded only in skills necessary to do bare hull construction work and would not be employed on interior and superstructure jobs.

Immediately after hearing of the highly unsatisfactory proposal, the Southern NAACP immediately wired the FEPC for a comprehensive statement of the Haas plan. The NAACU frankly advised the FEPC that colored workers rightfully expected equitable integration of Negro workers in all fundamental training and employment capacities. It regarded as unsound, unwise and unfair, any plan which would permit emasculation of the purposes of Executive Order 8802 — and further abridgement of the rights of Negroes to employment on any and all jobs they may be qualified to hold.

FEPC, WMC Pact To Be Worked Out

Atlanta Daily World.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(A N P)—The "sphere of influence" and modus operandi" agreement being worked out between the Fair Employment Practive committee and the War Manpower commission is expected to be completed and approved sometime this week, it is learned.

According to one source, it will be substantially the same as the agreement that was concluded between the committee and the commission on Oct. 26, 1942, but which never became effective for one reason or another.

The objective of the agreement is to clearly define where each of the organizations will head in the elimination of discrimination in industry, and in securing the fullest possible utilization of manpower.

FEPC meanwhile is going ahead selecting personnel to set up its 12 regional offices. These directorships will be handed out to both Negroes and whites, but where whites are in charge, there will be a Negro associated closely with him, one source pointed out.

The respective functions of George M. Johnson and Malcolm Ross have not yet been defined either. Both have been told individually what is expected of them, it is understood, but the parceling of the work has not been done with both men present. Mgr. Francis J. Haas, committee chairman, described the two men as "assistants to the chairman," It is hoped in many quarters that this will actually be the case rather than have either of the two men in an ascendant position.

The New FEPC

Amsterdam Star-News
New York, N. Y.

President Roosevelt has finally appointed three new members to the Fair Employment Practice Committee, thereby bringing it up to full strength. Of the two original Negro members, one of them, Milton P. Webster, vice president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, was retained, but Earle B. Dickerson, of Chicago, the other one, was dropped. However, with the appointment of P. B. Young, publisher of the Norfolk Journal and Guide, the FEPC still has two Negro members.

The other new members are Miss Sara Southall, supervisor of employment and service for the International Harvester Co., and Samuel Zemurray, president of the United Fruit Co.

We hope that Fr. Francis J. Haas, new chairman of the FEPC, and his revamped committee will now get down to some real hard work and do all they can to see that fair employment practices really obtain in war industry. We also hope that this new committee does a better job than its predecessor. Meantime, we reserve our judgment about FEPC until it shows some action.

JEFFERS PLEDGES 'FAIR EMPLOYMENT'

Union Pacific Head Tells Committee That Racial Discrimination Is Against Road's Policy

NAZI PROPAGANDA CITED

Tolischus Quotes 'Triple Barreled' Attack on Treatment of Negroes Here

New York, N. Y.

By LOUIS STARK

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17—William Jeffers, president of the Union Pacific Railroad, authorized a statement to the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee today to the effect that the railroad's policy was opposed to discriminating in jobs or promotions against Mexicans or persons of Mexican parentage.

In a statement read to the committee today by F. E. Baukhages, personnel director, it was said that the complaints filed by the committees "suggested the existence of conditions not recognizable" in the carrier's employment policy, since examination of the employment roster disclosed that positions of all types are filled by persons whose names indicate Mexican birth or parentage.

While inquiry prior to the hearings made the company feel there was no basis for the allegations, disclosures at the hearings developed specific cases of alleged discrimination, the statement added.

"These we will investigate fully with a view toward the speedy correction of any situation inconsistent with the company's policy," the statement concluded.

Bartley C. Crum, chief counsel to the committee, addressing Mgr. Francis J. Haas, chairman of the committee, commented that the Union Pacific's posiion was "a notable contribution to the purposes of the President's Executive Order (creating the committee)."

Tolischus Explains Propaganda

Continuing its presentation of testimony citing 22 railroads and 15 unions on charges of discriminating against racial minorities, the committee offered further support to the allegation that Axis propaganda used such occurrences for its own purposes.

Otto D. Tolischus, former New York Times correspondent in Berlin and Tokio, summarized "The Way of the Subjects," an official document issued by the Japanese Ministry of Education which, he said, was based on the charge that the white man was exploiting and oppressing all colored races.

Therefore, said Mr. Tolischus, it was maintained in the document, that Japan, in fighting the white men, as represented by Britain and the United States, had become the champion of the colored races. That was the basis, he explained, of the slogan, "Asia for the Asiatics."

At the same time, according to Mr. Tolischus, Nazi propaganda used [illegible] incidents in this country involving the Negro in a "triple-barreled" manner, as follows:

First, alleged Negro treatment was used to support the Nazi idea of superiority and inferiority of races and it was said that Americans themselves endorsed the idea.

Second, Nazi propaganda used the Negro question as a basis for showing that there was a possible revolutionary element here which could eventually be used for German purposes.

Third, it was urged, contrary to the other two arguments, that Negro ideas and folkways had resulted in a decadent and "Negrofied" civilization which could easily be overthrown.

Negroes Cite Specific Cases

Negro employes of a group of railroads offered testimony to prove that they were discriminated against in various ways by the carriers. Although there is a shortage of firemen, they said, experienced Negro firemen, now reduced in rank, are passed over and used as teachers to young white men, preparing them to take firemen's jobs not only on mechanized stoker engines but also on Diesel engines.

To refute replies by some of the railroads that employment of Negroes as firemen would be resented by white employes one Negro witness, Edward Jackson of Meridian, Miss., said that for thirty-three years he had been a fireman on the Southern Railroad and that his treatment by his white associates was such that "I had to look in the mirror to know I was colored, for they treated me like a white man."

According to Luther Harris, Negro employe of the Atlantic Joint Terminals, if he were permitted to exercise his seniority he could hold any one of forty-one jobs, but, he added, Negroes are denied their seniority rights.

Frank Graves, 68 years old, a retired Negro fireman on the Southern Railway, told of his lengthy and unavailing efforts to ascertain from road officials and from officials of the Brotherhood of Firemen and Engineers why his 180-pound son, with two years college to his credit, and 6 feet 2 in his stocking feet, was not able to get a job as fireman to fill the place he was about to vacate upon retirement.

"Save FEPC" Cry Of New York Rally

NOV 13 1943

Journal & Guide

Norfolk, Va.

NEW YORK, N. Y.—(ANP)—A citywide "Save the FEPC" rally was scheduled for Wednesday at Hunter College Auditorium under auspices of the Council Against Intolerance in America.

The rally protests Comptroller General Lindsay Warren's ruling nullifying President Roosevelt's directive in establishing the Fair Employment Practice Committee. Unless reversed, this ruling will permit an employer to discriminate against Negroes, Jews, Catholics, and other minorities if he so chooses.

Dr. Henry A. Atkinson, co-chairman of the council, in announcing the rally said: "The FEPC has been the greatest single accomplishment toward just treatment of all Americans in our day.

"To nullify it, as would be done if the Comptroller General's decision is allowed to stand, would be a terrible blow to the war effort and to our democracy."

THE SPEAKERS

Among the distinguished speakers who will address the rally are: Francis J. McConnell, bishop of the Methodist church; Miss Fannie Hurst, novelist; Mark Starr, educational director of the I. L. G. W. U.; Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, president of the American Jewish Congress; Walter White, secretary of the NAACP; Henry Epstein, former solicitor-general of the state of New York, who resigned as consultant for the FEPC in protest against the discontinuation of the railroad hearings, will speak of the legal aspects.

James Waterman Wise, research director of the Council Against Intolerance in America, will be chairman of the rally.

Roads Defy Order Barring Discrimination

Courier-Journal

16 Southern Firms Deny Board's Power

Louisville, Ky.

DEC 14 1943

By the Associated Press.

Washington, Dec. 13.—The committee appointed by President Roosevelt to prevent discrimination against Negroes and other minority groups in war jobs was defied today by sixteen Southern railroads, which termed its orders empty of authority.

The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice disputed the railroads' contention and followed up with another and similar order, this one directing West Coast shipyard unions to end alleged discrimination against Negro shipbuilders.

The sixteen carriers wrote that they would not obey the F.E.P.C. order of November 24 (which was chiefly designed to permit promotion of Negroes to better jobs on the railroads) because, they said, the committee "is wholly without constitutional and legal jurisdiction and power to issue the directives, and for this reason the said directives are without legal effect."

Based On Executive Order.

Both the railroad and shipyard orders were issued under an executive order in which the President forbade any contractor doing business with the Government to discriminate against employes or would-be employes for racial or religious reasons.

It is wholly impractical, the railroads said in a joint letter to the F.E.P.C., to attempt to handle delicate inter-racial problems in Southern states by decree. Further, they argued that changes in relations between carriers and unions can be accomplished only under the Railway Labor Act. They spoke of "disastrous results" resulting from, for instance, the promotion of Negroes to locomotive engineers or train conductors which "would antagonize the traveling and shipping public served by them."

Would "Raise Morale."

Chairman Malcolm Ross of the F.E.P.C., replying, said the engineer-conductor idea wasn't even at issue, but that "the granting of overdue rights to Negro railroad men" aspiring to jobs like firemen or brakemen, "far from being a cause for disorder, could be so managed as to improve service" and raise Negro morale.

The roads are the Atlantic Coast Line, Atlanta Joint Terminals, Central of Georgia, Georgia Railroad, Jacksonville Terminal, Louisville & Nashville, Norfolk Southern, Frisco, Seaboard, Southern, Chesapeake and Ohio, Gulf Mobile and Ohio, Norfolk and Western, Illinois Central, Yazoo and Mississippi Valley, and Gulf and Ship Island.

The F.E.P.C. action in the shipyards case followed extensive public hearings in November on complaints of Negroes that contracts between the shipbuilders' and the union barred Negro workers from full membership. The Negroes alleged they were herded into auxiliary locals, had no voice in union affairs, and that the auxiliaries, in effect, were formed only to mulct them of dues while the white unions conspired to prevent the Negroes from earning promotion and pay increases.

Several hundred Negro shipyard workers were discharged because they refused to pay dues to the auxiliary unions. This is basis for dismissal under terms of the present contract. The union refused to participate in the hearings, the F.E.P.C. reported.

Harry Barron Leaves FEPC

WASHINGTON—(ANP)—Harry I. Barron is out at the Fair Employment Practice committee. The former chief of the compliance and analysis division, more recently renamed review and analysis, quit the post he had held since April, 1942, on Saturday.

The change does not exactly come as a surprise. Sometime ago before Lawrence W. Cramer, then secretary of the committee, had left and when it was generally known that he would be entering the army, the question arose as to who would succeed him in that position.

Since George M. Johnson, now assistant to the chairman, was Cramer's assistant, it was assumed that he would get the post. But a fear developed in certain quarters that it might have been handed to Barron. Eventually, the committee was reorganized, Malcolm Ross was brought in from the National Labor Relations board and he and Johnson were given equal rank and similar titles.

Barron, an official of the Bureau of Jewis Employment Problems in Chicago before joining GEPC, has long differed with other members of the administrative organization on questions of techniques and phases of policy. The feeling is that because of this duobts that the objectives of the committee were being adequately attained, he chose to resign. There are also those who infer that Barron suffered a diminution in influence with Cramer's exiting, and so has been a bit disgruntled about the new order of things.

No official explanation was given for the resignation.

FEPC Begins Kaiser Probe

AUG 29 1943

PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 28.—President Roosevelt's FEPC (Fair Employment Practice Committee) has begun a preliminary investigation of charges made by Negro leaders that the Henry J. Kaiser shipyards and the Boilermakers Union, AFL, in the Portland area are unfairly discriminating against Negro shipyard workers.

The FEPC heard the charges from the Rev. J. J. Clow, president of the Portland Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and Julius Rodriguez, president of the Shipyard Negro Organization for Victory.

Citizens Deplore Attack On FEPC

DEC 9 1943

Following publication of our story on the action of City Council in adopting a resolution at its Monday's session calling upon Georgia's representatives at Washington to insist upon the removal of the Atlanta office of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices because of the prospect of the "mixing of the races" in one or more office buildings here, the Atlanta Daily World sought for publication, opinions and reactions of some leading colored Atlantans.

The statements follow:

DEC 9 1943

Rev. J. C. Wright

Pastor, First Congregational Church

"The story carried in this morning's WORLD of a possible action on the part of City Council to bar a Regional office of FEPC from the city of Atlanta is a note almost as shocking to lovers of democracy, fairplay and justice as were the explosion of Japanese bombs at Pearl Harbor. Needless to say that any such effort should and probably will be opposed to the very last ditch. But at a time when America is assuming the leadership in the planning of a world that shall be composed of a family of democracies, such as a revelation of her own practice of democracy must be a problem to her friends and a source of infinite comfort to her enemies."

Rev. Amos Ryce, Jr.

Vocational Secretary, Atlanta Urban League

"The times indeed seem out of joint when a citizens' group, the calibre of that of the City Council, protests a measure as democratic in procedure as that of the FEPC. Are there those who fear that justice will be done, even in just a few places, for laborers, white and black, who have been bled, fleeced, and exploited by those who have no human interest? Is this the way Atlanta intends to lead the South NOW and in the POST-WAR world? Can Atlanta, exposed as it is to most of the influence of culture, do this?

"It is said that the races will be thrown together. That has always been true. In every large building in Atlanta, the races work together. The Negro janitor, the Negro maid, the Negro elevator operator move with freedom among white people of every level and every sex every day. Are there those who would keep every Negro out of sight but janitors, maids, and elevator operators? Does a Negro become contemptible when he is not one of these? What difference does it make?

DEC 9 1943

"Somebody is about to admit what this thing is all about. Could it be that Negroes in Atlanta must not be permitted to feel happy on jobs above the traditional categories? Some things are not expected of people who go to church."

FEPC Opens Offices In N. Y.; To Serve Seven-State Area

SEP 11 1943

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9—A permanent office of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice opened Tuesday, in the Empire State building, 350 Fifth avenue, New York City. The office is to receive and investigate complaints of discriminatory employment practices in war industry, labor unions, and government agencies serving the states of New York, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Maine, Vermont and New Hampshire.

ABLE HEAD

Edward Lawson, former executive of the National Urban league for Social Work Among Negroes and managing editor of the magazine Opportunity, has been appointed regional director in charge of the office, chairman Francis J. Haas annouced. Mr. Lawson comes to the Fair Employment Practice committee from the War Manpower Commission, where for the past year he has served as an employment specialist. For one year previously he had been head of the New York office of the Negro Employment and Training branch, War Production board.

ESTABLISHED IN 1941

The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice was established by Executive Order 8802 on June 25, 1941, at which time the President reaffirmed the policy of the United States "that there shall be no discrimination in the employment of workers in defense industries or Government because of race, creed, color or national origin," and declared, "that it is the duty of all employers and of labor organizations, in furtherance of said policy and of this order to provide for the full and equitable participation of all workers in defense industries, without regard to race, creed, color or national origin." The committee was reorganized and strengthened recently by Executive Order 9346, making it an independent war agency.

SCOPE OF JURISDICTION

Jurisdiction of FEPC covers discriminatory employment practices by a private employer engaged to any extent in war work, a government agency, a war training school, or a labor organization. Valid complaints may involve refusal to hire, refusal to train, refusal to promote, refusal to register for or refer to a war job, discrimination in wages or working conditions, or refusal to admit to union membership or to issue a work permit. Complaints must be substantiated by evidence, and only those which appear valid on the surface, and within the jurisdiction of the Committee, will be accepted for investigation and adjustment.

The seven-man Committee on Fair Employment Practice will, if necessary, hold hearings on cases which cannot be adjusted by the regional office, according to Chairman Haas.

Chairman Haas Warns Labor of Color Prejudice

OCT 2 1943

TORONTO, Canada.—Upon labor's attitude toward workers as a whole, regardless of race, creed, color or national origin, depends a large measure of its future, Monsignor Francis J. Haas, chairman of the FEPC, told the annual convention of the United Rubber Workers of America, CIO, here Tuesday night.

Monsignor Hass, referring to the post-war period, said, "If white Americans want to hold their gains, if they want to hold on to their high standards, they cannot afford to leave their flanks exposed to the competition from the unorganized and unwanted, who, in the very nature of things, will be less friendly to those who shut them out."

Must Take Stand

OCT 2 1943

The FEPC chairman went on to declare that racial tolerance is not a negative code of behaviour, but rather an affirmative issue upon which all American labor will some day be called on to make the basic decision whether or not to cut across habit of excluding as members those not belonging to the majority racial group.

Implying that in its own defense labor must forego color bars, Monsignor Haas said, "There cannot be a strong labor movement where there are pockets of the unorganized who want work;" that to be an enlightened trade unionist one must be interested in employment for all who want to work and in production for the needs of mankind.

Mobile Compromise Hits FEPC In Chi

AUG 15 1943

WASHINGTON—(ANP)—If Chicago developments are any indication, the Fair Emloyment Practice committee's famous 'Mobile compromise" is going to dog the Negro's fight for integration from here on out.

Employers in the Wind City have been told through a publication serving the Employers association of Chicago, under Labor News Brevities, that so long as FEPC has given the practice its blessings, segregation of workers is all right.

"Segregation of Negro workers from white employes IS NOT NECESSARILY A VIOLATION OF THE ANTI-DISCRIMINATION EXECUTIVE ORDER 8802, so long as the FEPC RECENTLY APPROVED SUCH A SOLUTION OF A RACIAL CONTROVERSY at the yards of the Alabama Drydock and Shipping Co., Mobile Ala., "the item reads (underscoring theirs). "An FEPC, directly responsible to the President, is empowered to investigate complaints of discrimination, conduct hearings and take any appropriate steps to obtain elimination of such discrimination."

FDR Praised On Ruling Backing FEPC

NOV 8 1943

The Council Against Intolerance in America, in a statement yesterday through its research director, James Waterman Wise, hailed President Roosevelt's reaffirming the mandatory character of his Executive Order against discrimination in war employment. The President on Saturday sent a letter to Attorney General Francis Biddle to the effect that Executive Order 9346 was mandatory for all war industries holding government contracts. This letter canceled a recent ruling by Comptroller General Lindsay Warren that the Executive Order was not mandatory.

NOV 8 1943

"A defeat for the FEPC would have constituted a major victory for Axis propaganda," Mr. Wise's statement said. "By overruling Comptroller General Lindsay Warren, who sought to nullify the FEPC the President has made it clear that equality in employment is to remain a guiding principle of government for the duration."

NOV 8 1943

In view of the President's letter to the Attorney General, Mr. Wise said, the public rally scheduled for Wednesday evening, Nov. 10, under the slogan "Save the FEPC," will not be held.

Recalcitrant Railroads

When the President returns to the White House one of the first matters to be considered as "must" should be a request of Congress to give statutory sanction to his Executive Order 9346, establishing the FEPC.

Sixteen Southern railroads have challenged his authority to create a committee to deal with discrimination in war industries on account of race, and have flatly told the FEPC where to go in connection with its recent directive to the roads to cease discrimination.

DEC 18 1943

The time has now come for the President to implement his Executive Order by providing his committee with the means of enforcing its directives. If he has no authority to delegate such power, then Congress should be asked to promptly pass the Marcantonio bill which will give FEPC the needed authority.

One thing is certain,—the President can take over these railroads and operate them in the name of the Government, just as was done in the case of a Western railroad that ignored an Executive directive, and just as was done in the case of the coal mines. Such action would not need the approval of Congress. The President already has such power.

Unless swift action is taken, we are bound to see other industries flouting the reasonable and equitable directives of the FEPC, such as the Western Electric Co. in Baltimore is doing today.

DEC 18 1943

In Baltimore, we have the spectacle of the white employees striking because the War Labor Board refused to order separate toilet facilities for white and colored workers.

At a time when white and colored men are battling and dying together for a common cause on the battle fronts, we have in this country an industry, manufacturing war products, stopping work because whites consider themselves too good to use a common toilet with Negroes.

If stoppages of work for such reasons as that are to be condoned by permitting them to go unchecked, then we might as well give up the fight for democracy or prepare ourselves for a long, drawn-out war.

Men in Congress like Rankin of Mississippi, and Hobbs of Alabama, whose daily venom is spilled in the halls of Congress, are doing much to create racial disturbances and to encourage dissension in war industries.

DEC 18 1943

They would rather see the war lost than to have it won with tools and implements of war made by Negroes working side by side with whites.

The people of this country and of the allied nations are looking to the President to act and to act swiftly and decisively upon his return. The people want to see this war end quickly, and they will not tolerate its delay by an intolerant minority who are causing its prolongation over a simple matter of whether white and colored should use a common toilet.

RAILROADS CAN'T STAND FEPC EXPOSE

The people who asked, "What's the use of an FEPC railroad hearing?" had their answer last week.

Few realized the extent to which railroads and unions conspired to exclude colored workers. The picture of hate—deliberate, cruel, bloody—impressed itself with frightening impact as the hearings proceeded.

OCT 2 1943

Wrongs like this cannot be perpetrated year after year without an awful reckoning some day. Corporations like the respected(?) and respectable(?) railroads and the venerable American Federation of Labor were proved to be the most gosh awful cads and curs.

A locomotive engineer is no more than a plane pilot or a truck driver. A conductor is no better than any other usher, doorman or ticket-taker, yet railroads and unions have taken simple jobs like these and, with the connivance of the U.S. Government itself (Interstate Commerce Commission), put a tag on them "lily white." The same was done with positions as firemen, oilers, switchmen, brakemen, and hostlers.

The railroads cannot stand this FEPC expose. To be sure, the daily press as a whole wasn't cooperative in giving the hearings publicity, but word got around. The weekly press did an excellent job, and the FEPC, as a government agency, can print and distribute reports of the testimony.

Railroads will have to yield, B. & O., Pennsy, N.Y. Central with the rest. It's shocking to find them in such bad company.

Chairman Will Remain until Decisions Are Completed; Reported P. B. Young, Sr. May Resign in a Few Weeks

OCT 9 1943

WASHINGTON—Four months after being named chairman of the new seven-member FEPC by President Roosevelt, Monsignor Francis J. Haas last Friday at the White House tendered his resignation to the President to accept the post of Bishop of Grand Rapids, Mich., to which position he was elevated by His Holiness, Pope Pius XII. He announced his resignation at a press conference here Saturday, declaring that he was leaving the FEPC "with profound regret."

At the same time it was reliably reported that P. B. Young, Sr., new industry member of the board, had been contemplating resignation because of ill health and would proably resign in a few weeks.

PUBLIC SHOCKED BY RESIGNATION

The announcement [illegible] father Haas left members of his committee and the public here stunned. Coming as it did shortly after reorganization of the committee by the President — a reorganization which had been preceded by months of inertia without a chairman— and on the heels of the first full dress public hearings on railroad discrimination held by the new committee, the resignation was wholly unexpected.

While admitting that he had discussed the FEPC problems thoroughly with President Roosevelt on Friday, Father Haas declined to indicate whether his successor had been chosen. "That announcement must come from the White House," he said. Committee members and persons on the staff of FEPC hazarded the guess that Malcolm Ross, deputy chairman, would be named by the President to the vacancy. No other names were mentioned by anyone having even the slightest familiarity with the committee.

RAPS INTOLERANCE

In a prepared statement which he presented at Saturday's press conference, Father Haas stated:

"To assume my duties as Bishop of Grand Rapids it will be necessary that I resign as chairman of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices. In the degree that I know the importance of the work of that committee to the war effort and our democracy, I leave it with profound regret.

LEAVES FEPC

OCT 9 1943

Monsignor Francis J. Haas announced, Saturday, his resignation, after but four months as chairman of President Roosevelt's Committee on Fair Employment Practice.

Father Haas abandoned the FEPC, he said, to assume new duties as bishop of Grand Rapids, to which position he has been elevated by His Holiness, Pope Pius XII.

"The terrible needs of war exact that we use to the utmost the hands and high skills which Negro citizens, Spanish-Americans, Jews and loyal men and women of foreign extraction are offering willingly to their country's service.

"That is the practical side, against which no man who loves his country would knowingly erect the barriers of intolerance or of outmoded industrial habits.

CONVINCED PRACTICE MUST BE PURGED

"The essential rightness of the President's Executive Order against discrimination because of race, creed, color or national origin appeared clear to me when I took office as chairman of the committee four months ago. In that brief period the close experience with the problem of the men and women, who have suffered discrimination at the hands of fellow-Americans, has deepened my conviction that this practice must be purged from our national life if we are both to win this war and consolidate our life as a democratic nation thereafter.

"I have full trust in the members of the committee. It was not known to me until very recently that it would be necessary for me to end what shall remain as one of the most satisfactory associations of my life. The work of the committee is in good hands."

RESIGNATION MAY EFFECT FUTURE

Few observers here doubt that Haas resignation leaves the committee in a precarious position unless a strong nationally known public figure can be found quickly to take his place. The long period of indecision through which the committee passed without a chairman, while hundreds [illegible] of discrimination backlogged in its files, the months of behind-the-scenes maneuvers paticipated in by Attoney General Francis Biddle, War Manpower Commissioner McNutt and others, the refusal of the first three or four persons selected for the post to accept it, the uncertainty which still remains as to whether the committee must go before a hostile Congress for funds—all are factors which have led many persons to despair of the enforcement of the President's executive order. Only the railroad hearings, carefully planned and competently administered gave the public a renewed feeling of confidence in the committee. The Haas resignation has created a general feeling of pessimism here.

Monsignor Haas has insisted, however, that he will remain long enough to guarantee the continuity of the committee's work and to complete the special tasks which he began.

Expressing regret at his resignation members of the committee were high in his praise. "He contributed mightily towards advancing the aims and purposes of the executive order," said Committee Member Brophy. "His leaving is a terrible loss to the committee. He showed leadership necessary at this time," said Boris Shishkin. Other members expressed similar appreciation for his work.

Racial Discrimination Issue Of Railroads Now In F. D. R.'s Lap

Birmingham, Ala.
News

Problem Is Turned Over To President [illegible] FEPC; Investigation Is Voted

WASHINGTON— (AP) —Enforcement of President Roosevelt's order against any racial discrimination in war industries was up to the president himself Tuesday.

The problem was turned over to the chief executive by the Fair Employment Practice Committee late Monday after a congressional committee moved to investigate the agency's activities.

The FEPC, set up by the president under the second war powers act, certified 14 Southeastern railroads and seven railway labor unions as violators of presidential order No. 9346 which forbids racial or religious discrimination against workers or job applicants by any firm doing any work for the U. S. government.

Operators of the railroads involved were in effect removed from the picture, however, by the president's seizure of the entire railway system in the current wage dispute. While the railroads are being operated by the secretary of war, any decision by the president on enforcement of the non-discrimination order could be carried out immediately without concurrence of the railway managements.

* * *

THE FEPC'S AUTHORITY was openly challenged [illegible] Dec. 13 when the 14 railroads [illegible] now have been certified to the president served notice on FEPC that they intended to disregard its directive designed to carry out the president's no-discrimination edict.

Three of the seven railway unions have also formally denied the FEPC has powers to enforce the president's order.

Submission of the issue to the president for further action has unusual political implications. Southern congressmen who opposed the administration soldier vote and poll tax measures have been outspokenly critical of FEPC, while Northern Negro organizations which carry considerable voting power in several industrial cities have been urging FEPC to take even stronger action to carry out the president's order.

* * *

ORGANIZED LABOR'S RIGHT to draw contracts with employers also is at issue. The seven unions cited to the president are accused by FEPC of writing clauses into operating contracts with the railroads which discriminate against the job rights of Negroes.

Malcolm Ross, FEPC chairman, declared the railroads' refusal to obey the agency's directive constituted an "open challenge to presidential authority."

He declined to comment on an investigation initiated by a special House committee headed by Rep. Smith (D., Va.), co-author of the Smith-Connally labor disputes act. Smith said the inquiry was decided upon after his committee received complaints from West Coast shipyard workers and Southern railways management that FEPC had exceeded its authority.

FEPC Is Dead, Townsend Says

CHICAGO. — "Like a beautiful swan caught in its [illegible] death-shrieking [illegible], emitting its ugly sounds, the much publicized Fair Employment Practice Committee died in a blaze of glory, pomp and testimony during the railroad hearings," Willard S. Townsend declared last week.

Continuing, Mr. Townsend, president of the Red Caps' Union, said "the burial ceremony was witnessed by an array of 'who's who in American colored leadership,' who, whether they knew it or not, were pallbearers at the funeral of another projected democratic ideal which never had an even chance in the process of its abortion."

Cites 2 Primary Jobs

Citing what he termed "the primary jobs" facing us today, Mr. Townsend said we must first join with the progressive forces of labor and elect a democratic-minded Congress in 1944.

The next, he said, [illegible] develop a nation-wide movement for State and Federal fair employment legislation creating a Federal fair employment practice board with power to enforce its decisions," State boards to have similar powers. This movement, he said, should include all of the forces with a common interest in democratic progress.

FEPC Findings In The Railroad Cases

THE President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice has made public its findings and directives in the railroad cases involved in the hearings held in Washington September 15-18.

Evidence given at the hearings revealed that there is in existence an agreement between certain Southeastern railroads and the Brotherhood of Railway Firemen and Enginemen, known as the "Southeastern Carriers Conference Agreement," entered into February 18, 1941, which has operated to eliminate Negro firemen regardless of seniority. If the agreement should stand approximately 2,400 Negro firemen will have been dropped for no other reasons than color by the time the terms of the agreement become fully effective.

The techniques employed to liquidate the Negro firemen are few and simple. Number one, while the Negro firemen are not permitted to join the union, the latter is given the right to act as the bargaining and grievance agent of the former. Number two, the agreement specifies that only "promotable" men shall be employed, and the terms of the agreement make it plain that only white men are "promotable." There are other specifications in the agreement which implement the discrimination against Negro firemen, but the two already named suffice to indicate its general character.

Journal and Guide
Norfolk, Virginia

The agreement, which the railroads entered into reluctantly, and only after great pressure was brought upon them by the union, does not concern itself with wages and hours. Its objective is solely to eliminate Negroes as firemen on railway locomotives.

The "promotable" clause was inserted, ostensibly to raise a phase of the race question, which for 50 years had not bothered the railroads. The assumption was raised that every fireman would eventually be promoted to the position of engineer or was in line for such promotion. That was, of course, within the possibilities, but the record is that since the beginning of the railroads in the Southeast Negroes had done most of the firing, without one having been promoted to the engineman's side of the cab. Although the railroads might have continued to by-pass with impunity the Negroes eligible for enginemen, the union made this unnecessary by exacting an agreement which eliminated them altogether. In this consumation the Railway Mediation Board played an important role.

The Mediation Board, be it remembered, is a government agency set up under the Railway Labor Act. The agreement worked out and signed by the representatives of the railroads, the Railway Brotherhoods and the Board stipulated:

1. Only promotable men will be employed for service as locomotive firemen or for service as helpers on other than steam power. (This eliminated colored men from diesel engined locomotives. Ed.)

2. When new runs or jobs are established in any service, only promotable firemen or helpers will be assigned to them. (This eliminated colored men eventually from other than deisel engined locomotives. Ed.)

3. When permanent vacancies occur on established runs or jobs in any service, only promotable firemen or helpers will be assigned to them. (This prevented a colored senior fireman from succeeding to a job vacated by the death or retirement of a colored senior fireman. Ed)

4. It is understood that promotable firemen or helpers on other than steam power are those who are in line for promotion under the present rules and practices to the position of locomotive engineer. (Later, the term "non-promotable fireman" was defined as meaning a colored man. Ed.)

Nine railroads that were not a party to the Southeastern Conference Agreement were before the FEPC on various complaints involving discrimination against Negroes as brakemen, switchmen, trainmen, et cetera.

In the matter of the railroads involved in the Southeastern Conference Agreement involving firemen, and the other carriers involving other types of jobs, the Committee heard testimony for four days, received the answers of the carriers through their attorneys, and after more than two months of deliberation reached its findings and issued directives to the effect that both the railroads and the unions (Railway Brotherhoods) are in violation of the President's Executive Order 9346.

The Order stipulates that—

Whereas the successful prosecution of the war demands the maximum employment of all available workers regardless of race, creed, color, or national origin; and

Whereas it is the policy of the United States to encourage full participation in the war effort by all persons in the United States regardless of race, creed, color or national origin, in the firm belief that the democratic way of life within the nation can be defended successfully only with the help of all groups within its borders; and

Whereas there is evidence that available and needed workers have been barred from employment in industries engaged in war production solely by reason of their race, creed, color or national origin, to the detriment of the prosecution of the war, the workers' morale and national unity: . . . . . .

The Committee shall formulate policies to achieve the purposes of this Order and shall make recommendations to the various Federal departments and agencies and to the President which it deems necessary and proper to make effective the provisions of this Order . . . .

The Committee shall receive and investigate complaints of discrimination forbidden by this Order. It may conduct hearings, make findings of fact and take appropriate steps to obtain elimination of such discrimination.

Brief Against Phone Unit Bias Filed With F.E.P.C.

COLUMBUS—(A N P) — Charging the refusal of the Ohio Bell Telephone company to consider the application of a serviceman's wife for employment because of her race was a direct violation of the President's Executive Order 8802, the Vanguard league last week filed an affidavit with the FEPC against the public utility.

The telephone company constantly advertises for help, said a league spokesman, yet refused to even accept an application from Mrs. Rebecca White when she applied for a job. Mrs. White's husband was inducted into the army a few days before the incident.

E. L. Keenan, director of the Ohio state war manpower commission, has been urged to appoint a Negro to the agency and has promised to do so, it was reported. The duties of the appointee would be to investigate complaints of discrimination in war plants and file affidavits with the FEPC when warranted. Such an appointment, stated a league official, would greatly stem the rising tide of employment prejudice in Ohio war plants.

Experts Testify On Axis Propaganda About R. R. Policy

Norfolk, Virginia

By LOUIS R. LAUTIER

SEP 25 1943

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Hearings on complaints of employment discrimination against colored workers involving twenty-two railroads and fourteen labor unions were ended last Saturday before the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice.

Throughout the hearings, which lasted four days, no representative of any of the labor unions involved in the proceedings put in his official appearance.

UNIONS DIDN'T APPEAR

Notice of the fact that "the unions have presented no evidence and have not appeared" was taken by Mgr. Francis J. Haas, chairman of the committee.

In bringing the four-day sessions to a close, Chairman Haas thanked the representatives of the railroads for "coming here to participate in this procedure and for the expression of their desire to arrive at a solution of the problems involved."

NEXT STEPS

"The committee now has the evidence before it and on the basis of the record will proceed to take such action as it may deem appropriate," the chairman said.

From three of the fifteen unions to which letters were addressed by the committee no replies were received, according to Bartley C. Crum, committee counsel.

These were the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and the Order of Railway Conductors, he said.

OBSERVER ON HAND

Following the announcement, inquiry was made by the chairman in response to which Thomas G. O'Brien of Boston rose and identified himself as counsel for the railroad trainmen and the locomotive engineers.

"I am present, but not as a participant," he told the chairman. "I am, shall we say, an unofficial observer."

SAY EQUAL JOB OPPORTUNITY DENIED

Complaints of dining car employees and railway repair shop workers that they are denied equality of treatment in their jobs because of their race or color were heard by the committee last Saturday as it wound up the hearings.

Testimony of the dining car employees centered on the refusal of the railroads to promote waiters to dining car stewards.

PROMOTIONS WITHHELD

Seven unions holding jurisdiction over shop craft workers were accused by witnesses of denying colored workers promotions to which seniority entitled them.

The Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, according to the testimony presented last Saturday, is the bargaining agent for dining-car employees and as by its constitution and by-laws it refuses membership to colored trainmen, it is held by them largely responsible for the policy by which they are denied employment or upgrading to the position of steward, however experienced and well qualified by long service as waiters in charge.

DINING CAR SITUATION

Not only is there no opposition to the service of food by colored dining-car employees on the part of the traveling public, but the situation in the South is even better than in the North in the matter of their employment as supervisors of dining cars and of restaurant employes, Richard K. Smith, secretary-treasurer of the joint council of Dining Car Employees, told the committee.

Equal opportunity for advancement, now denied them, is what colored dining-car waiters want, said the witness, a graduate of Northwestern University, with twelve years of experience on the Pennsylvania.

FAIRNESS ALL ASKED

"We have no complaint if we do not measure up," he said. "If we do, then we want what we have a right to expect. And some time, somehow, somewhere, we are going to get what is coming to us."

The Union Pacific Railroad, one of the twenty-two railroads charged with racial discrimination against colored workers, last Friday assured the committee of speedy correction of any specific cases "inconsistent with the company's policy."

William M. Jeffers, Union Pacific president and former rubber czar, wrote Mr. Crum that the company would appear to answer charges, but was "confident" an examination of complaints would reveal they "are not justified."

ONLY DENIAL MADE

The Union Pacific was the only railroad involved in the hearings to deny that it discriminates against racial minorities in employment.

Philip Macado of Cheyenne, Wyoming, last Thursday told the committee that a representative of the American Federation of Labor Machinists Union had refused to allow his promotion from laborer to helper "because you are a Mexican."

MEXICAN REFUSED JOB

"I told him I was born and raised here," said the witness in flawless English. "I told him this was the only country I knew. I said he would have to prove I was not an American."

The union official, he said, then replied, "Well, your folks are Mexicans."

"Yes, but they are not asking for a job," the witness said he replied, explaining that the incident occurred on the Union Pacific Railroad.

USED AS JAP PROPAGANDA

Otto D. Tolischus, New York newspaper man and former correspondent in Berlin and Tokyo, testified that Japan's propaganda program is based on the racial argument.

Charles H. Houston, associate committee counsel, read into the record a reply to a complaint alleging discrimination against colored workers by the Norfolk and Western Railroad.

The railroad explained that under its own rules and under an agreement made in 1941 with the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, the railroad was not hiring colored firemen.

ADMITS RACIAL BARRIERS

The union agreement, the reply declared, was made by the firemen's union with the Southeastern Carriers' Conference and the limitations imposed on colored workers were "understood to be racial."

The definition of "non-promotable firemen," in the agreement, the letter said, "means Negroes."

The company, the letter continued, has not hired colored men for use as firemen since 1903 and had never promoted firemen to be locomotive engineers for racial reasons, "as this complaint surmises."

N. & W. EXPLANATION

In explanation of this refusal the railroad said that locomotive engineers give orders to firemen and other crew members.

"The sentiment of the employees of this company and of the public in the territory in which it operates condemns the placing of Negroes in positions of command over white men," the letter added.

"That sentiment controls the management."

RAMSPECK RAPS FEPC'S NEGRO EQUALITY PLAN

Georgian Says Government Can't End Prejudices Born Of Centuries

DEC 30 1943

Birmingham Post

Birmingham, Alabama

WASHINGTON, Dec. 30. — Rep. Robert Ramspeck (D., Ga.), today had questioned the wisdom of the Administration's attempt through the President's Fair Employment Practice committee to change existing the discrimination against Negro workers "overnight."

Ramspeck, Democratic whip, told newsmen that neither the Government nor anyone else could tear down in a brief period of time the "prejudices and discriminations" that have existed for centuries.

"And remember, too, there are still economic and educational inequalities among the white races," Ramspeck added. "We cannot change the situation overnight."

Seeks Steady Progress

President Roosevelt at his news conference yesterday said that in the fight against racial discrimination the objective should be steady progress, because he did not think the millennium could be brought about right away.

In the meantime, the FEPC was involved on two fronts:

1—President Roosevelt has before him the FEPC [illegible] case of 16 railroads and seven unions which defied the committee's edict that they cease discriminations against Negro workers. The railways and unions have claimed the FEPC was without authority to issue the order. The President said he probable would appoint a committee to get Southern and Northern labor together with the railroads to go over the whole problem.

2—The special House committee to investigate executive agencies is studying records in the railroad case and another involving auxiliaries maintained for Negro shipyard workers on the West Coast by the Boilermakers, Iron Shipbuilders and Helpers Union (A. F. of L.) to determine whether FEPC orders in the two cases are an excess use of power.

Public Hearings Planned

Chairman Howard W. Smith (D., Va.), of the committee said that public hearing of complaints filed with him in the two cases probably would open shortly after the congressional recess ends Jan. 10.

Meanwhile, Lieut. Gen. Brehon B. Somervell, Federal operator of the railroads, said that the Army does not intend to concern itself with discrimination by the railways as it is interested solely in operating the lines.

The FEPC has no power of enforcement against employers and unions, and must rely on other elements of the executive branch of the Government to enforce its orders.

DEC 29 1943

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28—(AP)—Hope that the railroads can be turned back to private operation sono was expressed by President Roosevelt Tuesday as the Army, on his orders, extended its control to all major carriers and prepared to use troops to run trains, if necessary.

Mr. Roosevelt was not specific at his press-radio conference, however, as to the conditions under which government operation would be surrendered.

He was asked if the carriers would be restored to private management if the three operating brotherhoods which had not done so agreed to arbitration of their wage dispute. The question was too "iffy," he replied.

"Will the government keep the railroads for the duration of the emergency?" another reporter asked.

Mr. Roosevelt said yes, but when asked whether the emergency meant the duration of the war or the strike threat, he replied that he wanted to turn the carriers back to private operation as soon as he could.

Strike Now Unlawful

In response to another question, he said a rail strike would come under the Connally-Smith act. This law makes it a criminal offense to conspire to strike, or encourage a strike, in a government-operated war facility.

Mr. Roosevelt also told the conference he hoped to appoint a committee to get labor and railroad management together on the question of an order from his Fair Employment Practices Committee. The committee ordered that advancements among railroad personnel be without discrimination as to race.

Seventeen Southern railroads and terminals replied that they were prevented by union contracts from complying with the order, and also challenged the authority of the FEPC.

The president observed that there has been progress on the subject of racial problems in the past 10 years. The idea, he said, is to achieve some steady progress. No one expected the millennium immedately.

A reporter brought up the case of the 15 non-operating railroad unions which agreed Monday to accept a government award of 4 to 10 cents an hour wage increase and leave to Mr. Roosevelt the question whether they should receive overtime pay for work over 40 hours a week. Railroad management wants both the pay raise and the overtime issue arbitrated.

The reporter said there seemed to be some difference of opinion as to what was before him for arbitration.

Complaints With FEPC

JUL 5 1943

CINCINNATI — The Cincinnati Branch of the N.A.A.C.P., headed by Atty. Theodore M. Berry, acting on reports of repeated racial discrimination here in employment centers, has submitted two affidavits to the FEPC for investigation.

The Ordnance department, U. S. Engineers office of the War department, and the L. and N. Railroad company were named by two affiants, Mrs. Hattie Mae Reed of Covington, Ky., and Thomas Hall, Cincinnati, in filing the complaints.

Mrs. Reed, a graduate of Hampton Institute, Va., was informed upon applying at the Sixth U. S Civil Service Region office in Cincinnati, in November 1942, that her qualifications were acceptable. Her certification for a position of under-inspector of naval material was turned down because of uncertain locality of service.

On May 19, 1943, Mrs. Reed was informed by telegram to report for an interview at the U. S. Engineers office, regarding a position as apprentice [illegible]ftsman. On the morning of May 20 she was told by a Mr. Vogt that it was all a mistake. There was no such position available. Several have been appointed to the position of apprentice draftsman, in the Cincinnati U. S. Engineers office, since May 20, 1943. Mrs. Reed has not received any further notice.

Thomas Hall h[illegible]een an employe of the L. and N. Railroad company for the past 17 years. From 1926 until 1942 he worked as a shop laborer. In May 1942 he bid for and was awarded a position as motor cycle operator. This method of upgrading is quoted from the contract between the Louisville and Nashville Railroad company and System Federation No. 91 of the Railway Employes department of the American Federation of Labor, "A promotion is an advancement from a lower to a higher rank or from a lower to a higher pay rate."

Hall said that early in June 1943 he questioned the method of upgrading and applied orally to the union committeeman for the job of pipe fitters' helper. The committeeman refused to discuss the matter. He then went to his foreman, who in turn advised him to consult the master mechanic.

About July [illegible]er a letter was addressed to the personnel department by Attorney Berry, Hall was called into the master mechanics' office. There Hall alleges, it was stated that Mr. Bodamer and the personnel department had decided he should not be accorded any upgrading. Hall was then asked "if he was satisfied." Hall filed complaint with the FEPC charging that he was ta victim of collusion between the L. and N. Railroad company and various brotherhoods of the AFL solely because of his race. Both cases are pending investigation in the office of FEPC.

Murray Backs FEPC Order On Rail Lines

DEC 28 1943

WASHINGTON, Dec. 27.—The order of the Fair Employment Practices Committee to certain railroads to [illegible] Negro workers "should receive the wholehearted support of every American lover of democracy," President Philip Murray said here this week in a wire of support to President Roosevelt.

The Committee order, which applies to 16 southern roads, "represents a decided step forward in achieving the principles that this country was founded upon," Murray's wire said.

"It is the firm r[illegible] of this organiz[illegible] [illegible]easingly toward this goal in the mine, in the shop, in the factory and in the social and political life of the community.

"We feel that your support of the Committee is to be highly commended and should receive the wholehearted support of every American lover of democracy," Murray added.

Employment Of Firemen Cited As Basic Issue

Southeastern Agreement Hit As 'UnAmerican'

DEC 15 1943

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (SNS) — Prompted by a letter sent by 16 railroads and terminals companies to the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, Malcolm Ross, the committee chairman, Tuesday issued the following statement:

The question of preventing Negro railroad workers from being used by the carriers at their top skills is a war problem of the first order. Evidence at the FEPC hearing showed a shortage of 850 firemen of American railroads, this at a time when trained an dexperienced Negro firemen were unemployed and the cariers were preferring to take on green hands, simply because there has been for years a someti[illegible] it and sometimes [illegible] between the rail[illegible] and the railroad unions to decrease the number of Negro firemen and give their jobs to white workers.

This is no question of Negroes seeking to displace whites. Negro firemen were the accepted majority for 50 years on southern railroads. until automatic stokers and Diesel powered engines changed the dirty heavy work into desirable jobs. Racial prejudice is not at issue here. White southern engineers have for decades had decent working relationships with Negro firemen. Sidney Alderman, counsel for the railroads at the FEPC hearings, stated: "I certainly do not mean to contend that anything in the south would interfere with the employment of Negroes as firemen on locomotives."

HEARINGS IGNORED

The fireman problem, and the problems o fupgrading, job assignments and seniority rights of Negroes in the operating divisions and the shops were the subject of four days of FEPC hearings in September. The railroad unions chose to ignore the hearings. The carriers m[illegible]e a perfunctory appea[illegible] [illegible]ter now makes a [illegible] public disapproval of FE[illegible] by viewing with alarm alleged pretensions of Negroes to be engineers and conductors. The plain fact is that this issue — necessarily covered because complaints were received and no rebuttal offered — is dormant and could remain so if the railroads offer justice to Negro railroadmen in the classifications where reason and public policy both urge it. Certainly it is not the part of candor to seize upon the most delicate issue in order to avoid the many basic problems squarely placed before the railroads.

The Southeastern Carriers' Conference Agreement, which the Committee found in violation of Executive Order 9346, was concerned with the hiring and use of Negroes as firemen and not with their promotion from firemen to engineers. The railroads now advan[illegible]ligations under the [illegible] Labor Act as barriers t[illegible]ging the discriminatory Southeastern Carriers' Conference Agreement. There is no conflict of jurisdiction here.

The Agreement was reached with the Brot[illegible] and by mutual ag[illegible] altered or discarded. In asking bo[illegible] parties to make this move, the FEPC is not suggesting anything which cannot be done in conformity with the Railway Labor Act and the procedures adopted by the National Mediation Board. There are extremely serious Negro problems on American railroads. The FEPC did not invent them. It tried, honestly and with the war need for railroad workers in mind, to find out what is direct remedial action.

MAKE NO CHANGES

The carriers complain that its directives were too braod—branding them as 'impossible and impracticable." Yet no carrier's move to remedy discrimination made until these matters were publicly examined. T[illegible]k this dillemma [illegible]through w[illegible] FEPC has been present ever since the hearing. Four railroads did so. The Virginia Railroad complied, and relieved it self of a complaint against it, before the hearings began. The Union Pacific did so during the hearings. The Pennsylvania Railroad and the New York Central are in amicable and cooperative discusion with the FEPC, looking toward solutions. The way is open for the remaining sixteen carriers.

The FEPC is an American Committee, trying to help fight an American war. Its duty is to prevent discrimination against any worker, whatever his or her race, creed or nationality, who would be an acceptable war worker were it not for pre-conceived prejudice. We may be not abel to wipe out discrimination overnight, but where war manpower needs are at stake can and shall t[illegible]

To change bad practic[illegible] is not "impossible and impract[illegible]e," Secretray McAdoo, in 1918, equalized the pay of white and Negro firemen as 'an act of simple justice.' A like need for war manpower inspired that change. The rails today are giving extraordinarily fine service to war-time America. The FEPC believes that the granting of over-due rights to Negro railroad men, far from being a cause for disorder, could be so managed as to improve service and to raise the morale of tens of thousands of Negro Americans who have their own stake in winning this war quickly.

The Committee's directives are described as being broad. They extend no further than the problem raised, not by FEPC but by complex economic and human agencies groping through prejudice and intolerance toward a wroking democracy of which we need not be ashamed either at home or abroad. It will take time to raise the structure l[illegible]down by the Communist blue pr[illegible] Not[illegible] start now is to acknowledge de[illegible]at.

The Railroad Hearings

SEP 17 1943

THE Fair Employment Practice Committee Wednesday opened its four-day public hearings on charges of Negro discrimition in the railroad industry. These hearings were originally scheduled for last Dec. 7, 8 and 9; were p[illegible]oned to Jan. 25, 26 and 27; were indefinitely [illegible] by Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt. The FEPC in the long interval since then has undergone near death and a complete rebirth. The railroad hearings are the first under the FEPC's reconstitution as an autonomous body headed by Msgr. Francis J. Haas and responsible only to the President.

These four-day public hearings held, appropriately, in the nation's capital, will involve 23 railroads. Fourteen railroad labor unions will share this unfavorable spotlight. Negro rail workers charge that they are in general considered to be "non-promotable" and they blame both the railroad and the union. The road[illegible]ion, they charge, negotiates agreements set[illegible]certain restrictions on the percentage of Negro workers to be hired in given categories.

Other charges: All wage contracts carry the "promotable clause" excluding Negroes from promotion; that wage differentia exist between Negro and white workers doing the same tasks; that on some northern railroads waiters are made to do stewards' work while denied stewards' rating or pay; that Negroes may not proceed from the ranks of trainmen into the ranks of conductors; that Negroes are not upgraded in shops where many are employed; that Negroes are denied clerical jobs with the carriers.

The unions involved should be tremendously concerned. They should be leading in the fight for the Negro workers' rights; instead, they are charged, with the railroads, with denying these rights. Every progressive rai[illegible] local in the country should be represented at these hearings. AFL and CIO unions should shout support of the Negro workers' rights, realizing that they are shouting for unity and for victory over the common enemy.

KILLING FEPC

NOV 6 Age
New York, N. Y.

WE HAVE LONG charged that many of our elected officials in Washington, D.C., and many citizens of these United States would rather keep the Negro "in his place" — down — than use his services for a speedy conclusion of the war. They would rather lose the war than see the Negro come into his own.

Last week, Lindsay C. Warren, Comptroller of the United States by appointment of President Roosevelt, aided our home-grown Hitlers, by ruling that the Presidential order forbidding racial or religious discrimination by government contractors need not be obeyed in all cases. Comptroller Warren held that the President's order was "directory" rather than "mandatory", and could be disregarded where necessary to obtain vital goods or services.

In other words, unless the President now speaks out, government contractors can now point to Comptroller Warren's ruling and continue whatever discriminatory practices they now have in action. In other words, the FEPC, created by Executive Order 8802 and amended, re-affirmed and in a measure strengthened by Executive Order 9346, need no longer function, because the Comptroller has ruled that the order is "directory" rather than "mandatory".

This ruling by Comptroller Warren is not entirely unexpected because Mr. Warren will be remembered a[illegible]ame Representative Warren, of North Carolina, [illegible] back in 1934 as chairman of the House Committee on Accounts had supervision over the public restaurant in the House of Reprsentatives which excluded Negroes from being served. From the files of The New York Age comes the following data on Mr. Warren:

January 23, 1934 — "The refusal of the manager of the House Restaurant at the Capitol to serve Morris Lewis, Congressman DePriest's secretary and Mr. Lewis's son in the public eating room on Tuesday, has raised the race issue very pointed on 'The Hill'.

"Representative Lindsay C. Warren of North Carolina, chairman of the Accounts Committee, who issued the order prohibiting further service to Negroes [illegible]ask[illegible]bout the refusal said:

"'It never came to my attention until Monday that Negroes were eating in the House Restaurant. I ordered that the practice of serving Negroes cease as soon as I discovered that it was being done. In refusing to serve two colored persons, Manager H. P. Johnson was acting under my orders and instructions."

March 24, 1934 — "New battle lines were drawn last week to fight to the bitter end race discrimination in federal restaurants when mixed parties presented themselves at the House Restaurant and the Negro members of the party were twice refused service."

March 31, 1934 — "Representative Oscar DePriest has won his fight to bring his resolution on the House Restaurant issue out of the committee which had consigned it to oblivion. He has succeeded in getting the required 145 signatures to take the resolution from the Rules Committee. So on April 9, the House of [illegible]esenta[illegible] will go on record and make known to the world whether the chief requisite to eat in a Government institution maintained by the people's taxes is the color of one's skin. Representative Lindsay Warren of North Carolina, chairman of the Accounts Committee, in a twenty-minute speech teeming with prejudice, bigotry and un-Americanism, sought to justify his exclusion policy in reply to the stinging rebuke recently administered him by Representative DePriest."

May 24, 1934 — "The special committee of the House of Representatives to investigate the authority exercised by the Accounts Committee in refusing service to colored persons in the House restaurant held a hearing on the matter . . . Chairman Lindsay Warren sought to defend his right to deny colored persons the privilege of eating in the restaurant."

No more wa[illegible] of [illegible]esentative Warren after his Democratic colleagues in the House of Representatives found him within his rights to exclude Negroes until in August, 1936, when rumors were circulated in Washington that President Roosevelt was planning to appoint him as Comptroller General of the United States, a 15-year appointment which carries with it a greater degree of independence from any kind of control than any other federal office.

In August 1936, the N.A.A.C.P. and other liberal organizations forwarded protests to President Roosevelt against the rumored appointment of Warren. The protests were based on Warren's anti-Negro policy. Said the NAACP protest:

"This association believes that a man who faithfully transplants the customs and prejudices of his local community to the seat of the national government of all the people and enforces those prejudices as the law of the land, does not have the prospective required of a man to fill the office of Comptroller General. In this office he will be called upon to pass upon expenditures of a greatly varied nature for the benefit of [illegible]sections of the population. As we understand it, [illegible]office is one of great independence and in exercising its powers the appointee would be able to disregard the wishes of great sections of the population. We submit that if Mr. Warren in so small a matter as the accomodation of citizens of the United States in a restauarnt believes it right and proper to enforce the customs of his local community in North Carolina, he will be certain to exercise the same narrow philosophy in administering the affairs of the office of Comptroller General."

The publicity at the time was so effective that President Roosevelt promptly forgot about Congressman Warren. But in July, 1938, very quietly one day, the President nominated Warren as Comptroller-General and the Senate concurred. Ever since that time, Mr. Warren has been Comptroller-General.

The fight Negroes made against his appointment probably smouldered long within the Comptroller-General, but it wasn't until FEPC came along that he had an opportunity to do something about it. His ruling that FEPC need not be obeyed in its findings, if not overridden by President Roosevelt, will kill FEPC just at a time when its work is becoming most effective, and on the eve of release by the FEPC of its findings on the railroad and labor union discriminations aganst Negro workers.

NOV 6 1943

President Roosevelt owes it to justice-loving people evrywhere to come out forthwith with a strong statement reaffirming FEPC and its powers. His statement should for all times settle the question of whether FEPC was created as a sop to Negroes or whether it was created to do a much-needed job.

White Dailies Either Ignore Or Bury FEPC Hearing Story

SEP 23 1943

Progressive PM and N. Y. Times

Only Journals to Carry Release

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — To those who question the need for Negro papers and those staunch supporters of white dailies as purveyors of "all the news that's fit to print," the answer to their query is found right here at the present time.

White dailies, for the most part, have not seen fit to mention the most important meeting held recently that had to do with Negroes, the FEPC hearings on discrimination practiced by railroads in collusion with their unions and with the tacit approval of the federal government's board.

Those papers that did carry the news printed only small portions of it and hid that little bit so it couldn't be found.

Only the famous PM of New York, which is as a red flag to a bull to Rep. John Rankin of Mississippi, told the interesting details of how Attys. Houston, Crum, Johnson and others tied up the high-priced counsel for the railroads involved and had them answerless to the charges repeated time after time.

Fifty-eight capable witnesses took the stand and related their stories of discrimination.

No white daily paper other than the New York Times thought this news sufficiently important to give it [illegible] space it deserved, but Negro new[illegible]ers saw to it that the jim crow [illegible]ctics of the roads and unions were given full exposition, giving the axis powers another weapon to use with the darker races against democracy.

The railroads thought they were too strong and powerful to be brought to answer their treatment of Negroes who had given years of service to building them to their present state. Through their legislations and machinations, Negroes ultimately would be entirely out of fields where they now earn good salaries. Most white papers would not carry a full detailed account of the proceedings, despite their protestations to the Negro publishers with whom they met last spring in New York City to discuss what type of news Negro papers should print and what type of news with reference to Negroes, white papers would print.

FEP Counsel Blasts Rail Job Bans As Probe Opens

Daily World
Atlanta, Georgia

SEP 18 1943

(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON — Holding that the denial of equal job opportunities to Negroes "stultifies our moral leadership of the democracies and provides strong material for Axis propaganda against us," Bartley G. Crum, special prosecutor, opened the railroad hearings before the President's Fair Employment Practices committee, here Wednesday.

Representatives of 22 railroads accused of discriminating against colored workmen, sat in silence as Crum patiently weaved a latticework of evidence around them, which he asserted justified criticism and correction of their bigotrous policy.

Crum promised to present the "truths" he has obtained during his long investigation "without rancor and free from emotion." But, he said, "whether the facts hit management, labor, or even government itself, they will be developed and no fact will be suppressed or distorted because of its impact or temporary damage to any or all of the three groups involved."

One Firm Settles

Twenty-three railroads were originally summoned to appear before the committee but charges against one, the Virginian Railway Co., were dropped and its name withdrawn from the list by the FEPC.

The committee's action followed receipt of official notification from the Association of Colored Railway Trainmen and Firemen, Inc., representing the complainants that satisfactory adjustment has been reached with the Virginian Railway company through the offices of the National Mediation board on Monday, September 6.

Among the charges to be taken up at the hearings are: that railroads have refused to hire or upgrade Negroes ignored their seniority rights deprived them of full-time employment, unfairly and maintained unfair differentials in wages paid Negroes for identical work as done by whites.

It is also charged that Negroes have been consistently barred from opportunities to work on diesel-engined locomotives, and have been refused employment or promotion to jobs as locomotive engineers flagmen, carmen, machinists and helpers, boilermakers and helpers, hostlers, baggagemen, conductors, trainmen, pipefitters and helpers, crane operators, dining car stewards, clerks, road brakemen, coach painters, oilers, dining car supervisors, and car retarder operators.

Slaps At Eastman

Condemning the attitude of the railroads in permitting a manpower shortage to exist in the face of a pressing need for more help, the prosecutor said:

"There is, at the present time, an absolute shortage of these experienced workers on the very railroads whose cases we are today considering. One road alone, among those represented here, reported a need for 362 additional brakemen, 123 firemen, and 949 mechanics and helpers."

An indirect slap at OCD Director Joseph B. Eastman was couched in Crum's appraisal of the condition. He declared:

"We are indebted to the railroads themselves for an analysis of their own requirements. Only two weeks ago, the director of the Office of Defense Transportation, announced in the most serious terms, a critical lack of railroad manpower. He called for vigorous remedies on the part of labor, or management, and of government. Among the points proposed were a recruiting drive for railroad workers, the utilization of the services of women, the utilization of Mexican workers, and even the utilization of war prisoners.

"Untapped Pool"

"We make no criticism of this search for essential rail workers. It is a necessary and a valid search, but we point out to this committee, to the OCD, and to the railroads of the United States, that there exists an untapped pool of labor among thousands of able-bodied Negroes, whose full skills, and sometimes even their services, are denied to the railroad industry by dint of a long and unhappy history of discrimination against Americans whose skins are darker than those of other Americans."

Continuing, the prosecutor said: "In common sense, why must we look to women and prisoners of war, when willing workers are available? Because restrictions for decades so tied the hands of Negro workmen, that neither the railroads nor the unions, who thus forged these bonds, can think—even under the spur of war—of how to break them.

"The essential facts of how all this came about and what the present situation is comprise the business of this hearing.

"In short, our responsibility in this hearing is to place before you, the members of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, acceptable evidence that Negroes in the United States have suffered continuous, wholesale and increasing discrimination in employment by most of America's larger railroad systems.

"There will be placed before your committee presently the evidence and the agreements made between the railroads and the unions, whereby Negroes were declared non-promotable to higher skilled jobs.

Negro Ranks Depleted

"We will show by patent evidence how seniority rules and percentage allotments have been used over the years to decrease the number of Negroes in the operation of our railroads.

"We shall show how the Negroes who fired the boilers on thousands of the old style hand-fed locomotives have been discarded, now that the driving heat of a Diesel-powered locomotive can be applied by the twist of a wheel in a white hand.

"We shall prove to you that this discrimination has been carried on with the active participation and the encouragement of certain of the large operating railroad brotherhoods—labor unions which in other spheres have so much of constructive achievement to their credit.

"And, therefore, we hope and trust that the facts developed at this hearing will be viewed in their proper perspective, and that no wholesale indictment of the trade union movement will be drawn from the evidence we present to this committee and to the conclusions which you may reach. In this very field of discrimination the trade union movement has done much to eliminate discrimination from the entire social fabric.

Food For Axis Cause

"And we shall show that far from improving, this discrimination has grown progressively indefensible during the last two decades.

"In criminal and civil proceedings throughout our nation, both state and Federal, during the last two years, we now have conclusive proof that racial and religious prejudice were deliberately used against us by the Axis powers. Armed with that knowledge, my associates and I submit with all of the earnestness at our command, that you, as the direct representative of the United States, cannot do less than destroy this menace which our enemies wish us to retain as a continuous cancer in our American civilization.

"We must not forget that there is a credit side to this ledger. In the very midst of this global war, we Americans are sufficiently aware of our obligations one to another, and of our collective obligation, under which we have pledged ourselves to total victory, publicly to scrutinize our own unworthy deeds as against our great words. It takes courage, yes, and humility too, thus to make an open audit of our democracy, thus to appraise this prejudiced-drenched facet of our national life. We do not find our Axis enemies today either able, willing or strong enough to submit to such self-analysis, such self-criticism.

"We shall submit, that in this immediate emergency of the war, it is imperative that Negroes be allowed full and equal participation in all phases of the war program.

Dangers Clear

"We cannot measure the detrimental effect of race discrimination on the war program merely in terms of man-hours lost by our own failure to use the loyalty and skills of Negro workers. This loss is compounded by an active undercurrent of bitterness among Negroes and other minorities in an apparently growing spirit of cynicism toward the whole war effort. The potential dangers here are evident to every thinking person.

"If the practice of discrimination is continued—if we fail to integrate the Negro worker in employment on railroads, uniformed white workers will look with suspicion, yes and with possible hostility, on a group that is forced to remain apart and is not permitted to contribute its full skills and resources to winning this war.

"But if discrimination is ended, if white workers see Negro workers in there pulling too, there will inevitably be generated in the railroads of the United States an appreciation for the Negro as a man and a fellow-worker, as has been shown over and over again in shipbuilding yards, in the iron and steel industry, and particularly, in the aircraft industry, where they work together. As does all cooperative and united effort, this cooperation has the effect of raising morale."

Houston to Assist

Assisting Mr. Cdum in the presentation of the evidence supporting the complaints of discrimination will be Charles Houston, noted constitutional lawyer for the NAACP, and Harold A. Stevens, New York attorney of some accomplishment. Maceo Hubbard, field examiner for the committee, is the only regular member of FEPC who will be identified with the counsel for the plaintiffs. He is a lawyer also.

Counsel for the 22 railroad companies and 14 labor unions and brotherhoods could not be learned, nor the manner in which they will be represented. This information was promised for early in the week.

Chairman Haas disclosed that in addition to the Virginian Railway company, complaint against which has already been withdrawn, mediation is now going on with one other company, which was not identified, looking to early settlement.

Expect Sweeping Agreements

Fr. Haas and administrative officials of the committee discussed the various phases of the work of FEPC in the course of which some information was brought out that had not been previously published. Much of this dealt with the extent of the case load for the various regions, a breakdown of the cases on the basis of reasons for discrimination and types of discrimination. While 70 per cent of the complaints involve Negroes, it was pointed out, 14 per cent came from aliens, 7 per cent from Jews, and the 9 per cent scattered.

In line with the recent cooperating agreement reached with War Manpower commission, the FEPC expects to reach similar agreements with the National Labor Relations board, War Labor board, Maritime commission, war department, navy and possibly with the Interstate Commerce commission.

Since July 1 the committee has been financed out of an unexpended balance of $130,000 from the previous fiscal period. It is anticipated that a full budget covering operations for the balance of the 1943-44 fiscal period will be approved shortly, and that the money will come out of the President's emergency fund. After that there is the almost inevitably likelihood that FEPC will have to ask congress for money to carry them on after June 30, 1944.

Permanent FEPC Council

People's Voice

New York, N. Y. NOV 27 1943

41

Those who had fought for the establishment of the Fair Employment Practice Committee and who were keenly aware of the limited powers and transiency of this wartime agency had long felt that it was necessary to give it a permanent legislative basis. For this purpose a group of individuals representing more than 15 organizations met in Washington September 13 and 14 in a Conference to Save the FEPC.

Out of that conference grew the National Council for a Permanent FEPC, with a minimum executive board appointed to set up the organization and control its activities. A. Philip Randolph, president, Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, and Dr. Allan Knight Chalmers of the Broadway Tabernacle Church, NY, were elected co-chairmen. A budget was drawn up, a constitution adopted and bills which would establish a Fair Employment Practice Act were discussed.

The objectives of the National Council for a Permanent FEPC are:

- To promote in every possible way the establishment of equal opportunity for employment, to secure hiring with due regard to the already existing skills and experience of the applicant, equality of wages for the same work, and the full right of upgrading employees within industries regardless of race, creed, color or origin.

Negro Girls Get Jobs After Probe

Daily World
Atlanta, Georgia

NOV 2 1943

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (SNS) — When representatives of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice convinced officials of a large Eastern war plant that their reason for rejection of Negro women as employes had no factual basis, the company relaxed its barriers and has made great steps toward eliminating a labor shortage a report filed with the Committee in Washington, D. C., revealed this week.

Will Maslow, FEPC Director of Field Operations, said that Negro girls have been hired by the company and found quite satisfactory since the company issued strict instructions to all its supervisory and personnel staff to eliminate any consideration of race, religion or nationality in employment.

The matter was referred to the Committee by the United States Employment Service after a check had disclosed that all Negro girls referred to the firm had been rejected. Over a two-month period 500 white girls were referred to the company of whom 300 were hired. During the same period however, of 100 Negro girls referred, all of whom met the same basic standards, none was hired.

Investigation brought from the management the explanation that the jobs required handling of small mechanisms and that the Negroes were rejected because they "all had 'sweaty' hands." It was found that the "test" for "sweaty hands" was superficial and questionable as to its validity.

When these findings were presented to the management at later conferences, officials of the company admitted the possibility of error in the original belief and promptly moved to correct any employment practices which might in any way violate the principles of the Executive Orders 8802 and 9346. As a result, a number of Negroes was accepted.

Some Gains Already In FEPC Railroad Hearing

Journal & Guide
Norfolk, Va.

OCT 2 1943

By ERNEST E. JOHNSON

WASHINGTON—(ANP)—Two "breaks" in the united front, and the confidence in certain responsible quarters that others may follow, were evident immediately Saturday following the conclusion of four days' testimony before the Fair Employment Practice Committee inquiring into allegations that 22 railroads and 14 labor unions had shown discrimination on the basis of color and national origin in their employment policies and practices.

The first of these appeared on Friday when the Union Pacific Railroad, charged with refusing to hire Negroes, Mexicans, or American citizens of Mexican descent in certain shops and job classifications, entered a statement through its counsel, F. E. Baukhages.

"The summary of complaints of which we are advised by the committee counsel (Bartley C. Crum, special counsel) suggested the existence of conditions not recognizable within the employment policy of the U. P. railroad," the statement opened.

It concluded with this:

"Since, however, the hearings have developed specific instances of alleged discrimination, we have obtained from the committee counsel the details of the alleged specific instances. These we will fully investigate with a view toward the speedy correction of any situation inconsistent with the company's policy."

IS THANKED

Thanking counsel for the U. P., Mr. Crum declared that it was just the type of thing that might have been expected from a company headed by "a man of William Jeffers' reputation as a public servant," and in his opinion represented a "notable contribution" to the purposes of the executive order.

On Saturday, F. L. Wheeler, general attorney for the New York Central Railroad, on authority of L. W. Horning, vice president in charge of personnel, entered this statement in behalf of the company:

"The New York Central is willing to sit down at any time with members of this committee to discuss this matter to see if there is some solution."

Sidney S. Alderman, representing the Southern Railway Company, said that they had avoided putting "obstructions" in the way of the cases.

Among those railroads which filed answers to the bill of particulars which had been sent to them on Sept. 3 by the committee, that of the Norfolk and Western Railway Company appeared to be saying with greatest clarity what evidently was in the minds of the others.

The company had been charged, among other things, with refusing to fill vacancies as firemen with what are called "non-promotable men." Counsel flatly told the committee that "non-promotable men means Negroes."

Later Mr. Rivinus said, in answer to invitation to make a statement if he chose, that he preferred not. "We simply present the bald fact which we regard as completely responsible to and pertinent to the subject of the complaint. We offer no comment and we make no justification," he concluded.

EXPERTS' ROLES

Outside of the discussion of the specific charges involved, perhaps some of the most striking contributions to the hearing were made by the expert witnesses who testified that the treatment being accorded minority groups in the United States is being made the subject of short-wave broadcasts to South America, Africa, the Far East, and "even to the folks at home," for the purpose of spreading disunity.

Clyde R. Miller, associate professor of education, Columbia University, and a co-founder in 1937 of the Institute for Propaganda Analysis, was the first of the two witnesses. He took the stand on the opening day, was shown sample broadcasts which had been made available to the committee's counsel by the intelligence division of the Federal Communications Commission, which he identified as "typical."

AXIS PROPAGANDA

"Japanese and German propagandist exploitation of feeling of racial superiority and racial inferiority is extraordinarily effective, almost immediately effective, dynamic and dangerous," Mr. Miller declared.

HURTFUL CLAIMS

"They say, in effect, that our promises to the people of the world are built on hypocrisy, that certainly the people of the Far East can have no faith in the promises of white Americans when they deny equal rights to their fellow citizens who are not white."

On Friday afternoon, Otto D. Tolischus, journalist and lecturer, and for years the New York Times correspondent in Tokyo and in Berlin, read portions of a document called the "Way of Subject," used by the Japanese Ministry of Education for the guidance of educational as well as the propaganda system of Japan.

This pamphlet sets forth, he said, the thesis that the white man is oppressing and exploiting the all-colored races, and that Japan is fighting the white man as the champion of the colored races.

PUT IN EVIDENCE

Mr. Crum offered in evidence excerpts from the broadcasts which Mr. Miller had been shown. Some of them he read to the committee, others he told in summary form because of their "inflammatory content."

The Germans, he testified, use the material in a "triple-barreled" manner. First, he said, the Nazis point to American treatment of Negroes as supporting evidence that Americans themselves believe in Nazi theories about racial superiority.

Second, they use the Negro question as indications of "discontent and possible revolutionary elements" here.

The third argument, contrary to the first two, he said, insist that Negro ideas and folkways have become a part of American civilization sufficiently to "Negrofy" it, to coin a word. Jazz was the illustration.

COMMITTEE'S POWERS

Section five of the order gives the committee the authority to "conduct hearings, make findings of fact, and take appropriate steps to obtain elimination of such discrimination."

Section seven says the committee, in the performance of its functions and exercises of powers, may utilize such state officials (meaning government officials) "and agencies and in such manner as it may determine."

The conclusions being reached unofficially have it that the committee may pursue one or more of the following courses:

1. Present their findings to the railroads and negotiate a solution.
2. Permit the railroads to reply to the findings and then make public the findings, followed by directives to the companies relating to the findings.
3. Submit the findings to the President, along with recommendations as to what should be done to win compliance.

Whatever is done, it is expected that two or three weeks at least will elapse before any move can be made effectively.

All-Colored Plant Makes Good, but Disturbs FEPC

Afro-American
Baltimore, Md

SANDUSKY, O. (ANP) — Although the all-colored Simplex Radio Corp., a subsidiary of the Philco company, is ahead of schedule in production, the FEPC is worried lest this development tend to dodge the issue of discrimination in industry and freeze colored workers out of jobs when the war boom ends.

The Simplex plant came into being as an experiment after the War Manpower Commission announced a labor shortage and colored leaders began intensified agitation for jobs.

Only one white man, the manager, has anything to do with production at the Sandusky subsidiary. There are five other whites employed, but their duties are confined to other matters. Employees included almost 200, most of them women.

The Real Danger

Wages at the plant are the basic wage scale earned by whites in the company employ, 60c for women, and 70c for men per hour. Company officials explain that the reason colored have not graduated into higher income brackets is because they lack the necesary seniority to qualify.

However, the FEPC and other Washington officials view the tend of this and other all-colored plants, despite their success, as a furtherance of segregation of colored workers to their own peril and the eventual detriment of white workers and industry as well.

They point out that the tendency is toward the creation of segregated union locals, aborting the fight to obtain union membership for colored in labor organizations on the basis of complete equality, that it dodges the real issue of discrimination, and forecasts the widespread unemployment of colored in the post-war world since it would be natural for these "auxiliary" plants to be the first to shut down during an economic slump.

FEPC Spotlights Railroad Race Bias

SEP 26 1943

The Worker
New York, N. Y.

By Eva Lapin
(The Worker Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON.—The Fair Employment Practice Committee turned the spotlight on one of the major ways to relieve the manpower shortage—full employment of Negroes—at its recently concluded hearings on discrimination in the railroads.

Striking the keynote of the hearings, Bartley Crum, chief counsel, stated the objective of the FEPC investigation was "calculated to add greatly to the manpower in our railroads."

Once the "shackles" of discrimination are broken in the railroads, he pointed out "other victories will follow with less effort and with even greater effect."

Immediately on the heels of the four-day hearings, which was the first aggressive action taken by FEPC in months, came signs that the solid wall of discrimination built by the 23 railroads was beginning to crumble.

The Union Pacific Company announced that it was taking steps toward "speedy correction" of the FEPC charges.

The New York Central announced it was "willing to sit down any time with members of the committee to discuss the matter to see if there is some solution."

And the Virginian Railways Company had previously withdrawn its discriminatory practices of which Negro employes complained.

JIM CROW BARS

With lack of manpower reaching the proportions of a crisis in the railroad industry—at least 80,000 workers are needed today—traditional bars against promotion and employment of Negroes are still maintained by the industry.

The volume of evidence piled up at the four-day hearings held in the impressive Labor Department Auditorium left no doubt of the restrictions imposed by the railroads on Negroes.

At the present time, the members of the FEPC, headed by Msgr. Francis J. Haas, are studying the transcript of the hearings and will soon announce their findings and directives.

There is little doubt as to the committee's report. The big question is whether the railroads will pay any attention to the expected directives to cease discrimination on account of race.

FEPC officials point out that in case its directives are ignored, the issue will be dumped square into the lap of the White House.

First witness at the hearings was Dr. Herbert Northrup, who pointed out that the discriminatory practices followed by the 14 railroad unions were "in no way typical of those of organized labor in general."

All 14 railroad brotherhoods have been charged by the FEPC with discriminating against Negroes. Most agreements between the unions and the companies put Negroes in the class of "non-promotables" and prevent them from being upgraded from firemen to engineers. Many unions also deny membership to Negroes and allow unfair wage differentials to exist.

AIDS THE AXIS

Proof of the aid this discrimination is giving to the Axis came from D. Clyde Miller, director of the Institute of Propaganda Analysis, who reported that Japanese broadcasts to the East have questioned how "faith" can be placed "in the promises of white Americans when they deny equal rights to their fellow citizens who are not white."

Scores of employes who had complained to the FEPC of the discrimination and unfair wage differentials they had suffered appeared on the witness stand.

From the 18 railroads represented at the hearing came admission of the discriminatory practices but no recognition of the need for a change so that railroads could make their maximum contribution toward the war effort.

None of the Railroad Brotherhoods showed up at the hearings, except one lone representative from the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, who came around the last day and declared he would have a statement four days after the hearings closed.

FEPC officials are still waiting for that statement.

FEPC Aims Under Fire From Smith Committee

Peoples Voice
New York, N. Y.

Dec. 1943

WASHINGTON (FP)—All guarantees in government contracts banning discrimination against Negroes, Jews and other minorities should be "prohibited by law," the Smith committee asserted, in its latest broadside on key war agencies. The President's Fair Employment Practice Committee was thus marked as the newest victim for the witch-hunting House committee, which until now has directed most of its heckling at OPA. The report specifically attacks the Federal Surplus Commodities Credit Corp. for insisting that all government contracts with dairy companies must include anti-discrimination clauses. The full committee signed the report, including those two much-vaunted liberals—John J. Delaney (D., NY) and Jerry Voorhis (D., Calif.).

"The subsidy program, the Lend-Lease Act, as well as the needs of our armed forces, were never intended by Congress to be used as a subterfuge to impose legislation upon the country which Congress has failed or refused to enact," said the report. "Any effort to use subsidies, Lend-Lease funds, or rather appropriations for any such purpose should be prohibited by law."

The Surplus Commodities Corp. was also attacked for requiring some producers to pay time and one-half for employers who work on orders for military and Lend-Lease. OPA was not neglected by the committee, which charged the agency with enforcing ceilings on meat prices and with fixing ceiling prices on live cattle without the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Unions Seek Definition of Powers

DEC 14 1943

By FRED W. PERKINS,
Scripps-Howard Staff Writer.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14.—A Congressional inquiry was forecast today into the powers and actions of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices as that agency apparently was heading into a concentration of opposition to its directives against work discriminations because of color or race.

The committee yesterday received a direct refusal from 16 railroads and terminal companies operating in Southern states to heed the committee's orders, which they declared violated the collective bargaining procedures set up by the Railway Labor Act.

Fred W. Perkins.

Today the committee entered a fresh controversy when it ordered the big boilermakers' union, of the American Federation of Labor, to cease discriminations against Negroes.

* * *

The Congressional inquiry, it was learned, has been suggested by some of the unions in the controversy. It would be based on the question of how much authority the committee has, and where it got it.

Committee spokesmen said there had been no test of its authority because there has been no defiance in any important case. If necessary, it was said, noncompliance cases would be sent to the White House, for handling under the President's war powers. In noncompliance cases from the WLB the President has a formula of seizing the facilities of the companies, but he has never proceeded against labor unions, which are involved in all important cases of the Fair Employment Practices Committee.

The railroad case, which has been in the making for [illegible] months, involves seven railway unions and 22 railroad companies. The unions, including [illegible] Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, have ignored the committee.

* * *

The boilermakers' case involves, in addition to the union, five West Coast shipbuilding companies which were directed to reinstate all Negro workers discharged because of their refusal to pay dues, under the closed shop plan, to the auxiliary boilermaker unions that were set up for them. The auxiliaries have been labeled "Jim Crow unions" by their critics.

The committee said it had found "the auxiliaries are created only for Negro workers and are placed directly under control of the white (regular) lodge for the area. Auxiliary members have no vote or voice in conduct of the union's affairs and must accept as their business agent the business agent of the supervising lodge in whose election the auxiliaries have no part. The committee was set up by a Presidential thing. Before Sicily 1941.

Rail Job Bias Case Certified To President by the FEPC

New York Times
New York, N. Y.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 27.—The President's committee on fair employment practice called on President Roosevelt today to enforce its orders for sixteen Southeastern railroads and seven unions to cease discrimination in the employment and promotion of Negroes. Three of the unions and the carriers have defied the committee's authority to issue such orders.

Representative Howard W. Smith, Democrat, of Virginia, announced that he had started an investigation to determine whether the committee had gone beyond its authority in ordering war industries and unions in a number of instances to cease discrimination against employes because of race, creed, color or national origin.

Case Reviewed by Ross

In announcing that the committee was certifying the railroad case over to President Roosevelt, Chairman Malcolm Ross told a press conference that the Brotherhood of Firemen and Enginemen, the International Association of Machinists and the Order of Railway Conductors had challenged the authority of the committee to proceed against them, while the other four unions had ignored the committee's order, issued Nov. 30, which gave the railroads and the unions thirty days to cease discriminatory practices.

On Dec. 13, the Southeastern railroads, in a joint reply to the order, refused to comply on grounds that the committee had no constitutional or legal authority to act. Six other railroads did not join in defying the committee and Mr. Ross said that conversations between them and the committee were proceeding in an effort at settlement of the issues involved in the order.

The possibility of executive sanctions against recalcitrant companies and unions arose as a result of today's action by the committee. The only precedent, however, is for personal negotiation by Mr. Roosevelt with the disputing parties, the method by which the President ended the one other fair employment case turned over to him by the committee. That case involved the refusal by the International Association of Machinists to comply with orders against discrimination in a shipyard and an aircraft plant on the West Coast. The dispute was settled last December.

House Group Takes Records

WASHINGTON, Dec. 27 (AP)—The House committee investigating activities of executive agencies to see whether they are exceeding their authority took from the FEPC today the records in the case against the railroads and the action involving the boilermakers union and five West Coast shipyards which were also recently ordered by the FEPC to end allegedly discriminatory practices affecting Negro employes.

Representative Howard W. Smith, chairman of the committee, had said two weeks ago that it "might be necessary" to investigate the FEPC "if complaints were received."

He declared today that the Southern railways and West Coast shipyard workers had filed complaints that the agency had exceeded its authority.

The President's seizure of all the railroads in the wage dispute puts him in position to enforce any decision he may make in the racial discrimination cases. The Secretary of War, the present operator, could put the President's decision in the FEPC case into immediate effect without the concurrence of the operators of the roads which defied the FEPC.

Job Discrimination Reported Gaining

World-Telegram
New York, N. Y.

Though the number of cases of employment discrimination against Jews is rising, cases involving Negroes still form 80 per cent of all reported to the Fair Employment Practices Committee, Malcolm Ross, FEPC chairman, said today at the regional office in the Empire State Building.

Most of the cases involving Jews are based on charges of retfusal to hire, he said, while Negroes are not so much having trouble finding jobs as in being upgraded to their proper skills.

He would not discuss the current FEPC case involving 16 refused to obey an order to cease discrimination beyond saying that the roads needed 80,000 workers and that many Negroes are available for the jobs.

FEPC

New Group to Consider Railroad Jim Crowism

PM
New York, N. Y.

PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, Dec. 29.—President Roosevelt is planning to name a committee representing railroad management and labor groups to seek settlement of the controversy over discrimination against Negro workers on the railroads.

The President disclosed his intention in response to an inquiry yesterday as to what action the Government—now in possession of the railroads—would take on the discrimination charges certified to the White House by the Fair Employment Practice Committee.

The FEPC had turned its findings over to the President after a group of Southeastern carriers and railway labor organizations had flatly defied an order to halt discrimination against Negroes in certain railroad jobs.

In answering the question FDR indicated hope that the projected committee study would pave way for a harmonious settlement of the row and obviate the necessity for any drastic measures by the Government. He did not discuss the possibility of what stand the U. S. A. would take if no agreement satisfactory to the FEPC as well as the railroads groups is reached.

Observing that distinct advances had been made in curbing general employment discrimination against minorities, the President said he did not believe the millenium could be achieved overnight and that his objective was steady progress.

His plan to appoint a committee to discuss the FEPC order was expected to avert any immediate clash over the status of the committee or its railroad findings. FEPC officials are known to have been hopeful that the carriers and unions would reopen voluntary consideration of the case. It is anticipated that the President's appointment of a committee will at least force resumption of conferences.

This may temporarily be enough to save the FEPC from a fatal loss of prestige.

FEPC HEAD'S RED LEANING BARED IN HOUSE PROBE

Chicago Tribune
Chicago, Illinois

Ross Is Blamed for Racial Unrest.

BY WILLARD EDWARDS.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Dec. 29.—Communist sympathies of Malcolm H. Ross, chairman of President Roosevelt's fair employment practices committee, which has been denounced in congress as a promoter of disunity and racial unrest, were disclosed today by investigators for the house committee on un-American activities.

Another house committee, authorized to investigate excesses of authority by government agencies, has seized files of the FEPC and is compiling evidence on the legality of its status, functions, and orders. Open hearings will be held.

The FEPC, which has caused an uproar in the south by ordering 14 railroads and seven unions to cease alleged unfair labor practices, was created by Mr. Roosevelt to report on employment conditions in general. From the first, however, it has centered its attention on Negro employment practices.

Communist Line Followed.

This is in line, investigators noted, with the Communist party practice of inciting Negroes to unrest and an examination of the record of Chairman Ross gives the answer, they said, to the FEPC's attitude.

Ross is a protege of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, the President's wife, according to reports, and of Atty. Gen. Francis Biddle. A Wall street messenger and bond peddler in the '20s after his graduation from Yale, Ross later worked on southern newspapers. He came to Washington with the New Deal in 1933 and was press agent for the national labor relations board. He joined the FEPC last July and was appointed chairman in October.

Book Called Pro-Red.

In 1939 Ross wrote a book, "Death of a Yale Man," which is studded with expressions of sympathy for the Communist cause, investigators reported. In its comment on labor disputes in particular, this work reflects a pro-Communist tone, they declared. A typical paragraph was cited:

"The impact of Russian communism lent direction to west coast thinking. All thru our history the idea of communism has been associated with groups of idealists who saw America as a new scene for the coöperative life of superior human beings."

On the NLRB, Ross was closely associated with Edwin S. Smith, board member who was later dropped because of his pro-Communist ideas, according to the investigators' report. Smith is now executive secretary of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship.

Blamed for Racial Unrest.

Ross is given full credit for the edict of the FEPC finding the southern railroads and unions guilty of racial discrimination, which has been widely assailed as productive of mischief, disunity, and racial disturbances. James W. Ford, once a candidate for vice president on the Communist party ticket, hailed the order, however, as "repudiating the policy of southern feudalism."

In the Communist party's official organ, the Daily Worker, the FEPC was urged to make its next step "the wiping out of other discriminatory practices, particularly in the armed forces."

Ford wrote in this publication:

"We must now use this victory as a great opportunity to hasten the complete elimination of Jim Crow and racial discrimination in industry in the armed forces, in all phases of our American life."

Rep. Vito Marcantonio [A'. L., N. Y.], the Communist party's unofficial representative in congress, introduced a bill to make the FEPC a permanent organization.

Upheld by Roosevelt.

The FEPC's order to the southern railroads and unions came Nov. 18 shortly after President Roosevelt had met a threat to the agency's authority which came from Controler General Lindsay C. Warren. Warren had ruled that the committee's orders were permissive only, but the President immediately clarified his original executive order, holding the group's decrees were mandatory.

The railroads and unions were given until Dec. 30 to cease their alleged discriminations against Negro labor. When the railroads pleaded that any attempt to promote Negroes to the positions of conductor and engineer on southern railroads would disrupt relations with unions and employes, and create disorder in war, since the FEPC certified the cases to the President for enforcement.

Under this procedure the President might use any of several enforcement methods, including abolition of union privileges, seizure of property, or withholding of government contracts. Subsequent government seizure of the railroads, because of strike threats, makes it possible for immediate enforcement of the order, but officials have refused thus far to reveal what action they may take.

FEPC Knocks Out Nit Wit Idea To Black-Girls

Argus
St. Louis, Mo

When representative of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice convinced officials of a large Eastern war plant that their reason for rejection of Negro women as employs had no factual basis, the company relaxed its barriers eliminating a labor shortage.

The matter was referred to the Committee by the United States Employment Service after a check had disclosed that all Negro girls referred to the firm had been rejected. Over a two-month period 500 white girls were referred to the company of whom 300 were hired. During the same period however, of 100 Negro girls referred, all of whom met the basic standards, none was hired.

Investigation brought from the management the explanation that jobs required handling of small mechanics and that Negroes were rejected because they "all had 'sweaty' hands." It was found that the "test" of "sweaty hands" was superficial and questionable as to its validity.

FEPC Saves the Jobs Of 7 Colored Seamen

DEC 22 1943

PM
New York, N. Y.

Jim Crow tried to sign on a U. S. merchant vessel recently, but thanks to the FEPC (Fair Employment Practice Committee) got pushed off when the ship reached New York.

The United States Lines' Calobre appealed to the WSA (War Shipping Administration) early this month for crew replacements. through the joint hiring pool maintained by the WSA and the National Maritime Union, seven seamen—six Negroes and one Chinese—were hired and sent to Baltimore where the ship was docked. The WSA paid their fares.

The men understood they were to be taken for foreign service. When the ship left Baltimore for New York, however, the captain indicated that the articles provided for coast-wise service—this, despite the fact some of the seven are aliens and thereby barred by law from such service.

At New York, the seven were fired. The white members of the crew were kept on.

The NMU got in touch with the FEPC. The FEPC investigation showed, according to Edward Lawson, Regional Director, who yesterday announced their rehiring, that the seven men had been fired "for no apparent reason other than their race."

Officers of the ship and the United States Lines denied the men had been fired because of discrimination. The company says that any captain in its employ who discriminates, would, in fact, be fired.

Captain James Ferrari, master of the vessel, explained that his chief mate, who previously told an FEPC representative that the master didn't want colored men, had made a mistake. Actually, he said, the men were fired for "incompetence."

All seven later presented proof of their ability as seamen and were rehired.

DEC 22 1943

Lawson credits the victory to the recent decentralization of the FEPC's work, which places greater responsibility upon field offices.

1,713 Cases Before The FEPC Set A New Record

Age—New York, N. Y.

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Although 232 cases of alleged employment discrimination were closed during the month of October, 1943, the active case load of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice reached a peak figure of 1,713 cases on November 1, Malcolm Ross, chairman, announced Saturday.

Of the 232 cases closed in October, 62 cases, or 28 per cent, were adjusted satisfactorily, Mr. Ross reported. Thirty-one per cent of the cases were dismissed on merits, 25 per cent for insufficient evidence, 6 per cent for lack of jurisdiction, and 10 per cent of the cases were withdrawn by the complainants.

Mr. Ross said there had been a 30 per cent increase in the active case load since September 1, 1943, and credited this rise to the establishment of various regional offices of the Committee.

FEPC Hearings On Job Discrimination In Los Angeles End

DEC 4 - 1943

Age
New York, N. Y.

LOS ANGELES, Calif. — Following the conclusion on November 20 of a two-day public hearing here on charges of employment discrimination in the Los Angeles shipbuilding industry, the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice announced this week that its findings would be made public after a thorough study of all evidence.

The hearings were highlighted by denials of discriminatory practices by representatives of three major shipbuilding firms — the California Shipbuilding Corporation, the Western Pipe and Steel Corporation, and the Consolidated Steel Corporation, Shipbuilding Division. The Boilermakers' Union, also involved in the charges, failed to make an official appearance at the hearings.

Original charges probed by the FEPC had included the three shipbuilding companies, the International Boilermakers' Union, AFL; Subordinate Lodge 92 and Auxiliary Lodge A-35. Invitations to attend the hearings were sent also to the AFL Metal Trades Council, Pacific Metal Trades Council, and the Los Angeles Metal Trades Council. None of the trade union groups made an appearance.

Six of the seven members of the Committee sat at the hearing with Malcolm Ross, chairman, presiding. Special Counsel included Attorneys George E. C. Hayes of Washington, D. C.; Marvin C. Harrison of Cleveland, O.; and Benjamin Dreyfus of San Francisco.

Specific charges heard were that Negro workers, although qualified, were refused upgrading of promotion and were either forced to quit or threatened with discharge if unwilling to subscribe to a union membership which was described as discriminatory.

Group to Probe FEPC Doings

Constitution
Atlanta, Georgia

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—(AP)—Enforcement of President Roosevelt's order against any racial discrimination in war industries was up to the President himself today.

The problem was turned over to the chief executive by the Fair Employment Practice Committee late yesterday after a congressional committee moved to investigate the agency's activities.

The FEPC, set up by the President under the second war powers' act, certified 14 southeastern railroads and seven railway labor unions as violators of Presidential Order No. 9346 which forbids racial or religious discrimination against workers or job applicants by any firm doing any work for the U. S. government.

Operators of the railroads involved were in effect removed from the picture however by the Pesident's seizure of the entire railway system in the current wage dispute. While the railroads are being operated by the secretary of war, any decision by the President on enforcement of the non-discrimination order could be carried out immediately without concurrence of the railway managements.

DEC 29 1943

The FEPC's authority was openly challenged December 13 when the 14 railroads which now have been certified to the President served notice on FEPC that they intended to disregard its directive designed to carry out the President's no-discrimination edict.

Three of the seven railway unions have also formally denied the FEPC has powers to enforce the President's order.

The FEPC Winning Discrimination Fights

Argus

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 24—The hiring of Negro women by a New York City firm engaged in war work which had never before given such employment to Negro workers was announced by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice this week. The company, General Desserts Corporation produces packaged foods for the armed forces.

OCT 29 1943

The FEPC announcement also cited the following adjustments as typical of recent developments in its work.

When the representative of a New York City firm doing war work hired only Christian white workers, the FEPC was notified. As a result, the firm, when it next had occasion to hire, included both non-whites and non-Christians among those employed.

St. Louis, Mo.

An East Coast firm producing war material, although declaring it would employ no Negro women on the night shift, acceding to a request from the FEPC the company placed several Negro women and reported results which exceeded any expectations.

Similarly, another plant in Region, II, had hired no Negro women although a number was available. Negro men appeared to be used exclusively in the lowest categories of work. Through the intervention of the committee, Negro women were hired and qualified Negro men already employed there were upgraded to production work also.

FEPC Gets 'Statement' By Transit Co.

Post
Washington, D. C

E. D. Merrill, president of the Capital Transit Co., yesterday signed a "statement of fact" expressing "willingness on the employer's part to abide by the Presidential order" banning employment discrimination against minority groups in war and war-related industries, Malcolm Ross, chairman of the Fair Employment Practices Committee, announced.

DEC 29 1943

Ross said this agreement, although "not necessarily meaning a change of the company's policy," represented "the first written commitment" in the case which has been under investigation by the FEPC since early summer.

On July 26, when Father Francis J. Haas, now a bishop in Michigan was still FEPC chairman, notice was served on the company "to end discrimination against Negro employment."

In a statement before the Public Utilities Commission on October 5, Father Haas said "the company has indicated its willingness to comply with the requirements of the executive order."

Asked whether the FEPC will seek a similar agreemen with the union, Ross said this was not the intention of his committee.

John H. Cookman, organizer, Amalgamated Association of Street Electric Railway and Motor Coach Employes of America, with whom Capital Transit has a closed shop agreement, asserted that "the union is neutral" in the issue.

"The company d[illegible] hiring," Cookman declared, "and we would rather not make a statement one way or the other."

Ross explained that the company was under the FEPC's directive order which covers all establishments connected with the war effort.

FEPC Calls For Enforcing 'Fair Employing Rules

DEC 28 1943

WASHINGTON, Dec. 27—(U.P.)—The fair employment practices committee today by unanimous vote certified to President Roosevelt for enforcement cases of alleged discrimination against negro labor involving 14 southeastern railways and seven unions.

The railroads previously had refused to abide by the committee's order to cease discrimination. Certification of the cases to the President is under the same procedure as certification of War Labor Board orders which management or unions refuse to abide by. Enforcement methods include abolition of union privileges, seizure of plants or withholding of government contracts.

The committee's move came shortly after a special House committee requested the committee's records in the rail discrimination cases and in a west coast case.

The cases turned over to the President involved both asserted railway and union refusal to permit employment of negroes as firemen and trainmen in spite of FEPC directives. The railroads involved are the Atlantic Coastline, Atlanta Joint Terminals, Central of Georgia, Georgia Railroad, Jacksonville Terminal, Louisville and Nashville, Norfolk Southern, Seaboard, Southern, Frisco, Chesapeake and Ohio, Gulf, Mobile and Ohio, Norfolk and Western, and Illinois Central.

AMERICA'S HONOR IS VINDICATED AND RADIO TOKYO IS ANSWERED

THE PROVISIONAL COMMITTEE TO ORGANIZE COLORED LOCOMOTIVE FIREMEN OF THE BROTHERHOOD OF SLEEPING CAR PORTERS

A. PHILIP RANDOLPH, International President.
MILTON P. WEBSTER International Vice-President.
ASHLEY TOTTEN, International Secretary-Treasurer.
B. F. McLAURIN, International Organizer.

TOKYO AND BERLIN WERE LISTENING, YOU MAY BE SURE, WHEN THE PRESIDENT'S COMMITTEE ON FAIR EMPLOYMENT PRACTICE HELD ITS LONG DELAYED HEARINGS ON THE CASE OF THE COLORED LOCOMOTIVE FIREMEN. But neither Dr. Goebbels nor Radio Tokyo, which for many months has been shrieking its malignant version of the all too ugly facts of race discrimination on the southern railroads, will wish to broadcast the truth of wh[illegible]appened at those hearings.

What happened was that a Committee of seven members representing industry, labor, and the public, and including two Negroes, strove in all honesty and good faith to execute the terms of the President's Executive Order No. 9346, which says:

> "There shall be no discrimination in the employment of any person in war industries or in government by reason of race, creed, color, or national origin." No, this could not have happened in Tokyo or Berlin.

Imagine Hitler's kept judges or Tojo's military courts permitting Polish Jews or Korean patriots to testify in open hearings concerning the injustices and the outrages which had been perpetrated upon them!

But it could and did happen in Washington. And already it has done more to restore the belief of Negro Americans in the genuineness of their country's democratic faith and aspiration than anything that has happened since the President issued his original anti-discrimination order in June, 1941.

Cited in the complaint filed with the FEPC were the following railroads and railroad unions: New York Central, Pennsylvania Railroad, Central of Georgia, Georgia Railroad, Union Pacific, B. & O., Seaboard Air-line Railroad, Southern Railroad, Jacksonville Terminals, St. Louis, San Francisco, Atlantic Coast Line, Norfolk & Western, Chicago Northwestern, Atlanta Joint Terminal, Illinois Central, Gulf, Mobile & Ohio, Chesapeake & Ohio, Louisville & Nashville, Norfolk Southern, Georgia Railroad, Louisiana and Arkansas, Missouri-Kansas-Texas, and Virginian; Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Shipbuilders and Helpers, Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, International [illegible] Machinists, and nine other unions.

At the close of the hearings the spokesman for the carriers said:

"Mr. Chairman, we have no evidence to offer . . . These witnesses by and large have testified to facts. . . ."

As for the all-white unions, they conspicuously failed to participate in the hearings. In brief summary the evidence presented to the Committee proved beyond question:

—That for the past thirty years, experienced and competent Negro firemen, switchmen, brakemen and other Negro railroad workers have been systematically eased out of their jobs for the sole reason that the all-white railroad brotherhoods had decreed their elimination.

—That in the execution of this policy the all-white unions have employed countless devices of evasion; that while denying union membership to Negro railroad workers they nonetheless assumed to "represent" them in negotiating agreements with the carriers, the effect of which was to bring about the expulsion of the Negroes.

—That the railroad managements with few exceptions made no attempt to protect their Negro employees and in many cases collaborated actively in their displacement by inexperienced whites.

—That between 1920 and 194[illegible] percentage of Negro firemen employed [illegible]the s[illegible]thern roads dropped from 41.4 to 29.5; of [illegible]gro trainmen from 22.2 to 15.1; if this trend had been continued colored workers would have been almost completely eliminated from these jobs by 1950.

—That when railroad employment declined during economic depressions Negro firemen were literally shot out of their cabs; in all, fifteen Negro firemen were killed and twenty-nine injured during two outbreaks of violence, in 1921 and again in 1931.

—That as late as February, 1941, the most objectionable of the anti-Negro pacts was negotiated with the Southeastern Carriers; this and subsequent agreements sealed the ultimate doom of 2,400 colored firemen still employed on the southern lines.

—That in June of this year, with railroad traffic at an all-time peak, Negro firemen were still being eased out of their jobs on the southern lines, though 850 more firemen were needed and the total shortage of railroad workers had reached 80,000. It was even proposed to use women and war prisoners—this in preference in hiring thousands of available Negroes, many of them with years of railroad experience behind them.

—That during this period railroad accidents and delays have increased, racial tensions have been exacerbated, and the war effo[illegible]has suff[illegible]oth at home and on the fighting fronts.

A Shameful Record—Shot Through With Light and Hope

IF THE RECORD SHOWED ONLY THIS MONOTONOUS SEQUENCE OF PREJUDICE, EVASION AND INJUSTICE, BERLIN AND TOKYO MIGHT WELL GLOAT AND REPEAT THEIR JEERS AT THE "AMERICAN HYPOCRITES." BUT IT SHOWS MORE, a good deal more. It shows that many of the white railroaders didn't like or want this callous purge of Negro fellow-workers whom they had come to trust and like, and that they rebelled against it, often at considerable personal cost. Here, for example, is George M. Bruce, Jr., white locomotive engineer, age 33, answering Radio Tokyo in the only way it can be answered.

Question: Did there come a day when you did get displaced from your position as a main line engineer?

Answer: Yes.

Question: What was the occ[illegible]o[illegible]tha[illegible]

Answer: Well, I was asked to roll a senior colored locomotive fireman and I refused to do it.

Negro Americans will not forget George M. Bruce.

There were Negro voices, too, that helped to redeem the record. Here is R. H. Russell, Negro switchman, telling how sixteen-year-old inexperienced white boys were hired over the heads of experienced Negroes, including his own son.

"We trained those white young boys. We gave them the best on the job, knowing that they were displacing me and my boy; nevertheless, I wanted to do the very best I could.

"Every young boy we trained is alive today and doing fine, but those that was trained by the ones that we trained are the ones who got killed, seven or eight of them. And I believe if they would have let us contine to train them, those men would not have been killed."

READING THIS REC[illegible]SEES AGAIN AND AGAIN, THROUGH THE MURK OF DISCRIMINATION AND FEAR, A WHITE HAND EXTENDED IN THE FELLOWSHIP OF A RESPONSIBLE AND DANGEROUS CRAFT, AND ALWAYS A BLACK HAND OUTSTRETCHED TO CLASP IT. For American civilization, north or south, just isn't as mean and hypocritical and helpless as Radio Tokyo would have us believe. If it were, the railroad hearing would not have been held at all. What seemed the most powerful political and economic forces in America were moibilzed to stop them, and to destroy the FEPC itself. On January 11, 1943, Paul McNutt announced the indefinite suspension of the railroad hearings. The propagandists of Berlin and Tokyo rubbed their hands and the next morning the short-wave listeners of three continents—black, brown and yellow—heard all about the debacle of America's democratic pretensions on the racial front.

Then things started to happen. Detroit labor came to Washington, white and black, side by side—the same Detroit labor that wrote and signed the magnificent Cadillac agreement—and spoke its fearless and uncompromising piece. With labor and beside labor in the fight stood the leaders of the three great religious faiths. On February 12, Lincoln's birthday, a little group of these religious liberals, white and black, marched in solemn pilgrimage to the Lincoln Memorial in Washington as they inten[illegible] year and every year, so long as the memory of Abraham Lincoln is held in honor in this country. "There can be no second class economic citizenship, no ceiling on color or creed in the defense of democracy," declared the Protestant, Catholic and Jewish churchmen in an open letter to President Roosevelt released on this occasion.

Four days after the President returned from Casablanca he announced that the suspended hearings would be resumed. They were held September 15-18 and on December 1 the FEPC announced its findings and directives which are here summarized.

The intent of the Southeastern Conference Agreement of February, 1941, was the chief grievance of the Negro firemen who filed complaints with the FEPC. The Committee found that "its sole purpose and effect is to restrict the employment opportunities of Negro firemen solely because of their race." Ten railroads and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, parties to the agreement, have been ordered to set it aside.

In relation to the railroad companies, the Committee directed: That the carriers instruct all agencies through whom they employ workers that they will in the future accept needed workers in all classes of employment without discrimination.

That no new agreements between the carriers and unions may contain discriminatory clauses.

DEC 20 1943

That each carrier found guilty of discrimnatory practices report to the Committee within thirty days what steps it has taken to insure fair practices.

In relation to the railroad unions, the Committee found them guilty of many discriminatory practices against Negro workers. A frequent charge against a union was that "it denies them membership in its organization; refuses them any voice or part in the negotiation of agreements . . . and refuses to represent them in respect to their grievances."

In each such instance, the Committee ordered the Union to cease and desist from such practices.

In respect to the 23 carriers cited by the Committee, one railroad, the Virginian, reached a settlement with FEPC before the hearings. The Union Pacific, during the course of the hearings, ordered immediate corrections of any unfair practices. Final action in the case of the Pennsylvania and New York Central roads awaits the outcome of discussions between the carriers and the Committee.

DEC 20 1943

WILL A GREAT AMERICAN TRAGEDY BECOME A GREAT AMERICAN TRIUMPH?

Thus with brave and forthright words has the President's Committee on Fair Economic Practice answered Dr. Goebbels and Radio Tokyo. But great words must be made good by great deeds. Will the Committee's directives be obeyed?

We who sign this, Negroes of the South and the North, would be fools if we permitted ourselves to believe that our struggle has ended with the Committee's decision. How long will it be before the great and powerful railway brotherhoods can be brought to abandon the tragic error which has so deeply stained an otherwise splendid record? How long before the carriers stop passing the buck to our civilization—and to the unions—and start brightening the corner where they are?

We cannot say, but this we know: that we can go in only one of two ways in this matter of race relations and it must not be Hitler's way. We who sign this are Negroes whose grandfathers and great - grandfahers were slaves. There is no power great enough to make us slaves again; no power great enough to forbid our claim to the equal rights for which every other oppressed American minority has fought and for which we pledge ourselves to fight, as long as we have breath and life.

DEC 20 1943

Our tragedy, so richly documented in the railroad hearings, is not our tragedy alone. It is your tragedy, too. It is one of America's great tragedies. And it is for America—all America, white and black and brown—"with charity to all and malice toward none," to transform that tragedy into a great American triumph.

FEPC Files Seized as Group Meets to Certify Rail Case

Post
Washington, D. C.

By Mary Spargo

DEC 28 1943

Files of the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee concerning the Southeastern Railroad and West Coast boilermakers' cases were taken over yesterday in a surprise move by the Smith Committee of the House investigating the acts of executive agencies.

Congressional action occurred just as members of the FEPC were meeting to certify the rail case to the President, and is the first public step in a sweeping House investigation of FEPC, its directives, personnel and orders concerning discriminatory employment practices.

Subsequent to the committee action the FEPC turned to the President to settle its case against 14 Southeastern railroads charged with discriminating against Negroes in employment.

Complaints Filed

Chairman Smith (Democrat) of Virginia said the committee's investigation of FEJC was prompted by complaints from railroad management in the Southeast and appeals by West Coast ship workers to look into FEPC directives handed down in the case of five or six shipyards, among them the Henry J. Kaiser and regon ehipbuilding companies.

DEC 28 1943

Armed with subpenas, which were not served when the committee agred to surrender its documents voluntarily, four representatives of the Smith committee, headed by the new general counsel, Aaron L. Ford, appeared at the executive offices to secure the documents, a bundle wore than 4 inches thick.

Because the committee was then using some of the papers relating to the rail case in preparing to refer the matter to President Roosevelt, the congressional representatives agreed to allow Chairman Malcolm Ross to keep some of the documents until today. They were identified and counted for reference purposes.

At the FEPC meeting beside Ross were Sara Southall, Boris Shishkin and Milton P. Webster. Plummer Bernard Young, sr., and John Brophy, other members of the committee, were absent.

Interested in Copies

Accompanying Ford were his assistants, John [illegible], Harold F. Haney and Joseph H. Stratton.

DEC 28 1943

Ford said that for the present the committee was most interested in securing copies of the directives handed down by FEPC and in learning who actually wrote the documents in question.

He indicated it was likely that the committee would ask for further FEPC files containing correspondence.

After the committee and its staff has had an opportunity to examine the records, public hearings on FEPC will probably be held. The committee has held a long series of open hearings on OPA, WPB and other executive agencies and has issued interim reports from time to time.

DEC 28 1943

Union Protests

Protests by railway labor unions against the FEPC order to the 14 Southeastern railroads to cease discriminartoy practices against Negroes resulted in a defiance of the directive by rail management.

In the West Coast case the unions are more involved than management. In this case some 500 to 600 Negroes who are members of "B" locals or auxiliary unions are involved.

These shipyard workers, members of the Boilermakers Union, AFL, protested because as members of a "B" local they paid dues but had no vote. Fnally they refused to pay dues. The [illegible]er union thereupon requested the shipyards to discharge them. The case went to the courts and the the FEPC.

DEC 28 1943

The Smith committee is particularly interested in learning whether or not in issuing orders in these two, and possibly other cases, the FEPC has exceeded the authority conferred upon it by Congress, which holds the purse strings.

World-Telegram

Union Action Against Negro Rail Workers.

By George E. Haynes, Executive Secretary, Department of Race Relations, Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.

The column by Raymond Clapper on "Race Relations," while it does not represent opinions of your excellent newspaper, seems to me to require some public statement of the other side.

DEC 23

Mr. Clapper says that the point stressed by the Fair Employment Practice Committee that the railroads open up more operating jobs for Negroes can bring only "mischief, disunity and further irritation." He admits that before the last World War 80 to 90 per cent of the locomotive firemen in the Southeast were Negroes and that by 1929 more than 50 per cent had been dropped.

He does not explain that this was done by agreements between the railroads and the unions, one of them witnessed by an agency of the United States Government, that Negroes seeking jobs should be excluded from employment as firemen and that those already on the pay roll should have the doors of advancement barred simply because white men wanted their jobs. The Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen was the officially designated bargaining agent for these Negroes although they had no vote as members on its policies. And yet the Brotherhood and these railroads negotiated an agreement excluding them. Mr. Clapper does not report the fact that there is a shortage of firemen but unemployed experienced Negro firemen. There are other shortages, but Negroes are denied upgrading rights of other railroad workers.

Mr. Clapper's argument ignores the fact, too, that we are now struggling in a world war for the four freedoms, one of them freedom from want. What are Negroes and others who, like these firemen, are barred because of race or national origin from jobs to earn their living going to think about such declarations?

As Mr. Clapper's column appeared, two photographs were published in one of the leading morning papers—one of a four-man machine gun crew of Negroes operating in New Georgia Island of the Solomons; another of a Negro staff sergeant of an infantry regiment receiving a Legion of Merit award for "exceptionally meritorious conduct in the performance of outstanding service." These men are able to operate machine guns and perform other meritorious services against the Japanese in the jungles, but they are not permitted to operate stoker-fired locomotives and Diesel engines on Southern railroads. The thing just does not sound even decent or make sense.

Furthermore, three out of every four of the Allies in this world struggle against the Axis are either yellow people of China, brown people of India or black and brown people of Africa and South America. What will they think when the Axis propagandists again tell the world about this action of the railroads and the railroad unions? What will they say about this as an example of the way democracy works in America?

FEPC Deadline In Philly Dispute

PM
New York, N. Y.

Special Correspondence

NOV 17 1943

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 17.—The Philadelphia region of President Roosevelt's Fair Employment Practice Committee has given the Philadelphia Transportation Co. a time limit to change its policy against hiring Negroes as bus and trolley operators and conductors.

That was confirmed here today by C. James Fleming, regional director of FEPC. But Fleming declined to make the deadline public.

On Nov. 6, more than 900 Negroes paraded here in protest against the company's refusal to hire members of their race as motormen and drivers despite its admitted labor shortage. Recently it started hiring white women as trolley conductors and motormen.

OPERATING AGREEMENT BETWEEN FEPC, WMC IS REACHED IN WASHING'N

Daily World
Atlanta, Georgia

AUG 13 1943

WASHINGTON — (SNS) — An operating agreement between the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee and the War Manpower Commission on the non-discrimination program has been reached and harmonious and expeditious enforcement of anti-bias policies promised by the two agencies.

The Non-discrimination Order provides that the FEPC "shall formulate policies to achieve the purposes of the order and shall make recommendations to authorities, which it deems necessary and proper to make effective the provisions." Further the committee will recommend to the Chairman of the War Manpower Commission approprate measures for bringing about full utilization and training of manpower in and for [illegible] production without discrimination because of race, creed, color or national origin.

All departments and agencies of the Government concerned with vocational and training programs for war production "shall take all measures appropriate to assure that such programs are administered without discrimination," the agreement states. FEPC still will receive and investigate complaints of discrimination forbidden by the non-discrimination order, hold hearings, make findings of fact and take appropriate steps to obtain elimination of such discrimination. FEPC "may utilize the services and facilities of other Federal departments and agencies and such voluntary uncompensated services as may from time to time be needed. Services of state and local authorities and officials also may be accepted by FEPC.

SPECIFIC MEASURES

Under the new agreement, it is the duty of FEPC to recommend to the Chairman of WMC specific measures to enforce non-discrimination, and of the staffs of the two units to cooperate and assist in handling and investigating the cases involving discrimination. The two groups also will prepare and develop educational programs and materials relating to non-discrimination in the training, placement and utilization programs of WMC.

Responsibilities of WMC include "overall responsibility for the utilization of manpower;" formulation of plans, programs and the establishment of basic national policies to assure the most effective and mobilization and maximum utilization of the nation's manpower in the prosecution of the [illegible], to issue such policies and operating directives as may be necessary to achieve its plans; after agreement with FEPC, the chairman of WMC 'shall establish administrative machinery and issue administrative directives to the regional, state area, and local offices with regard to their respective duties in securing full utilization and training of manpower without discrimination; to cooperate with FEPC in enforcement of the non-discrimination order in the carrying out of FEPC policies and "in the promulgation of such measures and programs on non-discrimination as the chairman of WMC may authorize.

PROVISIONS

The agreement further provides that the employes of FEPC and WMC shall work with a spirit of teamwork to attain maximum efficiency and economy in the administration of the non-discrimination order, to avoid duplication of effort, and to prevent overlapping of jurisdiction. Differences shall be settled amicably and through designated high officials.

FEPC and WMC agreed to proceed with the aid of each other's files and personnel in the investigation of all cases, maintaining an interchange of [illegible]ts and information relevant to the effecutation of non-discrimination programs and policies.

The agreement was signed August 2 by Fran[illegible] Haas, [illegible]man of FEPC, and Paul V. McNutt chairman of WMC.

16 Rail Companies Balk At Employment Decree

Birmingham Post
Birmingham, Alabama

DEC 13 1943

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13.—(Special)—Sixteen railroads and terminal companies today told the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, in a letter of response, that they cannot comply with the committee's directives of Nov. 18, regarding the hiring and promoting of Negro railroad workers. To do so, they stated, would seriously and irreparably prejudice the war effort, would be impracticable and impossible, and would violate the railway labor act. These railroads also denied the jurisdiction of the committee to issue the directives.

After a four-day hearing in Washington in September, the committee made both specific and general findings. It held that 22 railroads of all sections of the country, including these 16 railroads, and also seven railway labor unions were guilty of discrimination against Negroes in various respects. It made both specific and general directives that the labor unions admit Negroes to membership and that the railroads employ and promote Negroes in and to all positions without discrimination.

Orders Hiring Of Negroes

Although most of the evidence at the hearings concerned certain agreements between the railroads and the labor unions restricting employment of Negroes as firemen and as trainmen, the directives issued by the committee are not so confined, but undertake broadly to require the railroads to employ Negroes in and promote them to positions as locomotive engineers, train conductors, yard foremen, station agents, clerks working with white clerical personnel, and, in fact, any and all positions without exception.

The position in which railroads would be placed by attempt to comply with these directives was presented by the response filed by the 16 railroads today.

"These railroads," they said, "are engaged, with all their energies and abilities, 24 hours a day and seven days a week, in carrying on the most vital business of transportation in the war effort. They are contributing their part to the total war effort of the railroads of the country, which has been acclaimed as an unprecedented accomplishment by all branches of the Government and of the armed services.

Relations Harmonious

"The manpower situation on these railroads is not preventing their most excellent accomplishment in this regard. This has been achieved by peaceful and harmonious relations with railway labor and by patriotic and whole-hearted co-operation between these mangements, labor, and the shipping and traveling public. We wish to be clearly understood that any disruption of these peaceful and harmonious relations and of this patriotic co-operation which may result from your committee's directives is not the responsibility of these railroads."

Pointing out that their employment relations are governed by collective bargaining agreements reached under procedures of the Railway Labor Act and that any change therein is a matter of immediate and vital concern to their employes and their labor organizations, the responding railroads said, "Railroads are forbidden by law to interfere in any way with the self-determination or self-organization of their employes and are entirely without power to dictate to their employes, or to effect, by unilateral action, any changes in such agreements."

[illegible] Of Chaos

"Any attempt," they said, "to comply with those directives, for instance to promote Negroes to locomotive engineers or train conductors, inevitable would disrupt their present peaceful and co-operative relations with their employes, would antagonize the traveling and shipping public served by them, would substitute conditions of chaos for the present condition of harmony, would result in stoppages of transportation, and would most gravely and irreparably impair the whole war effort of the [illegible]."

Assert[illegible] their re[illegible]s at any time to [illegible]er with their employes under the Railway Labor Act, to see if any more generally satisfactory solution of the racial problems of employment can be worked out by mutual agreement, the 16 railroads said:

"However, frankness compels these railroads very respectively to state to your committee that it is utterly unrealistic to suppose that these railroads and their employes can agree to comply with the breadth of your directives or that problems of such delicacy, controlled and governed by a special act of Congress, can be solved out-of-hand by the fiat of your committee's directives."

[illegible] Railroads

The railroads filing this response were Atlantic Coast Line, Atlanta Joint Terminals, Central of Georgia, Georgia Railroad, Jacksonville Terminal, Louisville & Nashville, Norfolk Southern, Frisco, Seaboard, Chesapeake & Ohio, Gulf, Mobile & Ohio, Norfolk & Western, Illinois Central, Yazoo & Mississippi Valley, and Gulf & Ship Island.

Among other railroad unions against which the directives were issued were Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, International Association of Machinists, International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Shipbuilders and Helpers of America, Order of Railway Conductors, and Brotherhood of Railway Carmen.

Fair Enough

World-Telegram
New York, N. Y.

AUG 14 1943

A few weeks ago, President Roosevelt's committee on fair employment practice requested the reinstatement of 300 Negro workers in shipyards on the Pacific Coast who had been [illegible] out because they refused to be segregated in a separate auxiliary of the Boilermakers Union of the AFL. This union, with sharp business acumen, had foreseen the great development of the shipbuilding industry and had moved in fast to obtain a closed shop whereby many thousands of future workers here were bound to join up and pay personal tribute to Harold M. Franklin, the son of J. A. Franklin, president of the union. Young Franklin, a quiet operator in a small town, Kansas City, Kan., operates one of the ripest rackets in the entire nationwide shakedown of the workers in the war effort. An article of the constitution of his old man's union compels all "regular" members to buy insurance through him and pay their premiums, which are high, along with their dues or forfeit their jobs in the war effort.

Thus, it will be seen that discrimination sets in right there, and with the support of the national government. If a white worker has the character and fortitude to refuse to pay tribute to the son of the union's president he is fired, the nation, in its manpower emergency, loses his man-days of work and he is liable to such penalties as Paul V. McNutt and the draft boards may contrive for him.

This discrimination, however, has received the sanction and confirmation of general practice. It operates in most of the war industries, although the ingenious racket which old man Franklin arranged for his kid is something rather special.

Now a question has been [illegible] whether the segregation of the colored workers constitutes discrimination. The union thinks not, provided Negroes are readily received into the auxiliary and having been admitted, are freely permitted to work.

Of course, such segregation is discrimination because it is expressly written that the members of the Negro auxiliary shall not be permitted to buy young Franklin's insurance and contribute to his great income derived from commissions on the compulsory premiums. The union's constitution contains a proviso that "Article XII does not apply to membership in auxiliary divisions which may hereafter be organized." This article makes it necessary for "regular" members to buy insurance through the president's son. Furthermore, the insurance contract between the union and the Occidental Life Insurance Co. of California says that the constitution, including this exclusive provision, is made a part of this agreement, and for a clincher, the second paragraph of the group policy says in these words that "members of the Negro auxiliary division" among other auxiliaries shall not be insured under this policy.

In this manner the colored brethren are denied an important social gain, to wit, their right to enrich Harold M. Franklin, the national union treasury in Kansas City, and the Occidental Life Insurance Co. of California, which also has a very good thing running in this deal as examination of the policy and the tables has shown.

Now it may be [illegible] or unkind of the company to enter into any such di[illegible]natory agreement but there is nothing in any law which forbids it and there are many union precedents which never have been disturbed by any labor agency of the New Deal. On the contrary, many unions have subhuman or robot auxiliaries made up of socially degraded workers subordinate to the aristocracy, or full membership. Such are the B-class locals and the "permit" men who are forced to pay their dues and fees but are not allowed to vote or hold office or even participate in meetings. They constitute a large group in all, and their case is gloomy if not hopeless, and the only difference between them and the members of the Negro auxiliary of the Boilermakers' Union is that they are segregated for reasons other than those of race:

Is racial discrimination then the only wrongful discrimination that President Roosevelt's directive takes notice of? It is. And are the directive and the committee charged with its enforcement or implementation opposed to discrimination as such?

They are not.

They are indifferent to discrimination for other causes and, in the present case would perform a financial disservice to the colored workers by forcing the boilermak[illegible] admi[illegible]n to "regular" membership; for in that status they would have to swell to even vaster size the rakeoff of a man whose income already represents a monumental profit from the war for the freedoms everywhere in the world except only the U. S. A.

AUG 14 1943

WHILE President Roosevelt was in the Near East laying the foundation of the anti-fascist coalition to destroy the Axis and build [illegible] peace, forces were at work on the home front undermining domestic unity. They defeated the soldiers' vote bill in the Senate; the House refused to permit food subsidies; and sixteen southern railways, supported by the railroad brotherhoods and abetted by the House Smith Committee, have arrogantly defied the rulings of the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee against discrimination in hiring. The disrupters chalked up what they first considered "victories"; yet their achievements have a hollow ring and even the so-called victors have begun to suspect that their finagling may not pay off as they had hoped.

DEC 28 1943

The fact is, the majority of congressional poll-taxers and their Republican allies uneasily wonder if they have gone too far. The outraged protests over the Senate's refusal to grant the soldiers the ballot has set them back on their heels. The effort to kill subsidies has aroused the indignation of labor and the consuming public. The railway employers' bald-faced defiance of the FEPC has proved about as popular as the flu. The reactionaries have outgrown their pants, which is mighty uncomfortable.

DEC 28 1943

The opportunity to take the initiative away from the die-hard bloc in Congress has never been better since the war began.

The bloc has already begun a "disengaging" action—they have temporarily extended the life of the Commodity Credit Corporation and they talk of subsidy "compromises"; the House is "reconsidering" the Senate action on the soldiers' vote; it is hinted that perhaps the southern railways can even see their way to abiding by the FEPC order, as the Union Pacific and the Virginia railway companies have.

Teheran committed the nation to coalition. The reactionaries are behind the times with their divisive policies which endanger the prosecution of the war. The moment for nation-wide action is now. A wire or a letter written today can have powerful influence. National unity will be preserved if each of us takes an hour off to write a few letters, if each of us persuades his friends to do the same, if each of us stirs up his fellow members in lodges, church groups, fraternal bodies, community clubs, union locals, and every other organization.

DEC 28 1943

To enforce the FEPC ruling, wire or write to President Franklin D. Roosevelt, White House, Washington, D. C., supporting his determined fight against discrimination. Wire or write to Chairman Malcolm Ross of the FEPC, Room 408, 10th and U Streets, N.W., Washington, D.C., commending his forthright stand against the sixteen rebellious southern railway companies.

DEC 28 1943

To pass the soldiers' vote bill, wire or write your Congressman (all representatives can be reached by addressing them at the House Office Building, Washington, D.C.) and your senator (Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.). Also wire or write to Rep. Eugene Worley, chairman of the Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress urging him to continue to give his full support to the soldiers' vote bill he has sponsored, the counterpart of the Senate Lucas-Green bill. It will be effective to write to the majority leader, Rep. John McCormack, who has fought for the Lucas-Green bill, and to minority leader, Rep. Joseph Martin, who has done everything to prevent the soldiers from voting. If your congressman's name appears on the following roster of the Election Committee, by all means write to him urging the Committee to report the original Lucas-Green-Worley bill to the House without delay:

Democrats Eugene Worley, chairman Texas; John Rankin, Mississippi; Herbert Bonner, North Carolina; Carter Manasco Alabama; John Gibson, Georgia; Daniel K. Hoch, Pennsylvania; John Lesinski Michigan; Ewart Hart, New Jersey.

DEC 28 1943

Republicans Ralph Gamble, New York; Karl M. LeCompte, Iowa; Harris Ellsworth, Oregon; Chas. W. Vursell, Illinois; Leon Gavin, Pennsylvania.

To authorize subsidies, needed if we are to have real price-control and prevent inflation, wire or write to your senators at once, and to your congressman.

Order No More Jimcro In Boilermaker Union

People's Voice
New York, N. Y
DEC 18 1943

The International Brotherhood of Boilermakers and its local lodges in Portland, Ore., and Los Angeles, Calif., have been directed by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice to eliminate all membership practices which discriminate against workers because of race or color, Malcolm Ross, FEPC Chairman, announced last week.

DEC 18 1943

At the same time, Ross revealed, five west coast shipbuilding companies have been directed by the Committee to reinstate all Negro workers discharged because of their refusal to pay dues to Boilermaker auxiliary unions. The companies were also ordered to cease discharging or refusing to hire Negroes solely because they had failed to obtain clearance from the union.

Firms notified by the Committee included the Oregon Shipbuilding Corporation and the Kaiser Company, Inc., in the Portland-Vancouver area, and the California Shipbuilding Corporation, Consolidated Steel Corporation (Shipbuilding Division), and the Western Pipe and Steel Corporation in the Los Angeles area. Both the unions and the companies have been directed to report to the Committee within 45 days on actions taken toward compliance.

The Committee findings were that the auxiliaries are created only for Negro workers and are placed directly under control of the white subordinate (regular) Lodge for the area. Auxiliary members, the findings continued, have no vote or voice in the conduct of the union's affairs and must accept as their business agent the business agent of the supervising (subordinate) lodge in whose election the Auxiliaries have no part.

Other Committee findings on the Auxiliary question included unfair differences in insurance benefits provided for members by the union and the agreements for admission to membership.

FEPC Orders Kaiser To Rehire Negroes

AUG 24 1943

The Fair Employment Practice Committee has requested the Kaiser Shipyards in the Portland-Vancouver area, along with the AFL Boilermakers Union, to rehire Negro workers discharged from those yards.

The chairman of the FEPC, Msgr. Francis J. Haas, said in a letter to the Negro Labor Victory Committee that he and his associates are endeavoring "to bring about the reinstatement of these workers pending a full investigation and final action by the committee."

The AFL union in the Portland-Vancouver area, holding closed shop contracts covering 75 per cent of the 80,000 workers employed in the Kaiser yards, has been asked by the FEPC to "restore the status of discharged workers."

Msgr. Haas' letter was written in response to a letter from the Negro Labor Victory Committee, signed by Charles A. Collins, executive secretary, dated Aug. 11, 1943, in which the Negro Labor Victory Committee [illegible]ed that the Kaiser Co. "has continued to discharge Negro workers for the reason that they are not members of the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers." Mr. Collins' letter followed a special report received from the Shipyard Negro Organization for Victory of Portland, Oregon, which stated that dismissals had continued up to Aug. 8th.

AUG 24 1943

This exchange of letters was based on a conference between Msgr. Haas and a committee composed of M. Moran Weston of the Negro Labor Victory Committee, Julius Rodriguez, President of the Shipyard Negro Organization for Victory of Portland - Vancouver, Rev. J. J. Clow, President of the Portland Branch, NAACP, and Rev. Dr. W. H. Jernigan, Director of Washington Bureau of the Fraternal Council of Negro Churches, held in Washington, D. C., July 28, 1943.

At this conference the delegation charged that the Kaiser Company had at that time discharged more than 300 Negro employees on or after July 14 on the demand of Locals 72 and 401 of the Boilermakers International Union (AFL).

The notorious Tom Ray, who heads these locals, made the demand because Negro workers refuse to join the Jim Crow auxiliary created by him and his associates to force N[illegible] workers [illegible] of employment.

AUG 24

A Citizens Committee for Equal Rights of Minorities was organized in Portland on August 12, 1943, composed of white and Negro trade union and civic leaders, to carry on the fight to eliminate the discriminatory practices of the Kaiser Co. and the Boilermakers Union. The Negro Labor Victory Committee is acting as the eastern representative of the Shipyard Negro Organization for Victory, which first organ-ized the Negro workers to combat this discrimination.

THE FEPC

Say what you may, we still hold to our belief that the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices is undertaking a herculean task in a spirit that has gotten and is getting and will continue to get the doors to many industries unlocked, which heretofore have been barred against minority groups, especially the Negroes.

As one who has seen some of the workings and plans of this committee, we have no hesitancy in saying that the future for rendering a greater service to all the people is much brighter today than at any time in the past, because in the first place, the present budget calls for over five hundred thousand dollars against the eighty thousand dollars originally appropriated. And secondly, an aroused public is demanding forthright action that will either get results or a scrapping of the committee.

Despite the so-called defiance on the part of the big brotherhoods of railroad unions, the public should remember that the United States government is bigger than the brotherhoods and that the influence of the government and the power of an executive order by the President is behind the committee. And may we add here that no corporation, industry, firm or individual can, under our system of government, ignore a summons citing them for violation of an executive order of the President in time of war, and feel comfortable.

Of course, it must be admitted however, that two forces like those of southern racial prejudice and the influence of powerful labor unions are not easy to move. But the courage, determination and the fortitude with which the FEPC has gone about its work, leaves little or no doubt in our mind but that satisfying results will be won.

And finally, may we say if there has been any doubt in the minds of the most skeptical as to the sincerity of President Roosevelt in creating such a committee, let them get this brief picture of the present set up: To begin with, everybody knows that the Negro worker is the chief victim of discrimination in every kind of employment. Wishing to break up this sort of discrimination, President Roosevelt issued an executive order prohibiting such discrimination based upon race, creed or national origin. Quite naturally a deal of opposition to this order soon became evident, and the President appointed a committee composed of white and colored to help enforce his orders by collecting evidence, facts and figures of such discrimination, and citing violations to show cause why they should not be punished (not for crime) but in the form of penalties.

The present committee has a field and office force, including special workers, of about one hundred and twenty-five persons and a budget of more than five hundred thousand dollars, all of which, or the principal part thereof, is to fight and finally break up work discrimination against the Negroes in this country.

We submit these facts and figures to the considerate public to judge whether the President is sincere in his efforts to break up work discrimination against minority groups in this country.

Of course obstacles in our paths have not been moved as fast as our desires have called for, but our comment relative to the success of this committee thus far is, more power to the Fair Employment Practice Committee and a double portion to Franklin D. Roosevelt, the President of the United States.

FEPC Showdown Near As Smith Starts Probe

FDR Must Establish Authority of Race Bias Board

PM

New York, N. Y.

By Gordon H. Cole

PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—A public showdown is being prepared today between President Roosevelt and reactionary Southern Democrats. Sole issue is the President's policy of prohibiting racial discrimination in war work.

The Fair Employment Practice Committee, having been openly defied by both employers and unions, has certified to the White House "for such action as the President may determine" the Committee's orders against 14 Southern railroad corporations and seven labor unions.

At the same time, Rep. Howard W. Smith (D., Va.) ordered the seizure of FEPC records in both the railroad and the West Coast shipyard cases.

Proper Authority

Smith, who is chairman of the Special House Investigating Committee that bears his name, sent Aaron Ford, former Democratic Congressman from Mississippi and now the Smith Committee's counsel, and two investigators, to FEPC headquarters to seize the records.

Later, Smith announced that his Committee would conduct public hearings on charges that the FEPC has acted without proper authority. The Committee's authority, of course, comes from President Roosevelt.

Malcolm Ross, FEPC chairman, explained that the Committee's action in turning the railroad case over to the President had only one precedent. About a year ago the Committee asked the President to enforce an order against the International Assn. of Machinists, AFL. The IAM had been found to have prevented the hiring of Negroes in the Boeing Aircraft plant at Seattle, Wash., and at the Bethlehem Shipyard at San Francisco.

In that case the President obtained compliance with the FEPC order by calling in Harvey Brown, IAM president, and William [illegible] president of the [illegible]

Against 7 Unions

In the railroad case, the order is against seven unions, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Order of Railway Conductors, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, all independent and three AFL unions. They are the International Association of Machinists, the International Union of Boilermakers, and the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen.

These seven unions are now defying the FEPC order that they stop discriminating against Negroes. But so are 14 railroad corporations operating south of [illegible] Mason-Dixon line.

And in the railroad case, both unions and corporations are being encouraged to continue their defiance of the FEPC order by the action of the Smith Committee in hauling the Committee up on charges of exceeding its authority.

In announcing certification, Ross told reporters that six non-Southern railroads which have made offers to confer with the FEPC were excluded from the case sent to the White House. These six, with which FEPC still hopes to work out an amicable settlement, are the Pennsylvania Railroad, New York Central, Baltimore and Ohio, Chicago Terminal Co., Missouri, Kansas and Texas and the Union Pacific.

Ross also disclosed that a final directive had been issued against the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Employees Union, Ind., ordering it to eliminate all barriers to the employment or upgrading of Negroes into platform jobs on the Philadelphia street cars and buses.

A written statement of facts, text of which was not disclosed, has been obtained by the FEPC from the Capital Transit Co. of Washington. This, Ross explained, is a step toward enforcing the Committee's order here.

A Strong Plea For Justice In Employment

Norfolk, Virginia

From Washington (D. C.) Post

THE long-deferred hearings into discriminatory employment practices by the country's railroads are now being conducted by the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee. These hearings should have been held [illegible] ago. Scheduled for last January, they were postponed at the instance of War Manpower Commissioner McNutt, who had jurisdiction over the FEPC at that time. They revolve around the touchy and distasteful issue of race discrimination. The new FEPC, reorganized and granted autonomy by executive order last May, is to be commended for grappling with the issue forthrightly and unemotionally.

In a certain sense, these hearings are ritualistic. This is not to say that the FEPC has approached them in anything other than an objective and impartial spirit. But the evidence of discrimination against Negroes is apparent to the naked eye of anyone who has ever traveled on the railroads of the United States. Indeed, the railroads themselves openly acknowledge that discriminatory practices are written into their agreements with railway labor organizations. And the labor organizations, primarily responsible for the discrimination, have not even seen fit to attend the hearings. No doubt their leaders are somewhat ashamed to avow publicly the means by which they have sought to exclude Negroes from railroad jobs.

What has been taking place in the railway industry during the past two or three decades is a systematic and progressive elimination of colored workers from all save the most menial tasks. This elimination has been brought about through a policy of excluding non-white members from the Railroad Brotherhoods which have negotiated closed-shop contracts with the managements. These are the ugly facts, and the FEPC hearings can serve only to give them much-needed publicity. What will count will be the recommendations of the FEPC when the facts are on file.

Apart from the obvious violence done to democratic principles by the current practices of the railroad industry, there is an urgent practical need at this time for wider utilization of Negro skills. Early this month Joseph B. Eastman, director of the [illegible] of Defense Transportation, called for a vigorous recruitment program to meet the critical shortage of railroad manpower. He urged utilization of the services of women, of Mexican workers and even of war prisoners. That he did not mention Negroes is testimony to the rigidity of the barriers which have been placed in the way of their full employment. It is time to knock those barriers down. The Railroad Brotherhoods can best show their devotion to democracy by bringing their practices into conformity with democratic principles. If they fail to do so, the Government's power should be exerted to break their monopolistic control. We need the full energies of Negroes, as of all other Americans, for the prosecution of the war.

Railroad Reply

Post Washington, D. C.

There appears in another column on this page a letter from the Secretary of the Southeastern (Railway) Presidents' Conference. It makes clear how inexpedient, and even difficult, it would be for the railroads to comply in full with the directive of the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee. The directive was sweeping indeed, enjoining the railroads as it did to end all racial discrimination in their employment policies. Could the railroads have expected less from an agency of a Government "dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal?"

This letter reinforces our belief that the Southeastern railroads do not desire to cooperate with the FEPC in the solution of a serious social problem, that they manifest, as we said before, a "contempt for the committee's purposes as well as for its authority." Racial discrimination is deeply imprinted upon our national mores. It is not peculiar to railroad managements which have been, in fact, mere accessories to discriminatory practices initiated by unions of their employes. But as Dr. Leo Wolman, noted labor economist, observed in an article in last Sunday's Post, "Employers and labor would find it worth their while, in the interest of fair labor practices and to avoid violent racial conflict after the war, to approach this problem in a more liberal and farsighted spirit." Citing discriminatory practices by railway unions, he declared that "the statement just issued by 16 Southern railroads does not seem an adequate or fair reply."

Discrimination can be eradicted only if the dominant white element of our society will make reasonable adjustments to the legitimate aspirations of our Negro people. It is wise to begin these adjustments in the economic sphere. Granted that gradualism is necessary, the important thing is to make a beginning. It will not be made through the type of legalistic obstructionism with which the Southeastern railroads have responded to the appeal of the FEPC.

FEPC v. the Railroads

Chicago, Illinois

Hottest problem on Franklin Roosevelt's desk—so hot that White House aides let word get out that the President would not touch it for some time—was race relations. The issue had been raised by the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee.

Last month FEPC bluntly ordered 16 Southern railroads to stop discriminating against Negroes, to give them an equal shot with whites at almost all jobs, including the best paid, most aristocratic job a Negro can aspire to in the South, that of railroad fireman. Last week the railroads replied with equal bluntness. Said they:

"It is wholly impracticable, and indeed impossible. . . . Any attempt to comply, for instance, to promote Negroes to locomotive engineers or train conductors, would inevitably disrupt present peaceful relations with employes and . . . antagonize the traveling public. . . .

"It is utterly unrealistic to suppose that . . . problems of such delicacy can be solved out-of-hand by the fiat of your committee's directives. . . . Manifestly, such directives are wholly lacking in due process of law and for that reason are without legal effect. . . . Your committee was and is wholly without Constitutional and legal jurisdiction. . . ."

To such high, hot talk, the tall, tough new FEPChairman Malcolm Ross, 48, had a ready answer. FEPC, said Mike Ross, did not contemplate promoting Negroes to the job of engineers. FEPC merely wanted to restore the Negroes' chance to rise to the job of fireman, to give them an equal chance at other jobs down the line. He cited figures showing a recent shortage of 850 firemen on U.S. railroads, although trained Negro firemen were unemployed. Chairman Ross was itching for a showdown. Said he: "We may not be able to wipe out discrimination overnight, but where war manpower needs are at stake we can and shall try."

Crossfire. FEPC was, in fact, attempting to do nothing more than re-establish what was once the status quo. Almost the oldest tradition in Southern railroading is the Negro fireman. For years, no white wanted the job; and every Negro railroader recalls that Casey Jones's fireman was a Negro. But in time, whites wanted and took the job of fireman. The firemen's union barred Negroes from membership. Whenever a Negro fireman died, he was replaced by a white.

In trying to restore an old practice, and in trying to fill the railroad manpower shortage, FEPC had run smack into the biggest hornet's nest in domestic politics. Franklin Roosevelt's relations with Southern Democrats have never been worse. The FEPC ruling merely poured gasoline on a fire. Virginia's Representative Howard Smith, always ready to investigate the New Deal, stood ready to probe the whole FEPC setup.

But FEPC, and the Democratic Party, are under equal pressure from Negroes. FEPC, itself, was established as the result of a Negro threat in 1941 to march, 50,000 strong, on Washington. The threatener: Florida-born, New York-educated A. (for Asa) Philip Randolph, 54, who, though no porter himself, runs the airtight sleeping car porters union. He has been the main author of the relentless pressure on FEPC ever since. In political terms, if FEPC moves forward, it is damned by Southern Democrats; if it stands still, it receives the scorn of the Negro population—and may lose the all-important Negro vote.

At least once before, Franklin Roosevelt has been able to finesse the question; in July 1942, he turned FEPC over to WMCzar Paul McNutt, who conveniently forgot to take any action. But Mike Ross, one of the original bright boys of the early New Deal, has no intention of treading water. A Hotchkiss & Yale graduate, onetime miner, newsman and author (Death of a Yale Man), Mike Ross believes in FEPC's principles. Franklin Roosevelt cannot outwait this one.

Race Relations

By Raymond Clapper

WASHINGTON, Dec. 15.—Only mischief, disunity and further irritation of race relations can come from the point being pressed by the President's committee on fair employment practices that the railroads must open up more operating jobs to Negroes.

Racial discrimination should be discouraged wherever practical and that is the purpose of the committee on fair employment practices. But such a doctrine and arbitrary insistence on racial equality as this committee insists upon is more likely to aggravate our problem than to solve it.

The chairman of the committee is Malcolm Ross, who was one of the early dynamic forces in the National Labor Relations Board. The policy of the committee seems to be the overnight attainment of the goal, regardless of the deep complex of human emotions bound up in the matter.

The railroads of the Southeast are more realistic than the fair practices committee. Chairman Ross directed the railroads by Dec. 30 to correct inequalities which had grown up over the last 20 years. Before the last war [illegible] 90 per cent of the locomotive firemen in the Southeast were Negroes. By 1929 [illegible] had dropped to 50 per cent or less under restrictive regulations. The President's committee says there must be no discrimination because of race or color.

World-Telegram New York, N. Y.

* *

The railroads take a realistic position. They say they are engaged with all their energy in the most vital work of the war. Their work, they state, has been achieved by harmonious relations with railway labor and the patriotic co-operation of the shipping and traveling public. They caution against disruption of these relationships.

The railroads say that to comply with the committee's directive and be compelled, for instance, to promote Negroes to lomocotive engineers or train conductors would disrupt present peaceful relations with their employees and would antagonize the traveling and shipping public.

The railroads are willing to confer with their employees regarding racial problems, but they say that it is utterly unrealistic to suppose that problems of such delicacy can be solved out of hand by the fiat of the committee.

The railroads challenge the jurisdiction of the committee and intend to ignore the directive.

* * *

Time and again the New Dealers, with an excess of zeal and lack of common sense, have done disservice to desirable purposes. The country is on a right-wing rampage now and I wish it were possible to know how much of this anti-New Deal reaction is disapproval of clumsy and unwise tactics rather than of the objectives.

Surely the American people are not ready to say that we must go back to the time when wages were fixed by the length of the line at the hiring gate. Surely the American people do not regard it as fair that one humble steel worker, who never had the advantage of an education, must bargain alone against the great corporation that runs the mill. Why can't he and his fellow workers hire a lawyer to bargain with the corporation's lawyer?

But many of the things done by NLRB have made a mockery out of that rule of fair play. Just as the present fair practices committee betrays the common sense of its title by such an unrealistic and unenforceable edict as it is now trying to force on the railroads.

FEPC Extends Shipyard Probe To Los Angeles

PM New York, N. Y.

PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17.—The Government's effort to end discrimination against Negroes in the West Coast shipyards was extended today to Los Angeles.

With hearings already underway at Portland, Ore., the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee (FEPC) announced that public hearings will be held in Los Angeles on Nov. 19 and 20.

Representatives who had been asked to appear before the FEPC include officials of AFL Boilermakers Union, the Pacific Coast Metal Trades Council, the Los Angeles [illegible] Trades Council, the California Shipbuilding Corp., Western Pipe and Steel Corp., and the Consolidated Steel Corp.

Specific charges are:

¶ That Negroes have been given employment at lower grades and have been refused employment at the higher skills which their training, qualifications and ability warranted;

¶ That Negroes have been refused advancement to higher skills or branches of employment after their work, training and experience warranted;

¶ That Negroes who were performing useful services in shipyards were down-graded despite the fact that they were performing their work in a satisfactory manner;

¶ That many Negroes have sought to join the union, but were denied membership although qualified; that the union had requested the discharge of persons without membership and that employers had honored such requests by actual discharge of Negro workers.

¶ That many Negroes joined Auxiliary Lodge No. A-35 under threat of discharge, although Auxiliary Lodge No. A-35 does not give its members equal rights with the members of other lodges.

FEPC Is Credited With Settlement

Daily World
Atlanta, Georgia

OCT 29 1943

WASHINGTON—(S N)—Credit for considerable aid in bringing about the settlement of a labor-management dispute which had threatened to cause a total shutdown of the 14-Inch Mill of the Jones and Laughlin Steel Corporation plant in Aliquippa, Pa., was given to the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice by representatives of the U. S. Conciliation Service of the Department of Labor in correspondence revealed by the FEPC this week.

FEPC action in the case was begun after formal complaints were filed with the committee's regional office in Philadelphia about the middle of September. The case was closed September 28.

A letter from Charles R. Ward, commissioner, in the Pittsburgh office of the Conciliation Service, to the FEPC Region III office, expressed thanks for the committee's cooperation and praised the FEPC representative in the case for his "fairness and keenness in being able to judge the right and wrong side of the case." The FEPC representative was Milo A. Ma[illegible]

OCT 29 1943

In a telegram to Dr. John R. Steelman, chief of the Conciliation Service, Mr. Ward referred again to the FEPC examiner who "cooperated to the fullest extent and deserves a lot of credit for hard work."

Working with the Conciliation Service and the FEPC on the case were other governmental agencies concerned, and involved in the discussion were the plant management and Local 1211, United Steel Workers of America, CIO. The basis of the original dispute was a disagreement between management and union over upgrading policies in the 14-Inch Mill. A charge that the management had refused to upgrade two Negro workers because of their race brought the situation to a head.

The matter was adjusted when management and union finally agreed to a progression schedule which would protect the upgrading rights of each worker. In the individual complaints, the management recognized the claim of one man and promised him a chance at the first available promotion, while the second worker agreed to submit his case to arbitration.

Prior to the entrance of FEPC into the situation there had been three short work stoppages in the 14-Inch Mill, threatening total shutdown of the mill and disruption of the production in other parts of the plant.

Because of the position of the Jones and Laughlin Steel Corporation as one of the leading industries in the greater Pittsburgh area, the committee cited the adjustment as significant since it may well establish precedent for other industries in the section.

FEPC MUST ACT TO SAVE FACE

SEP 11 194

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9—The public hearings of the FEPC on discrimination against Negroes and Mexicans by 23 railroad companies and 14 railroad workers' unions—which will be held September 15-18, in the Department of Labor auditorium here, are certain to mark the beginning of a battle against jim-crowism in war industry. The outcome of these hearings will be an acid test of whether the Roosevelt administration intends to carry through and enforce a policy of no-discrimination in war industry.

All other actions of either the old or new FEPC—considered against the background of the railroad hearings—have been mere skirmishes. In the railroad hearings, the "chips are down." Either collusive agreements between the railroads and the unions and jim-crow practices arising out of these agreements are knocked down by the FEPC and the administration and thousands of Negro workers are given new jobs and upgraded to higher skills and higher pay, or else the hearings will end in findings and decisions—big in words and small in deeds—which will certainly cause the FEPC to lose face among the minority groups it is designed to protect, and among employers in other war industries, watching the outcome of the railroad hearings to determine their future policy on Negro employment.

CRUCIAL TEST

Judged from every point of view, there seems to be no more crucial test of the Roosevelt administration's policy toward Negro participation in the war effort than the pending railroad hearings.

Evidence has been mounting for many months to indicate that the jim-crow practices of railroad carriers and railroad unions have been a serious handicap to the war effort. Last week, reports reached here that in the New York area alone 5,000 freight cars loaded with vitally-needed munitions, destined for our fighting forces in North Africa could not be moved to ports of embarkation, because the carriers were short 1600 a day in the freight yards. Despite this, railroad and union officials have refused to relax restrictions against employing thousands of available unemployed Negro men in the New York area. In another terminal, crowded with war material, it is reported that 33 freight trains were delayed in one 24-hour period and could not be moved into the terminal because of the inexperience of new white employees, while Negro skilled railroad men with 20 and 30 years of experience were not permitted to touch the engines.

USE 16-YEAR-OLDS

Throughout the industry, FEPC investigators report, that 16-year-old white boys and white women—with no previous experience—are being used to replace white railroadmen who have been drafted, while Negro workers with years of experience and seniority are passed over. In many hundreds of cases, these investigators state, the Negor men are compelled to teach the new and inexperienced white workers how to operate the engines and perform other skilled work.

Investigation of conditions in the industry has developed the fact that the issue at stake in these hearings is not only whether Negro workers will be free to enter the many new jobs available on railroads—but, as well—whether they will even be permitted to maintain their present jobs. An abundance of proof is in the hands of the FEPC to indicate that jim-crow practices have resulted in a decline of the total number of Negro railroad workers.

One of the principal methods of company and union anti-Negro discrimination, which will be exposed at the hearings, will be the negotiation of agreements limiting use of so-called "non-promotables," which term, as used by the agreements, is synonymous with "Negro." A contract signed February 18, 1941, between the Southeastern Carriers' Conference committee and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen declares:

"It is understood that promotable firemen or helpers on other than steam power are those who are in line for promotion under the present rules and practices to the position of locomotive engineer." This provision—aided by other agreements which limit the number of "non-promotables" who may be employed on a railroad—not only limits new Negro employees, but it also guarantees the ultimate exclusion of Negroes from the industry as firemen or trainmen.

PAY TOO HIGH

Back of this provision is the fact that the job of fireman has changed in the industry. Previously, when steam engines were used exclusively on the railroads, a fireman had a dirty, hot job at wages running from $1.50 to $2 a day. In recent years, however, Diesel engines have been introduced, and wage rates increased. The job of a fireman, consequently, has become, say FEPC investigators, "almost a white-collar occupation where a fireman may make anywhere from $50 to $75 a week." This is why Negroes are being forced out of the jobs as firemen on Diesel-engined trains.

One example of the effect of the provision was taken from among the hundreds of cases to be presented at the public hearings. In this case, a Negro fireman had worked for the railroad from 1923 to 1941. In September, 1941, the company put in a Diesel engine and gave his job to a white worker employed that same month. The Negro fireman was then forced to move his family 279 miles to take a job on a steam engine. In 1942, he was again called back to his former location to fire another steam engine and, again he was displaced by a new white worker when a Diesel engine was installed on the run. He then, for a second time, had to move 279 miles for a job as fireman on a steam engine.

Typical of the hundreds of other charges to be presented at the four-day hearing are the following:

"That in 1942, the Missouri-Kansas and Texas railroad removed all of its waiters-in-charge from their positions—because of race—and replaced them with newly-hired and inexperienced dining car stewards, after denying to every Negro waiter-in-charge in its employ the right to qualify for and be promoted to the position of dining car steward because of race."

That the New York Central railroad refused to upgrade shop and roundhouse workers in its Mott Haven yards in New York City and its 63rd Street yards in Chicago. Both of these yards are close to large Negro communities.

That the Baltimore and Ohio refused to upgrade Negroes in the shop crafts at its yards in Dayton, Ohio, and Newcastle, Pa.

That the Chesapeake and Ohio refused jobs to Negroes as machinists' helpers, boilermaker helpers, at its Huntington, W. Va., shops.

That the Louisville and Nashville railroad would not upgrade Negroes in its Birmingham, Ala., Knoxville, Tenn., or Cincinnati, Ohio, shops as machine shop workers and denied clerical positions in the freight office of the company in Louisville, Ky.

OTHER CHARGES

In addition to being charged with maintaining collusive agreements with the companies in violation of the President's non-discrimination Executive Orders 8802 and 9346, the unions are charged by the FEPC with being sole bargaining agent in their several crafts on the railroads, and nevertheless refusing to admit Negro or Mexican workers to membership, refusing to handle their grievances and carrying out policies disadvantageous to these minorities.

Among the organizations that have filed complaints with the committee are the Provisional Committee to Organize Colored Locomotive Fireman, the Association of Colored Railway Trainmen, the NAACP, and the National Urban league.

Special FEPC counsel who will present the cases to the committee are: Bartley C. Crum, of San Francisco, Calif.; Charles H. Houston, Washington, D.C., and Harold Stevens, New York City, and Benjamin Dreyfus, also of San Francisco.

Believe FEPC Is Stalling On Capital Transit

AUG 15 1943

Full History Of Case Is Given By ANP Reporter

AUG 15 1943

By ERNEST E. JOHNSON

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(ANP)—Question of the week is this: "Is the Fair Employment Practice committee stalling on the Capital Transit company case?'

There is in the capital an increasing feeling that the President's committee "to eliminate" discrimination, in its anxiety to be safe and sound in its approach, is rapidly achieving the ultra of vacillation.

As matters now stand, both the company and the union, the Amalgamated Association of Street Electric and Motor Coach employes, (AFL), are enjoying an indefinite postponement of the day when they will be publicly called upon to explain why they have been dilatory about hiring Negroes on the buses and cars of the district.

AUG 6 1943

LAUNCH FIGHT

Last year a citizens' committee begun the fight to have Negroes employed by the utility companies of Washington, and Capital Transit was the first objective. The fight was crystalized on November 3, when an over-flow mass meeting was held here to demand action. Early in December the War Manpower commission ruled that the transportation system of the district is an essential industry, and that its employes would enjoy certain advantages against immediate drafting.

Paul V. McNutt, WMC chairman, then directed the Capital Transit company to immediately employ Negroes, and the company was given 30 days in which to comply. On January 5, the company reported that they were in the process of complying with the directive, but no Negroes had been hired up to then, nor were any of the maintenance men being upgraded.

One Negro had been hired and put into training. He is B. D. Simmons. He got a degree of preliminary training, but when he was sent over to the garage for practical instructions the whites refused to take him out on a trial run.

CASE DRAGS ON

AUG 15 1943

The matter dragged along until April 19 when the committee—the old one—decided to get rough with McNutt, and scheduled hearings in Detroit and in Washington, the latter one for May 18.

On May 17, eve of the hearing, the committee met and learned for the first time, so it is reported, that the company was preparing to counter FEPC charges with one that when they reported to Lawrence W. Cramer, then secretary of the committee, that the employes had presented an impasse, they were told by Cramer to sit tight and wait instructions from the committee.

Being totally taken by surprise and unprepared to meet this argument, the committee was compelled to postpone the hearing for 48 hours. The same day, however, they were hurriedly reconvened and were informed that a new chairman had been appointed, and given the request that the Capital Transit hearing be postponed even longer. The new date set was June 2.

About the same time, it was disclosed that Cramer and the former area director for WMC, Ramy Deschner, along with company officials, had been trying to negotiate themselves out of a tough situation. Deschner tried to read FEPC out of the picture, but McNutt, knowing that FEPC was going to be restored to independent status, told him, in effect, to mind his won business. He later fired Deschner.

HEARING POSTPONED

The new executive order was released on May 28, along with the announcement that Msgr. Francis J. Haas would be its chairman, and on June 1, on the "advice" of the remaining members of the old committee, the June 2 hearing was postponed indefinitely for the second time. The announcement said, however, that jurisdiction over the case would be retained.

A rough month later the new committee was appointed and among its first acts was one to seek "additional information" with regard to the dispute, and to make a final determination at its next meeting.

AUG 15 1943

At its meeting July 20 the committee agreed that if steps to be taken by the company "are not adequate' in the committees judgment, FEPC "proceed against Capital at its August 9 meeting.

STILL NEGOTIATING

Last Monday Fr. Haas told his press conference that the committee had received a statement "of what the company proposes to do" and that as a result," the matter is still in a state of negotiation. He refused to disclose the contents of this proposal, but did say it was different from other statements received from the company.

Meanwhile, both the company and the union have been getting means of outmaneuvering the their heads together on ways and committee. Two days before the Monday meeting of the committee, a case came before the National War Labor board in which the company and the union were seeking approval for a new wage agreement.

The agreement, innocent on the face of it, actually was a method of making it possible to fork over to men with seniority and holding the short afternoon runs, a salary increase providing they would permit women to take those run. In this way, the personnel shortage could be met. Up to Wednesday, all phases except the actual amount of wage increase had been approved.

The activities of the Citizens Committee on Jobs for Negroes in Public Utilties has tapered off in the last month, probably owing to the heat But unless there is a revival of demands that the FEPC stop dilly-dallying with the case, and instead, go ahead and hold the public hearing it has promised, nothing is going to be done.

The company and the union are working together to cook up new delaying actions. The committee is being "nice Nelly" about the entire matter, afraid to offend and just as scared of being forthright even though it has the law on its side. There is a sag somewhere that has to be eliminated.

Clyde Miller Cites Japanese-Nazi Propaganda Based on Anti-Negro Discrimination

JOB EXPERIENCES TOLD

Witnesses Before Fair Employment Committee Say Railroads Refuse to Promote Them

By LOUIS STARK

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16—Clyde E. Miller of the Institute for Propaganda Analysis testified today before the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee that Japanese and German propagandist exploitation of the feeling of racial superiority and racial inferiority was "extraordinarily and almost immediately effective, dynamic and dangerous.'

Commenting on Axis short-wave broadcasts, some of which were read into the record by Bartley C. Crum, committee counsel, Mr. Miller said that "one of the strongest weapons in the hands of Hitler—(and American propagandists consciously or unconsciously are following the Hitler pattern)—was exploitation of what anthropologists call 'myth of racial superiority.'"

In the Far East, according to Mr. Miller, the Japanese unremittingly direct their broadcasts to hundreds of millions of colored Asiatics alleging that despite President Roosevelt's statements that the war is one for human freedom the contrary is the fact, because of discrimination by White Americans against colored people, not necessarily Negroes but including Indians, Chinese, Japanese and others.

"They say in effect that our promises to the people of the world are built on hypocrisy," he said. "They say that the people of the Far East can have no faith in the promise of white Americans when they deny equal rights to their fellow citizens who are not white."

Mexican Case Presented

The hearings which are developing charges of discrimination against minorities by twenty-two railroads and fifteen labor unions disclosed today cases covering alleged refusal of railroads to promote or give employment to Mexicans as well as Negroes.

Philip Macado of Cheyenne, Wyo., told the committee that a representative of the American Federation of Labor Machinists Union had refused to allow his promotion from laborer to helper "because you are a Mexican."

"I told him I was born and raised here," said the witness in flawless English. "I told him this was the only country I knew. I said he would have to prove I was not an American."

The union official, he said, then replied, "Well, your folks are Mexicans."

"Yes, but they are not asking for a job," the witness said he replied, explaining that the incident occurred on the Union Pacific Railroad.

Charles H. Houston, counsel for a group of Negro railway labor unions, read into the record a reply to a complaint alleging discrimination against Negroes by the Norfolk & Western Railroad. The railroad explained that under its own rules and under an agreement made in 1941 with the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, the railroad was not hiring Negro firemen.

The union agreement, t*he reply declared, was made by the firemen's union with the Southeastern carriers' conference and the limitations imposed on Negroes were "understood to be racial." The definition of "non-promotable firemen," in the agreement, the letter said, "means Negroes."

The company, the letter continued, has not hired Negroes for use as firemen since 1903 and had never promoted Negro firemen to be locomotive engineers for racial reasons, "as this complaint surmises."

In explanation of this refusal the railroad said that locomotive engineers give orders to firemen and other crew members.

"The sentiment of the employes of this company and of the public in the territory in which it operates condemns the placing of Negroes in position of command over white men," the letter added. "That sentiment controls the management."

Ray Abner, a "white American," general chairman of the Firemen and Oilers Union on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, testified that on this road Negroes were hired only for laborers' work, although they were qualified as firemen. This discrimination, he asserted, went on despite the road's pledge that it would show no partiality in hiring or promotion.

Some of the Negro employes now on the road, he said, were more qualified for jobs as firemen and helpers than the junior white employes who are promoted to these posts.

South of Nashville, he said, Negroes were promoted from laborer to helper and there was no trouble from white employes. He quoted a company official as willing to make Negro promotions throughout the lines "if the unions give the go-ahead sign."

Henry A. Dawson, Negro fireman on the Atlantic Coast Line, said that a Negro fireman whose service dated back to 1910 was skipped over contrary to seniority consideration when it came time to man Diesel engines. A similar thing happened to him, he said.

Negroes, he explained, were not permtited to join the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen and the union refused to handle their grievances. When he began his service on the road in 1919, he said that 85 per cent of the firemen were Negroes as against one-third today.

Arthur Lewis of Memphis, president of the International Association of Railway Employes, declared that since Negro firemen could not join the white firemen's union many of the employed on the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad paid a white engineer $1.50 a month to represent them on grievances they had with the management.

B. W. Steel, a Negro fireman of Birmingham, Ala., who said he was the oldest fireman on a division of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad with seniority dating from 1910, told of being displaced by a junior white fireman from a crack passenger run which took two hours a day and being demoted to a hand firing engine which took sixteen hours a day to make the daily complement of 100 miles.

RAILROADS CALLED UNFAIR

Complaints Are Voiced at Opening of the Hearing

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15—President Roosevelt's new committee on Fair Employment Practice, of which Mgr. Francis J. Haas is chairman, began a series of public hearings today on complaints of employment discrimination against Negroes filed by the committee against twenty-two railroads and fifteen labor unions.

Witnesses asserted that Negroes were ineligible for production on most railroads and yet promotion was based largely on seniority. It was maintained that Negro employees, denied a voice in the affairs of the railway unions, were presumed to be represented by these unions in collective bargaining yet had no way of getting their griveances considered.

Negro fireman who, unlike white firemen, are never promoted to engineers, according to the testimony, are now facing elimination from their jobs as a result of the so-called "non-promotable" agreement made by major Southeastern railroads and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen in February, 1941.

While the racial policies of the rail unions which bar Negroes were not regarded as typical of all unions, it was said that out of seven unions in the railroad shops where repairs are made, but one, the firemen are oilers, admits Negroes. Of twenty-nine unions which exclude Negroes nineteen were said to be in the railway field.

Roads Make General Reply

Although each of the roads on which specific complaints have been served has made or will make individual reply to the charges, they combined today to make one general reply.

Presented to the committee by Sidney S. Alderman, who is also of counsel for the Southern Railway, the carriers asserted that the solution to the problem presented at the hearing "lies in a gradual and moderate process of education" and would be retarded "by too abrupt an attempt to change, by governmental decree, longstanding practices rooted in the customs of the people."

It was contended thtat "such problems cannot be solved overnight by a stroke of the pen," that they must be worked out through social evolution and civic reform."

⅛"Railroads do not operate in a vacuum or in a theoretical utopia," the reply declared. "They have to operate in and serve the civilization in which they find themselves."

In its reply brief, the Pennsylvania Railrad denied discrimination against Negroes, basing its assertion on a percentage of Negroes in their employ as compared to white employes.

The Southern Railway, however, frankly stated in its brief that it has never employed a Negro locomotive engineer, for to do so in its territory would be "bitterly resented," might "result in boycott and bloodshed" and would also result in suspension of service by the white engineers and firemen.

The gravity of the problem before the committee was mentioned by Mgr. Haas in calling the hearing to order. He said the committee would make findings of fact and recommendations upon completion of its work.

Problem Is Called Economic

He was followed by Bartley C. Crum of San Francisco, the committee's chief counsel, who summarized the charges as involving an economic rather than a racial problem, urging that the issue be faced during the war and not postponed.

FEPC

Fair Practices InEmployment Stir Headache

Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.

President's Powers May Be Necessary To Bring Racial 'Job Equality'

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14.—(AP)—A major controversy over the authority of the Fair Employment Practices Committee (FEPC) to order equality of treatment for negro war workers today appeared certain to be dumped on President Roosevelt's desk when he returns to the capital.

FEPC orders to end alleged discrimination against negroes have been challenged by Southern railroads, and others, on the ground that FEPC exceeded its powers.

Meanwhile, members of Congress, the courts and the War Labor Board all were involved in the day's developments as one strike by white workers got under way in a vital war factory.

The War Labor Board, by unanimous action, ordered white strikers at the Point Breeze Western Electric plant in Baltimore to return to work at once or face "all possible action" under the war labor disputes act. Point Breeze workers voted to strike last night in protest against the use of washroom facilities in common with negro workers.

The strike was called after WLB refused to order separate facilities. On Oct. 2, FEPC advised the Western Electric Company that "the discontinuance of common facilities for negro and white employes of the Western Electric Point Breeze plants and the introduction of special facilities would be a backward step which can but lead to discrimination against negroes."

Other developments included:

Representative Marcantonio (AL), New York, praised the FEPC and criticized 16 Southern railroads which defied an FEPC order to cease alleged discrimination against negro railway workers.

Representative Rankin (D), Mississippi, declared that FEPC was a "rump organization" which was creating unnecessary racial tension in the South.

The Federal District Court for Northern California at San Francisco has before it a case involving negro workers in which the constitutional authority of the FEPC to order discrimination ended was a collateral issue.

In the California case, 18 negro shipyard workers petitioned Federal Judge Michael J. Roche for a permanent injunction restraining the Marinship Corporation from discharging them for failure to pay dues to an auxiliary negro union of the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers (A. F. of L.)

The boilermakers union was ordered yesterday by the FEPC to dissolve its auxiliary local unions for negroes and to receive colored shipyard workers into full membership. Five West Coast shipyards were also ordered by the FEPC to cease cooperation with the union in alleged discrimination against negro employes.

The decision of the Federal Court will be the first in which authority of the FEPC to order employes and unions to halt alleged discriminatory practices for reasons of race or religion is at issue.

The FEPC was set up by President Roosevelt in executive order No. 9,346, under the second war powers act.

FEPC Gets Facts On Phila. Transit

The Worker
New York, N. Y.

PHILADELPHIA.—In the first hearing of its kind to be held in the Eastern industrial area, the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee saw a company union make a sorry showing here as it tried to justify refusal to obey an order requiring hiring of Negroes as conductors and other skilled jobs on the Philadelphia Transportation Company.

An audience of over 300, including outstanding Negro and white leaders in many fields, overflowed the City Hall court room where Chairman Malcolm Ross presided. Other members of the panel were Milton P. Webster, International Vice President of the AFL Sleeping Car Porters, and John Prophy of CIO, who was not able to be present.

With no dispute as to the facts concerning discrimination, the brief hearing was confined mostly to tearing to shreds by committee counsel Crocket, [illegible] Webster [illegible] the company union [illegible] pretext that its discriminatory practice was justified by a contract clause requiring no change on company-union relations.

One company union representative and two Negro workers were heard. The latter verified the refusal of the company union, which is generally known to be a pawn of the PTC, to allow Negro promotions to skilled jobs. Among the interested organizations who filed briefs urging compliance with the FEPC order was one from the so called "Council for Equal Job Opportunity." This was widely greeted for one reason. It listed among its affiliates the AFL Central Labor Union. This was the first time a large AFL Official body had come out in support of the FEPC order.

Malcolm Ross warned against a company union statement that employment of Negroes would result in chaos and a strike. He urged that whatever the FEPC decision, all concerned should act in the interest of the war effort and take their responsibilities very seriously.

The committee reserved decision until it can examine the testimony

Negro Rights Urged on AFL By Msgr. Haas

Washington Post
Washington, D. C.

By Joseph A. Loftus

Associated Press Staff Writer

Boston, Oct. 6.—Msgr. Francis J. Haas, chairman of the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee, pleaded today with delegates to the American Federation of Labor Convention to accord full union status to Negroes and other minority groups and issued this warning:

"Just as once there existed unhealthy agreements between antilabor employers and antilabor workers, so there exists a danger that some labor organizations and some employers may combine to restrict the rights of minority group members.

"Put yourself in the place of such a member of a minority group, be he Negro or Mexican, Jew or creedist—he wants his full stature as an American workingman, and if he finds organized management and organized labor leagued against him he will in some form revolt.

Cites [illegible] of AFL

"Would you have it otherwise? Would you have the spirit which founded the American Federation of Labor stamped out among great masses of your fellow-Americans? Must one-tenth of the people of our country be set aside as a special class, with special loyalties that are not the loyalties of the rest of us?"

Monsignor Haas, who is Bishop-elect of Grand Rapids, Mich., said the executive order creating his committee held out to minority groups "something akin to what the Wagner Act held out to dominated workers in the year 1935. In trade union terms they wish to own the right to settle grievances and to negotiate contracts through representatives of their own choosing, to work for their seniority right to share in the opportunity for security for their families, and to participate as free men in the modern equivalent of the New England town meeting, the trade union."

Declaring that these are the rights of minority groups, he cautioned: "Restrictions on inalienable rights will always breed revolt."

The convention also heard talks by Cap. John R. Perry of the Seabees, and Edward J. Phelan, acting director of the International Labor Office.

Returning Servicemen

Increasing concern among labor leaders about the attitude of returning servicemen was reflected today in resolutions proposed at the AFL convention, notably one which would make an honorble discharge a ticket of admission to unions inl ieu of an initiation fee.

Other resolutions proposed vocational training and rehabilitation programs, amendments to state insurance and compensation laws to protect disabled or aging veterans, and a labor press service for servicemen to help thwart any open shop drive which employers say attempt after the war.

Honorable discharge in lieu of initiation fee is proposed by the Santa Cruz, Calif., Central Labor Union in an advisory resolution which sys that the armed forces "have been flooded with strongly anti-union propaganda advising them that organized labor is holding up production of materials vital to the prosecution of the war.

As to Initiation Fees

"This fact will tend to turn many of these fighting men, who never before had occasion to seek employment and become familiar with the principles of organized labor, against any form of unionism.

"High initiation fees," the resolution added, "to secure future employment may tend to crystallize this antiunion feeling among war veterans upon their return."

One resolution proposed a labor press service to inform service men and their familier regularly of the "true picture of the conrtibution of American labor to the war effort."

FEPC Charges Press Ignores Race Hearings

Says Only PM Isn't 'Freezing Out' Hearings On Discrimination

By Gordon H. Cole

PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17.—A conspiracy of silence threatened today to defeat the effort of the FEPC (Fair Employment Practices Committee) to call public attention to racial discrimination practiced by the railroads and the extent to which it is impairing the war effort.

Bartley C. Crum, chief counsel for the FEPC, linked the Nation's three press associations and the 22 railroad corporations in a charge that "attempts are being made to soft pedal these hearings."

PM Praised

"Except for PM," Crum said, "we are getting a nice case of freeze-out in the press."

The press tables bore testimony to the charge. Besides reporters for the Negro press, the New York Times, PM, the Reader's Digest and Newsweek were represented. The Associated Press and the United Press sent reporters for a [illegible] look-see [illegible] a briefer story. International News Service passed up the hearing as not newsworthy.

On the first day of the hearings, only one of the four Washington papers, the Evening Star, mentioned the hearing. The New York Times carried nothing on the hearing in its Washington edition, and less than a column in its late city edition.

Ads Proposed

The Committee itself met last night to consider ways and means of breaking through the unofficial boycott of these hearings at which the case against the railroads is being built up by witness after witness.

One Committee member, Samuel Zemurray, president of the United Fruit Co., proposed that the FEPC take full-page advertisements to tell the story.

The FEPC counsel, a San Francisco lawyer, called to Washington to handle this case, asserted that the railroad hearings are "undoubtedly the most important ever held so far as minority groups are concerned either in this country or abroad."

"This," he declared, "is a test of whether we in the U. S. A. mean what we say by the Atlantic Charter and the other fine, high sounding words of President Roosevelt, Wendell Willkie and other national leaders."

Strategem Fails

The lawyers representing the railroads, who spend part of the hearings reading their newspapers, have refused except in one instance to attempt to cross-examine witnesses or in any way to dramatize the proceedings.

Yesterday all defense lawyers rose at one point and went up on the dais with the proposal that as long as the roads were not denying discrimination that the witnesses be dispensed with.

SEP 17 1943

This "soft pedaling" tactic failed. Crum announced that the prosecution would present its case.

The witnesses whom the roads were unable to head off included two Mexican boys from Cheyenne, Wyo., Jesse J. Gonzales and Phillip N. Mercado, both laborers working for the Union Pacific.

SEP 17 1943

Denied Job

Mercado, a graduate of a Lincoln, Neb., high school, explained how he had tried to get a job as machinists' helper—the first step toward a skilled job—and was turned down.

"I wanted to get a helper's job. First I heard they weren't hiring any Mexican boys. But I went around to the committeeman for the machinists.

"He says he couldn't hire me. I asked him why. He says:

"'I can't put you on because you're a Mexican.'

"But, I says, I am an American. I was born here. How can you prove I'm not an American?

"He says, 'Well, your folks were Mexicans.'"

Mercado said most of the men who started out as laborers with him have bee'n promoted to skilled jobs. Many were his classmates in high school; none had Mexican parents.

Negro witnesses told an even tougher story of being displaced by white men without regard to seniority rights.

Clyde R. Miller, founder of the now defunct Institute for Propaganda Analysis, was called to the stand to explain what ammunition such discrimination was furnishing Axis propagandists. Miller testified that:

"One of the strongest weapons in the hands of Hitler is exploitation of what anthropologists call 'the myth of racial superiority.'"

Jap Weapon

"Certainly in the Far East the Japanese unremittingly direct attention to hundreds of millions of colored Asiatics to the fact that the American Government's statements—the statements of our President that this is a war for human freedom—are statements proven false by the [illegible] of white Americans who discriminate aaginst colored people, not necessarily Negroes, but Indians, Chinese, Japanese, peoples with colored skins.

"They say in effect that our promises to the people of the world are built on hypocrisy, that certainly the people of the Far East can have no faith in the promises of white Americans when they deny equal rights to their fellow citizens who are not white."

Crum salled a number of white witnesses, including Frederick N. Myers of the National Maritime Union, CIO, to testify that whites and blacks can work together peacefully.

FEPC Gets WMC's Cooperation Pledge

Amsterdam News
New York, N. Y.
SEP 18 1943

(Amsterdam Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON, Special)—Establishment of 12 Regional Offices, seven of which have been completely staffed and ready for work, was announced last week by Chairman Francis J. Haas of the FEPC.

At the same time the Chairman announced the signing of an Operating Agreement on No-Discrimiation by the FEPC and the War Manpower Commission.

The Agreement

Under the agreemnt, certain specific responsibilities are set up for each agency. For example, "The FEPC shal recommend to the chairman of the WMC appropriate measures for bringing about the full utilization and training of manpower in and for war production without discrimination because of race, creed, color or national origin."

On the other hand WMC has the responsibility in the actual fields of training, placement and utilization and may issue administrative directives to the regional, state, area and local offices with regard to their respective duties in securing full utilization and training of manpower without discrimination.

WMC's Function

Under the agreement each regional office of WMC shall, upon receipt of complaint or knowledge of evidence of violation of non-discrimination order, have ten days to adjust the matter in accordance with agreed and prescribed procedure, provided, however, that additional time may be allowed after consultation between Regional Offices of FEPC and WMC. Where there is no adjustment within the time specified or allowed, or where in the opinion of the Regional Office of FEPC, the adjustment is not satisfactory, the Regional Office of FEPC shall take appropriate steps to make the proper adjustment Any regional matter may be appealed to the full.

SEP 18 1943

Regional Duties

FEPC's Regional Office follows the regular procedure of investigating complaints, including inspection and study of information in WMC files, holding hearings, issuing directives and finally reporting to the President if its recommendations are not adopted.

Complaints may be made to FEPC or WMC, but must be made in person or in writing. It was made plain that no action would be taken on unsigned complaints, but the committee said all material that fell into its hand from whatever source would be used in any manner in which it should prove valuable.

The 12 WMC regions into which the country is divided wil serve as the geographical regions for FEPC, which will establish its offices in the same city as the WMC's.

Only nine of the Regional Offices, chosen for the expected density of operation, wil be immediately established.

SEP 18 1943

Regional Directors

The following Regional Directors and associates have been appointed: New York, Edward Lawson, former Senior Employment Specialist, WMC, Madison Jones, Connecticut YMCA, Associate Examiner; Philadelphia, G. James Fleming, Senior Field Representative, FEPC, for the last vear and a half, to be Regional Director; Cleveland, William McKnight; Chicago, Elmer W. Henderson, Baltimore, former Director of Research for the Illinois State Commission of Conditions of the Urban Colored Population, to be Regional Director; Atlanta, A. Bruce Hunt, San Francisco, Harry Kingman, Berkeley, Cal., since 1923 active in adjustment of race relationships, now with the University of California YMCA, to be Regional Director; Dallas, Texas, Carlos Casteneda, University of Texas faculty, Associate Director. No appointment for Regional Director has been made at Dallas.

SEP 18 1943

Other offices which the committee will open, but to which no appointments have as yet been made are: Detroit, St. Louis. It is expected that offices will be opened eventually at Minneapolis, Boston and Denver.

SEP 18 1943

Major Divisions

Announcement was also made last week that the administrative and departmental structure of the committee has been established and that many of the positions have been filled. Working under Chairman Haas in headquarters here, there are four divisions: Administrative, Field Operations, Review and Analysis, and Hearings.

FEPC regional directors will be responsible to the Committee's Field Operations Division. The Review and Analysis Division will conduct the statistical and program planning functions for Committee. The Hearings Division will assist the Committee in the conduct of its public hearings, and the Administrative Division is responsible for the budget and the fiscal operations, personnel administration, and administrative planning.

14 Big Unions Also Face Inquiry

PM
New York, N. Y.

By GORDON H. COLE
PM's

WASHINGTON, Sept. 4.—The FEP (Fair Employment Practice Committee) today extended to 23 railroads and 14 major railroad labor unions, including the Pennsylvania, the New York Central and the Baltimore & Ohio, its investigation of charges of discrimination against Negroes.

At the same time the FEPC rescheduled for Sept. 15 its oft-postponed public hearing on complaints that the railroads are refusing to employ Negroes above the grade of common laborer and refusing to promote those already employed.

The most controversial race question which the Government ever has attempted to handle, the railroad complaints were the prime cause for the crackup and subseque[illegible]organization of the FEPC ear[illegible] the Summer.

Pressu[illegible] Brought

Originally the railroad complaints involved only the railroads operating in the Solid South, where the carriers have some influence in Democratic Party affairs. Strong pressure was brought on the White House to have the complaint squashed.

Instead of dropping this hot potato, however, the President strengthened the FEPC, brought in as its chairman Msgr. Francis Haas, dean of social sciences at Catholic University and a veteran labor conciliator.

Investigation by the FEPC has resulted in the compilation of a long list of charges involving collective bargaining agreements between railroads and unions.

Axis Cashes in On Rail Jim Crow

(Daily Worker Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16 — Propaganda analysis expert Clyde R. Miller told the Fair Employment Practice Committee today the Nazi and Japanese short-wave radio stations exploit discrimination against Negroes in this country.

Miller's testimony was one of the highlights at the FEPC hearings on discrimination against Negroes in the railroads.

A dozen Negro railroad workers appeared on the witness stand to tell how they had been denied advance[illegible] despite decades of satisfa[illegible] servic[illegible] because of their race.

SEP 17 1943

CITES DISCRIMINATION

Typical was the case of Henry A. Dawson, who told how he had worked for the Atlantic Coast Line since 1919 as a fireman—and was passed over while white workers were put on as firemen in the new Diesel engines.

One example cited to show how Tokyo and Berlin are utilizing just this kind of thing was a broadcast from Japan to the United States in English which said:

"Today [illegible] Washington chiefs, being up against [illegible] manpower shortages, are making appeasement gestures towards the Negroes. But these are, as all intelligent Negroes now know, only futile attempts to induce them to shed more of their blood."

"Japanese and German propagandists exploitation of feeling of racial superiority and racial inferiority is extraordinarily effective, almost immediately effective, dynamic and dangerous," Miller said.

Other propaganda experts including Otto D. Tolischus, former New York Times correspondent in Berlin and Tokyo, and William L. Shirer, author of "Berlin Diary," will testify tomorrow.

A case history of a union which does not discriminate against minorities in any form was given by Frederick N. Myers, vice-president of the National Maritime Union.

SEP 17 1943

"Discrimination does not exist on the American flag merchant vessels for which the NMU is the collective bargaining agent," Myers said. "Negro and white seamen work side by side, eat together in the same mess room and are quarted in the same fo'csle and die together on the high seas in defense of America."

Bluntly, Myers told the committee:

"If the problem of discrimination in industry had not been solved in the merchant marine the result would have been the delay of vessels bringing troops and the materials of war to the fronts where they are needed, by the Army, Navy, Coast Guard and Marines all over the world."

Negro Leaders Greet FEPC Rail Ruling

Daily Worker New York, N.Y.

DEC 2 1943

Negro leaders in the field of labor-management relations yesterday expressed satisfaction with the Fair Employment Practice Committee's directive to 20 railroads and seven unions to cease within 30 days to discriminate against employes because of race, creed, color or national origin.

Edward Lawson, heading the regional FEPC, with offices in the Empire State Building here said the action was the "most signficant step" that body has taken to date. It was signficant also, he said, that the railroads and the unions were simultaneously ordered to correct their unfair practices.

DEC 2 1943

"It means that the old game of passing the buck is at an end," Mr. Lawson said, adding that, because the FEPC action was taken nationally, "no one road or union can claim it's being picked on."

Charles A. Collins, executive secretary of the Negro Labor Victory Committee, which was born fighting the railroads' discrimination policy, was glad that "a group of unions has been cited equally with management for the first time."

"The entire labor movement should be encouraged by the FEPC victory over the railroad companies," Mr. Collins said. "The findings clearly indicated that employers who discriminated have been able to utilize certain backward elements in the labor movement to perpetuate their policy. The findings, therefore," he said, "must not in any sense be construed as an attack on the labor movement but as a warning that the President of the United States and the country at large do not intend to have victory over fascism impeded by fascist-like acts home."

DEC 2 1943

Roy Wilkins acting secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, declared that if the Illinois Central and other railroads feel it necessary to conduct schools for 16-year-olds because of a "labor shortage," they "ought to be willing to tap that vast reservoir of Negro labor available for use."

"Old Lady Democracy" is showing the "Doubting Thomases" that she still has "quite a kick in her," Lyndon Henry, business manager, Joint Board, Fancy Fur Dyers Union, Local 88, CIO, observed, adding:

DEC 2 1943

"Let us hope that the railroad companies will demonstrate their loyalty and patriotism . . . and that the unions will carry out their historical role of protecting all labor, regardless of race, creed, color or nationality, thus helping to defeat fascism at home."

FEPC Pushes 2-Day Probe of Kaiser Shipyards at Portland

Company, AFL Boilermakers' Union Accused of Discrimination Against Colored Workers

By B. M. PHILLIPS
Editor Baltimore AFRO-AMERICAN

PORTLAND, Ore.—The FEPC opened its two-day hearing here Monday into charges that three Kaiser Shipyards, the AFL International Brotherhood of Boilermakers and the Boilermakers Union Locals 72 and 401 are violating the provisions of President Roosevelt's executive orders.

Charges are that the company has concurred in the discrimination against colored workers, some of whom have been refused employment, although they are qualified; that colored workers have been employed in unskilled jobs and denied upgrading, and that the union has denied membership to workers and has forced the company to discharge colored employees who refused to join a jim-crow union, known as Auxiliary A32.

This auxiliary, it is charged, does not give colored employees equal rights—they must pay dues but have no voice in the Union or its management.

Demands End of J.C.

In an opening statement to the committee, meeting in the Public Service Building with 200 persons in attendance, Marvin C. Harrison, white, Cleveland, Ohio, special counsel, warned that "unless this discrimination in Portland shipyards is broken up, we will have gone a long distance toward fastening discrimination upon Americans in future generations."

Counsel for the two locals disclaimed responsibility for their policies and blamed the International Brotherhood. The International has no representative present.

Co. Denies Discrimination

Gordon Johnson, counsel for the Kaiser Company, told the committee that the "policy of our companies has been to comply not only with the spirit but with the letter of the President's orders."

Dr. Herbert R. Narthrup of Detroit, author of the forthcoming book, "Organized Labor and the Negro," first witness before the committee, said that the Boilermakers' Union is one of the most vicious of organized groups and has never admitted colored workers on a free and equal basis.

He cited figures to show that because of discrimination on behalf of this and other unions, the employment of skilled colored workers in shipyards has decreased rather than increased since the last war.

NOV 20 1943

NAACP Head Testifies

J. J. Clow, Mt. Olivet Baptist Church pastor and president of the NAACP, testified that colored workers who appealed to him for help in keeping their jobs at Kaiser were refused a chance to join the Brotherhood and told by union representatives that they must join a jim-crow auxiliary or else lose their jobs.

He said he was told by Tom Ray, white, recently ousted as president of Local 72, that this was the policy. He testified also that colored workers preferred to quit rather than be forced into jim-crow auxiliaries and that the only solution was integration into bona fide unions.

Other witnesses were:

The Rev. Richard M. Steiner, white, pastor of First Unitarian Church, a member of the draft board of appeals for this area and panel member of WLB, who said that when he found that white skilled shipyard workers were being granted deferments on the grounds that they were essential and yet qualified colored men were refused jobs, he voted against their deferments.

Says J.C. Not Necessary

Joseph Lake, white, business agent and financial secretary of the AFL Electrical Workers' Union, which has 16,000 members, 500 of them colored, testified that discrimination and segregation did not have to exist.

He pointed to the fact that his union admits colored workers employed in Kaiser and other local shipyards on an equal basis, that they have a voice and vote and the right to hold office, and that relations in the union and the yards are harmonious.

2 Fired Workers Testify

Two New York men transported here by the Kaiser yards to work in skilled jobs, then classified as laborers and later discharged by the company at the union's demand because they refused to join jim-crow auxiliaries were the keynote witnesses Monday afternoon.

Robert Rhone, 17, who came here from New York October 3, 1942, said he was classified on the train en route as a shipwright's helper, but when he went to work was made laborer.

He was denied a chance to go to welder's school, but the company trained and employed him as welder for two months. When he refused to join the auxiliary, he was dismissed. He is now a waiter on the Union Pacific.

He said he was willing to join a bona fide labor union, but would rather quit than be forced into a jim-crow setup.

NOV 20 1943

Raymond Gee, 31, Atlantic Highland, N. J., former Auto mechanic, left there last October. He began work as a laborer, was upgraded by the company to welder trainee, but after the union insisted that he join the jim-crow auxiliary and he refused, was dismissed. He is now working as a fireman at a Van Port Housing Project.

Says Company Fosters Bias

Gee indicated during his testimony that the company itself was fostering segregation and discrimination and recalled that his all-colored welding gang was assigned to work in the fore of the ship and whites in the aft.

Edgar Kaiser, manager of the company, admitted that "there have been incidents in the yard where there have been some attempts at segregation, but in general the policy of our company is no segregation."

The hearings will continue on Tuesday. It is expected that Kaiser will take the stand and further elaborate on his testimony.

After hearings here the committee will go to Los Angeles where hearings open Friday. All members of committee are present.

Return to Jobs For Negroes Is Sought

Men Dismissed For Not Paying Dues

Washington, Aug. 28 (INS)—The President's Committee On Fair Employment Practices tonight declared it is seeking immediate return to their jobs of a number of West Coast shipyard Negroes who were dismissed for refusing to pay dues in an auxiliary union.

AUG 28 1943

"At present attempts are being made to work out between management and union a procedure through which the dismissed workers may be put back on their jobs at once pending ultimate settlement of the entire dispute," the committee said.

The workers were dismissed because they would not pay dues in an auxiliary union of the Boilermakers Union, charging that the auxiliary did not give them full membership in the regular union local.

"The F.E.P.C. has received assurance from the complainants that they are willing to pay their union dues but in return desire full union membership," the committee [illegible]ted.

Msgr. Francis J. Haas, chairman of the committee, said investigation showed no basis for charges that the United Fruit Company had refused to hire qualified Negro maritime officers when seeking a full crew.

FEPC Arbitrates Upgrade Tangle

OCT 1943

ALIQUIPPA, Pa.—The FEPC smoothed out difficulties between labor and management of the Jones and Laughlin Steel Corporation plant here on the policy of upgrading, and prevented a possible work stoppage, it was revealed this week.

The basis for the complaint, made during the middle of September, was the charge that the company refused to upgrade two colored workers because of their race. The matter was adjusted when management and union agreed to a progression schedule which would protect the upgrading rights of each worker.

Investigation proved that the personnel in the company is almost entirely colored, while throughout its plant the corporation employs only about 12 per cent of the colored workers in certain capacities.

10 Railroads Ordered to Void Union Pact; Race Bias Charged

DEC 1 1943

Ten Southern railroads and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen yesterday were advised that their operating contract unfairly discriminates against Negroes and must be voided.

The President's committee on fair employment practice (FEPC) handed down its ruling after studying testimony taken at hearings in September.

The contract between the rail union and the railroads "is designed for no other purpose than to cut down the employment of Negroes as firemen and to increase the hiring of white persons in these positions," the FEPC held.

Malcom Ross, FEPC chairman, said the contract limits the hiring of firemen to "promotable men," and specifically designates Negroes as nonpromotable, which effectively debars them.

The FEPC decision raises a legal point which the railroad counsel September said would put them "in the middle" and force them to violate the edict of the National Mediation Board (railway) which approved the contract FEPC ordered voided. The railways, under the Congressional Act coering railway labor disputes, are required to conform to rulings of the mediation board.

The mediation board said the FEPC ruling, which in effect challenges the board's authority, "would be studied." No other comment was forthcoming.

The railroads, under terms of the FEPC decision, hae the choice of voiding the contract and defying the mediation board or conforming to the existing contract and defying the FEPC order.

The railways ordered to void their labor contracts are the Atlantic Coast Line, the Atlanta Joint Terminals, Central of Georgia, Georgia Railroad, Jacksonville Terminal Co., Louisville and Nashville, Norfolk Southern, St. Louis and San Francisco, Seaboard Air Line and the Southern Railway.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 8.—The first break in the solid Jim-Crow wall of discrimination against Negro workers by the nation's railroads came today when the Fair Employment Practises Committee announced the dropping of its complaint against the Virginian Railway Company.

The Virginian Railway was one of the 23 companies being investigated by FEPC for discriminating against Negro workers.

FEPO crossed the company off its list when the National Mediation Board ruled in favor of 46 Negro employes who had charged the company with discriminatory practises.

The Association of Colored Railway Trainmen and Firemen, Inc., charged the Virginian Railway classified Negroes as car riders although they performed the duties of brakemen, did not give them a standard rate of pay nor overtime pay until after ten hours of work. [illegible] contract, white workers doing the same work received a standard rate of pay higher than the Negroes and overtime after eight hours per day.

Joseph C. Waddy, chairman of the association, in informing the FEPC of the victory, declared the company's recent action "has the effect of substantially wiping out the major differential between the working conditions of the white pier employes and the car riders."

Manley Named FEPC Examiner

PHILADELPHIA

Appointment of Milo Manley, former district supervisor of the Pennsylvania Department of Public Assistance, as an examiner for the Fair Employment Practice Committee was announced on Monday by G. James Fleming, regional director.

The FEPC regional office, to serve the States of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware, opened here on Monday at 803-4 Stephen Girard Building, 21 S. Twelfth Street.

Mrs. Gorgas, Secretary

A second examiner named was Miss Mildred Greenblatt of Paterson, N.J., who was transferred from the New York FEPC. Mrs. Helen Gorgas will serve as secretary.

This office will seek to correct grievances growing out of discrimination against war workers because of their race, creed, color or national origin, in accordance with Executive Orders 8802 and 9346, Mr. Fleming explained.

G. JAMES FLEMING

The new director is and has been a field representative and a senior fair practice examiner with FEPC since establishment of the agency two years ago. Until two weeks ago, when his appointment was announced, Mr. Fleming was examiner in charge of FEPC's field office in Detroit.

MISS MILDRED GREENBLATT

The Philadelphia FEPC office is one of nine regional offices in process of being established. Others are scheduled for Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit, Atlanta, Kansas City, Mo., Dallas, and San Francisco.

FEPC Post Resigned By Barron

Defender
Chicago, Ill

AUG 14 1942

WASHINGTON—(ANP)— Harry I. Barren is out at the Fair Employment Practice committee.

The former chief of the compliance and analysis division, more recently renamed review and analysis, quit the post he had held since April, 1942, on Saturday.

The change does not exactly come as a surprise. Sometime ago before Lawrence W. Cramer, then secretary of the committee, had left and when it was generally known that he would be entering the army, the question arose as to who would succeed him in that position.

Since George M. Johnson, now assistant to the chairman, was Cramer's assistant, it was assumed that he ought to get the post. But a fear developed in certain quarters that it might have been handed to Barron. Actually, the committee was reorganized, Malcolm Ross was brought in from the National Labor Relations Board, and he and Johnson were given equal rank and similar titles.

Barron, an official of the Bureau of Jewish Employment Problems in Chicago before joining GEPC, had long differed with other members of the administrative organization on questions of techniques and phrases of policy. The feeling is that because of this doubts that the objectives of the committee were being adequately attained, he chose to resign. There are also those who infer that Barron suffered a diminutive in influence with Cramer's exiting, and so has been a bit disgruntled about the new order of things.

No official explanation was given for the resignation.

Kaiser In Hot Water Before FEP Probers

Defender
Chicago, Ill
1943

By HARRY McALPIN
(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON. — Henry Kaiser, the wizard shipbuilder, who keeps his ships floating out to salt water and his labor problems floating in hot water, was a visitor at the office of the Fair Employment Practice Committee last week. He asked for the conference with Chairman Francis J. Haas.

Though no comment was forthcoming as to the nature of the discussions, it is known that several of Kaiser's yards are involved in the West Coast dispute over the firing of several hundred Negroes who had refused to pay their dues in auxiliary unions set up by the AFL Boilermakers union specifically for Negro workers.

A formal complaint was filed with the FEPC week before last, citing the Kaiser yards specifically, for discriminations in upgrading Negroes and in using them at their maximum capacities. The complaint also hit against the auxiliary union scheme.

The matter is still pending settlement. There is a strong possibility that public hearings may be held on the West coast, possibly in San Francisco. The shipyard and union representatives have been asked to meet with FEPC representatives to discuss the problems.

Publicity Question

Complaints that the Federal Government was, in effect, practicing a form of discrimination in the conduct of its own anti-discrimination drive among employers have been made to the Fair Employment Practices committee, according to information gleaned from officials of that organization.

The protests in question have been directed against the FEPC's own procedure, said to have been dictated largely from the White House, whereby charges of race discrimination against the government as an employer—which are said still to be numerous in Washington—are required to be conducted in closed executive session, whereas allegations against private employers are conducted in public.

The objections have reached the point where members of the FEPC may take the matter to the President and ask him to put both Government and private employers in the same class and make them subject to the same procedures so far as conduct of the anti-discrimination drive is concerned.

Detroit Case

Both Mgr. Haas and George M. Johnson, assistant chairman, said that complaints against the practice had been mounting. They indicated their own lack of enthusiasm for it, apparently believing publicity itself is one of the strongest sanctions that can be used in putting down discriminatory practices in hiring anywhere.

Discussion of the subject arose between the FEPC officials and a group of newspaper men and women at a press conference when

Mr. Johnson disclosed that a complaint had been received from Detroit charging one of the governmental agencies domiciled there with refusal to upgrade a worker on account of creed. When a reporter asked for the names of the agency and the employe, Mr. Johnson declined to give them, saying the committee had established a definite policy against making public the details of charges of discrimination against the Government.

When pressed for the reason for such policy—which required the very reverse in cases involving private employers working on war contracts—Mr. Johnson at first said that it came under the President's directions against publicizing disagreements within the government as renewed soon after the episode involving Vice President Henry A. Wallace and Secretary of Commerce Jesse H. Jones. He added later that it had been the policy of the old committee since its birth. When a reporter pursued the matter further, Mr. Johnson finally related that it was laid down from the start by the White House itself.

Name Officials

The FEPC announced that Bartley C. Crum of San Francisco had been retained as chief counsel for the hearings, September 15 to 17, in which charges against 26 railroads and railway unions for discriminating against Negro workers are to be aired. Associated with Mr. Crum will be Charles A. Houston of Washington and Harold Stevens of New York City.

At the same time, the committee announced that its administrative departmental structure had been rounded out, and that numerous positions had been filled, lifting its total staff to 48. Under Mgr. Haas in the Washington office will be four divisions—administrative, field operations, review analysis and a hearings unit. Eventually the committee will have twelve regional offices, in the same cities as field officers of the War Manpower Commission.

The following personnel appointments were announced by Mgr. Haas:

Malcolm Ross of Vienna, Va., former director of information of the National Labor Relations Board, deputy chairman; George M. Johnson of Berkeley, Calif., former professor of law at Howard university, assistant chairman; Will Maslow of New York, former trial examiner for the National Labor Relations Board, chief of field operations; Clarence Mitchell of Baltimore, former assistant chief of the Negro Manpower Service, associate chief of field operations; Eugene Davidson of Washington, assistant chief of field operations; Theodore A. Jones of Chicago, administrative officer; George Crockett of Fairmont, W. Va., hearings examiner.

The following regional directors and associates have been appointed: New York, Edward Lawson; Philadelphia, G. James Fleming; Chicago, Elmer W. Henderson; San Francisco, Harry Kingman; Dallas, Texas, Carlos Casteneda.

Other offices which the committee will open, but to which no appointments have as yet been made, are: Cleveland, Detroit, Atlanta, St. Louis. It is expected that offices will be opened eventually at Minneapolis, Boston and Denver.

It was also announced that President Roosevelt will be the final arbiter on government policy for combating racial and religious discrimination in training and employment.

An operating agreement announced by the War Manpower Commission and the Fair Employment Practice Commitee called for cooperative action between the agencies but provided that where WMC Chairman Paul V. McNutt and FEPC Chairman Francis J Haas are unable to agree on policy, they will submit the disputes to the President for "final disposition."

Union Pacific Pledges Speedy Removal Of Bars

Southern Roads Still Adamant On Charges

WASHINGTON. — (ANP) — Counsel for the Union Pacific Railroad, in a surprise move Saturday, informed the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices that immediate steps would be taken to bring about the "speedy correction" of charges that the road had discriminated against Negroes, Mexicans and American citizens of Mexican descent.

The announcement provided the first rift in the solid front which the railroad companies, who had been charged by the government with violation of the Presidential Executive Order 9346. Hearings on the charges started here Thursday and were concluded Saturday.

JEFFERS IS PRESIDENT

In announcing that an investigation of the Union Pacific's employment policies would be immediately inaugurated, the lawyers appearing for the company contended that the charges were "wholly inconsistent with company policy."

William Jeffers, until recently federal rubber czar, is president of the Union Pacific.

The hearings were marked by the solid opposition of both the railroads and the big railroad brotherhoods to lowering the barriers against Negro workers. Sidney Alderman, counsel for the Southern Railway, who served as spokesman for the 22 carriers, reiterated the belief that if Negro workers were given equality of opportunity, the move would bring about a wave of riots and would expose Negro workers to all sorts of danger.

"ANOMALOUS POSITION"

Dr. Herbert R. Northrup, former member of the department of economics at Harvard and Cornell Universities and writer of numerous articles dealing with labor, in giving a general picture of the situation confronting Negro employes in the railroad industry, described it as an "anomalous position."

Dr. Northrup has spent much time doing investigating work in the field and dealing with problems coming within the purview of the FEPC. He was a member of the staff of the Carnegie corporation of New York's "Negro in America" survey, and wrote his Ph. D. thesis on this subject. He is the author of a forthcoming volume called "Organized Labor and the Negro." Presently he is on the staff of the National War Labor board.

"The Negro has become a pawn in industrial relations," Dr. Northrup stated, "Employers have used him to fight unions and to depress wages; unions have retaliated by attempting either to limit the employment of Negroes or by driving those already employed from the railroads."

CITES FIGURES

He cited censure figures to support his view and went on to show how, as a result of the spread of collective bargaining, the proportion of Negroes in the railroad industry has steadily declined since World War 1.

Dr. Northrup declared that the racial policies of the railway labor unions are unique and in no way typical of those of organized labor in general. "Of the 29 national unions which habitually discriminate against Negroes, 19 are found in the railroad industry," he testified. "This is in sharp contrast to the situation in most industries, e. g. iron and steel, automobiles, needle trades, where the dominant labor unions have made equality of all races a basic tenet of their policies, and have done much to improve the economic statue of Negroes working under their jurisdiction."

CONDEMNS RAIL BOARDS

A feature of Dr. Northrup's testimony was his condemnation of the Railway Labor act and its administration. He specifically attacked the allegation that this act is anything like the model labor law which it has been characterized. "No labor law can provide a 'model labor policy' if it is used as a means of economically disfranchising a minority race,' he declared. "Yet the Railway Labor act has served such a purpose."

In this vein, he attacked both the National (Railway) Mediation board and the National Railroad Adjustment board.

FEP Put On Spot In Coast Kaiser Case

Defender
Chicago, Ill.

AUG 14 1943

By HARRY McALPIN
(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON, D.C.—The question whether auxiliary union lodges, as established by the AFL International brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Shipbuilders and Helpers of America in the Kaiser Shipyards and other west coast shipbuilding companies, is in violation of Executive Order 9346 outlawing discrimination has been put square before the Fair Employment Practice Committee by the Shipyard Negro Organization for Victory and the Portland, Oregon, branch of the N.A.A.C.P., in a complaint and request for redress filed last week.

The complaint asks that such auxiliary lodges be declared in violation of the Executive Order, in which the President declares it to be the duty "of all employers, including the several federal departments and agencies, and all labor organizations, in furtherance of this policy and of this order, to eliminate discrimination in regard to hire, tenure, terms or conditions of employment, or union membership because of race, creed, color, or national origin."

The complaint asks further that the FEPC hold hearings in Portland to establish the facts generally and specifically alleged that reference to racial discrimination in employment, upgrading and union membership; and that pending final determination, the Kaiser company be instructed to reinstate with back pay all Negro employees who have been dismissed on the pretext they are not in good standing with the union.

300 Fired

The complaint has grown out of the dismissal of some 300 Negro shipyard workers about July 14, on the pretext, says the complaint, that they were not in good standing with the union.

Local Lodges 72 and 401 of the Boilermakers, which have consistently refused membership to Negroes, have set up auxiliary lodges restricted to "colored male" persons only.

The auxiliary Lodge No. 32-A, says the complaint, is alleged to have been chartered in December, 1942. Up to the present time, however, no officers or trustees have been elected or appointed for the auxiliary, no meetings have been held, no charter has been delivered to the alleged membership, and the auxiliary remains wholly without organization in fact or in law.

The auxiliary lodge scheme is exposed as a subterfuge for limiting and restricting the employment of Negro workmen and for depriving them of economic security, equal participation in collective bargaining, and the rights, privileges and benefits which are incidents of membership in the subordinate lodges of the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, which holds a closed shop contract with the shipyards.

No Voice Or Vote

The auxiliary lodges are subject to suspension by the international president, their members have no voice or vote in the quadrennial convention. The business agent, who is elected by and responsible solely to the members of the subordinate lodge, is also the agent for the auxiliary. Changes of classification of Negro members of the auxiliary lodge from helper to the higher paying grade of mechanic must be approved by the all-white supervising lodge. The age limits and participation on grievance committees differs in the auxiliary lodge from the subordinate lodge.

The complaint filed with the FEPC also outlines discriminations directly imposed by the Kaiser company. Among them are refusal of the company to utilize the services of qualified Negroes at their maximum skills, solely because of their race and color. No Negroes are hired in the sheet metal shop, employment has been denied a qualified draftsman in the drafting department, and no Negroes serve as foremen.

The question involving the union looms as of prime importance. Close watch is being kept on the FEPC to see whether it will take a firm and unequivocal stand, or be frightened by the character, size and influence of the Boilermakers Union.

It was this same union, and the machinists on the west coast, who were responsible for the recent congressional action tying the hands of the National Labor Relations Board in dealing with union contracts in force more than three months. The CIO had challenged the bargaining rights of the AFL unions in some of the shipyards on the basis that closed shop contracts, particularly in the Kaiser Yards, had been entered into before any workers were employed in the plants, and hence the workers had not been given an opportunity to select their bargaining agent. Fearing action on the part of the NLRB, the AFL unions lobbied for and obtained an amendment in congress prohibiting any disturbance of a contract in force for three months or more.

"Railroad Hearings A Landmark" Says A. Philip Randolph

OCT 2 1943

Guardian
Boston, Mass.

NEW YORK—A. Philip Randolph, international president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, stated that after listening to the statements by counsel for the railroad, and Special Counsel, Bartley C. Crum for FEPC, and the testimony of colored locomotive firemen and others, he considers that the railroad hearings were of far reaching significance.

The leader of the March, On Washington Movement said that the greatest lesson that the railroad hearings hold for colored people, is that colored people possess the power to bring about profound and constructive economic, political, and social changes themselves; because had it not bee nfor the March On Washington Movement, the President's Executive Order 8802 would not have been issued, under which FEPC was established, and the railroad hearings would not have been held.

The hearings provide the basis for FEPC to halt not only the elimination of colored firemen from the railroad industry, Randolph stated, but also the elimination of colored brakemen, flagmen, switchmen, and the policy of confining colored railroad workers to a blind-alley, dead-end employment condition under which promotion and the recognition of their seniority rights are unheard of and impossible.

OCT 2 1943

Randolph expressed the conviction that the FEPC can "issue cease and desist orders that will disestablish and abolish forthwith the agreement between the Southeastern Carriers Conference Committee and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Enginemen and Firemen" and thus end the discriminatory practices in the railroad industry. He calls for the mobilization of colored and white sentiment behind FEPC, to give it the moral force that will command respect for its orders and instructions.

FEPC Orders Public Probe Of AFL Union

SEP 4 1943

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 2—FEPC hearings on discrimination against Negro railroad workers by 26 companies and six railroad unions will be extended for an additional day from September 16 to 18 because of the large number of witnesses to be heard, announced Father Francis J. Haas, FEPC chairman, at his regular bi-monthly press conference held here last Saturday.

At the same time Father Haas stated that a public hearing of complaints against the AFL Boilermakers' union on the West Coast had been ordered by the FEPC at its committee meeting Saturday.

SATISFIED WITH TRANSIT CASE

SEP 4 1943

Other committee developments included announcement that the FEPC was satisfied that in the Capitol Transit company case, both the company and the union were taking necessary steps to comply with the President's Executive Order against discrimination, and that the International Union of Operating Engineers, AFL building trades group, had reaffirmed in writing to the committee its pledge not to discriminate against Negro workers qualified for membership. The committee also dismissed, as lacking in merit, the complaint made against the United Fruit company, whose president, Samuel Zemurray, is an industry member of FEPC.

Action in the Boilermakers' case came after a report to the committee by the assistant chairman, George Johnson, who returned from California last week, after an unsuccessful conference with representatives of the union. An estimated 300 Negro war workers have been fired from important shipbuilding work at the Henry Kaiser shipyards in Vancouver, Washington, because they refuse to pay dues into a Jim-Crow auxiliary union set up by the Boilermakers.

SEP 4 1943

DISMISS UNITED FRUIT CHARGES

At present attempts are being made to put the Negro workers—now away from vital war work for some five weeks, despite the telegraphic request of FEPC for their reinstatement—back to work pending ultimate settlement of the case in the public hearing.

In an official statement concerning the complaint against the United Fruit company, Father Haas stated:

"In the course of its investigation of this case, the committee found that about 25 Negro officers are presently serving in the Merchant Marine and that the total number of qualified Negro officers, including the 25 afloat, is less than 50. Due to the shortening of training time for officers from 36 to 18 months, more qualified Negro officers are becoming available.

FEPC

The committee found that the United Fruit company has employed unlicensed personnel without regard to color. With respect to the licensed personnel, the committee has received assurances from the United Fruit company that any qualified officer meeting the requirements of the War Shipping Administration will be employed without regard to race, creed, color or national origin."

Regional FEPC To Probe Bias; Surface Lines Hit

SEP 26 1943

Discriminatory practices by employers and unions and failure of the Chicago Surface lines to hire Negro motormen will be numbered among the complaints to be investigated by the regional office of the FEPC, according to Elmer W. Henderson, regional director of the committee, Wednesday at the opening of his new office in the war agencies building.

Chicago Bee
Chicago, Illinois

ELMER W. HENDERSON.

Though the regional head declined to discuss details or to state the number of complaints being investigated, he said all hearings will be public. He said that when discrimination complaints are received, "every effort" will be made to settle them first through negotiations and conferences. The cases of recalcitrant employers, unions or agencies will be referred after a fact-finding hearing to the committee in Washington or will be dealt with on a regional basis.

Henderson, a native of Baltimore, completed his education at the University of Chicago.

Charles H. Houston, Washington Attorney, Named FEPC Counsel

Washington Tribune
Washington, D. C.

AUG 1943

The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice announced appointment of Bartley C. Crum of San Francisco as Chief in its forthcoming hearings, September 15, 16, and 17, on alleged employment discrimination by a number of railroad companies.

Associated with Mr. Crum will be Charles A. Houston of Washington and Harold Stevens of New York City.

In hearings in the railroad cases scheduled by the former FEPC and subsequently cancelled, Henry Epstein of New York City had been engaged as committee counsel. He was offered the position by the present committee.

At the same time, the committee announced that its administrative and departmental structure has been established and that many positions have been filled. Under Chairman Francis J. Haas, in its Washington office, there will be four divisions: administrative, field operations, review and analysis, and a hearings division. Eventually the committee will have 12 original offices, located in the same cities as the War Manpower Commission's regional offices. Only nine of the offices chosen for an expected density of operation will be immediately established.

President Clears Its Status

Declares Executive Order Mandatory

In War Effort

WASHINGTON, D. C.—President Roosevelt has ruled that provisions obligating contractors not to discriminate against employees or applicants for employment because of race, creed, color, or national origin are mandatory and should be incorporated in all government contracts. The President's ruling was revealed in a letter to Attorney General Biddle and released by the White House on Saturday, November 6.

The letter discussed a recent opinion of Comptroller General Lindsay Warren that the obligation imposed by Executive Order 9346 upon contracting agencies to incorporate a non-discrimination clause in each contract awarded by them "was not a mandatory requirement, but merely a directive."

Following delivery of the comptroller general's opinion on October 7, the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice requested a interpretation of the scope and meaning of Executive Order 9346.

TEXT OF LETTER

The full text of the President's letter follows:

My dear Mr. Attorney General:

You have brought to my attention the Comptroller General's opinion holding that Executive Order 9346 is directory and not mandatory in requiring insertion in all government contracts of a provision obligating the contractor not to discriminate against any employee or applicant for employment on account of race, creed, color, or national origin; and requiring the contractor to include similar contractural provisions in all sub-contracts.

NOV 13 1943

There is no need for me to reiterate the fundamental principles underlying the promulgation of the Executive Order, namely, that the prosecution of the war demands that we utilize fully all available manpower and that the discrimination by war industries against persons for any of the reasons named in the Order is detrimental to the prosecution of the war and is opposed to our national democratic purposes.

I realize the [illegible] of the Comptroller General to [illegible] payment on government contracts in which these provisions have not been included where there is no doubt as to whether the Order is mandatory. I therefore wish to make it perfectly clear that these provisions are mandatory and should be incorporated in all government contracts. The Order should be so construed by all government contracting agencies.

Franklin D. Roosevelt

November 5, 1943.

'CLEARED UP, ONCE AND FOR ALL"

The comptroller general's opinion was given to James F. Byrnes, director of war mobilization.

Stephen T. Early, the President's press secretary, said he believed the subsequent action of the President "clears it up once and for all."

BACKGROUND OF MATTER

The comptroller general's opinion was given under date of October 7 in a case in which the Southwestern Bell Telephone Company of Kansas City, Mo., refused to execute a contract containing a clause forbidding discrimination against any worker on account of race, color, creed or national origin.

NOV 13 1943

The company's refusal, Mr. Warren held, was no barrier to a contract because the President's Executive Order (No. 9346) was only a "directive" and was not binding upon contracting officers.

Meanwhile, Malcolm Ross, newly appointed chairman of the FEPC, announced Tuesday morning that the Southwestern Bell Telephone Company of Kansas City, Mo., had signed a government contract containing the "no discrimination" clause ordered by Executive Order No. 9346.

The action came after President Roosevelt, in reply to the recent ruling by Comptroller General

Warren, emphasized that the clause was an order and not a "directive" as Warren had interpreted it in a letter to James F. Byrnes, director of the Office of War Mobilization, on October 7.

Warren had ruled that the President's order could be disregarded where the contractor refuse to sign a contract carrying the anti-discrimination clause, and the government could not obtain vital goods or service elsewhere.

FDR Weighs FEP Fate After Ruling Of Warren

Defender
Chicago, Ill. NOV 6 - 1943

NOV 6 1943

By HARRY McALPIN
(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON, D.C.—The FEPC hot potato was again back in the lap of President Roosevelt this week.

The much-battered, much-malinged and much-debated committee set up to crack down on job discrimination was again in deep water as a result of a concerted offensive by wily Dixie politicians. Through a slick maneuver by Assistant President James F. Byrnes, "white hope" of the South for the Presidency, the Fair Employment Practice Committee was clipped of all power through a ruling by an obscure Carolina ex-congressman, now comptroller general.

He is Lindsay Warren, who on the request of Byrnes ruled that the President's Executive Order 9346 (formerly 8802) is directive only and not mandatory. In effect the ruling accuses the President of not meaning what he said when he created the FEPC.

Wide Protest

The dictatorial effort of the Bourbon bloc to upset the President's order brought a widespread movement of protest from minority groups and it is believed that President Roosevelt will step in to get Attorney General Francis Biddle to countermand Comptroller General Warren's edict by issuing a ruling of his own upholding the FEPC powers.

Opening the way for such a step was the immediate request by FEPC Chairman Malcolm Ross to Biddle to explain "the scope and meaning of the executive order."

The ruling, handed down by Warren, goes into lengthy detail to prove that when the President used such language as "it is hereby ordered," he did not mean it. And when he said "all contracting agencies of the government of the United States SHALL INCLUDE IN ALL CONTRACTS . . . a provision obligating the contractor not to discriminated . . . because of race, creed, color or national origin . .," he was only playing with words.

Appeasement Move

In effect, Warren has ruled that employers who put their prejudices ahead of the war effort and refuse to contract with the government for necessary war services, unless the non-discrimination clause is removed, are to be appeased by removing the clause — and he, Warren, will authorize payment of government funds under such contracts, the orders of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

Nine days after this ruling was made on October 7, the Director of the Division of Central Administrative Services, on October 16, sent a directive to his field agents informing them of it. Contracts have already been negotiated with the clause excluded.

But this is not a feud between the Comptroller General and the President. It has more of the earmarks of teamwork between the Comptroller General and the assistant president, James Byrnes, director of the Office of War Mobilization and former Senator from South Carolina prior to becoming an associate justice of the Supreme Court. Byrnes is the South's "white hope." The southern bloc is grooming him as a candidate for the presidency.

NOV 6 1943

White House Knew Nothing

It was Byrnes, in his capacity of liaison officer of the Office for Emergency Management in the executive office of the President, who asked for the ruling from Warren. And despite the fact that Byrnes practically sits on the President's knee, Stephen Early, press secretary of the President, said the White House knew nothing of the ruling as of last Wednesday —three weeks after it was issued.

The occasion for the ruling was the refusal of the Southwestern Bell Telephone Company of Kansas City, Mo., to furnish telephone service to the federal government in Kansas City if the contract for such war service carried the non-discrimination clause ordered by the President. Byrnes wrote Warren saying the OEM wanted to know whether the Comptroller General would authorize payments under the contract for telephone service if the non-discrimination clause were left out.

NOV 6 1943

Warren said yes, of course he would — the prejudices of an employer transcend the orders of the President. Then he set out to prove that when the President says he orders, he doesn't mean he orders; and that when he says "shall" he doesn't mean "must."

Hidden From FEPC

But neither Warren nor Byrnes thought the matter important enough to confer with the FEPC, or even to advise the committee of the action afterwards. The committee learned of the ruling from another government agency almost three weeks after it was issued. The ruling was dated October 7, 1943 — the same day on which Monsignor Francis J. Haas resigned as chairman of the FEPC to become Bishop of Grand Rapids, Mich. The coincidence of these dates, and Haas' leaving before the very important Railroad discrimination case decision was reached, have caused some "eyebrow raising."

The matter was not a hidden secret to the industrialists, however. Almost a week before the FEPC had heard of the ruling, the full text was published in the Labor News — a reactionary paper published for management to tell them how to handle labor. Labor News is put out by the same group which edits the United States News — David Lawrence and his crowd.

The text of the ruling concludes with this statement: "Accordingly, it is concluded that the paragraph of Executive Order No. 9346 involving the inclusion in government contracts of a provision obligating the contractor not to discriminate against any employee or applicant for employment because of race, creed, color, or national origin, and requiring him to include a like provision in sub-contracts, was intended only as a directive to the contracting agencies of the government, so that FAILURE TO INCLUDE SUCH A PROVISION WILL NOT RENDER VOID an otherwise proper contract or RENDER OBJECTIONABLE otherwise proper payments thereunder."

Clause Never Tested

This will no doubt be construed as an open invitation to war contractors to disregard the executive order, not only in the negotiation of a contract, but in adherence to such a clause in contracts already negotiated, or even to the very principle of non-discrimination.

Though the non-discrimination clause in these contracts had never been tested. there was always the possibility that FEPC might call upon a government agency to withhold payment from a contractor who violated the clause. This threat was the only sanction the FEPC seemed to possess to get its orders and directives enforced. Warren's ruling, if allowed to stand, will reduce the FEPC to a mere fact-finding agency and a laughing stock to employers.

Negroes are anxious to learn from the President just what he did mean. They want to know whether Warren has spoken the President's mind or broken the President's good faith!

'Sweaty Hands' Prevent Hiring Of Negro Girls

Defender
Chicago, Ill.
NOV 6 - 1943

WASHINGTON.—Convinced by representatives of the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee that the reason for their rejection of Negro women employees had no basis in fact, officials of a large Eastern war plant relaxed their barriers and are now hiring Negroes, a report filed with FEPC headquarters here this week revealed.

NOV 6 1943

Investigation by the regional FEPC office into the policies of the company which rejected 100 Negro girls, while accepting more than 300 of the 500 white girls referred to them by the U. S. Employment Service over a two-months period, brought from the management the explanation that the jobs required handling of small mechanisms and that the Negroes were rejected because they "all had sweaty hands."

However, when FEPC findings revealed that the "test" for "sweaty hands" was superficial the company admitted the possibility of error in its belief and promptly ordered its supervisory and personnel staff to eliminate racial considerations in employment.

Latin American labor sources expressed their disapproval this week of appointment of Samuel Zemurray, president of the United Fruit Company and recently appointed industrial member to the FEPC, to a key office of Economic Warfare post.

At the time that the "banana king" was appointed to FEPC, information available on him was that he was a member of the board of directors of the Atlas Corporation and Tulane University, and that some of his friends in New Orleans said he was a "swell fellow."

Unions Opposed

The labor sources of South America this week, however, according to PM newspaper, "cite the long struggle of seamen and Latin farm workers to improve their conditions under the banana boat and plantation system typified by United Fruit."

"They assert," the report continues, "that an examination of United Fruit's labor record in Central and South American countries, where it has extensive holdings, shows a steady resistance to collective bargaining and other social legislation."

Mr. Zemurray was appointed a principal consultant to OEW, together with Arthur A. Allan, executive vice-president of United Fruit.

FEP Assured Funds But Still Stalls On Action

Chicago Defender —
Chicago, Illinois

WASHINGTON — What threatened to be a possible death-knell of the Fair Employment Practice committee (FEPC) has been dispelled by the lifting of restrictions on the use of the President's emergency war funds. The committee may now survive by receiving money for operating through the President's war emergency fund.

Earlier action of the Congress had threatened to limit the use of the President's funds to the War, Navy and State Departments and the Office of Strategic Services. Had this restriction remained, the FEPC would have had to appear before the Congress for funds to operate. In the present anti-administration, anti-racial attitude of the Congress, led by the Republicans and the southern bloc, it is doubtful whether the FEPC could have run the gauntlet successfully. Any proposal for funds would have been subject to point of order on the ground that the purposes to be carried out by the appropriation are not authorized by law. This is because the FEPC is a creature of Executive Order and not of legislation.

JUL 3 1943

In the meantime, FEPC remains static for lack of a committee to work with Father Francis J. Haas, recently appointed chairman. Father Haas has been requested by telegram to meet with a delegation of representatives of interested organizations to discuss the future of the FEPC.

The telegram reads: "Disturbed at delay in rescheduling railroad discrimination hearings and reorganization FEPC. Also troubled by government acceptance Mobile compromise in violation Executive Order 8802. Organizations which conferred with Messrs. McNutt and Biddle February 19 on strengthening FEPC request an early conference with you for frank discussion future FEPC."

The telegram was signed by Roger Baldwin, Mrs. Maudelle B. Bousefield, Dr. Warren Brown, Mrs. Dorothy K. Funn, Lester Granger, Abner Green, Dr. Willard Johnson, Morris Milgram, Martin Popper, A. Philip Randolph, and George I. Sanchez. All the signers were members of the group which was invited to confer with McNutt and Biddle last February.

'FEPC Not Out To Break Trade Unionism'--Ross

NOV 13 1943

~~Courier Pittsburgh Pa.~~

WASHINNGTON—Hearings and investigations conducted by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices should not be construed as an attack upon trade unionism, Malcolm Ross, chairman of the committee, said this week.

The purposes and very construction of the committee give evidence that labor is under no indictment, he pointed out.

EXPLANATION MADE

"No accomplished step of relationship betwen employer and union is in any wise being subjected to inquiry unless within that relationship, itself discrimination is practiced contrary to the Presidential order," declared the FEPC chairman.

The statement was made by the FEPC in connection with its announcement to hold hearings in Portland, Oregon, and Los Angeles to examine the complaints of several Negro shipyard workers who allege that limitations placed upon their union membership result in discrimination in the terms of their employment.

Mr. Ross said the committee recognizes the problem of internal affairs of trade unionism and "finds it advisable to make a statement concerning the FEPC's intervention into such matters."

Continuing, he said:

"In respect to the employee-employer relationship, now fixed by both legislative and cour action, no one wishing the stability of that relationship and the good health of democratic procedures would in any way disturb that balance of bargaining power. The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice stands four-square for collective bargaining as the approved and legal method of negotiating agreements and adjusting disputes between employers and employees. However, the question of what constitutes the bargaining rights of those who are discriminated against because of race, creed, color or national origin has been formally placed before the committee.

"Executive Order 9346 placed upon the committee the duty to eliminate discrimination in regard to union membership. The examination of complaints alleging that a form of union membership does, in fact, result in discrimination is an obligation upon the committee. Furthermore, Executive Order 9346 enjoins the committee to obtain the maximum employment of all available workers regardless of race, color, creed or national origin for the successful prosecution of the war."

Eventual solution of the problem of the hiring of Negroes to operate trolleys and buses by the Capital Transit Co. is foreseen by Father Francis J. Hass, chairman of the President's Fair Employment Practises Committee.

Father Haas announced the union, company and committee were reaching agreement although he would not disclose the nature of the talks. He said they all were agreed on plans to promote Negroes in the employ of the company.

Malcolm Ross, chairman of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, issued the following statement in behalf of the committee: "The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice is preparing to hold hearings in Portland, Ore., and Los Angeles, to examine the complaints of certain Negro shipyard workers who allege that limitations placed upon their union membership result in discrimination in the terms of their employment.

"Executive Order 9346 placed upon the committee the duty to eliminate discrimination in regard to union membership. The examination of complaints alleging that a form of union membership does, in fact, result in discrimination is an obligation upon the committee. Furthermore, Executive Order 9346 enjoins the committee to obtain the maximum employment of all available workers regardless of race, color, creed or national origin for the successful prosecution of the war.

When the 168th anniversary of the U. S. Marine Corps is observed on November 10, tribute will be paid for the second time to Negro recruits in this branch of the service.

Although the Marine Corps only began active training of Negro Marines on September 1, 1942, more than 8,500 of these recruits are now enrolled in the service. The first group of 1,200 Negro volunteers began training at Camp LeJune, New River, N. C., and six months later on March 1, the first Negro Marines were on active duty in the Far Pacific. Since 1921, November 10 has been observed as the birthday of the Marine Corps.

Railroad Hearings To Open Next Week

Defender
Chicago, Ill.

SEP 11 1943

By HARRY McALPIN
(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON. — Barring mishaps, last minute White House cancellation, or a miracle of reform on the part of companies and unions, the long awaited and much juggled railroad hearings will be held in Washington next week, Sept. 15-18

That the hearings are held at all will mark a signal victory for united and collective action by Negro groups.

The Fair Employment Practice Committee is tackling a herculean task. Like little David against Goliath, it is pitting its small powers against the strength of one of the giants of the industrial world, the railroad industry; and against the strong, vicious and closely organized railroad brotherhoods. Its only weapons are right, public opinion, and Presidential support. It is assured of the first two, but it will need all three if it is to emerge victorious.

The railroads summoned to appear at the public hearings include the Atlantic Coast Line, Atlanta Joint Terminals Baltimore 'and Ohio, Baltimore and Ohio Chicago Terminal, Central Railroad of Georgia, Chesapeake and Ohio, Chicago and Northwestern, Georgia Railroad, Gulf-Mobile and Ohio, Illinois Central, Jacksonville Terminal Co., Louisiana and Arkansas, Louisville and Nashville, Missouri Kansas-Texas, New York Central, Norfolk Southern, Norfolk and Western, Pennsylvania Railroad, St. Louis-San Francisco, Seaboard Airline Railroad, Southern Railroad, Union Pacific, and Virginia Railroad Co.

Summon Many Unions

The unions include the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Order of Railway Conductors, System Federation No. 105, System Federation No. 103, International Association of Machinists, International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Ship Builders and Helpers, Sheet Metal Workers International Association, International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths, Drop Forgers and Helpers, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers and Station Employees, and the Brotherhood of Railroad Shop Crafts.

Charges of discrimination in employment because of race or color have been lodged against these 23 railroads and 14 labor unions. Some of the cases involve Mexican workers as well as Negroes.

FEPC investigations have resulted in a lengthy list of allegations involving agreements between railroads and unions whereby the effective utilization of qualified manpower has been hampered because of discrimination. Chief among the practices has been that of considering Negroes as "non-promotables," which allegedly has een done through agreements setting certain restrictions on the percentage of Negroes which may be employed in stipulated categories.

Non-Whites Decline

The FEPC has found through investigation that there has been a steady decline in the number of non-white railroad workers during recent years.

SEP 11 1943

Among other charges to be taken up at the hearings are: that railroads have refused to hire or upgrade Negroes ignored their seniority rights deprived them of full-time employment unfairly and maintained unfair differentials in wages paid Negroes for identical work as done by whites.

It is also charged that Negroes have been consistently barred from opportunities to work on diesel-engined locomotives, and have been refused employment or promotion to jobs as locomotive engineers, flagmen, carmen, machinists and helpers, boilermakers and helpers, hostlers, baggagemen, conductors, trainmen, pipefitters and helpers, crane operators, dining car stewards, clerks, road brakemen, coach painters, oilers, dining car supervisors, and car retarder operators.

Alleging collusion between railroads and unions, the FEPC charges in addition that some of the labor organizations consistently bar non-whites from membership or deny them the vote on organization policies, and that Negro grievances are not handled fairly when such grievances conflict with the interest of white workers.

Comptroller General Warren And The Southwestern Bell Telephone Company

From Jackson (Miss.) Advocate

Last week the Comptroller General of the United States, Mr. Lindsay Warren, former Congressman from North Carolina, all but abrogated the President's Order No. 9346, and rendered all but useless the past efforts, and possible future good to be accomplished by the Fair Employment Practice Committee, created by the President to put into effect the provisions of the order, when, in a ruling respecting the Southwestern Bell Telephone Company, he denied that the President was seriously intent upon all employers of labor, handling government contracts, a biding by the provisions of the order, and the ruling of the committee, which outlawed discrimination in the hiring of labor, based upon race, religon, and national origin.

From the beginning of the national emergency through to the declaration of war and up to the present day, Negroes, Jews, other racial and religious groups, comprising the nation's minorities have been chiefly concerned with the right and opportunity to acquire jobs in the ever expanding war industries of the nation; and the issuance of Executive Order 8802, the creation of the Fair Employment Practice Committee, and the subsequent issuance of Executive Order 9346, gave evidence that the President, the highest authority in the nation, was mindful of the justice of their cause and concern. It would be difficult indeed to over estimate the spiritual and moral affect of the issuance of these orders, and the creation of the Committee upon those racial and religious groups, long the almost defenseless victims of prejudice and discrimination in the nation. It would be equally difficult to determine the ill that would result to the spirit and morale of these groups should the order and the committee become permanently nullified and destroyed.

When Executive Order 8802 was issued and the Committee created, the action was everywhere regarded as placating the Negro of the nation whose protest over denial of job opportunity had become nationally embarrassing. Subsequently destroyed, but resurrected through Executive Order 9346, as the war progressed and the demands for more and more manpower developed, this action of the President grew in importance as affecting, not alone the spirit and morale of the Negro, but as regards the whole picture of national manpower; which is today faced with a number of serious dislocations because of the refusal of a large number of employers, as well as labor unions, to abide by the President's Order and the ruling of the Committee.

It seems all to evident, in the action of Comptroller Warren, that he has proceeded upon the assumption of authority and power greater than that of the President of the United States, the tragedy of which lies in the fact that both he and the Soutwestern Bell Telephone Company, seems to still regard FEPC and Executive Order 9346, as action taken primarily to placate the Negroes of the Nation, and regards neither of any important significance as they relate to the national manpower problem and the national war effort.

But the greater tragedy lies in the fact that the action of Comptroller Warren, and the Southwestern Bell Telephone Company, as symbols of two elements of power in the U. S., gives greater cause to those, both at home and among our allies, who, as victory nears, views with growing cynicism, our claims to the champions of those principles of universal brotherhood, and Christian democracy for which thousands of the flowers of the nation's youth have died, and for which other thousands will die before the end of the war.

FEPC Concludes Railroad Hearings; Decision Awaited

Washington Tribune
Washington, D. C.

Employment practices of 22 railroads and 14 unions were examined in public hearings by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Pracitces September 15 to 18, in the Indepartmental Auditorium, Fourteenth and Constitution Avenue, Northwest

The full seven-man committee heard testimony by more than three dozen witnesses, including experts on Axis propaganda who testified on the use made by the Axis nations of reported instances of discrimination against minority groups in the United States.

Following the conclusion of the hearings Saturday, Msgr. Francis J. Haas, chairman, announced that the committee would study the complete record before issuing its findings and directions.

Eighteen of the 22 railroads cited were represented by counsel as the hearings opened Wednesday morning, September 15. Although replies were received by the committee from seven of the unions involved, none was officially represented by counsel during the first three days of the hearings.

The Union Pacific Railroad Company on Friday indicated its willingness to conform to the principles of the President's Executive Order 8802 and 9346 when F. E. Baukhages, representing the company, issued a statement that the company was taking immediate steps to investigate the specific charges made against it.

An audience of more than 400 persons attended the hearings daily. Msgr. Haas, officially opened the proceedings Wednesday morning with a short prepared statement in which he declared that the committee, under the authority of Executive Order 9346, had "received complaints . . . and directed investigation of them and would seek to make a "finding of facts."

Special Counsel Crum, in his opening statement, asserted that the proceeding "is completely objective in intent" and that the aim is to "permit the hard facts to speak for themselves.

"But whether the facts hit management, labor or even the government," he declared, "they will be developed and no fact will be suppressed or distorted because of the impact or temporary damage to any or all of the three groups involved."

Crum also cited the recent announcement of Joseph B. Eastman, Director, Office of Defense Transportation, calling for the recruiting of railroad workers among women, Mexicans and war prisoners as illustrations of the seriousness of the shortage of needed labor. Acknowledging that the search for workers is "necessary and valid," he pointed out that "there exists an untapped pool of labor among thousands of able-bodied Negroes whose full skills, and some times even their services, are denied to the railroad industry by dint of a long and unhappy history of discrimination against Americans whose skins are darker than those of other Americans."

First witness Wednesday was Dr. Herbert R. Northrup, former member of the Department of Economics at Harvard and Cornell Universities, now on the staff of the National War Labor Board. He testified that he had devoted most of the last four years to intensive study of and field work in the railroad problems with which the hearings are concerned.

According to Dr. Northrup the Negro railroad worker's plight is both bad and unusual.

"He is denied a voice in nearly all railroad labor organizations, although the same group control his working conditions. He is barred from promotion and frequently is the victim of unfair wage differentials and is habitually discriminated against in railroad shops as well as in transport jobs."

The educator's testimony criticized certain unions, whose discriminatory policies, he declared, were "in no way typical of those of organized labor in general," and the railroad managements as well who, he said, "have used Negroes to weaken unions."

Sitting throughout the hearings were all the members of the FEPC: Msgr. Haas, chairman; Miss Sara Southall, Milton P. Webster, Samuel Zemurray, Boris Shishkin, P. B. Young, Sr., and John Brophy.

Asserts Fight Part Of War Effort; Accused Firms, Unions Make Replies

SEP 17 1943

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (ANP) — In an 18-page, strongly worded opening statement, Bartley C. Crum, chief council for the Fair Employment Practices committee's hearing into the railroad complaints, [illegible] down [illegible] objective, stoutly defended the committee's justification for going into the charges of discrimination at this critical moment, and firmly declared neither management, labor nor the government would be spared and that "no fact will be surpressed or distorted because of its impact or temporary damage to any or all of the three groups involved."

He stated that the responsibility in his hearing was to place before the committee evidence that Negroes in the United States have suffered "continuous, wholesale and increasing discrimination" in employment by most of America's largest railroad systems. He did not agree with those who considered it unwise to air the problem during the war, pointing to the experinece of World War 1 when the industry was strikebound for a week because Negroes were not getting equal pay for equal work. Public sentiment now as then will wrok for justice, he said.

HEARINGS PROCEED

WASHINGTON — (S N S)— The FEPC hearing opened Wednesday with indications that 18 of the 22 railway companies and seven of the 14 labor unions charged with discrimination would make replies. While spoke[illegible] for the [illegible]riers were present, counsel for none of the unions failed to respond when called upon during the Wednesday afternoon proceedings.

SEP 17 1943

STULIF[illegible]EADER[illegible]

"Today, the denial by the railroads of equality of job opportunity to Negroes and other minority groups stulifies our moral leadership of the democracies," Mr. Crum asserted, "provides strong material for axis propaganda against us as the evidence of the hearing will show, has created a situation which, at this very moment, is seriously hampering our effective prosecution of the war."

Later he added that if "we can break the shackles of special, artificial, and restrictive privilege" on the railroads of the United States, "we will have breached so strong a portion of that stout fortress ruled by blindly selfish prejudice, that other victories will follow with less effort and with even greater effect."

The loss in man-hours as an effect of race discrimination on the railroads, he said, is compounded by an "active" undercurrent of "bitterness" among Negroes and other minorities in an "apparently growing spirit of cynicism toward the whole war effort." He viewed the potential dangers here as evident to "every thinking person."

DIDN'T MENTION NEGROES

Mr. Crum recalled the announcement two weeks ago of Joseph B. Eastman, director of the Office of Defense Transportation, that the railroads of the country are being hampered by a serious lack of manpower, and in which Mr. Eastman called for the utilization of the services of women, Mexican workers and war prisoners. He deplored Mr. Eastman's failure to recognize the "untapped poll of labor among thousands of ablebodied Negroes."

In sharpening the axe for certain labor unions and operating brotherhoods of the railroad industry, the chief counsel emphasized that he was not attempting a "wholesale indictment of the trade union movement," and commented upon his awareness of the efforts which have been made among labor to eliminate discrimination.

Concluding his opening statement, Mr Crum said that "in doing justice to the Negro railroad wroker today, we shall both serve the practical war needs of our nation, and by the same stroke, we shall eliminate the evil of bigotry and discrimination at home, and give heart to the peoples of Europe and Asia who now look to us to see how well the pattern of democracy can be woven.

Regional FEPC Opens Here; To Probe Discriminations

Staff to Conduct Investigations In Seven States of Southeast

By WILLIAM FOWLKES, Jr.

Headquarters for the Atlanta regional office of the President's Committee on Fair Employment practice opened Tuesday at 525-28 Ten Forsyth Street Building.

Announcement was made to press representa[illegible] here by A. Bruce Hunt, white, [illegible]ed Regional Director, and in Washington by Malcolm Ross, Chairman of the Committee, who pointed out that Executive Order 9346 which was issued by the President on May 27, 1943, creating the Committee, provides that "the successful prosecution of the war demands the maximum employment of all available workers, regardless of race, creed, color or national origin."

The Atlanta office will investigate and correct grievances arising out of discriminatory employment practices based upon race, creed, coolr or national origin, and its jurisdiction will consist of war industries, labor unions and government departments and agencies in the states of Georgia, South Carolrina, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Tennessee.

The initial sta[illegible] the Atlanta regional office will co[illegible] of two Field Examiners, whose appointment will take place in the near future, and Regional Director Hunt.

Mr. Hunt said Tuesday that his office would commence operations by continuing the processing approximately 120 active cases which have been handled in the national office of the Committee in Washington.

Among complaints which the regional office will investigate are cases of "refusal to hire, refusal to train' refus[illegible] promote, refusal to register for [illegible] to a war job, discrimination in [illegible] or working conditions, refusal to a[illegible] to union membership or refusal [illegible] issue a work permit" all based on color discrimination and prejudicial action.

Complaints will be investigated to determine their validity and merit. Complaints must be substantiated by evidence, or they will not be investigated, Director Hunt pointed out. If complaints have no merit they will be dropped from the consideration of the office.

Director H[illegible] indicated [illegible]he intends to carry out teh letter and spirit o the President's Executive Order which created FEPC in his organizational setup. It is understood that colored applicants have been interviewed concerning work with the regional office.

The new director is a native of Virginia, where he has lived nearly all of his life. After obtaining a law degree at the University of Virginia, he practiced law in Roanoke, Va., until September, 1937, when he was appointed to the Review Staff of the National Labor Relations Board in Washington, D. C. In March 1939 he was appointed a Trial Examiner of the N. L. R. B., and later became a Principal Trial Examiner. As such Mr. Hunt presided over numerous hearings in the South. In May, 1943, he became Assistant Director of Disputes for the Tenth Regional War Labor Board and had charge of that Bo[illegible] Disputes Division in Los Angeles until his appointment as Regional Director by the Committee.

At his Tuesday press conference, he presented the picture of being fair-minded and impartial in answering the queries by representatives.

On the walls of his reception office hang two large copies of Executive Order 8802 and a poster of a white and a negro worker combining their technical skills above the caption "United We Win."

Executive Order 9346, under which the FEPC operates, reads in part as follows: "NOW, THERFFORE, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constittuion and statutes, and as President of the United States and Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, I do hereby reaffirm the policy of the United States that there shall be no discrimination in the employment of any person in war industries or in Government by reason of race, creed color, or national origin, and I do hereby declare that it is the duty of all employers, including the several Federal departments and agencies, and all [illegible] orga[illegible]s, in furtherance of this policy and of this Order, to eliminate discrimination in regard to hire, tenure, terms, or conditions of employment, of union membership because of race, creed, color, or national origin."

The Atlanta FEPC regional office is one of several established recently and designed for the better working of the anti-bias body.

NAACP Raps Columnist Opposed to FEPC's Work

Daily Worker
New York, N. Y.

OCT 2 1943

NEW YORK — Frank R. Kent, who in his syndicated column, "The Great Game of Politics," in the September 22 issue of the Washington Evening Star labeled the anti-discrimination activity of the Fair Employment Practice Committee as being in "conflict" with the war effort, drew a scathing blast from the NAACP in a telegram signed by Walter White, secretary.

[illegible]t, attacking the FEPC specifically on the score of the recent railroad hearings which revealed flagrant discrimination against colored persons in hiring policies, made the questionably wise statement that:

"It takes no particular insight to realize that any serious effort to force a change in the situation (of discrimination) would result in trouble of a serious kind," and scored colored people generally because, he said, they see in the war a chance to break down discrimination.

He insisted vehemently that this is a "poor time" to attempt the task of insuring equality in employment for colored workers.

Mr. White's telegram to Mr. Kent follows:

Text of White's Telegram

"Bias and plain distortion of fact in your column September 22, dealing with work of [illegible]esident's Committee on Fair [illegible]ployment Practice, and particularly the public hearings conducted by that committee on discrimination against colored employees by railroad industry, shocks and angers all right thinking Americans.

"At a time when the nation is in dire need of maximum utilization of existing manpower skills it is unthinkable that any responsible person would try to justify the brazen and systematic exclusion of qualified persons from employment or promotion in any craft or class on account of race and color.

"That a large part of the railroad industr[illegible] confesses it[illegible]uilty of such a [illegible]tice is [illegible]tter of public rec[illegible].

"Federal agencies charged with the duty of securing the most effective use of the nation's manpower would be derelict in their duty if they failed to bring any vital industry practicing such discrimination to account."

Jim Crow Plan Is Refuted By FEPC

WASHINGTON — (ANP)— Monsignor Francis J. Haas, chairman of the FEPC declared last week in a public statement that the committee was opposed to the segregation of Negro workers, and explained that the Mobile incident was a move to end a crisis in war production.

The FEPC head issued the statement in reply to the Employers Association of Chicago which had stated in its news bulletin that the agreement with the Alabama Drydock and Shipbuilding company of Mobile, which segregated Negro workers was a "compromise" granting employers the right to separate their Negro workers from whites.

"I am surprised that the settlement of a controversy last June at the Alabama. Drydock and Shipbuilding company. Mobile, Alabama has been interpreted to mean that the committee approves the segregation of colored and white as not a violation of the FEPC," said Father Haas.

"The committee accepts the accomplished fact of the settlement made to end a crisis in war production, except that it cannot approve the segregation of colored workers on the four ways and does not consider that as a precedent."

War "Widow" Refused Job Local FEPC's First Case

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

PHILADELPHIA

The complaint of Mrs. Ruby Lyles, 35, of 1918 N. Eleventh Street, was the first case handled by the local branch of the FEPC, which opened offices Monday in the Stephen Girard Building, 21 S. Twelfth Street.

Mrs. Lyles, who answered an advertisement in a local paper, asking for women drivers for army trucks was the first to appear at the designated place.

She was not given an application, nor were her qualifications asked. Truck driving is no novelty to her, as she has been driving cars and trucks for the past six years.

Her husband, Cpl. Talmadge Lyles, was inducted into the army in August, 1941, and her daughter, Miss Cleo Smith, 20, is awaiting her call to assume duties with the WAC.

Southern Roads Will Ignore Fair Employment Unit Fiat

Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13.—(U.P.) —Sixteen Southern railway carriers today repudiated orders of the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee to halt discrimination against negro employes as unconstitutional and evocative of chaos in the transportation industry.

The FEPC discriminatory findings against the carriers and seven labor unions were announced Nov. 18 after Mr. Roosevelt had clarified his order setting up the committee by holding that its orders were mandatory.

Committee Chairman Malcolm Ross replied to the carriers' charges, asserting the companies were trying to undermine the committee's public standing by "viewing with alarm alleged pretentions of negroes to be engineers and conductors."

"The plain fact," he added, "is that the issue is dormant and could remain so if the railroads offered justice [illegible] negro [illegible] men in the c[illegible]ations where reason and public policy both urge it. . . . We may not be able to wipe out discrimination overnight but where manpower needs are at stake we can and shall try."

DEC 14 1943

In a letter to the committee the carriers charged the orders lacked constitutional authority, violated the railway labor act and "gravely and irreparably impair the whole war effort." The signers were the Atlantic Coast Line, Atlanta Joint Terminals, Central of Georgia, Georgia Railroad, Jacksonville Terminal, Louisville and Nashville, Norfolk Southern, Frisco, Seaboard, Southern, Chesapeake and Ohio, Gulf, Mobile and Ohio; Norfolk and Western; Illinois C[illegible]l, Ya[illegible]d Mississippi [illegible]y, and [illegible] and Ship Island.

DEC 14 1943

They said that under the railway labor act railroads "are entirely without power to dictate to their employes . . . or to effect any changes in agreements" reached with union and that any attempt "to promote negroes to locomotive engineers or conductors would inevitably disrupt their present peaceful and cooperative relations with their employes."

Such compliance "would antagonize the traveling and shipping public served by them, would substitute conditions of chaos . . . would result in stoppages of transportation and would most gravely and irreparably impair the whole war effort of the country," they added.

They said "the undersigned railroads submit that your committee was and is wh[illegible] without constitu[illegible] and legal jurisdiction and power to make the issue the directives which it made and issued, and for this reason the said directives are without legal effect."

Marcantonio Moves to Make [illegible]EPC Permanent

Daily Worker
New York, N. Y.

First step toward forcing House consideration of a bill to give the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice full statutory powers was taken this week by Representative Vito Marcantonio, president of the International Labor Defense.

Mr. Marcantonio on Nov. 4, filed a resolution to discharge the Judiciary Committee from consideration of his bill HR 1732, which would set up the FEPC with powers similar to those of the National Labor Relations [illegible], and provide penalties for [illegible] who discriminate in employment [illegible] of race, color or creed.

NOV 8 1943

After this resolution has been before the Rules Commitee for one week, if that group does not take favorable action upon it, Mr. Marcantonio announced, he will file a discharge [illegible]ion, and open a campaign to secure the signatures of 218 members of the H[illegible] of Representatives to force consideration. This procedure is the same that was followed in the successful blasting of the antipoll tax bill from the Judiciary and Rules Committee files, bringing it out, and securing its passage in the House of Representatives.

"Enact[illegible] my bill," Mr. Barcanto[illegible] said, "[illegible]ettle the question once and for [illegible] will put teeth in the FEPC and make it impossible for the Comptroller General or anyone else to prevent full enforcement of anti-Jim Crow regulations in employment in war industries.

Storm Brews As FEPC Nips Probe On Southern Railroad Work Bias

JAN 16 1943

Postponement of the hearings on discriminatory practices of Southern railroads against Negro firemen first reported to PV last Saturday by its Washington correspondent and confirmed Monday by official announcement from Manpower Czar Paul McNutt in a press conference, has stirred up a tempest which may rock the entire nation. Immediate result of the action is blocking of what was expected to be a major blow at the prejudice in employment problems of the country.

The hearings were set for January 25-27 in Washington. Attorney Henry Epstein, former NYState solicitor general, had been retained by the FEPC as counsel for the body against the Southern railroads. Had the companies involved been found guilty, repercussions would have been far-reaching.

PV contacted Atty. Epstein Monday. He said he could make no comment. Tuesday he announced his resignation as FEPC counsel.

Monday, McNutt told his Washington press conference, to whom he had promised an official statement, that the decision to postpone (he insisted they had not been cancelled outright) the hearings was unanimously approved by members of the FEPC.

CONFIRM OR DENY STATEMENT

PV immediately wired each of the seven FEPC, Dr. Malcolm MacLean, William Green, Milton C. Webster, Earl Dickerson, Philip Murray, Mark Etheridge and David Sarnoff (Sarnoff is understood to have resigned but no official announcement has yet been made) asking each to confirm or deny McNutt's statement.

Dr. MacLean and Dickerson had replied up to Tuesday evening. MacLean wired: "I approved postponement railway hearing."

Dickerson telegraphed: "I have not approved postponement of railway hearings. If the hearings have been definitely postponed, the act of postponement was done by Chairman McNutt. The committee has not acted formally or otherwise on the question based upon facts available to me at the moment. As one individual member of the committee, I am opposed to the postponement."

Federated Press (FP), the labor news service, reported Tuesday that FEPC members had indicated determination to seek a showdown with McNutt. A meeting before Jan. 25 will be urged, FP reported, by committeemen who view McNutt's action as a challenge to FEPC's power. Failure to effect clearing up of the matter, it was hinted, may bring resignation of the group as a body.

MEADE TO MAKE INQUIRY

Senator James Meade of NY, contacted in Washington by phone, said Tuesday he would see McNutt, find out who called the postponement and why. Meade also said he would contact his NY colleague, Senator Robert Wagner to work out what further action could be taken.

From other, unofficial, sources in the capital, it was pointed out that McNutt's action was a reversal of former statements from both himself and the White House. In correspondence McNutt has said he could not order hearings, that the Committee itself ordered them when the need was discovered.

At the time the FEPC was placed under the War Manpower Commission (WMC) a statement from the White House declared that FEPC would be more powerful than ever, that under WMC it could function more freely than before.

JAN 16 1943

Capital rumors about conferences and congressional influences rampant in Washington and the White House itself were many over the weekend. By Monday, when McNutt made his announcement officially, many quarters, recalling McNutt's frequent press declarations that he was responsible to his "Boss" (meaning the President) promptly assumed the cancellation order had its origin directly from the executive mansion.

SECOND HEARING CANCELLED

This is the second important hearing cancelled with no reason being given. The first was in El Paso, Tex., believed to have been killed by the state department.

Although no official confirmation could be obtained, it was reported Tuesday that hearings planned for February in Detroit have also been cancelled. Ralph Bard, assistant secretary of the navy, has written to McNutt, asking that the Detroit hearings be put off on the grounds that the proceedings would interfere with the navy's program of having Negroes hired.

In NYC, report of the cancellation resulted in a meeting early Monday of Warren Banner, National Urban League research director; Edward Lewis, NYUrban League executive secretary; Max Yergan, National Negro Congress head; Ferdinand Smith, National Maritime Union secretary; Joe Ford, People's Committee executive secretary, and PV Editor A. Clayton Powell jr. with Wendell Willkie. Plans were discussed at this meeting, it was admitted, but details were withheld temporarily.

New Masses
New York, N. Y.

Gunning for FEPC

"THE fight on discrimination is the main front of the home fight against fascism." This sentence appeared in NEW MASSES two weeks ago as part of a statement by John Beecher, New York Regional Representative of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice. And this sentence was the key idea of President Roosevelt's Executive Order 8802, setting up the FEPC.

JAN 26 1943

But pressure of various employer groups, poll-taxers, and defeatists is endangering this major front. Succumbing to this pressure, Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt canceled the FEPC hearing on job discrimination in the railroad industry which was scheduled for Jan. 25. This move was described last week by Max Yergan, president of the National Negro Congress and a contributing editor of this magazine, as "a serious capitulation to Governor Dixon of Alabama, to the white supremacists, and to other reactionary forces who have seen the FEPC not only as a threat to the citadel of Jim-Crowism but also as a major contribution to the unity of the Negro people with their fellow Americans in the national front for victory over fascist enslavement."

The same firm position has been taken by the CIO, the Negro Labor Victory Committee, and several other win-the-war groups. Henry Epstein, former attorney general of New York, resigned as lawyer for the FEPC when he learned that the hearings were to be canceled.

JAN 26 1943

It is imperative that these hearings be held by the FEPC, particularly in Detroit and in the Southwest. The FEPC must be restored as an autonomous committee within the executive offices of the President. On the whole domestic front, there is no issue that calls for more determined work by united front committees to mobilize public opinion in support of the FEPC and the administration's declared anti-discrimination policy.

FEPC Puts Off RR Probe

Jan. 15, 1943

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 10.—The FEPC scheduled hearing on discrimination in employment by the railroads has been postponed indefinitely it was learned here last week. The hearing involving the powerful Big Four Brotherhoods of railroad organizations was originally slated for November, then was put off to January 18.

The hearing was considered to be filled with dynamite as it involved the powerful A. F. L. unions, the race question, and the opposition of the South. Considerable pressure is believed to have been brought to bear to prevent the FEPC from taking up the issue. At present Negroes are excluded from thousands of jobs in the nation's great transportation system.

Paul V. McNutt, chairman of the War Manpower Commission, laid the delay to efforts to thrash out matters with Southern railroads.

Committee Wants 300 Negroes Returned to Jobs

JUL 27 1943

Washington, July 26 (AP)—The Fair Employment Practice Committee announced today it would request reinstatement of about 300 Negroes discharged from shipyards in "three West Coast areas" pending investigation of complaints they had been victims of racial discrimination.

Chairman Francis J. Haas said there had been complaints that the Negroes were discharged by five companies having yards in California and Washington because, he told his press conference, they had refused to pay union dues on the ground that they were refused outright union membership and put into auxiliary locals for Negroes.

He declined to name the companies or specify the localities, but said the union was the boilermakers' union, which F.E.P. staff members identified as an A.F.L. affiliate.

Detroit Unions, Negro Groups Fight Hitch in FEPC Hearings

NEW YORK N.Y. "DAILY WORKER"

By Tom Dombrowski JAN.16, 1943

(Special to the Daily Worker)

DETROIT, Jan. 15.—The report of cancellation of proposed hearings on discrimination by the Fair Employment Practices Committee here has evoked quick response from labor, civic and Negro organizations.

Following an emergency meeting Wednesday evening, a delegation left yesterday for Washington to see Paul V. McNutt to protest any attempt to forestall or call off the hearings in Detroit. It included representatives from United Auto Workers' locals, the Urban League, Citizens' Committee, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Council of Churches, Civil Rights Federation, the Interracial Committee of the UAW-CIO and other organizations.

Shelton Tappes, secretary of the Ford Local 600 and chairman of the emergency meeting, told the Daily Worker that "if the hearing would be called off it would be a serious blow to the entire war effort and would affect the morale of tens of thousands of Detroit citizens. To call off the hearing would be tantamount to toleration of the rank discrimination rampant in this critical war area and would imply that the influence of the poll taxers in Congress was gaining strength."

When asked by the Daily Worker whether the hearing has been called off, G. James Fleming, examiner in charge of the hearings, declared: "It is no more than a rumor although a very strong one. I have received no official word about it. Whatever action is taken is done on the Washington level. I will continue my work on the assumption that the hearing will go through."

JAN.16, 1943

BARD BACKS HEARING

Chances for survival of the FEPC were brightened Jan. 13 when Assistant Secretary of the Navy Ralph Bard made it clear that the Navy's position was not opposed to the proposed Detroit hearings on racial discrimination.

Only because of the mass pressure was a hearing scheduled for the latter part of February in Detroit. Way back in November, when the situation was considerably sharpened by the failure to hire thousands of Negro women willing and able to work, many with training, R. J. Thomas, president of the UAW, sent a sharp wire to Washington urging that the "government move effectively at once" and "hold a public hearing not later than Dec. 3," if the morale of the Negro people were not to be lowered even more.

Actually, up to November less than 100 Negro women were hired in the 185 war plants in the city. Following the pressure for an open hearing of the FEPC, several larger corporations hired Negro women so that by January there were slightly over 1,000 employed. It is felt that the recent increased hiring is but token compliance with the Presidential order aimed at obviating the need of a hearing. One hundred of the 185 plants do not hire any Negroes at all today.

The Citizens Committee for War Jobs for Negroes, the Urban League, the Jewish Community Council, the UAW-CIO Interracial Committee and many union locals have compiled a long list of discriminatory practices and cases. One of the most frequent is the question of upgrading Negroes according to seniority. This problem is faced by virtually every local in the city.

One of the most flagrant cases raised deals with the Michigan Bell Telephone Company, which has consistently refused to hire any Negroes at all. After considerable pressure, several women were hired to work in the company restaurant.

White Hits FDR's Secretary In the Squelching of FEPC

"P.M Daily" New York, N.Y.

By James A. Wechsler JAN 14 1943

PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—Walter White, chairman of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, charged today that White House Secretary Marvin McIntyre was partly responsible for suppression of the Fair Employment Practices Committee's (FEPC) long-planned exposure of anti-Negro discrimination in the railroad industry.

Asserting that Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt's ban on the FEPC railroad hearings must have been first considered at the White House, White accused McIntyre of "making decisions for the administration on the Negro issues" while "President Roosevelt is occupied with military problems."

"McIntyre is insufficiently informing the President of the real status of the discrimination problem," White said, "and is making decisions with his own particular slant on the race issue. In effect, McIntyre of Kentucky is setting himself up as self-appointed President of the Negroes."

Basis for Charge

White said his charge was partly based on the fact that all recent replies to communications to the White House on Negro issues had been signed by McIntyre. He said he doubted that the President had been given full appraisal of the situations discussed in the letters. White also said the President subsequently had admitted that he was not aware of all details of the executive order transferring the FEPC to the WMC at the time the order was signed.

JAN 14 1943

White House Secretary Marvin McIntyre

McIntyre refused to comment on White's statements. However, a White House source said that the fact that letters were signed by McIntyre did not mean that the President was uninformed of the exchange. It also was pointed out that a large part of White House mail was signed by the secretaries. The same source declared that White's letters always had received the President's attention.

While White's charges sharpened the conflict created by the ban on the railroad exposure, these other developments were taking place in the anti-discrimination row:

¶ A delegation of 14 Detroit Negroes, led by the Rev. Charles Hill, chairman of the Detroit Citizens Committee for Jobs in War Industry, conferred with Lawrence W. Cramer, executive secretary of the FEPC, to protest the curtailment of the railroad hearings and to oppose threatened scrapping of similar hearings in Detroit.

JAN 14 1943

Bard Changes View

¶ Assistant Secretary of the Navy Ralph Bard is understood to have informed Manpower Commissioner McNutt that the Navy was not opposed to discrimination hearings in Detroit if McNutt believed they would be helpful. Previously, Bard was reported as taking the stand that the hearings would hamper Army-Navy morale plans.

¶ Cramer revealed that a meeting of the FEPC had been scheduled for a week from tomorrow, at which a showdown on the Committee's future is expected. While some members of the Committee are pressing for an earlier date, efforts to arrange an immediate session have been unavailing so far.

The battle began last Saturday, when McNutt informed Cramer that the projected railroad hearings, originally announced last October, would have to be called off. When members of the FEPC balked at issuing the announcement in the Committee's name, McNutt officially broke the news on Monday. Both the railroad unions and railway management were slated to face sharp attack at the public sessions, which were to begin on Jan. 25.

JUST FURTHER STALLING

APR 15 1943

Manpower Commissioner Paul Mc Nutt told a committee of prominent churchmen last week that the reason the Fair Employment Practice Committee was not active was due to the fac tthat he was unable to find the right type of man to head it.

These gentlemen must have been amused, knowing full well that Dr. Malcolm MacLean, who was the last one to act a schairman, not only was a very able man, but by his aggressive action got some results. The committee was well on its way toward opening new and better opportunities to Negroes in industry. A hearing on discrimination in employment on railroads was scheduled, but was suddenly called off or postponed by Mr. McNutt. To date, the hearing has not been held. And every since the committee was transferred to the Manpower Commission its work has not proceeded.

On that record, we are wondering just what type of chairman Mr. Mc Nutt is looking for. Evidently, Dr. MacLean, an aggressive man, who wants something done, is not the right type. Then, we must assume that the man he wants will do little other than touch the high spots and not make the offenders of Executive Order 8802 mad.

APR 15 1943

Prior to McNutt's entry into the picture, the committee was making a real contribution to the war effort, but under its new status we doubt whether it can do very much that is worth while.

Charges of employment discrimination against 22 railroad companies and 14 unions were heard by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice in public sessions in the Department Auditorium, Department of Labor, September 15-18. This committee is shown in the background a few minutes after the hearings opened on September 15. The labor unions did not offer any evidence during the four days, nor did their representatives put in an official appearance. Notice of this fact was made by Msgr. Francis J. Haas, chairman of the committee, center table on platform, in his closing remarks. He thanked the representatives of the railroads for "coming here to participate' in this procedure and for the expression of their desire to arrive at a solution of the problems involved." White Workers At Electric Plant Strike In Protest

47d

DEC 15 1943

Washington, Dec. 14 (AP)—A major controversy over the authority of the Fair Employment Practices Committee to order equality of treatment for Negro war workers appeared certain today to be dumped on President Roosevelt's desk when he returns to the Capital.

F.E.P.C. orders to end alleged discrimination against Negroes have been challenged by Southern railroads, and others, on the ground that F.E.P.C. exceeded its powers.

Board Orders On Negro Equality Arouses Controversy

15 1943

DEC 15 1943

Members of Congress, the courts and the War Labor Board all were involved in the day's developements as one strike by white workers began in a war factory.

Workers Ordered Back.

The War Labor Board, by unanimous action, ordered white strikers at the Point Breeze Western Electric plant in Baltimore to return to work at once or face "all possible action" under the War Labor Disputes Act. Point Breeze workers voted to strike last night in protest against the use of washroom facilities in common with Negro workers.

DEC 15 1943

The strike was called after W.L.B. refused to order separate facilities. On October 2, F.E.P.C. advised the Western Electric Company that "the discontinuance of common facilities for Negro and white employes of the Western Electric Point Breeze plants and the introduction of special facilities would be a backward step which can but lead to discrimination against Negroes."

Criticises Railroads.

Other developments included:

Representative Marcantonio (A.L., N. Y.) praised the F.E.P.C. and criticised sixteen Southern railroads which defied an F.E.P.C. order to cease alleged discrimination against Negro railway workers.

Representative Rankin (D., Miss.) declared that F.E.P.C. was a "rump organization" which was creating unnecessary racial tensions in the South.

47d

FEPC

The Federal District Court for Northern California at San Francisco had before it a case involving Negro workers in which the constitutional authority of the F.E.P.C. to order discrimination ended was a collateral issue.

In the California case, eighteen Negro shipyard workers petitioned Federal Judge Michael J. Roche for a permanent injunction restraining the Marinship Corporation from discharging them for failure to pay dues to an auxiliary Negro union of International Brotherhood of Boilermakers (A.F.L.).

The boilermakers' union was ordered yesterday by the F.E.P.C. to dissolve its auxiliary local unions for Negroes and to receive colored shipyard workers into full membership. Five west coast shipyards were also ordered by the F.E.P.C. to cease co-operation with the union in alleged discrimination against Negro employes.

The decision of the Federal Court will be the first in which authority of the F.E.P.C. to order employers and unions to halt alleged discriminatory practices for reasons of race or religion is at issue.

DEC 15 1943

The F.E.P.C. was set up by President Roosevelt in executive order No. 9,346, under the Second War Powers Act.

FDR's Order on Race Bias Gives Faith to Millions

NOV 8 1943

We applaud President [illegible]velt's prompt and decisive action in [illegible]sing Comptroller General Lindsay Warren's ruling on anti-race discrimination clauses in Government contracts.

In holding that the President's anti-discrimination order was "directive" rather than "mandatory," Warren had virtually robbed the FEPC (Fair Employment Practice Committee) of its most powerful weapon. The Committee's life was imperiled, and a new blow was administered to the morale of thousands of men in our armed forces and on our production front.

The President has now stated that the anti-discrimination clauses are "mandatory and should be incorporated in all Government contracts." He adds pointedly that "the order should be so construed by all Government contracting agencies."

There can be no misinterpretation of this language.

Warren's fantastic ruling may have inadvertently served the purpose of provoking a new, direct and unequivocal affirmation of the Administration's policy on racial discrimination. We hope that it is a prelude to a new and bigger offensive by the FEPC and a further indication that the war against bias will be fought to a finish.

NOV 8 1943

In the present political atmosphere in Washington President Roosevelt's move was a real exhibition of courage and defiance. It is difficult enough for a chief executive to issue what amounts to a public rebuke to one of his major officials. It is even more difficult these days to stand up and fight against the poll tax bloc in Congress.

There will be some bitter denunciations of the President for the stand he has taken. There will be irresponsible speeches and snide thrusts. But these are a small price to pay for the new faith and hope that the President has given to millions of Americans in the meaning of this war and the goals for which we fight. The members of many minority groups must have felt a growing disillusion and despair when Warren's ruling was announced. The President has dramatically revived their confidence. He has destroyed what might have been the beginning of large-scale disaffection.

NOV 8 1943

He has given us one of the best pieces of news in months. And he made the news. —JAMES A. WECHSLER

Lynching the FEPC

When lynching States send lynch-minded Representatives to Washington, it is to be expected that they will apply the lynch technique to the job of running the Government.

That is exactly what is happening on Capitol Hill today, where Dixie Congressmen and Senators are howling for a probe of the FEPC, as an aftermath of the decision ordering Southern railroads to discontinue discrimination against colored workers.

Afro-American

So we are treated to the spectacle of Congress's wanting the policeman arrested for trying to bring the criminal to justice. As usual, Dixie is on the side of the lawless.

The railroads are engaged in keeping competent workers out of employment on the basis of color alone, and in complete defiance of the President's executive order.

But do any of the holier-than-thou Representatives who make so much pretense at fighting the war of democracy raise their voice in condemnation of the undemocratic practice of denying the right to work to fellow Americans? No, all they want to do is crush the agency through which the President has attempted to iron out the imperfections of our hypocritical system.

DEC 25 1943

But what more could we expect from a bunch of interlopers, who themselves, hold office only by defrauding the majority of the people they pretend to represent out of their franchise?

Baltimore, Md

They are holding office through the slimy tricks of poll taxes and lily-white primaries, and use every subterfuge to keep the intelligent soldiers of the nation from using the ballot, which they know only too well these fighting men would utilize to pry them out of their long-abused places of power.

DEC 25 1943

They know that the fighting men on far-flung fronts of the world are not too busy killing Japs and Germans and crushing fascism abroad to recognize the rising tide of fascism at home, and that the advocates of this home-front fascism are taking advantage of the soldiers' absence to get a stronger hold on the nation while the latters' backs are turned.

Proof of this is seen in the following excerpt from Yank, the official soldier publication:

DEC 25 1943

> We take our views on the post-war race problem from the founders of the United States, who believed that all men were created equal. No man has a right to talk about giving any American that which he already has by inalienable right.

With ten million young men under arms dedicated to this proposition, and with their number growing constantly, waiting for the opportunity to come back home and put those theories into practice, it is understandable why the die hards and the poll tax exploiters are quaking in their boots, and are trying to get in all of the dirty work they can before the day of reckoning comes.

DEC 25 1943

It has been truthfully said, "Old men write with ink, but young men unwrite with blood."

If President Roosevelt is sincere in wanting to see America a democracy in fact, he need but turn toward those, both in the armed services and on the home front, who are victims of the frightened disfranchisers, and help these people get their voice.

FEPC Calls For Showdown

Taking on surprisingly new life, the Fair Employment Practices Committee has given 20 railroads and seven railroad unions 30 days in which to cease all discriminatory practices which result in unfair treatment of workers and job applicants because of color, creed or national origin.

DEC 11 1943

Courier

The long and disgraceful story of the collusion of railroads and unions to maintain a closed lily-white shop against persons of African ancestry is well known and does not need repetition.

Pittsburgh, Pa

Year by year we have seen the percentage of skilled Negro workers get smaller and smaller as white workers took their places, and on several occasions colored firemen have been terrorized and some have even been murdered from ambush.

DEC 11 1943

Neither the railroads nor the unions have done anything to stop this "cold pogrom" despite repeated appeals from the NAACP and other organizations.

Now the FEPC has called for a showdown, and if these violations of Executive Order 9346 do not cease entirely by January 1, 1944, the whole sorry mess will be tossed into the lap of President Roosevelt.

This is a great test case. If the railroads and the railroad brotherhoods do not heed the warning, and if President Roosevelt does not act in the circumstances, we shall know that these corporations and labor unions are above the law, and that any effort to end discrimination based on color in this industry is futile.

However, there is hope in the fact that the FEPC issued this ultimatum; for it is unlikely that it would have done so had it not felt that the President is prepared to take drastic action if these offending groups do not promptly mend their ways.

DEC 11 1943

Perhaps we are on the threshold of a new day in the railroad industry.

President Is Expected To Back Decision

No Compromise

Will Suffice, Say Railroads

Atlanta. Ga

DEC 31 1943

WASHINGTON — (ANP)— The sixteen southern railroads and the Presiden't FEPC are expected an agreement with each other concerning discrimination practices against Negroes, sometime in early January, it was announced Thursday. The President is expected to back the stand taken by Malcolm Ross, FEPC chairman, who ordered the railroads to stop discrimination against Negroes.

DEC 17 1943

Railroad officials, basing their views on the President's actions in the past when problems concerning the FEPC or racial and religious discrimination in employment were involved, said that no compromise could be made without endangering the fight discrimination and the life of FEPC itself.

DEC 17 1943

Anti-discrimination clauses are mandatory in all war contracts, ruled the President in the last dispute with the FEPC. The President backed the committee completely, and declared that firms who refused to include them were ineligible for government business.

Ross countered with a statement that the railroads were making a "public bid for disapproval of FEPC by viewing wih alarm alleged pretensions of Negroes to be engineers and conductors."

He said the plain fact is "that this issue is dormant and oould remain so if the railroads offer justice to Negro railroad men in the classification where reason and public policy both urge it."

Holcombe Parks, secretary of the Southeastern Carriers' conference, called Ross' statement "a strange apology for his committee." He said that even though the FEPC head had made the statement that the committee may not be able to wipe out discrimination overnight, he "orders the railroads to forthwith employ Negroes in and to upgrade them to all positions without exception and without discrimination."

DEC 17 1943

Parks said that the committee's power does not exceed the authority to hold hearings and find facts; that the railroads deny that it can issue directives against them.

Several Cases Adjusted By FEPC Announces Chairman

Journal and Guide
Norfolk, Virginia

AUG 7 1943

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The newly organized Committee on Fair Employment Practices of which Father Francis J. Haas, is chairman, announced this week that several cases in which emplo[illegible] had [illegible] charged with violating the provisions of Executive Order No. 9346, outlawing discrimination in industry on account of race had been adjusted without public hearings.

COMMITTEE GETS JUDGE'S REPORT

A summary report from Judge Wolfe was presented to the committee last week and a complete report is expected within a few days, Father Haas said.

The committee, he explained has jurisdiction in this case only because there appears to be some indication that by forcing colored workers into Jim Crow "auxiliaries" race discrimination is being exercised against them in violation of the order establishing the committee.

Turning to another case involving complaints of discrimination the seven-member committee voted to inform the Capitol Transit Company, which operates the local street car and bus transportation system, that it expected affirmative action leading to compliance with the executive order. If such action is not taken, it was indicated, a public hearing of the case will be ordered.

The transit company has admitted a failure [illegible] employ available colored workers as motormen and conductors on its streetcars and as drivers on its buses. While it has been willing to employ colored workers, its officers maintain, it has been unable to do so because of the attitude of its white employees, of public reaction, and of inability to obtain trainers for prospective colored employees.

TO MEET IN TWO WEEKS

The committee will meet again in two weeks, and it was indicated that if the company's response was unsatisfactory, recommendations, based upon the proposed public hearings, would be forwarded to the President.

Of seven cases in the Detroit area, the committee reported, four appeared to have been adjusted through expressed willingness of employers to comply with the executive order.

About 500 complaints of discrimination a[illegible] [illegible]e committee. All [illegible] except those now actually settled, it was said at the committee headquarters, probably will be turned over to the field division for regional handling.

The following cases, identified merely by region and industry and announced on Monday are typical of recent settlements made by the committee:

Upon refusal of a western engineering company to hire Negroes on the ground that there was a lack of housing for them, FEPC intervened and the company in late June hired available Negro workers.

AGRICULTURAL WORKERS TO BENEFIT

An agreement was made between a Government agency and a foreign Government, that Negroes imported to do agricultural work would be given the benefits of Executive Order No. 9346, and that should this order be violated the workers would be removed from the area of violation.

Upon complaint that 22 Negro women in a middle western garment plant were refused employment because of race, the FEPC intervened with the War Department as the contracting agency, and agreement was obtained to employ the complainant workers. In another garment plant arrangements were made to train 30 Negro women after FEPC intervention.

White workers in a middle western war plant refused to instruct Negro trainees. The FEPC, with the cooperation of the War and Navy Departments, were successful in restoring Negroes to training classificat[illegible] of them are now on the production lines.

STAND REVERSED

A Pennsylvania war plant refused to employ Negro workers until all available whites were employed. The FEPC persuaded the company to reverse its stand and to take on Negroes immediately.

A Government air depot refused to appoint a Negro to a position in which he was qualified under civil service. Upon intervention of the FEPC the appointment was made.

An agreement was made with the commandant of a Navy Yard to hire Negro women who had been refused employment solely because of their race.

TO USE NEGOTIATION

Under the procedure now being used by the committee, as in the case of the Henry Kaiser Shipyards on the West Coast, negotiation and [illegible] form the basis of action leading to adjustment of complaints of discrimination. Formerly the committee used the device of public hearings to "crack down" on recalcitrant management.

Public hearings will be the last resort before the committee certifies an offender to the President as a violator of his executive order.

FEPC Maneuvers To Get Race Men On D.C. Busses

Chicago, Ill.

AUG 4 1943

By ERNEST E. JOHNSON

WASHINGTON. (ANP) — The Fair Employment Practice committee won [illegible]mporary respite in the effort of the Capital Transit company to out-maneuver the committee's directive to hire Negroes, when the National War Labor board on Saturday, by a vote of 5 to 4, approved certain changes in working conditions which affected wage rates, but unanimously holds out on a five-cent general increase pending a study by the board of the present wage structure.

Informed by the Associated Negro Press of what was taking place, at the WLB, George M. Johnson, assistant to the FEPC chairman, dismissed it saying "we've known about it for three weeks." Malcolm Ross, the other assistant, however, showed surprise and grabbed a telephone to determine whether or not final action could not be delayed until the committee had met on Monday at which time it was scheduled to make another move.

The four votes cast against the agreement were those of public members Wayne L. Morse and Frank P. Graham, and labor members John P. Brophy and Carl Shipley. Brophy is a member of FEPC also. Explaining their action, the minority said their dissent was not based on any lack of intrinsic merit in the wage agreement, "but because we believe that action by the board on the [illegible] matter should have been deferred as reques[illegible] the FEPC pending a determination of the relation between the proposed adjustment and the charge that the Capital Transit company is practicing race discrimination in employment."

Voting for the changes in the agreement were vice president George W. Taylor, industry members Almon E. Ross, Reuben B. Robertson and Walter Margetts, and labor member Louis Lopez.

The explanation given in informed quarters is that in order to avoid compliance with the FEPC, the company is seeking to put women on their lines. Already they have a few [illegible] some runs, but a District law [illegible]its [illegible] from working on any job in which they must stand continually for more than six hours at a time. The company has shifts that would permit them to hire women and conform to the District law. These are the 12 to 4 and the 4 to 8 runs.

The drawback is that these are the choice runs, and are mostly held by men with long seniority who have been able to bid into them. Naturally, they are reluctant about relinquishing them, that is, without some material advantage to themselves.

In order to make it worthwhile for these men to be "bumped" by women who would be brought onto these shifts it is explained that the company and the Amalgamated Association of Street, Electric and Motor Coach Employes (AFL) worked out the agreement which was before the WLB last week, and jointly submitted.

The provisions approved include vacation allowance for employes with more than five years' service and payment of time and half for platform work after regular run; allowance of a minimum of 20 minutes for the dinner trip; payment of five minutes of preparatory time at the beginning of a run; and payment of full time instead of half-time for trainmen who are required or have agreed to stand "extra." These changes are all desirable, but apparently it is the general wage increase of five-cents an hour that is needed to clinch the deal and make the "bumping" concession sufficiently attractive.

Since it is an AFL union involved, it was not expected that their representatives on the board would favor a delay. One of them explained to this reporter that he could not see where the board had any authority to hinge its determinations on the difficulties of another government agency. At least in this case, he said, he had not been conclusively shown that the Capital Transit was actually trying to circumvent the directive of the FEPC.

Give FEPC More Power.

WITH a candor amounting to insolence, representatives from the 22 railroads and 14 unio[illegible] a[illegible]abashedly admitted to discriminatory practices against Negroes. The exception to these viciously undemocratic admissions were the Pennsylvania Railroad, The Union Pacific, New York Central and Illinois Central.

The others had their viewpoint summarily expressed by the L&N Railroad. Their representative testified in part thusly: "It is true that the L&N for a number of years has not hired Negroes as locomotive firemen. It is true Negro firemen have been displaced by white locomotive firemen, their juniors in service, and it is true that Negro trainmen are not permitted to serve as flagmen or baggagemen and that they are not eligible to promotion to positions as conductors."

The L&N representative further testified: "To adopt toward the employment of Negroes, a policy different from the one in effect would be to fly in the face of the sentiment and wishes of [illegible]verwhelming majority of both the public and the employees."

There you have it! After four days of hearings the anwers are in. What action can now be taken? Must decent American citizens whose faces happen to be of color capitulate to this suffocating prejudice and discrimination?

The FEPC must be empowered by congressional action to enforce its opinions arrived at as a clear cut result of admissions of guilt on the part of employers who both refuse to hire new employees or fail to upgrade qualified veteran employees regardless to race or color, when such employers or industries are receiving federal contracts or subsidies. This must be done or else the FEPC will exert a negligible effectiveness.

A. Philip Randolph asks that the National Labor Relations Act be amended to give National Labor Relations Board power to act in cases of discrimination. In either eventuality, greater headway toward tackling this disgraceful situation can be made.

An aroused public opinion must speak out against discrimination. Many plants, many railroads are failing in their schedules because of a labor shortage. Yet competent Negroes, Mexicans and Jews are not permitted to take over important jobs for which they are qualified. Meanwhile, some of these same employer's relatives and sons are being deprived of sorely needed services and supplies. This nation must now fish for democracy or cut bait.

FEPC Railroad Hearings.

Chicago. Ill

THIS week, September 15-18, in the auditorium of the Labor Department in Washington, the public hearings of the FEPC against 23 railroad companies and 14 unions will begin.

These hearings will be closely scrutinized, for this will be an all-out attack against jim-crowism in war industries. The FEPC will have an excellent opportunity to buoy its status in the minds of the average man, or fail ignomiously as its enemies have presaged that it will.

Recently, it was reliably reported that in the New York area alone 5,000 freight cars packed with sorely-needed munitions, destined for fighting men in North Africa could not be hauled to ports of embarkation because of a shortage of 1600 men a day in the freight yards.

In another terminal it was also reported that 33 freight trains were delayed 24 hours and could not be moved into the terminal because of new inexperienced white employees, while at the same time, 'skilled Negro railroad men were not permitted to touch the engines."

Negroes with long terms of service are refused upgradings. Seniority counts for nil at present. It is alleged that often Negroes are showing 16 year old white youth how to perform various kinds of skilled work, currently denied to themselves.

It seems that the fireman's pay of $50 and $75 is considered too high a rate of pay for Negroes. This coupled with racial hostility is proving that these 23 railroad companies and 14 unions do not believe in what we are supposed to be fighting for. They should be compelled to comply with the Fair Employment Practice executive order or suffer the condign penalties common to law breakers.

It will be mandatory for the FEPC to pull no punches at these hearings for its tenure and effectiveness likewise, will be on trial. It has incentive to succeed, for the times favor, with intelligent exertion, the fight for justice.

FEPC's Alton Job Probe.

Bee (Magazine Section

EVERY time there is a new attempt by congressmen to foist labor conscripts bills on the nation because of the "grave urgency," we wonder if even Ripley would believe some of the things they tell us.

Take for example the situation in East Alton, Illinois, at the Western Cartridge company where the FEPC's regional director, Elmer W. Henderson, is formally conducting an investigation to determine whether or not the company discriminates.

Dean William A. Spencer, regional manpower director, requested this inquiry or the simple reason that if the "arsenal of democracy" is to keep functioning it must use its citizens in the total effort without regard to their race or color.

The request for an investigaiotn of the Western Cartridge company was made because preliminary inquiry has shown that of the 13,000 employees in the plant, none were Negroes. This is so despite the fact that the U. S. Employment Service has referred many Negroes to this company. Dean Spencer reports that these efforts have been made repeatedly and the sum of which still left the Negro on the outside.

Chicago. Ill.

The company has offered the reason that the community's and employees' attitudes are such that the hiring of Negroes would be unfeasible. To this ossified reply which is quite as sterile as the theory of the earth's flatness, we can only repeat that this contention was everywhere maintained before Negroes were extended job opportunities.

What are the facts? Negroes and whites are working together and as a result production records are being smashed all over the country. That there will arise minor misunderstandings and using the same as a basis for denying Negroes employment is about as senseless as banning interscholastic sports because contestants occasionally in the heat of misunderstanding brawl.

The President's Executive Order 9340 recently re-defining such cases and the order's application to same should be immediately invoked. The archaic drivel ladled out by the Western Cartridge company is becoming positively nauseating. I would be greatly to their profit to share our nation's war aims.

14 Unions Also Accused of Job Discrimination

SEP 10 1943

WASHINGTON—Charges of discrimination in employment because of race or color, lodged against 23 railroads and 14 labor unions, will be examined by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice (FEPC) at hearings to open Wednesday, September 15, here in Washington.

The hearings will be held at the departmental auditorium, Department of Labor, 12th and Constitution Ave., Northwest. They are scheduled to last for four days, through Saturday, Sept. 18.

Complaints received by the FEPC allege that the practices and policies under question fail to conform to the provisions of Executive Order 8802 as amended by Executive Order 9346, to the detriment of the prosecution of the war, the workers' morale and national unity.

Most of the charges involve the question of discrimination against Negro workers. In some cases, workers of Mexican origin are involved. One or more of the several charges involves each railroad and union cited.

Exhaustive investigation by the FEPC has resulted in the compilation of a lengthy list of allegations involving agreements between railroads and unions whereby the effective utilization of available qualified manpower has been hampered because of discriminatory employment practices based on race.

Chief among the practices coming under scrutiny of the committee is that of considering Negro railroad workers "non-promotables." This is alleged to have been done through the negotiation of agreements between union and railroad which set certain restrictions on the percentage of Negroes which may be employed in a stipulated category.

These agreements, together with enactment of union regulations limiting or barring non-white membership serves, it is charged, tend to reduce sharply the number of qualified Negroes employed by the railroads despite an increasing need for such labor.

Bartley C. Crum of San Francisco will be chief counsel for the FEPC at the hearings. Associated with him will be Charles H. Houston of Washington and Harold Stevens of New York city.

Notables Hit Courtmartial Of White For Rap At Bias

Chicago. Ill

(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON, D. C. — A thorough review of the court-martial of Sgt. Alton Levy of Lincoln, Neb., has been requested of President Roosevelt and the War Department by a group of national liberal figures.

Sgt. Levy, who is white, is serving four months at hard labor in the Lincoln Air Base guardhouse, after having been demoted to a private, allegedly for protesting the discriminatory treatment accorded Negro troops stationed at his base.

In an open letter to the President, War Secretary Stimson, Army Chief of Staff Marshall, and Judge Advocate Cramer, the group pointed to the dangerous reaction upon army and civilian morale resulting from the persecution of those who believe in democracy and equality between races.

Sgt. Levy is from New York City. He was formerly an organizer for the International Ladies Garment Workers Union. Within a year in the army, he rose to the rank of staff sergeant. At the Lincoln Air Base, he was assigned to work with Negro troops, where he noted the discriminatory treatment accorded them. He protested this treatment at staff meetings and to his associates.

Ask Full Review

A WAC, allegedly planted by the intelligence division, reported Levy to his superior officers. She is reported to have had dates with 12 soldiers, but reported only six, all of whom had Jewish names.

The letter sent the President and the army officials said in part: "In view of the fact that the major charges against Levy seem to have been his criticism of the treatment of Negroes in the camp, we feel that it is extremely important that you conduct a full review of this case and a thorough investigation of the circumstances surrounding it. This is needed to prevent a miscarriage of justice which would hurt not merely a single individual but also would react unfavorably upon democratic morale within the army and the civilian population. The existing racial tensions in this nation are already so great that we must be extremely careful not to penalize those who seek to establish better relationships between the races."

Urging immediate action in the case, the letter was signed by Irving Abramson, president of the New Jersey State CIO; William M. Agar, director of Freedom House; Roger N. Baldwin, director of the American Civil Liberties Union; Daniel Bell, managing editor of the New Leader; Harry L. Binsse, editor of Commonweal; John Chamberlain, author and New York Times book reviewer; Leon Dennen, editor of Voice of the Unconquered; Harry Fleischman, secretary of the Socialist Party; Samuel H. Friedman, editor of the Call; Lester Granger, secretary of the National Urban League; Ann Arnold Hedgeman, of the Brooklyn NAACP; Sidney Hertzberg, editor of Common Sense; George K. Hunton of New York City; Father William C. Kernan, director of the Christian American Institute for Democracy.

Harry W. Laidler, former New York Councilman and executive director of the League for Industrial Democracy; Layle Lane, columnist of the New York Age; Alfred Baker Lewis of the Union for Democratic Action; Morris Milgram, national secretary of the Workers Defense League; Nathaniel M. Minkoff, secretary-treasurer of the New York Dress Joint Board, ILGWU; Reinhold Niebuhr, president of the Union for Democratic Action.

A. Philip Randolph, international president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters; Lawrence Regin, educational director of the Textile Workers Union of America; Monroe M. Sweetland, national director of the CIO War Relief Committee; Norman Thomas, chairman of the Post War World Council; Noah C. A. Why No Teeth For The FEPC?

AUG

IT APPEARS THAT eve[illegible]ar agency created by President Roosevelt can get real power to act except the one agency that bears his name — the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices.

The Office of Defense Transportation speaks with authority and those subject to its orders have nothing to do but obey. The Office of Price Administration can enforce its orders by taking violators of price ceilings and rationing rules to court, exposing them to a possible long federal prison term.

The War Production Board, through its rigid control of raw materials, has ample means of enforcing its priority decrees. Adequate punishment is provided in the executive order issued by the President in its creation to make willful violators 'stay in line."

McNUTT HAS POWER

War Manpower Commissioner McNutt knows that his orders will get respectful attention, because in his hands has been placed the power to change the draft status of any worker who chooses to ignore his directives.

Latest of the many wartime bureaus to get, as one government official put it, "teeth in both the upper and lower jaws" is the War Labor Board. The Presidential order last week gives the WLB power to punish both recalcitrant unions and employers. The unions who defy the board stand to lose "checkoff dues" while a club is held over the heads of stubborn employers by the threat of war contract cancellation.

One can be sure that neither John L. Lewis nor the Atlantic Basin Iron Works, Inc., of Brooklyn, both of whom have on occasion thumbed their noses at the board, will dare take the risk of making this gesture again.

IMPORTANCE INCREASED

All of which poses the query so puz[illegible] to many why no similar punitive power has been placed in the hands of the FEPC? Certainly it is a war agency whose importance has not diminished, but increased since its creation July 25, 1941. It is vital not only from the standpoint of bringing about the full use of all available manpower. It also serves a needed propaganda purpose by impressing our more or less skeptical darker allies that America is trying desperately to make this nation in actuality the democracy it professes to be.

True, the President on May 27, this year, re-created the FEPC after it had passed into oblivion under the strangling grip Southern industrialists placed upon it after the Birmingham hearings, but so far as power, the new is no improvement over the old.

The luke-warm, go-easy approach toward enforcing of its decisions encouched in the FEPC directive stands in strange contrast to the positive, determined, mailed-fist wording of the new War Labor Board order.

NO THREAT HERE

Here is in the President's own wording the only power, if that word can be correctly used here, that the FEPC has: "The Committee shall receive and investigate complaints of discrimination forbidden by this order. It may conduct hearings, make findings of fact, and take appropriate steps to obtain elimination of such discrimination."

There is nothing here that stands as a threat to recalcitrant and prejudiced employers to amend their traditional color-biased employment policies. There is no threat that their war contracts will be cancelled if they fail to comply. No club is held over those unions with "white only" clauses in their constitutions and rituals to wipe out their undemocratic practices. Nothing is said about denying them the right to sign "closed shop" contracts and that "checkoff dues" would be withheld.

Little wonder then that the Capital Transit Company goes merrily about its business of snubbing the FEPC's directive to employ Negroes without discrimination. It is no surprise that more than a year has passed since the Birmingham hearings and Vultee Aircraft at Nashville has continued its deliberate refusal to carry out its promise to employ Negroes on production lines. This too, despite the fact that Vultee is desperately in need of more workers and is lagging far behind on its war contracts.

FEPC IS POWERLESS

FEPC

Had powers similar to those delegated to other war agencies been given FEPC, two cases of wide ramifications would not now be hanging fire, a piercing thorn in the side of a democracy at war to save democracy.

The obstinate Boilermakers' Union, which arrogantly places protection of its hateful racial exclusion policy ahead of winning the war, could be blasted from its "closed shop" contract with Kaiser, if the FEPC possessed the power to enforce its orders.

Instead, 300 skilled workers stand idle in the Kaiser shipyards solely because they are the wrong color to belong to the Boilermakers' Union and thus far the FEPC has found itself helpless to do anything about it.

AUG 22 1943

RAILROADS ARE "SAFE"

The forthcoming railroad hearings will add up to little positive action for the same reason. The hearings will be held, the obvious color discrimination bared and that's all. Nothing can be done by the FEPC to break the secret conference agreement between the railroads and the big rail brotherhoods, designed to undemocratically eliminate all black faces from railroad jobs.

AUG 22 1943

That's why [illegible] the President to act is so great. Certainly the need for the FEPC to be given punitive power pre-dates that of the War Labor Board. Decisions of no other government agency have been ignored with so much impunity as have those of the FEPC. If "teeth in both the upper and lower jaws" can be given the ODT, the WLB, the OPA and other agencies, they should also be given the FEPC. Surely the President by now realizes this. Why the hesitancy in giving the Committee this badly needed power is most puzzling to justice-loving Americans.

Defender
Chicago, Ill.

Dr. Herbert N. Northrup, the first witness, who said that he has spent most of the last four years in an intensive study of the relation of Negroes to the American labor movement, occupied the attention of the committee several hours and offered specific charges in which he criticized the National Mediation Board and the National Railroad Adjustment Board, both created und[illegible] Railw[illegible]bor Act. He a[illegible]ed that they had helped to continue racial discrimination on the railroads.

SEP 17 1943

The hearing ended with testimony of Negro firemen who charged discrimination on the Gulf, Mobile & Ohio Railroad ,and un[illegible]g efforts to obtain redress from the carrier and the firemen's union.

On this road it was testified that Negroes are not allowed to work on Diesel engines, that in one case a Negro fireman with seniority going back to 1895 had been displaced by a white fireman, his junior in service, contrary to normal seniority procedure.

Dr. Northrup, former member of the Department of Economics at Harvard and Cornell Universities, at present on the staff of the National War Labor Board, said that as a result of discrimination by railroads against Negroes the proportion of Negroes employed by the carriers has declined in the case of firemen from a total of 41.3 per cent in 19[illegible] 33.1 pe[illegible] in 1930. For the same period the percentage of Negro trainmen has declined from 29.8 per cent to 16.3 per cent.

SEP 17 1943

The attitude of the National (Railway) Mediation Board toward Negroes, especially in disputes with the "Big Four" rail unions, Dr. Northrup maintained, "has not been above criticism."

"He was more severe on the National Railroad Adjustment Board, set up to decide on certain contract disputes between the roads and their employes, saying that this board was composed mainly of partisans from organizations which do not afford the Negro equal status. The adjustment board, he added, in holding that a craft of workers "own" a particular type of work, whether they have ever done such work, "threatens" to eliminate Negro brakemen from the industry."

Charles H. Houston, counsel for a group of Negro railway labor organizations, put on the stand L. R. Moloy of Jackson, Tenn., Negro fireman on the Illinois Central Railroad and George Sams, Negro firem[illegible] the Gu[illegible]bile & Ohio Railroad, who des[illegible]d their unsuccessful efforts to obtain membership in the Brotherhood of Railroad Firemen and Enginemen and also challenged "non-promotable" practices of these carriers.

SEP 17 1943

White firemen began displacing Negroes on the G. M. & O. in 1921, according to Mr. Sams, who said that while his own service dates back to 1895, a white fireman, his junior in service, had been promoted to a Diesel engine.

Coast Union Is Found Guilty Of Discrimination

Atlanta, Georgia

FEPC Holds It Must Rid Self Of Practices

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — Guilty as charged is finding of the FEPC against the Boilermakers union and its local lodges in Portland, Oregon, and Los Angeles, and the unoin [illegible]been ordered to elimi[illegible]member-ship pra[illegible] which discriminate against workers because of race or color, Malcolm Ross, FEPC chairman, announced Saturday.

DEC 18 1943

Nor were five west coast shipbuilding companies relieved of any responsibilities in the discrimnation charged. The committee pointed out that the rejection of qualified Negro applicants and the discharge of others on the basic of the "master agreement" with the unions was incompatible with the known manpower shortage which exists in the area, and a detrim[illegible] to the prostitution of the [illegible] companies were [illegible] ordered to reinstate all Negro workers discharged because of their refusal to pay dues to the boilermakers' union, and to forget about the failure of some Negroes to secure clearance with the union before applying for jobs.

DEC 18 1943

The committee's findings and directives, signed by all seven members resulted from public hearings held in Portland, Nov. 15-16, and Los Angeles, Nov. 19-20. The hearings followed complaints filed with the committee after several hundred Negro shipyard workers had been fired for refusing to pay dues to auxiliary boilermakers' locals. The union and the companies maintain a closed shop ag[illegible]ment. The Negroes charged th[illegible]iliary locals were dis[illegible]minatory.

The commi[illegible] found:

1. The auxiliaries were created only for Negro workers and are placed directly under control of the white subordinate (regular) lodge for the area.
2. Auxiliary members have no vote or voice in the conduct of the union's affairs and must accept as their business agent the agent of the supervising lodge in whose election the auxiliaries have no part.
3. There are unfair [illegible]ences in insurance benefits [illegible] provided for members [illegible] union and in the age limits for admission to membership.

DEC 18 1943

Firms involved and [illegible] are the Oregon [illegible] corporation and the [illegible] company in the Portland Vancouver area; and the California Shipbuilding corporation, Consolidated Steel corporation (shipbuilding division) and the Western Pipe and Steel corporation in the Los Angeles area.

Unions and companies have 4 days in which to report on compliance.

FDR Will Decide Between Agencies Policy Disputes

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19—A plan signed August 2, but not announced until last week, by War Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt and Monsignor Francis J. Haas, chairman of President Roosevelt's Committee on Fair

Employment Practices, calls for "harmonious and expeditious" execution of the ban against employment discrimination on the basis of race, creed, color or national origin.

Under the joint plan, the FEPC shall formulate policies preventing discrimination and make its recommendations to Mr. McNutt, since the WMC has over-all responsibility for utilizing and training manpower.

AGENCY TEAMWORK

The [illegible] federal agencies emphasized that a [illegible] of teamwork existed between them which will make it possible to obtain the utmost efficiency and economy in the enforcement of the non-discriminatory order, in the avoidance of all duplication of effort, and in the prevention of all overlapping jurisdiction.

To cover disputes between agencies, however, it was decided that (1) Disputes arising in regional offices which cannot be solved by regional directors of the two agencies will be referred to their central offices. (2) Those involving questions of procedure which cannot be adjusted by the central offices will be referred to Monsignor Haas and Mr. McNutt for final disposition; and (3) If Mr. McNutt and Monsignor Haas are unable to agree on policy disputes, the question will be submitted jointly to President Roosevelt.

BIDDLE, ALSO MEDIATOR

A further agreement was reached whereby the dispute, if it involves interpretation of the non-discriminatory order, will be submitted for a final ruling to U.S. Attorney General Francis Biddle.

The non-discriminatory order under which the WMC and FEPC now operate is Executive Order No. 9346, of May 27, 1943, which calls for the closest possible cooperation between the FEPC, which is responsible for the formulation and execution of policies under the Order, and the WMC, which is responsible for full utilization of the nation's manpower in the prosecution of the war.

The agreement became effective immediately upon its joint signing by McNutt and Haas August 2, in accordance with a clause in the articles of agreement.

Future of Committee Uncertain

Kansas City Call

Congress Soon Will Pass Upon Appropriations

Kansas City, Mo.

By Andrew F. Jackson

WASHINGTON—(ANP) — The resignation Saturday of Msgr. Francis J. Haas, chairman of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices came with dramatic suddenness. There had been no outward indication to press and public of the contemplated resignation.

Following so closely on the railroad hearings and the anticipated West Coast Boilermakers' hearings, the resignation of Msgr. Haas, carries deep significance.

In his final press conference, before the appointment of a successor, Chairman Haas said: "To assume my duties as bishop of Grand Rapids it will be necessary that I resign as chairman of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice.

"In the degree that I know the importance of the work of that committee to the war effort and our democracy, I leave it with profound regret.

Should Employ All

"The terrible needs of war exact that we use to the utmost the hands and the high skills which Negro citizens, Spanish-Americans, Jews and loyal men and women of foreign extraction, are offering willingly to their country's service.

"That is the practical side, against which no man who loves his country would knowingly erect barriers of intolerance or of outmoded industrial habits.

"The essential rightness of the President's Executive Order against discrimination because of race, color, creed or national origin appeared clear to me when I took the office as chairman of the committee four months ago.

"In that brief period the close experience with the problems of the men and women who have suffered discrimination at the hands of fellow-Americans have deepened my conviction that this practice must be purged from our national life if we are both to win this war and consolidate our life as a democratic nation thereafter.

Has Trust in Committee

"I have full trust in the members of the committee. It was not known to me until very recently that it would be necessary for me to end what shall remain one of the most satisfactory associations of my life. The work of the committee is in good hands."

Announcement of his appointment to the bishopric of Grand Rapids was received from the Vatican by Archbishop Amlete Giovanni Cicognani, Apostolic delegate to the United States.

Bishop-Elect Haas has long been known as one of the most active Catholic prelates in the field of social and labor relations. As a member of the labor advisory board of the NRA and a special labor department conciliator for the last eight years, he has participated in the settlement of more than 1,500 strikes.

His appointment last May to the chairmanship of the FEPC was hailed by both labor and management alike as one of the most astute appointments that the President has made. His resignation leaves the FEPC at the mercy of Congress and with 1944 just around the corner, observers here are extremely cautious to make any predictions as to its future.

Hearings on the West Coast Boilermakers' case will open in Portland, Ore., Nov. 15 and 16th; and in Los Angeles, Nov. 19 and 20. George E. C. Hayes, prominent Washington attorney and Marvin Harrison, white, of Cleveand, will represent the FEPC in both hearings.

FEPC Asked To Probe Western Cartridge Company's Race Ban

Age

New York, N. Y.

CHICAGO, Ill.—An investigation by the FEPC of the Western Cartridge Company, of East Alton, Ill., was asked Saturday by Dean William H. Spencer, regional director of the War Manpower Commission.

In a letter to Elmer Henderson, regional director of the FEPC, Mr. Spencer said he had requested an investigation and such further action as may be deemed advisable.

The company, he said, employs 12,000 persons, and does not have one Negro employees among them although the United States Employment Service has referred many workers, without regard to their race, color or national origin.

The company stated that it employed Negroes in its other plants situated in cities with a Negro population, such as at St. Louis, or New Haven. Conn. However, the company said, there was no Negro population in East Alton or other towns in the immediate industrial area and local residents have maintained a hostile attitude toward hiring of Negroes at Western Cartridge or other local industrial plants."

Surface Lines Hire Colored Motorman, Malcolm Ross Announces

Pittsburgh, Pa.

WASHINGTON — Following an agreement made by the Chicago Surface Lines with the Chicago office of the FEPC to cease discrimination against Negro workers, the Surface Lines employed its first Negro street car motorman last week, according to an announcement by Malcolm Ross, newly-appointed FEPC chairman.

Holding the distinction of being the first Negro street car motorman in Chicago is Patrick McReynolds, 3537 South Cottage Grove avenue, Chicago.

"This company has promised complete compliance with the provisions of the Roosevelt Executive Order against racial discrimination," said Ross. At the same time, the new FEPC chairman said he expected to be able to report in a short time, similar employment of Negro platform men by the Capital Transit company, here.

ROSS SWORN IN

Sworn into office last week, the new chairman has made rapid progress in gearing the FEPC for strenuous activity this winter. With a decision on railroad cases of discrimination scheduled to be made soon, the FEPC plans to hold hearings on cases of discrimination against Negro machinists on the West Coast next month, and on cases of discrimination involving telephone companies in Pittsburgh shortly afterwards. In addition, there has been an acceleration of the work of regional offices in California, Chicago and Philadelphia in investigating and adjusting local cases of discrimination.

Southern Railroads
Post
Washington, D. C.

A Communication

THE AUTHOR of the editorial entitled "Railroad Protest" in The Wahington [illegible] of December 16 should at least have read the orders issued by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice before he set out to charge the Southern railroads with an "arrogant and cynical contempt for the committee's purposes as well as for its authority" and with "distorition of the issue at stake."

If he had, of course, he probably would not have written:

"Jobs for firemen—the nub of the problem because these are the jobs Negroes want and are trained to fill—are ignored by the complaining carriers. Instead, they dwell on the possibility that Negroes might want to become engineers or conductors. . . . At the moment, however, it (promotion of Negroes to engineers and conductors) does not happen to be a real problem."

The answer to these misleading statements is to be found in the several "Findings and Directives" of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, issued against 22 railroads in groups and individually on November 18. The gist of the whole matter is expressed plainly in one of the committee's "directives" issued against 10 Southeastern railroads and terminal companies. It says:

"The committee directs that the carriers adjust their employment policies and practices so that all needed workers shall be hired and all employes shall be promoted or upgraded without regard to race, creed, color or national origin."

The committee's own summary of the case, as stated in its ruling against one of the railroad's involved, contains these paragraphs:

"The fourth charge was that the company denies to Negro trainmen, because of their race, the right to qualify for and be promoted to the position of conductors.

"The sixth charge was that the company denies to Negro locomotive firemen in its employ, because of race, [illegible] right to qualify for and be promoted to locomotive engineer, although white locomotive firemen may thus qualify and be promoted."

Committee's Findings

The committee's findings contain these paragraphs:

"The committee further finds that the company discriminates against Negro firemen, because of their race, in that it refuses to permit them to qualify for and be promoted to the position of locomotive engineer."

"The committee finds that the company and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen are parties to an agreement entered into in 1940 which discriminates against Negro trainmen and switchmen, because of their race, in that it bars Negro trainmen from acting as flagmen or baggagemen and Negro switchmen from acting as yard foremen."

"The committee finds that the company denies to Negro trainmen in its employ, because of their race, the right to qualify for and be promoted to positions as conductors."

Among the committee's directives we find these paragraphs:

"The committee directs that the company issue formal instructions to all of its personnel officers and employes, having authority to hire and ugrade workers, to carry on their activities in the recruiting, training and upgrading of workers, or prospective workers, solely on the basis of the qualifications of applicants or workers without regard to race, creed, color or national origin."

"The committee directs that the company give formal notice to all employment agencies, public or private, including the Railroad Retirement Board, through which the company recruits workers or trainees, that it will accept needed workers for all classifications of employment without regard to race, creed, color or national origin."

"The committee directs that the company give formal notice to all labor unions with which it has contracts that it will comply fully with its obligations under Executive Order 9346 not to discriminate against workers, because of race, creed, color or national origin, in recruiting, upgrading or in any other terms or conditions of employment."

The author of the editorial could have also found this statement in the railroads' recent reply to the committee:

"These railroads are ready at any time to confer with their employes of various crafts and classes to ascertain whether, under the orderly and controlling procedures of the Railway Labor Act, any more generally satisfactory solution of the racial problems of employment can be worked out by mutual agreement."

Facts [illegible] Record

Judging from these facts of record, your editorial writer has adopted the extraordinary gloss put upon the situation by Malcolm Ross, chairman of the FEPC, in a recent press release. In that release Mr. Ross said:

"Their (the railroads) letter now make a bid for public disapproval of FEPC by viewing with alarm alleged pretensions of Negroes to be engineers and conductors. The plain fact is that this issue—necessarily covered because complaints were received and no rebuttal offered—is dormant and could remain so if the railroads offer justice to Negro reailroad men in the classifications where reason and public policy both urge it. Certainly it is not the part of candor to seize upon the most delicate issue in order to avoi the many basic problems squarely placed before the railroads."

Mr. Ross presents a strange apology for his committee. He suggests that the issues as to engineers and conductors are "dormant" and might remain so if the railroads would employ more Negroes as firemen, yet in the same sentence he admits that the engineer and conductor issues were "necessarily covered."

Nothing in the committee's directives says that the engineer and conductor issues are "dormant." The chairman's extraordinary suggestion means, if it has any meaning, that the railroads should have understood that FEPC was not serious as to some of its directives and ought to have used better judgment in picking out those as to which it was serious. The very suggestion reduces the directives to triviality. If they are legal and binding directives, then the railroads cannot pick and choose, obeying some as serious but disobeying others as frivolous or "dormant." If the railroads are thus at liberty to pick and choose, then the directives are not legal orders.

Mr. Ross implicitly admits that "reason and public policy" do not urge employment of Negroes in all classifications, or in engineer and conductor classifications, and argues entirely about firemen. But FEPC's directives make no such admission.

In addition, Mr. Ross' intimation, echoed by you, that four railroads (Pennsylvania, New York Central, Union Pacific and Virginian) have agreed to employ Negroes in all classifications of work, is without foundation. Not one of these railroads has agreed to employ Negroes as engineers, conductors, yard foremen, station agents or clerks. The Union Pacific agreed during the hearings only to upgrade some Mexicans from helpers to machinists. The Virginian only agreed to pay standard, instead of substandard, wages to certain Negroes already employed as dockhands. We understand that the Pennsylvania and the New York Central have under dfiscussion with FEPC only the promotion of certain Negroes to dining car stewards or, perhaps, to other positions of comparable rank.

Mr. Ross' press relase further admits that "we may not be able to wipe out discrimination overnight" and asserts that "it will take time to raise the structure laid down by the committee's blueprint." Yet the FEPC "directives" do not simply order the railroads to start erecting the blueprint structure. They order the railroads forthwith to employ Negroes in and to upgrade them to all positions, without any exceptions, and without any discrimination.

Finally, your editorial wholly overlooks the fact that the executive order setting up FEPC does not purport to give it the power to issue directives, nor to do more than hold hearings and find facts. The railroads deny that FEPC has any power to issue directives against them.

Letters To The Editor

Your reproduction of an edited version of my letter [illegible] editor dated De[illegible] in this morning's Post together with your action in editorially reiterating your unfair charges against the Southeastern railroads which have been compelled to question both the soundness and the legality of the recent "directives" issued by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, can only be interpreted as an effort to keep the full facts in this case from the readers of your newspaper. If this interpretation is incorrect, you will surely want to publish this further communication which includes a summary of the facts of record which you deleted from my previous letter.

Your original editorial on this subject attempted to becloud some of the important issues in this case by claiming that jobs for Negro firemen are "the nub of the problem" and that the promotion of Negroes to become engineers or conductors "does not happen to be a real problem."

One deletion from my previous letter contains verbatim quotations from the FEPC's orders which conclusively prove that your analysis of the case was misleading. For instance, the FEPC specifically "finds" that some of these railroads "discriminate against Negro firemen, because of their race, in that they refuse to permit them to qualify for and be promoted to the position of locomotive engineer." Another "finding" similarly refers to promotion to "positions as conductors." Still another "finding" charges discrimination because of a 1910 agreement with the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen which "bars Negro trainmen from acting as flagmen or baggagemen and Negro switchmen from acting as yard foremen." Post

And finally, the FEPC treats this allegedly "dormant issue" by ordering the railroads to issue notices to all concerned—railroad officers with authority to hire and promote employes, employment agencies through which the railroads recruit employes, and labor unions with which they have contracts—that "workers for all classifications of employment" will be hired and promoted "without regard to race, creed, color, or national origin."

Thus these "Findings" and "Directives" specifically order the railroads concerned to begin promoting Negroes to all positions, without exception, within 30 days. That would mean the promotion of Negroes throughout the South to positions of authority over white employes, both male and female. And under present conditions, the railroads reply that such drastic orders are "impracticable . . . impossible . . . and utterly unrealistic." Washington, D. C.

Finally, in your latest comment on this delicate subject, you grant that "gradualism is necessary" and that "the important thing is to make a beginning" in view of the quotations deleted from my first letter perhaps your editorial should have blasted the FEPC instead of the railroads. For there is no evidence whatever of "gradualism" in the FEPC's orders nor can anyone find the slightest indication that the FEPC had any desire "to make a beginning" toward "reasonable adjustments to the legitimate aspirations of our Negro people."

Historic FEPC Order

THE order of the Fair Employment Practices Committee to 22 railroads and seven Brotherhood and AFL unions to stop discrimination against Negroes within 30 days will long be remembered as one of our great decisions to broaden democracy.

This was a big step toward enforcing the right of all people to work without discrimination, as the fight for the anti-poll tax bill—which must be won—is to guarantee Americans the right to vote without discrimination. The Worker New York, N. Y.

The decision is all the more important as it comes soon after the recent short-lived scare when Comptroller Warren almost interpreted the FEPC out of existence.

The President, in moving swiftly to slap him down, served notice that America meant business when it set out to put an end to employment discrimination. His clear-cut step then laid down the course that led to the FEPC's inevitable order.

The decision is of historic importance because it applies to the railroads, the principal citadel of discrimination, where companies and union leaders are still combined on a policy of excluding Negro workers. It is not a blow against unions. It is a long-needed step to wipe out pre-Civil War slave hangovers in the labor movement. The consequence of the order [illegible] only make the unions stronger and far better able to discharge their legitimate duties.

Unfortunately some of the union leaders chose to ignore warnings of progressives that labor itself ought to take the needed step. They remained blind to the obvious anti-discrimination trend that has been so marked since Pearl Harbor.

The overwhelming majority of organized labor and all Americans, we are sure, will greet the FEPC decision as a great progressive step. We hope the AFL's executive council will share in this enthusiasm and will itself take the long-overdue steps to end every vestige of race discrimination in labor ranks. The FEPC must be upheld not only with general resolutions but with practical measures to enforce its decisions.

Their Personnel Methods Reflect Civilization, Spokesmen Tell FEPC

By GORDON H. COLE
PM's Bureau

PM
New York, N. Y.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16.—Spokesmen for 22 of the Nation's leading railroads have shrugged off responsibility for personnel policies under which the roads are refusing to hire Negroes for any but menial jobs.

Charged before the FEPC (Fair Employment Practice Committee) with violating the President's order forbidding racial discrimination in war jobs where it interferes with the war effort, the big railroad corporations argue only that their employment policies reflect the civilization in which the railroads operate.

Big Lines Cited

These roads include the New York Central, the Pennsylvania and the Baltimore & Ohio, as well as most of the major Southern lines.

The B. & O., for example, contends that although it discriminates, the discrimination does not interfere with the war and therefore is not a violation of the President's order.

That was the defense that Bartley C. Crum, special counsel for the FEPC, set out to break down yesterday as the long-awaited hearings into railroad race policies got under way.

Crum, a vice president of the National Lawyers Guild, brought to the stand yesterday the first of a long procession of railroad experts and railroad workers to testify that discrimination does exist and that it is harmful to the war effort.

Axis to Be Quoted

Three star witnesses, already scheduled, are Clyde R. Miller, founder of the Institute for Propaganda Analysis; Otto D. Tolischus, former Berlin and Tokyo correspondent for the New York Times, and William L. Shirer, author of Berlin Diary and pre-Pearl Harbor correspondent for CBS in Berlin.

The text of Axis broadcasts is expected to be introduced in evidence.

In opening the case against the railroads, the FEPC counsel called attention to the critical lack of railroad manpower and pointed to the proposal by Joseph B. Eastman, director of the ODT (Office of Defense Transportation) for the use of women, Mexican workers and even the utilization of war prisoners.

"In common sense," Crum asked, "why must we look to women and prisoners of war, when willing Negro workers are available?"

'Negro a Pawn'

He answered his own question: "Because restrictions have for decades so tied the hands of Negro workmen that neither the railroads nor the unions, who thus forged these bonds, can think—even under the spur of war—of how to break them."

The essential facts of how all this came about and what the present situation is on the railroads is the purpose of the hearings—the first in which charges of racial discrimination have been aired publicly since Msgr. Francis Haas became chairman of the committee.

The first witness to appear, Dr. Herbert R. Northrup, an expert on the position of Negroes in the labor unions, charged:

"The Negro has become a pawn in industrial relations; employers have used him to fight unions and to depress wages; unions have retaliated by attempting either to limit the employment of Negroes or by driving those already employed from the railroads."

Northrup condemned the Railway Labor Act and its administration. He charged that the Railway Mediation Board and the Railway Adjustment Boards have fostered discrimination on the railroads. Northrup, currently an employe of the War Labor Board, said that actions of the National Mediation Board "have caused serious doubts as to its impartiality in disputes involving Negro workers and the Big Four Brotherhoods."

Roads' Argument

Sidney S. Ulderman, attorney for the roads, read a statement in which he argued that the solution of racial problems "lies in the gradual and moderate process of education, based upon mutual goodwill and respect."

He called attention to the great legal responsibility of the railroads for the safety of passengers in suggesting reasons why Negroes could not be employed in positions of responsibility—a close approach to an argument for racial superiority.

Ulderman then asserted:

"Railroads do not operate in a vacuum, or in a theoretical Utopia. They have to operate in and serve the civilization in which they find themselves, and must adapt their operations and employment practices to the social solutions and racial questions as worked out by the prevailing mores and legal systems of the states they serve."

FEPC Fate Up to F. D. R.

If the 14 railroads are permitted to get away with their defiance of the FEPC, the effectiveness of the President's committee will be seriously impaired.

The companies made [illegible] flat statement to the FEPC that they would not obey the committee's order to hire Negroes on the same basis that anyone else is hired. As is customary with those who cannot find a good reason for their action, the railroads said that it would "cause trouble" if they obeyed the FEPC directive, that "strikes, chaos, public antagonism" would result. The companies also told the FEPC that it is without authority to back up its orders which have no legal effect.

DEC 3 1943

There is no merit to the railroad company's argument. In his answer to the railroad statement, Malcolm Ross, REPC chairman, pointed out the fallacies in the railroads' position.

There would be no occasion for chaos and strikes," Ross said, because white southern engineers have been used to working with Negro firemen over a period of 50 years. Negro firemen were displaced only a few years ago with the installation of automatic stokers and Diesel engines.

The FEPC has issued an order that Negroes be employed by railroads up to their capacity. The railroads have answered that they will not obey. The next move obviously is up to the President. He created the FEPC and it is his personal responsibility to see that its findings, based upon his own executive order, are carried out. If the FEPC is weakened to the extent that executive orders 8802 and 9346 cannot be carried out, all of the other executive orders issued by the President can also be disregarded.

There is no doubt but that President Roosevelt intends for his executive orders affecting the employment of Negroes to be obeyed. He must not let political expediency prevent him from speaking out at such a critical time in the existence of his committee.

Roosevelt Asked to Outlaw Jim Crow in Armed Forces

NEW YORK—The National Negro Congress made a request last week to President Roosevelt for a conference with leaders to discuss the abolition of jim-crow in the armed forces, as an added effort in helping to win the war.

The Congress's letter to the President declared that the "continued deterioration in the conditions facing colored soldiers has reached such a point as to inhibit the maximum use of our armed forces for coalition warfare," and "hampers seriously national unity and serves to undermine the morale of colored people."

The Chief Executive was called upon to issue an outright order to eliminate "all forms of segregation and discrimination in every branch of the armed forces as a requirement for a speedy victory and a people's peace."

Gent[illegible]:

I am sure I do not need to tell you that I share your deep feeling of regret in connection with the resignation of Monsignor Francis J. Haas as chairman.

Both Monsignor Hass and you as members of the FEPC have contributed to the accomplishment of a difficult and continuing task. Certainly I agree that in the future, as in the past, we shall need the wisdom, the skill and the devotion which Monsignor Haas has given to this work.

Many Difficulties Ahead

I am happy to say that he has offered to continue to give us his counsel. I have told him that I know the committee will need and ask that he continue as counselor on whose wisdom and experience it can always depend.

I have written my appreciation to Monsignor Haas. I want to add here my appreciation [illegible] your own [illegible] as members of the committee. There are many difficulties before us. I feel satisfied, however, that in you the country has a committee upon which it can depend for wise and determined dealing with this problem which is essential to the fulfillment of the promises of our democracy.

Very sincerely yours,

Railroads Promise Less Job Prejudice

Amsterdam News
New York, N. Y.
SEP 25 1943

(Amsterdam Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON (Special) - Although FEPC has not issued its official findings and directives following the hearing last week of discriminatory practices of railroads and unions, the firms have agreed to start scuttling their jim crow policies in employment before President Roosevelt is forced to issue a direct appeal because of their "do-nothing-attitude" which is hampering the war effort. The 22 railroads and 14 unions cited in FEPC's complaints issued a joint statement which said they were in "sympathy with the difficulties of the problem" and would do "something" about it.

Only O[illegible] Complaints

All concerns brought [illegible] for a hearing admitted guilt of Jim Crow employment policies except one—the Union Pacific Railroad. UP said, however, it would investigate to see whether the complaints were true.

An audience of over 400 attended the four-day hearing. The full committee heard evidence by some 40 witnesses, including experts on propaganda who testified on the use made by the Axis nations of work toward a solution of the problem, but it nevertheless warned the committee that there is no hurry to wipe out this blot. The statement said in part:

". . . as to the general problem before you—a problem which all the wisdom [illegible] statesmanship of America have not yet been [illegible] fully to solve—it is the view of the railroads that the solution lies in a gradual and moderate process of education, based on mutual good-will, and respect. The solution will not be advanced, but, rather, [illegible]ill be retarded and made more [illegible]cult, by too abrupt an attempt to change, by government decree, long statnding practice, rooted in the custom of the people."

Debunks the Bunk

FEPC's Special Counsel Crum adequately debunked the railroads' "slow-but-sure" excuse and "solution" when he pointed out that failure to integrate at once the Negro in railroad employment will only [illegible] to force "uniformed white [illegible]ers to look with suspicion, yes and with possible hostility, on a group that is forced to remain a part and is not permitted to contribute its full skills and resources to winning the war.

"But if discrimination is ended," he pleaded, "white rairoad workers will inevitably generate an appreciation for the Negro as a man and a fellow worker, as has been shown over and over again in shipbuilding yards, in the iron and steel industry, and particularly, in the aircraft industry where they work together. As does all cooperative and united effort.

Virginian Seeks To Smash Order Of Mr. Roosevelt

Globe & Independent
Nashville, Tenn.
DEC 10 1943

Claim Is President Did Not Have Power To Rule Against Race Discrimination Without Permit From Congressmen

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9—(ANP)—A new attack upon President Roosevelt's executive order banning race discrimination and the effectiveness of the FEPC was launched Monday by the Smith committee of the house in a report which stated that all anti-discrimination clauses in public contracts should be prohibited by law.

The report, which mentioned neither the FEPC nor the executive order by name, declared that any such contractural provisions must come only after laws to that effect had been enacted by congress, and that no government agency had any authority on its own to insert such clauses.

Head of the committee is Rep. Howard Smith, Virginia Democrat. Other members are Reps. Hugh Peterson, Georgia; John J. Delaney, New York, and [illegible] Jerry Voorhis, California, Democrats, and Reps. Clare Hoffman, Michigan, John Jennings, Tennessee, and Fred Hartley, New Jersey, Republicans.

Several federal agencies were attacked in the report and the Federal Surplus Commodities Corp. was specifically condemned for insisting that dairy companies which sell to Uncle Sam include anti-discrimination clauses in their contracts. This is the same committee which also took potshots at the OPA for seeking to enforce price ceilings on meat.

Said the committee report after citing the regulation anti-discrimination clause in surplus commodities contracts:

"Congress has never enacted such a law and, however laudable its purposes may be, no government agency has been authorized by legislation to impose such a condition.

"The subsidy program, the lend lease, as well as the needs of our armed forces, were never intended by congress to be used as a subterfuge to impose legislation upon the country which congress had failed or refused to enact.

"Any effort to use subsidies, lend lease funds or other appropriations for any such pu[illegible]ould be prohibited b[illegible]"

Alth[illegible]he Roosevelt executive order was not mentioned by name, the report condemned "unauthorized executive directives which are bound, sooner or later, to fall of their own weight."

Seeking to justify its stand, the report continued:

"Progress in the interest of the common people of America will not be made if devious or unconstitutional methods, or methods not authorized by congress, are used to bring about such progress.

"Sooner or later, the whole basis of such action will be swept away and the net result will be loss rather than gain for the people's cause.

"Some members of the committee are opposed to discrimination regarding employment and are strong in their support of all the provisions of the wages [illegible] hours act.

"However, the members of this committee a[illegible]nanimous in their conviction that neither the objectives of the wages and hours act nor the prevention of discrimination can be accomplished by the device of making subsidy payments conditional upon what amounts to the writing of new law by an executive agency."

AUG 7 1943

THE PRESIDENT'S REORGANIZED COMMITTEE on Fair Employment Practices seems to be getting off to a good start under its chairman, Monsignor Francis J. Haas of Catholic University. It has ordered the reinstatement of 300 N[illegible] workers in West Coast shipyards dis[illegible]ed under [illegible] closed-shop agreement when they refused to pay dues to a separate "auxiliary" union set up for them by the American Federation of Labor boilermakers' union .The committee must decide whether establishment of a separate union based on color, race, or creed constitutes discrimination. We ceratinly think it does, and the committee cannot hold otherwise without losing public confidence. The new committee has also voted to enforce the old FEPC order to the C[illegible] Transit Company in Washington. Capital Transit still refuses to hire Negro help, although many transit companies in Southern cities do so. Nothing has caused more bitterness among Negroes in the capital than [illegible]fusal [illegible]mit them, in the midst of a great man-power shortage, to enjoy the privilege—for such it seems to be considered—of driving a bus.

Seizure of FEPC Records Protested

DEC 30 1943 PM

New York, N. Y.

The National Federation for Constitutional Liberties has protested to House Speaker Sam Rayburn against the action of the House Smith Committee investigating executive agencies in seizing records of the FEPC (Fair Employment Practice Committee).

Urging immediate termination of the Committee's "irresponsible investigations which disrupt the work of important war agencies," the Federation characterized Rep. Howard Smith (D., Va.) as a "notorious anti-labor and poll-taxer Congressman," charging an "attempt on the part of enemies of the FEPC to embarrass it and to undermine its important war work.

President May Enforce Job Order Under His War Powers

DEC 14 1943

By Gordon H. Cole
PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14.—Enforcement of the FEPC's (Fair Employment Practice Committee) order that the Nation's railroads stop discriminating against Negro employes appeared headed for the White House today after 16 Southern railroads and terminal companies joined in a letter defying the FEPC.

Public defiance of the FEPC by these Southern railroads ranks them with Sewell Avery, president of Montgomery Ward & Co., who at one time publicly refused to accept an order of the WLB (War Labor Board) that he sign a union security contract with a CIO union.

President Roosevelt, whose war powers form the basis of both the FEPC and the WLB, as originally set up, wrote three letters to Avery ordering him to abide by the Board's order before Montgomery Ward ended its defiance.

Up to Roosevelt

Now the President is confronted with the necessity of enforcing his order creating the FEPC and authorizing the campaign to stamp out racial discrimination on the job.

In the one big test of Executive Order 9346 setting up FEPC—the dispute with Comptroller General Lindsay Warren—the President showed no hesitancy in backing up the FEPC when he was asked to.

The problems of making the FEPC order against the railroads stick presents more problems than any ever confronting the President with the WLB.

The Southern railroads announced in their joint letter to the FEPC that they "cannot comply" with its order, that to do so "would seriously and irreparably prejudice the war effort, would be unpracticable and impossible and would violate an act of Congress—the Railway Labor Act.

Deny Jurisdiction

The railroads also denied the jurisdiction of the Committee to issue the directives.

"Any attempt," said the Southern roads, "to comply with these directives, for instance to promote Negroes to locomotive engineers or train conductors, would inevitably disrupt their present peaceful and co-operative relations with their employes, would antagonize the traveling and shipping public served by them, would substitute conditions of chaos for the present conditions of harmony, would result in stoppages of transportation, and would most gravely and irreparably impair the whole war effort of the country."

Ross' Answer

A copy of the letter was mailed to all Congressmen together with a note requesting that the letter to the FEPC, a press release announcing it, a summary of the findings and directives issued by the FEPC and a statement by the railroad counsel at the hearings last September be read into the Congressional Record.

Malcolm Ross, FEPC chairman, immediately answered the Southern railroads, asserting:

"The question of preventing Negro railroad workers from being used by the carriers at their top skills is a war problem of the first order.

"Evidence at the FEPC hearing showed a shortage of 850 firemen on American railroads, this at a time when trained and experienced Negro firemen were unemployed and the carriers were preferring to take on green hands, simply because there has been for years a sometimes tacit and sometimes formal agreement between the railroads and the unions to decrease the number of Negro firemen and give their jobs to white workers."

Ross recalled that the railroad unions chose to ignore the FEPC hearings in this case and the carriers made only a perfunctory appearance.

"Their letter," he charged, "now makes a bid for public disapproval of the FEPC by viewing with alarm alleged pretensions of Negroes to be engineers and conductors. The plain fact is that this issue—necessarily covered because complaints were received and no rebuttal offered—is dorman and could remain so if the railroads offer justice to Negro railroad men in the classifications where reason and public policy both urge it."

The FEPC chairman cited the statement by Sidney Alberman, railroad counsel, made at the FEPC hearings:

"I certainly do not mean to contend that anything in the South would interfere with the employment of Negroes as firemen on locomotives."

FEPC Issue Seen Headed For President

Post
Washington, D. C.

DEC 15 1943

A major controversy over the authority of the Fair Employment Practices Committee to order effuality of treatment for Negro war workers yesterday appeared certain to be dumped on President Roosevelt's desk when he returns to the capital.

FEPC orders to end alleged discrimination against Negroes have been challenged by Southern Railroads, and others, on the ground that FEPC exceeded its powers.

Meanwhile, members of Congress, the courts and the War Labor Board all were involved in the day's developments as one strike by white workers got under way in a vital war factory.

Orders Strike Ended

The War Labor Board, by unanimous action, ordered white strikers at the Point Breeze Western Electric plant in Baltimore to return to work at once or face 'all possible action" under the War Labor Disputes Act. Point Breeze workers voted to strike Monday night in protest against the use of washroom facilities in common with Negro workers.

The strike was called after WLB refused to order separate facilities. On October 2, FEC advised the Western Electric Co. that the doscontinuance of common facilities for Negro and white employes of the Western Electric Point Breeze plants and the introduction of special facilities would be a backward step which can but lead to discrimination against Negroes."

Other developments included:

Representative Marcantonio (American Labor) of New York praised the FEPC and criticized 16 Southern railroads which defied an FEPC order to cease alleged discrimination against [illegible] railway workers.

Representative Rankin (Democrat) of Mississippi declared that FEPC was a "rump organization" which aws creating unnecessary racial tensions in the South.

Issue in California

The Federal District Court for Northern California at San Francisco had before it a case involving Negro workers in which the constitutional authority of the FEPC to order discrimination ended was a collateral issue.

In the California case, 18 Negro shipyard workers petitioned Federal Judge Michael J. Roche for a permanent injunction restraining the Marinship Corp. from discharging them for failure to pay dues to an auxiliary Negro union of the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers (AFL).

The Boilermakers union was ordered Monday by FEPC to dissolve its auxiliary local unions for Negroes and to receive shipyard workers into full membership.

'Steps in the Works' to End the Impasse Over Southern Bias Against Employing Negroes

New York Times

SOME IMPROVEMENT SEEN

New York, N. Y

For U. S. Industry as a Whole, 'Upgrading,' Not Jobs, Is Said to Be Biggest Obstacle

The apparent impasse between the sixteen Southern railroads and the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice over the committee's order to cease discriminatory practice affecting employment of Negroes will soon be broken, Malcolm Ross, chairman of the committee, predicted yesterday.

"Steps are in the works," he said in the regional office of the FEPC in the Empire State Building.

Asked if the committee intended to enforce its directive, issued Nov. 18, Mr. Ross said, "ultimate authority lodges with the President."

He scored the railroads' complain, that the directive was too "broad," asserting that the railroads failed to present evidence when they had the opportunity at the hearing. The testimony of the FEPC was not challenged, he said.

Stresses Shortage of Help

Although he held that recent train wrecks were too isolated to take as examples of tragedies caused by the manpower shortage, he said that there was a shortage of workers. He estimated that 83,000 workers were needed last June.

Many Negroes are available for these jobs, he said, adding that on Southern roads today there are only one-half as many Negroes as there were twenty-five years ago. This, he said, has been the result of tacit and sometimes formal agreements over a period of years between the railroads and the railroad unions to decrease the number of Negro firemen and give their jobs to white workers.

In reviewing the cases brought before the committee in the last few months Mr. Ross revealed that there had been a rise in those involving anti-Semitism. The month of July showed two cases; September, twenty-six, October, forty-two, and November, nineteen.

"The fact that we opened up regional offices making it possible for people to come in may have accounted for the increase," he commented. There are nine regional offices throughout the country.

In the over-all picture of the 1,800 cases now on the docket, 80 per cent of the complaints have to do with discrimination against Negroes, 6 per cent with Jews and "a good many cases" with Mexicans and Spanish-Americans in the Southwest, he said.

Negro Employment Gains

In the last year the rate of placement of Negoes in war industries was three times as fast as whites, he said. Twice as many women as Negroes were placed in jobs during the last tabulated quarter, July to September, but while one out of every four women was placed as better than common labor, only one out of every twelve Negroes was similarly placed, he said.

"In the over-all use of 13,000,000 Negoes that is a rather low proportion having a chance to get into skilled or semi-skilled work," he said. "It may be a detriment to the war effort if barriers are placed against them."

Negroes and Jews are not having so much difficulty in obtaining jobs as they were in being upgraded to higher jobs, Mr. Ross said. Relations between whites and Negroes are improving, he declared, citing a number of war plants that once had no Negroes at all but were now employing them with satisfactory results.

He pointed out that the riots in Detroit did not flare in the war plants, where the two races were working side by side, or in quarters where they lived in close proximity, but rather where one group was segregated and pitted against the other.

Government employment of Negroes has increased, he said. A test in March of thirty-eight agencies showed 9 per cent of the employes were Negroes—higher than in industry which employs less than 8 per cent—which was followed by another three months later of forty-four agencies, which showed a rise to 1[illegible] cent, he reported.

On the whole, the response to the committee's efforts to adjust complaints on the part of employers has been "pretty good," the chairman said.

Body Ordered Not to Conduct Hearing on Railroad Jim Crow

Action Suppressing Expose of Discrimination in Employment May Force Folding Up of Committee

JAN 16 1943

WASHINGTON

The Fair Employment Practice Committee has been directed to drop its investigation into race discrimination in employment by railroads, it was learned Saturday.

These instructions were said to have been issued by Paul V. McNutt, chairman of the War Manpower Commission, under whose supervision the committee comes, on orders from the White House. The hearing was originally set for January 25 in Washington.

Other Case Postponed

It was pointed out that this action was in line with the move of the Department of Justice in postponing anti-trust indictments which were to have been returned against motor and rail carriers.

Indictments charging rate fixing by carriers were postponed recently at the request of the Secretaries or War and the Navy and the director of defense transportation.

JAN 16 1943

The reason given was that if the Government proceeded with the indictments, the efforts of the carriers during the war would be injured.

Postponement of the indictments, prepared from evidence given a Chicago grand jury, was in accord with the program agreed upon by President Roosevelt and officials last March.

Members and officials of the FEPC, queried about the postponement, declared that they had not sought or favored it.

Members Oppose Postponement

Told of the decision for postponement of the hearings on Saturday, a majority of the members of the committee advised Lawrence Cramer, FEPC executive secretary, that they saw no reason for the postponement.

JAN 16 1943

Mr. McNutt, however, while admitting on Monday that the FEPC had not requested the postponement, said that he had received "no objection from the committee."

He then said that settlement of the dispute in the "normal way would be better than by force," and denied that the postponement would result in cancellation of the hearing.

Dickerson Objected Saturday

Earl B. Dickerson, Chicago alderman and a member of the committee, however, told the AFRO that he voiced his objection as soon as he learned of the McNutt order. He said: "I have not approved postponement of the railroad hearings. If ordered it was the sole responsibility of Chairman McNutt, for the FEPC has not considered postponement in any meeting, formal or otherwise.

"When I learned last Saturday of Mr. McNutt's request to Lawrence Cramer, executive secretary, for postponement, I asked Mr. Cramer to have the request put in writing with the reasons for the same and I asked Mr. Cramer to submit the question of postponement to the committee in a special meeting. I am opposed to postponement."

McNutt Put on Spot

When Mr. McNutt's final decision to block the hearings was given Mr. Cramer, secretary of the committee, Saturday, it is reported, Cramer conferred with other members of the body, then told McNutt he would have to make the announcement himself.

The manpower chief did not state this as his reason for side-stepping the issue, but it is reported that representatives of the railroads and of the brotherhoods conducted a behind-the-scenes campaign to force abandonment of the probe, charging that it would create "friction" among railroad workers.

The Railway Mediation Board is also accused of having a hand in the affair it being charged that it faced a bitter attack in the hearings for its reputed approval of one of the jim crow contracts which the FEPC was slated to condemn.

Jan 16, 1943

The Dynamite in the Bomb

The "non-promotable" aggreement between the all-white Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen with the Southeastern Carriers' Conference, representing twenty-five Southern roads, it is understood, was to be the pivotal point on which major indictment against the railroads was based.

Under this aggrement, colored fire- on these roads are eliminated as fast as Diesel or stokerized engines replace hand-fired coal engines. (This must be completed by July 1, 1943, under an I.C.C. ruling.) Colored firemen are barred from the brotherhood, but it is permitted to act as "sole bargaining agent" for them.

Outgrowth Of Public Hearings

3 Other Firms Must Comply With FEPC Order

JAN 9 - 1943

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Vultee Aircraft, Inc., has taken steps, in keeping with directions recently issued to the company by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, to eliminate discrimination against war workers because of their race and color, Lawrence W. Cramer, executive secretary of the committee announced this week.

The directions followed a public examination of the complaints against the Nashville, Tenn., division of the company, at public haering held in Birmingham, Ala., last June.

JAN 9 - 1943

At the same time, the committee announced it had also issued directions to the Alabama Shipbuilding and Drydock Corp., Mobile., Ala.; the A. J. Honeycutt Co., Birmingham, Ala., and the Gulf Shipbuilding Corp., Chickasaw, Ala., after it had found that each of the companies had violated Executive Order 8802 in its hiring and upgrading practices so far as Negro workers are concerned.

JAN 9 - 1943

The Vultee Company was directed to "cease and desist: from discriminatory employment practices; to issue formal instructions to its personnel officers that recruitment, trainnig, and upgrading must be on the basis of qualifications of applicants without regard to race, creed, color, or national origin; and to give formal notice to all employment agencies that it will accept workers "for any and all classifications of work or training" solely on the basis of qualifications.

Vultee was further directed to issue formal instructions to its appropriate officers to delete reference to race or religion from application for employment forms; to inform training agencies from which it recruits workers of its new policies, and to notify all labor unions with which it has contracts that "it will comply fully with its contract obligation not to discriminate against workers because of their race, creed, color, or national origin in recruitment, upgrading, or in any terms or conditions of employment."

In the case of Honeycutt, which was erecting pre-fabricated houses for the government, the committee found that the company had refused to employ Negro carpenters who belonged to unions chartered by the International Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, A. F. of L., and one of which unions belonged to the Mobile Building and Construction Trades Council.

The committee also found that the practices of Mobile Local 89 of the Carpenters and Joiners "operate to bar qualified Negro capenters from employment with the A. J. Honeycutt Company because of their race."

In regard to the union, the committee directed that Local 89 "ontify the A. J. Honeycutt Company in writing that it has no objections to the employment of Negro carpenters on United States Government and defense construction on the same basis as other carpenters are employed. . ." and that "written notice to the same effect be sent to other contractors engaged in United States government and defense construction. . . ."

JAN 9 - 1943

In Mobile, the committee found that there are two all-Negro locals of the Carpenters and Joiners Union, No. 92 and 1105, and that Local 92 is also a member of the Mobile Building and Construction Trades Council; but, through concerted action by the Honeycutt Company and the all-white Local 89, Negro carpenters were effectively barred from employment.

In its findings on the Gulf Shipbuilding Corporation, the committee found that the company refused to employ Negroes, except as porters and janitors, "contrary to its obligation under Executive Order 8802." In view of the attitude of the Mobile [illegible]tal Trades Council the committee also found "that there is not sufficient evidence to support the corporation's contention that white employees will refuse to work if Negroes are hired."

In regard to the Alabama Shipbuilding and Drydock Corp., the committee found that the corporation "has refused to employ skilled Negro labor and has failed and refused to upgrade or promote into skilled positions Negroes already in its employ, solely because of their race, and in so doing has failed to provide for the full and equitable participation of all workers without discrimination because of race or color in violation of the provisions of Executive Order 8802."

The full direction to each company followed the lines of those issued to Vultee, detailing specific steps which the company involved must take to bring its hiring, upgrading, and training program in line with national policy as expressed in Executive Order 8802.

In keeping with a procedure established between the committee and the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy and the Chairman of the Maritime Commission, the committee also notified the Federal departments, for which the offending companies are executing contracts, of the directions issued and recommended to the department head involved that it "call upon the company...to take appropriate steps to comply with Executive Order 8802 and specifically to carry out the directions."

Biddle And McNutt To Confer Friday With Leaders On FEPC

FEB 20 1943

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18—Representatives of 15 minority group organizations, with a direct stake in strengthening the powers of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, will meet here Friday with Attorney General Francis B. Biddle, War Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt, Deputy Commissioner Fowler Harper and possibly other government officials in a conference ordered last week by the White House to attempt to iron out the present difficulties preventing resumption of FEPC railroad discrimination hearings and continuance of normal anti-employment discrimination activity of the Committee.

FEB 20 1943

Among the groups invited to send "representatives of their own choosing" to the conference are the NAACP, the National Urban League, the Association of Negro Land Grant colleges, the recently formed Southern Charter Group, the March on Washington Movement, the Federal Council of Churches of Christ, the National Conference of Christians and Jews, the American Civil Liberties Union and other groups representing Catholic, Mexican and similar religious and racial minorities.

Representation along these lines is expected to bring to the conference table such individuals as Walter White of the NAACP, Lester Granger of the National Urban League, A. Philip Randolph of the MOW, Dr. John W. Davis of the Land Grant colleges, Dr. George E. Haynes or Dr. James Myers of the Federal Council of Churches and Tuskegee's Dr. F. D. Patterson or Fisk's Dr. Charles S. Johnson from the Southern Charter Group.

NEGRO PRESS NOT INVITED

No representatives of the Negro press have been invited to the conference, nor have any members of the present FEPC been issued invitations. The reason advanced for the exclusion of the press is that government representatives wish to have a full and frank discussion of the whole problem unhampered by publicity. The decision not to invite the Committee is said to be based on the desire to have the conference free to discuss reorganization of the entire Committee and replacement of its present personnel.

PRESENT JOB TO HOLD DR. GRAHAM

FEB 20 1943

Meanwhile the crucial question of a fulltime paid committee chairman to take the place of Dr. Malcolm S. MacLean, who recently resigned, remains unsolved. Dr. Frank P. Graham, president of the University of North Carolina and member of the National War Labor Board, who has been frequently mentioned for the post, told the Pittsburgh Courier this week that while he had no personal reluctance to becoming chairman, members of the National War Labor Board were unwilling for him to leave his present duties.

Dr. Will Alexander, also mentioned as a possible choice, similarly indicated to close friends that he was not available. Left in the field is former Lieutenant Governor Charles Polletti of New York. While recognizing his marked ability, certain labor and government circles have questioned the wisdom of his selection both because of the storm of protest his choice is apt to raise among poll tax congressmen and because of the frequent mention of his name as a candidate for mayor of New York City.

OLD COMMITTEE MET WITH BIDDLE

Preliminary to Friday's conference Biddle, McNutt and Harper met here ten days ago with Mark Ethridge, Milton P. Webster, Earl B. Dickerson, John Brophy and Boris Shiskin, comprising the present committee membership.

After a lengthy afternoon's discussion all members of the committee agreed with Attorney General Biddle on the proposal for a full-time, paid chairman of the committee, but with the exception of Ethridge, the committee insisted that its present personnel be retained on a non-paid, part-time basis. No agreement was reached on the proposal for a full-time, paid committee. It is to be expected that this question will be a central point of discussion at the conference.

ROOSEVELT SAYS NO CHANGE MADE IN FEPC SETUP

JAN 2 - 1943

NEW YORK CITY—In answer to resolution passed by the November meeting of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People which urged that the Fair Employment Practice Committee be restored to its full independent status as an organization separate from the War Manpower Commission, the NAACP received from the White House the following statement:

"The action of the president in issuing the Executive Order 8802 was taken after long deliberation and thorough study. In the light of developments since issuance of this order, under the free and unhampered operation of the Committee on Fair Employment Practice, the president feels that there is little basis for a request for a change.

JAN 2 - 1943

Still Under Executive Control

"However, he has asked me to bring to your attention two facts: one, that in the final analysis the committee is still under direct control of the chief executive, and the other, that Chairman McNutt is reorganizing the entire manpower setup and is relying strongly on decisions and recommendations made by the committee on all questions pertaining to the Negroes.

"The president directs me to tell you, therefore, that under the existing circumstances, he sees no necessity for the change as recommended by the resolution of your board."

JAN 2 - 1943

Acknowledging this communication, the NAACP further pointed out "There is very considerable scepticism among not only Negroes generally, but other minorities as well created, for example, by such circumstances as the insistence of the War Manpower Commission that its regional offices shall controll the operation in those regions of the Committee on Fair Employment Practice

Probes In North Only

JAN 2 - 1943

"Another situation giving rise to apprehension is the fact that only Northern or border cities are included in those where the FEPC will conduct hearings based on investigations of discrimination the NAACP said. Since the majority of Negroes live in the South, it is there that discrimination, particularly with respect to the use of Negroes in skilled and semi-skilled capacities, as well as in the matter of training and upgrading, is most deep-rooted

McNutt Closes Door To FEPC Protests

P.M. Daily, New York, N.Y.

JAN 2 0 1943

Refuses to See Delegation Representing 28 Organizations

By GORDON H. COLE
PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—A delegation of 40 leaders of church, labor, and liberal organizations was turned away by Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt yesterday when they came to protest his order postponing hearings into charges of racial discrimination on Southern railroads.

The delegation was stopped by uniformed guards at the entrance to the new Social Security Building, which houses the War Manpower Commission and other Government agencies.

McNutt sent down word that he would see no more than four of the group. The delegation was herded into a vacant auditorium near the building entrance and there the leaders drafted a note to McNutt, stating:

"Downstairs are representatives of 28 national labor, religious, and civic organizations for the appointment regarding your order to postpone the Fair Employment Practice Committee hearings on railway discrimination.

JAN 2 0 1943

Suggest Compromise

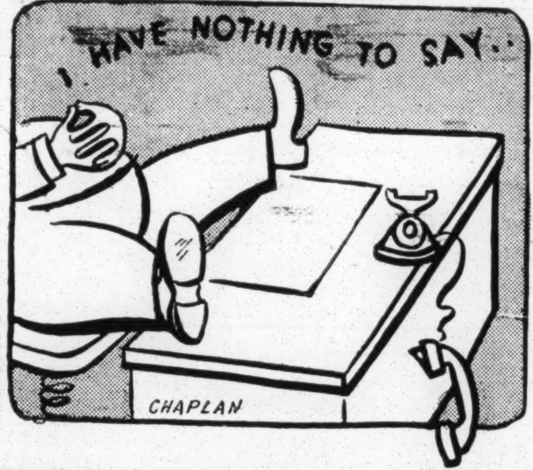
"We have come at our own expense. Now we are told you will see only four persons. We respectfully insist that the full delegation be permitted to attend, with the understanding that not more than four persons shall speak.

"Otherwise, we feel we must return, respectfully declining the interview."

The spokesmen were to have been picked from these five: Rev. James Myers, industrial secretary of the Federal Council of Churches; George K. Hunton, secretary of the Catholic Inter-Racial Council; Rabbi Abraham Shusterman, A. Philip Randolph, chairman of the Provisional Committee to Organize Colored Locomotive Firemen, and Walter White, secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

JAN 2 0 1943

The petition, signed by all 40, failed to win the group access to Manpower Commissioner McNutt's office.



I HAVE NOTHING TO SAY..
CHAPLAN

Commission officials explained that the Chairman's refusal to see the big delegation stemmed from a meeting with another large group on the same subject last Friday. At that time, it was said, McNutt decided that nothing could be accomplished with big conferences.

Having been turned down, the delegation returned to the offices of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, where a telegram reporting McNutt's conduct was drafted and sent to the White House for the President's attention.

Action Deplored

One of the leaders, Rev. James Myers, industrial secretary of the Federal Council of Churches, later issued a statement, publicly deploring as "most regrettable" McNutt's action in postponing indefinitely hearings which had been scheduled by the FEPC on discrimination against Negroes working as firemen and on other jobs on Southern railroads.

Myers contended that the incident raises "the whole question of the status and future usefulness of the FEPC, which has been like a beacon of hope in a heretofore dark picture of race discrimination and lack of democracy in employment practices in many industries."

Plans for the attempted conference with McNutt were organized by the Citizens' Committee to Save Colored Locomotive Firemen's Jobs. Mayor La Guardia is chairman of that committee and Eleanor Roosevelt honorary chairman.

Four FEPC Men Tire of Waiting, Call Hearings

APR 2 5 1943

New York, N. Y. ____ The Daily Worker

Four members of the Fair Employment Practices Committee told the nation this week that they're sick of waiting for War Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt to reorganize the agency.

APR 2 5 1943

These four got together last Monday and decided to open public hearings on May 18 on the failure of the Capital Transit Company in Washington to end discrmination in its employemnt practices, as it was directed to do by FEPC. Following that, there will be public hearings in the Detroit area on widespread discrimination practices there.

APR 2 5 1943

FEPC ceased to function after it was transferred to the War Manpower Commission last summer. Up to that time, it had been an independent agency, directly responsible to the President, and was doing a good job.

APR 2 5 1943

Cancellation of scheduled public hearings on discrimination on the railroads by McNutt led to the resignation of several members, including the chairman. Following these resignations, the agency has been inactive, waiting for McNutt to "reorganize."

GREET MOVE

Negro leaders here hail the move of the four FEPC members, who are: Earl Dickerson, prominent Chicago Negro attorney; Boris Shishkin, AFL representative; John Milton Webster of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters

These leaders say that the move will force the hand of McNutt on the matter. They believe that the cancellation of the railroad hearings was a deliberate attempt to ditch FEPC, inspired by pressure from poll tax Congressmen.

Since the cancellation of the hearings, and the consequent resignations, these Negro leaders have been after McNutt and the President for reorganization of FEPC as an independent agency, with strong leadership, power to enforce decisions, and money to do the job.

They say that this runaround confirms their original opinion that McNutt was out to kill FEPC when he cancelled the railroad hearings.

APR 2 5 1943

PETITION CAMPAIGN

The action of the four FEPC members in reopening hearings on the old basis won't slow up the fight for reorganization of the agency as an independent body, the Negro leaders say. Right now there is a petition campaign for a million signatures, sponsored by National Negro Congress, urging the President to set up the agency as an independent body, with the powers mentioned above.

National Negro Congress headquarters report that hundreds of these petitions have been filled out, and thousands more are being circulated throughout the eastern seaboard and in the middle west. A few trade unions, notably the Furriers Union, have been doing a big job in getting the petitions filled out, according to NNC leaders. They feel, however, that they will have to get stronger support from organized labor to put the drive across.

McNutt Wants Army To Draft More Negroes

MAR 8 1943

He Is Advised To Give FEPC Same Consideration

MAR 8 1943

WASHINGTON--(ANP)—Draft more Negroes for the army, regardless of past rulings and considerations of percentages, is the plea of Paul V. McNutt, who sees in this step the elimination of necessity for drafting whites in other classifications. McNutt has pointed out that the percentage system has kept more Negroes out of the army than any other method. By eliminating this method of calling draftees for the army and by taking Negroes in all branches of the services, army, navy, marine corps, without regard for the percentage quota, an easement on the number of whites being called will be effected.

MAR 8 1943

McNutt did not clarify his statement nor elaborate on it when made to his press conference Monday, however, his statement was clear enough to be understood.

War department officials had no comment to make on the elimination of their percentage calling system.

While McNutt is willing to see that Negroes are called into the army regardless of the number or percentage, he has done nothing about the FEPC in which Negroes themselves are intensely interested.

Calling Negroes for the army by quota has left a large pool of Negroes with 1-A classifications, McNutt says. On the other hand, a large number of whites has been called into the army exhausting completely the 1-A classification.

DENIED PRIVILEGE

Earlier in the war it was possible for whites to enlist in all branches of the service. Negroes were denied this privilege. As a result, white men were already draining their own manpower pool before Negroes were permitted to join up.

In the first days of the selective service system, even when men were being called to the colors, they were slow in calling Negroes, declaring there were no facilities for training them at that time. The recent statement of the war department that there are now 450,000 Negroes in the armed services bears out the statement that there are slightly over 10 per cent in the Military service.

McNutt's new suggestion will bring to the navy, marine corps and army an influx of men which they say they are not ready to accept.

Mr. McNutt has been advised to apply the same principles to the FEPC and the labor situation.

The war and navy departments bluntly refused to accept McNutt's proposal to draft Negroes without reference to the percentage quotas which they have followed in the past. Such action would upset all of the departmental plans and arrangements.

FAIR JOB COMMITTEE TAKEN FROM McNUTT

Pittsburgh Courier
Pittsburgh, PA.
June 5, 1943

WASHINGTON, June 3—There is an amended Executive order governing the work of the FEPC, a new FEPC chairman in the person of Monsignor Francis Joseph Haas, dean of the School of Social Science of Catholic university here, and a new six-man FEPC in the making. Last Thursday, President Roosevelt formally appointed Monsignor Haas as FEPC chairman and issued simultaneously a new executive order outlining the policies of the United States regarding discrimination in war industry and establishing the powers of the new committee.

PLEDGES ACTION

At a press conference held at FEPC offices last Thursday afternoon the new FEPC chairman told the press that he would not "dodge anything" in connection with his new job.

The new executive order places a responsibility upon all employers, including the several Federal departments and agencies as well as upon all labor organizations "to eliminate discrimination in regard to hire, tenure, terms or conditions of employment or union membership because of race, creed, color or national origin."

Under the terms of the new order the FEPC is transferred from the jurisdiction of the War Manpower Commission and placed in the Office for Emergency Management in the Executive Office of the President. Asked the meaning of this change of jurisdiction, Monsignor Haas told The Pittsburgh Courier that the committee would probably have one of the White House secretaries as a liaison between itself and President Roosevelt.

FDR LAUDS ABILITY OF FATHER HAAS

In his letter of appointment of Father Haas, President Roosevelt expressed confidence in the ability of the new chairman to deal with the problem of war time discrimination in industry. The letter to Father Haas stated, "Under your prudent and able direction, I am confident that the committee will make substantial progress in the solution of the vexing problems of discrimination in industry."

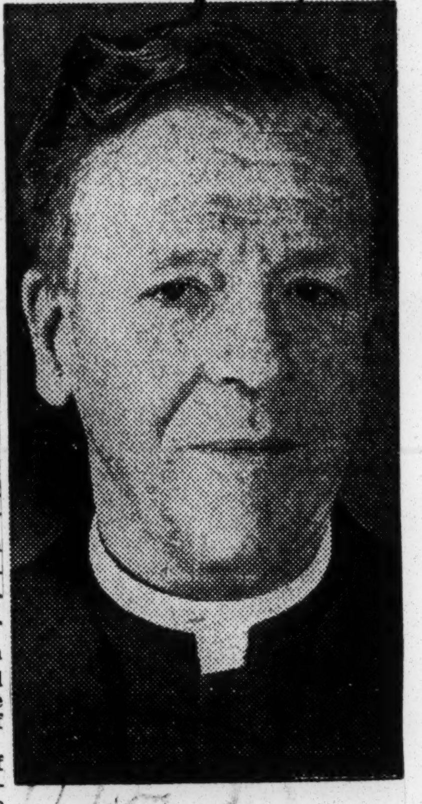
Speaking of the importance of the new executive order, Roosevelt's letter said: "It assures the participation in the war program of workers who are inadequately used or not used at all in war industry. The work of the committee will thus be intimately related to our national war effort."

Under the terms of the new executive order the salary of the new chairman is fixed at a sum "not exceeding $10,000 per year," while that of the other six members is fixed at $25 a day, plus travel and subsistence allowance on days when actually engaged in committee work. The order gives the President leeway, however, to prescribe other compensation for committee members.

GETS POWER TO ACT

The committee is given authority to formulate policies for carrying out the executive order, to recommend to the President and Federal agencies steps for meeting discrimination problems and to propose to the chairman of the War Manpower Commission "appropriate measures for bringing about the full utilization and training of manpower in and for war production without discrimination because of race, creed, color or national origin." It may also hold hearings, conduct investigations, make findings of fact, and take appropriate steps to obtain elimination of discrimination.

SELECTED June 5, 1943



A veteran of labor disputes, Monsignor Francis J. Haas, dean of the School of Social Science at Catholic university, was selected by President Roosevelt to head a new committee designed to prevent discrimination in employment because of race, creed, color or national origin, in Federal departments and labor unions. The latter in the matter of memberships.

SOME PREDICTIONS ON FEPC SET-UP

The new FEPC order leaves open many questions which have for the last three months of FEPC inaction and confusion been the subject of sharp controversy. No one can now answer these questions finally, but here are some predictions: Look for the retention of Brophy, Shishkin and Webster on the new committee and the substitution of a Negro businessman for Dickerson. Look for the replacement of Lawrence Cramer, who is soon to go to the Army, by a white Southerner with an excellent record on Negro problems. Look for the appointment of President Hoffman of the Studebaker company as an industry representative. Look for the holding of the Railroad hearings some weeks or months hence, but the use of hearings in other cases only as a matter of last resort. Look for Marvin McIntyre, White House secretary, to play a leading behind-the-scenes role in the committee, with James Byrnes, former South Carolina senator, having final authority.

The new order also leaves in doubt the question of power of the FEPC to enforce its findings of fact. While it seems certain that the commitee will have a substantially increased budget, it seems equally certain that it can be effective only by persuasion and not by force. It can be said authoritatively that the new order is greatly weaker than the one sought for by Haas and prepared by the Department of Justice.

FEPC to Hear Job-Bias Cases In Capital

MAY 17 1943

By Eva Lapin
(Daily Worker Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON, May 16.—The Fair Employment Practices Committee which has been lying low these last few months is about to come to life again.

Two hearings on discrimination against Negroes in industry have been scheduled by the FEPC which observers here believe will bring about a showdown on whether the Committee can actually gain a new lease on life.

On Tuesday, May 18, the FEPC will hold a hearing to put the Capital Transit Company here on the spot for its continued failure to employ Negroes despite repeated directives.

MAY 17 1943

And on May 24 and 25, the committee has scheduled an investigation in Detroit on discriminatory practices against Negro women and failure to advance and up-grade Negro workers already in industry.

TOOK INITIATIVE

It is understood that the FEPC went ahead with these hearings on its own initiative without direct orders from its "boss," War Manpower Commissioner Paul McNutt.

This action brings to a head the demand by Negro and white groups that FEPC be given independent status, that a chairman be appointed, and that the committee get down to work to stop discrimination which is on the increase in war plants.

Ever since the Southern tories in Congress succeeded in pressuring McNutt to call off the hearings on discrimination in the railroad industry, FEPC has been sitting on its hands.

MAY 17 1943

For one thing there has been no chairman appointed since Mark Ethridge resigned in February.

Although more than six important people have been offered the chairmanship of FEPC, none of these men has accepted the job. The main reason is that FEPC is considered a "hot potato" because of the strong pressure exerted by Southern tories in this capital against its activities.

In addition, the FEPC is in a confused status and no chairman has any idea of how much authority he would have.

Among the men to whom the important job has been offered were former Senator George Norris, Assistant Secretary of the Interior Oscar Chapman, Dr. Will Alexander, Professor Cole of the University of Tennessee, and Mark Ethridge, former chairman who was asked to come back.

MAY 17 1943

NO CHAIRMAN YET

Although WMC director McNutt promised a delegation of Negro leaders on Feb. 19 that he would immediately appoint a chairman to direct the work of the FEPC, the committee is still without a head.

Malcolm Dickerson has been carrying most of the work alone, but there is little hope that he could succeed to the position of chairmanship inasmuch as he is a Negro and the Southern poll-taxers in Congress would never hear of such a thing.

Responsible Negro and white groups have insisted all along that FEPC be removed from the jurisdiction of the War Manpower Commission and be set up as an independent agency with funds from President Roosevelt's own contingency fund.

MAY 17 1943

If the funds came from the President, Congress would not be able to obstruct the work of the FEPC through cutting down appropriations as easily as if it continued under WMC.

The hearing scheduled on Tuesday to inquire into the non-compliance of the Capital Transit Company with FEPC's order to cease discrimination is being watched with great interest here.

The Committee on Jobs for Negroes in Public Utilities has been hammering away at the company to live up to the President's Executive Order 8802 with no success. Not a single Negro platform worker has been hired, and it is hoped that this public hearing will finally force the arrogant company to abandon its discriminatory policies.

New Board To Act Against Job Race Bias

MAY 29 1943

Msgr. Haas Heads Group Replacing Old McNutt Setup

MAY 29 1943

By Edwin D. Gritz
Post Staff Writer

An autonomous committee to "eliminate" discrimination in employment because of race, creed, color or national origin was established by President Roosevelt yesterday under Msgr. Francis J. Haas of Catholic University, who told a press conference shortly after that he was determined to clear up "this filthy situation" of discrimination.

The new Committee on Fair Employment Practice supersedes one of the same name which fell into inactivity recently. Under the executive order, the new committee was granted clear powers to eliminate discrimination by all employers, Federal departments and labor unions, the latter in matters of membership.

MAY 29 1943

McNutt Control Abolished

As reconstituted, the committee was removed from the jurisdiction of Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt and can itself formulate policies and make recommendations to Federal departments and agencies. The old committee was independent, but under McNutt in the actual mechanics of operation.

Father Haas, who has taken leave as dean of the School of Social Science of Catholic University, was a member of the original National Labor Relations Board, a special conciliator for the Labor Department since 1935, and a participant in the settlement of about 1500 labor disputes.

Stressing that the new committee "is not going to dodge anything," Father Haas asserted that "our country is too big for discrimination."

Father Haas declared that manpower is not being effectively used because of still prevalent discrimination, adding, "And this should not be tolerated, not only for the prosecution of the war, but in fairness and decency to all American people."

MAY 29 1943

Among other executive order provisions the committee was empowered to bring about inclusion in all contracts hereafter negotiated or renegotiated clauses by contractors not to discriminate against any employe or applicant. The employers are also obligated to include similar clauses in subcontracts.

Likewise, Government departments and agencies concerned with vocational and training programs for war production are required to administrate these programs without discrimination of any kind.

Father Haas indicated that the six-man membership of the committee may not be determined in time for next Wednesday's hearing, scheduled by the old committee, for the Capital Transit Co. an charges of discriminating against hiring Negroes.

Anti-Negro Bias in Railroad Industry Too Full of Dynamite for Manpower Commissioner; Major Blow-up Threatened

JAN 11 1943

P.M. Daily
N.Y., N.Y.

By JAMES A. WECHSLER
PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt has intervened to suppress the Fair Employment Practice Committee's dynamite-packed exposure of anti-Negro discrimination in the railroad industry, it was learned today.

Under pressure from McNutt, the FEPC, a unit of the Manpower Commission, has been forced to "postpone"—indefinitely—public hearings at which it was prepared to shoot the works against railroad management and unions for defying President Roosevelt's anti-discrimination order.

McNutt's move appeared certain to create a major blow-up on the discrimination issue and may lead to sudden collapse of the FEPC, spearhead of the drive for equal rights in war work. With Negro groups expected to interpret McNutt's action as a "death sentence" for the FEPC, key members of the Committee already were reported on the verge of resignation.

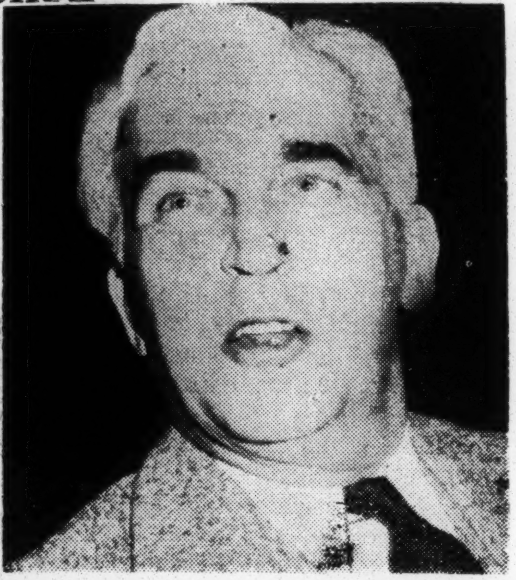
Who'll Take Rap?

Official announcement of the "postponement" of the hearings, scheduled to begin here next Monday, may come at McNutt's weekly press conference today. Members of the FEPC are understood to have flatly rejected McNutt's request that the Committee issue the announcement on its own. They told him bluntly that, if he insisted on abandonment of the hearings, he would have to "take the rap" himself.

It is understood that McNutt's final decision to block the hearings was communicated to Lawrence W. Cramer, executive secretary of the FEPC, on Saturday. Cramer conferred with other members of the Committee, then informed the manpower chief that he would have to make an announcement under his own name.

The gravity of the case is underlined by the fact that the projected railroad hearings have been heralded as a key test of the FEPC's prestige and power. Heretofore, most FEPC probes have been confined to single war plants or localities rather than to an entire industry. Moreover, the railroads long have been a target of sharp attack among Negroes because of widespread and flagrant discriminatory practices.

Indicating the importance attached to this case, the FEPC decided at the outset not to rely exclusively on its own staff and called on Henry Epstein, former Solicitor General of New York State, to conduct the hearings. Epstein has been working with a group of aides for many weeks and was ready to open the hearings on schedule. Railroad management and labor organizations already had received "bills of particulars" from the FEPC, summarizing the major findings of the investigation.



Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt who has suppressed a report of racial discrimination in the railroad industry.

What reasons McNutt offered for side stepping the hearings could not be ascertained. Representatives of the railroad magnates and of the railroad brotherhoods have been carrying on a behind-the-scenes campaign to force abandonment of the inquiry, on the ground that it would create "friction" among railroad workers.

Some sources suggested that members of the Railway Mediation Board may have used their weight to scuttle the probe. The Board, it is understood, also was slated for sharp attack at the hearings for approving one of the "Jim Crow" contracts which the FEPC was expected to condemn.

Jim Crow Agreement

A major part of the indictment against the railroad groups is understood to rest on a "non-promotable" agreement between the all-white Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen with the Southeastern Carriers Conference, representing 25 Southern railroads.

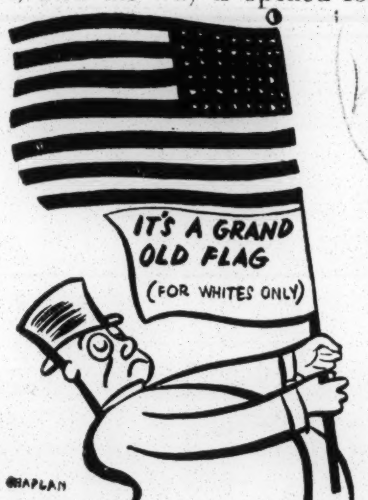
This agreement, it is charged, provides in effect for elimination of all Negro firemen on the roads as fast as Diesel or stokerized engines replace the hand-fired coal engines (The Interstate Commerce Commission has ruled that these replacements must occur by July 1, 1943.) No Negroes are admitted to the Brotherhood, but that organization is permitted to act as "sole bargaining agent" for them.

Commenting on this agreement, A. Philip Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, said recently:

"If the FEPC cannot prevent the unfair and illegal elimination of Negro workers from jobs in which they have been established for nearly a century, its ability to open new opportunities for Negroes will be hopelessly impaired."

In the same statement, issued a few days before McNutt's intervention to block the hearings, Randolph declared that the FEPC's railroad investigation is "a showdown for executive order No. 8802 and for the Committee itself."

"If we can stop this vicious 'non-promotable' offensive by the brotherhood-carrier coalition, then the way is opened for more upgrading of Negro workers, not merely on the railroads, but throughout industry."



"If the FEPC permits defiance or evasion of the President's order by the powerful all-white railroad brotherhoods, we'll sooner or later face a relapse into Jim Crowism by other unions which only recently have begun to see the light."

Randolph's views reflected the feeling throughout Negro circles and among anti-discrimination groups generally.

The railroad hearings originally were scheduled to begin last December, but were postponed until January 25, to permit completion of the investigation. Plans for the hearings were announced as far back as last October and have been widely publicized, especially among Negro organizations, in the ensuing months.

Members of the FEPC include Mark Ethridge, liberal Southern publisher, Boris Shishkin of the AFL, John Brophy of the CIO and Milton Webster of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters. Dr. Malcolm MacLean is chairman. David Sarnoff is understood to have submitted his resignation recently, but whether his move was linked to the collapse of the railroad case is not known.

A mass meeting had been planned here for January 24—eve of the railroad hearings. Labor and Negro leaders were to deliver speeches celebrating the launching of the attack on Jim Crow on the railroads.

That meeting probably will be converted into a protest demonstration.

Back Dickerson for Reorganized FEPC

The Daily Worker
New York, N. Y.

APR 19 1943

WASHINGTON, April 18.—Leading Negro and white lawyers urged upon Paul V. McNutt the retention of Earl B. Dickerson as a member of the Fair Employment Practices Committee which is in the process of being reorganized.

The letter was sent on behalf of the National Lawyers Guild, and was signed by Robert W. Kenny, president, National Lawyers Guild, William H. Hastie, vice-president, National Lawyers Guild, Martin Popper, National Executive Secretary, National Lawyers Guild, Lee Pressman, General Council, Congress of Industrial Organizations, Hubert T. Delaney, Justice, Domestic Relations Court and Thurgood Marshall, Special Council, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, in the face of rumors circulating in Washington to the effect that Mr. Dickerson was not to be reappointed because he insisted upon the vigorous enforcement of Executive Order No. 8802.

The letter to Mr. McNutt stated "the failure to appoint Mr. Dickerson, the disregard of his proven ability and of the valuable experience he has acquired in the fight against discrimination in employment, will inevitably have the effect of arousing renewed suspicion concerning the wholeheartedness with which the President's policy is to be put into force."

The full text of the letter to Mr. McNutt follows:

On June 25, 1942, the National Lawyers Guild wrote to President Roosevelt, urging the appointment of Honorable Earl B. Dickerson as a member of the Fair Employment Practices Committee, which was then being established. The reasons which were the basis of our request are still valid, and to them has been added the valuable experience which Mr. Dickerson gained as a member of the Fair Employment Practices Committee, and the ability he has shown in that position.

Mr. Dickerson is an outstanding leader of the Bar. His record over many years has been that of a leader in the cause of our Negro citizens. He has a clear understanding of the issues facing the country today, and of the paramount necessity for winning the war.

It is not necessary for us to point out to you the importance of national unity at this time, or the vital necessity of securing from the Negro people their full measure of cooperation in our crucial struggle against fascism. The appointment of Mr. Dickerson as a member of the Fair Employment Practices Committee, which is now being reorganized, will go far toward maintaining and building still further that national unity which we must have if we are to win the war. His appointment will be an assurance that the objectives of the President's policy against discrimination will be vigorously carried out. The failure to appoint Mr. Dickerson, the disregard of his proven ability and of the valuable experience he has acquird in the fight against discrimination in employment, will inevitably have the effect of arousing renewed suspicion concerning the wholeheartedness with which the President's policy is to be put into force.

Three FEPC Members Hit McNutt In Letter To FDR

Daily World

MAR 8 1943

Committee Reported Worried Over Present Condition

WASHINGTON—(ANP) — With the morale of the office force at a low state, and the members of the committee itself perturbed over the present condition, the three members of the FEPC who met on Monday addressed a very strong letter to President Roosevelt, expressing entire dissatisfaction at the manner in which Paul V. McNutt has handled the affairs of that organization recently.

MAR 8 1943

Present and presiding was Earl Dickerson; with him John Brophy of the CIO and Morris Shiskin of the AFL were the other members. Etheridge, the chairman, was absent as was Milton Webster.

Feeling that the President has deserted the group in the crisis, there was nothing for the members to do but express their sentiment to the man who originated the idea of the committee

PREDICT DEATH

With only routine work proceeding in the office, no policies established, no routines established whereby the committee will be able to see its way clear to do an effective job, there is little reason to expect anything except disgust and dissention. Some have said this will be the policy of the powers that be, to let the committee die a natural death unnoticed and unheeded.

The recent meeting of "leaders" from all over the country is being considered more or less a political gesture to soften the blow. It is felt in high places that nothing will come of this meeting, no matter what has been promised.

MAR 8 1943

A similar case is pointed out in Maryland, where about a year ago there was a "March on Annapolis." Two thousand Negroes laid their grievances on the governor's doorstep. He promised to "look into all of the complaints." Election time was drawing near and some excuse had to be made. Since then, there has been nothing heard of the committee appointed by the governor to investigate the charges.

FEPC is in a similar spot. No one seems to know what to do. The original sponsors have deserted the group leaving the entire matter in the hands of underlings who are constantly under fire and taking a severe going over because of their failure to comprehend the situation or attempt to do anything about it.

OF VITAL INTEREST

The FEPC is of vital interest to every member of a minority group in the United States and the manhandling of that organization may be seen as the handwriting on the wall as far as liberalism toward minority groups is concerned.

The contents of the letter to the President were not revealed, but it is known that a careful reading would show a complete dissatisfaction with both Mr. McNutt and Atty. Gen. Biddle, the latter too strongly influenced by the professional white solvers of Negro problems, who know only how to line their pockets off Negroes' earnings or live off their misfortunes.

"The Negro is determined not to let the FEPC die without holding a wake that will resound down to the very edges of the 'fourth term,' said one speaker when questioned on the matter. "If Mr Roosevelt has any ideas about a fourth term, he had better stop flirting with the unreconstructed south and stick with those who have carried him thus far. Surely, the Negro had an important part in his successes."

No satisfactory word may be had from the FEPC representatives, none of whom seem to know what is going on nor how long they will be functioning

CIO Assails McNutt For Gagging FEPC

P. M. Daily
New York, N.Y.

AFL Joins in Protesting Suppression of Hearings on Jim Crowism in Railroad Industry

JAN 13 1943

By James A. Wechsler
PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt today faced mounting protest over his ban on the Fair Employment Practice Committee's long-prepared exposure of anti-Negro discrimination in the railroad industry.

In a sharp attack on McNutt's action, CIO Secretary James B. Carey charged that postponement of the railroad hearings "is a serious blow to the war morale of 10,000,000 Negro citizens and to all white persons who know that racial discrimination is a Hitlerite weapon."

Acting as head of the CIO's anti-discrimination committee, Carey appealed directly to McNutt to "correct this grievous error before we lose the faith of millions of people, at home and abroad." He said that McNutt's announcement calling off the railroad exposure "constitutes a setback of the first magnitude on the home front."

Simultaneously, an AFL spokesman disclosed that President William Green had instructed Boris Shishkin, Federation representative on the Fair Employment Practice Committee, to ask for an immediate meeting of the FEPC and to register AFL's opposition to McNutt's stand. Green was represented as feeling strongly that the railroad hearings should go on as scheduled.

Committee May Dissolve

JAN 13 1943

With John Brophy, CIO representative on the FEPC, and Shishkin expected to join in demanding that McNutt back down, it appeared that the Committee would make a strong fight for survival before any resignations take place. If McNutt refuses to yield, the FEPC—a unit of the War Manpower Commission—is believed almost certain to go out of business.

Henry Epstein's withdrawal as chief counsel to the FEPC in the railroad case, announced in New York yesterday, also was expected to help crystallize the revolt stirred by McNutt's action. Epstein, former Solicitor General of New York State, had spent many weeks directing the FEPC probe. (Story in Column 3.)

Some sources close to the Manpower Commission expressed belief that anti-discrimination groups still had a fighting chance to force reversal of McNutt's decision. It was said that protests from labor, liberal and Negro groups had started coming in almost as soon as the news broke.

CIO Secretary James B. Carey said yesterday Manpower Commissioner McNutt's gag on FEPC is a serious blow to morale.

The projected railroad hearings were slated to expose the "lily-white" coalition of management and unions in the railroad industry designed to keep Negroes from gaining advancement and to reduce the number employed on the roads.

Decision 'Disappoints' CIO

With the hearings scheduled to start on Jan. 25, McNutt last week end informed Lawrence Cramer, executive director of the FEPC, that the show wouldn't go on. On Monday McNutt told a press conference that the Manpower Commission would use "other ways" to combat discrimination on the railroads. He didn't say what they would be.

JAN 13 1943

In protesting McNutt's move, CIO Secretary Carey said:

"Mr. McNutt's announcement constitutes a setback of the first magnitude on the home front of this Nation's war effort. Unless speedily corrected, it well may develop into an equally serious obstacle to achieving full unity among all the peoples of the United Nations, regardless of color or creed, in their global war against the Axis.

"The home front is linked indissolubly with our battlefronts. And the time has come for Mr. McNutt to show the same courage and valor at home as our fighting service men, regardless of color or creed, are displaying in their daily engagements with the enemy. . ."

Paul Robeson, addressing a banquet in honor of the Negro Merchant Marine skipper, Capt. Hugh Mulzac, at the Hotel Commodore in New York last night said:

"We must see that the words of McNutt do not stand. We must call on the President for an investigation."

FEPC Not Obeyed in Mobile

Negro Workers Not Being Used To Full Capacity

JAN 1 1943

By REV. H. E. CARTER

MOBILE, Ala. — (ANP) — Unfortunately in the Mobile area, Negro labor is not being utilized where it can be the greatest asset to America's war effort. The rule applies wherever "defense" or war work is being done, including Brookley field, the army air port.

At the Alabama ship yards, Negroes are not even promised to be up-graded. There are a few helpers in some shops. They are men who have been there some years, before war work began, and in order not to nemote them, they are retained as helpers.

In almost every case of this kind the Negro is not a helper, in fact, but in name and pay only; and actually he is the blacksmith or tinner as the case may be. In these particular shops, (blacksmith and tinner) there are men with 25 or 30 years' experience. From these men the heads of the shops seek and get information regarding the work to be done.

Fifteen years ago, Negroes did work as pipefitters. Today Negroes are not used, even as pipefitters' helpers. In the electrical department, no Negro helpers are used.

NEGRO ELECTRICANS

There is one licensed Negro electrician in Mobile; and there are five others who are qualified as such. The matter of their being employed in war industries in Mobile is out of the question. They are not even considered for employment as such. In this case, as in many other, the labor union is responsible for the Negro being shut out.

There is one "test case" of a Negro whose application has been on file in the electricians' union for quite a few years. So far as he knows, no action has ever been taken. The only licensed Negro electrician in Mobile has qualified by civil service examination ,to become an instructor in electricity at the United States Navy yard, Mare Island, Cal. He also has very lucrative offers from Puget Sound, Bremerton, Washington, and Chanute field.

In the boiler makers' department no Negro helpers are used. Men of years of experience are working as helpers.

JAN 1 1943

In the machine shop there are four Negroes whose experience averages 20 years who can do any type of work in their line. Other Negroes, along with them, who have been there for several years remain there as helpers and laborers, having absolutely no chance for promotion or up-grading.

Other men who have come in recently, having a few short weeks of experience, are promoted or upgraded all around and over those well trained and experienced Negroes. This applies in all shops where Negroes are employed.

There are no Negroes employed as ship-carpenters. Only a few Negroes are used in this work, some of whom could easily qualify as carpenters. In caulking and riveting, the Negro is employed as laborer with no chance for up-grading.

PAINTERS

Negro painters are hired as dockmen at 80 cents per hour, and assigned to painters' jobs even as spray-gun painters. The regular painters' scale is $1.20 per hour. Other painters on the same job, painting behind those Negroes are getting the regular painters' scale.

TRAINED WITH-IN INDUSTRY

JAN 1 1943

In spite of the elaborate T. W. I. setup, Negroes are systematically and consistently excluded. At least 500 women are being trained as welders, sheet-metal workers, burners and lay-out crews, but no Negroes. Those trained are paid a nominal wage while in-training. There are at least 70 trained welders in Mobile, men who were trained at the expense of the federal government.

These men have applied at the shipyards for employment as welders but have been either hired as laborers or left unemployed. This, in spite of the fact that sometime ago there was a statement published o the effect that there were no more male welders available. Therefore the shipyards had to resort to training women welders.

BROOKLEY FIELD

There is as much discrimination at Brookley field, the army air port, as can be found anywhere else in the area. There Negroes are employed as classified laborers and assigned to skilled jobs, with classified labor pay. This is especially applicable in the packing department. Negro applicants are not admitted to the examination for storekeepers.

FEPC

JAN 1 1943

There are instances where Negroes were sent, by their foreman, to certain places to work and the subforeman refused to accept them, saying they could not work with him or that he would not have them.

In every instance of this kind, the foreman had acquiesced to common labor. Others would not accept the compromise. Several girls were qualified as typists by civil service examination, two rating very highly wer turned away with the statement, "We have no place for colored typists."

The expressed desire of the general supervisor of depot supply is to keep Negroes out of jobs where the pay is above $1500 per year.

CARPENTERS

There are about 200 Negro carpenters in Mobile. On jobs where they are employed, they do not work on the same building with white carpenters. Approximately 3,000 carpenters are working on various jobs that are financed by the federal government, but less than 100 colored carpenters are employed.

JAN 1 1943

BRICK MASONS

Negro brick-masons work harmoniously along with white brickmasons; not only on the same job, but on the same building, the same wall. They are together in the same local union. Their business manager is fair and sees that no discrimination is practiced on any job where brickmasons are employed.

White and colored plasterers and cement finishers are not only in the same local union, but have a colored business manager. They all work together, thus destroying the idea that white craftsmen wil not work with Negro craftsmen.

Say Skilled Workers in Mobile Rated Unskilled Despite FEPC

Negro Resigns As Civilian Aid To War Secretary

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18, (AP)—The resignation of William H. Hastie, negro civilian aide to the Secretary of War, was disclosed today. Hastie declined to say why he was resigning or what he expected to do.

"I wish to state my sincere appreciation for the measure of friendly support and co-operation which my office has received from the press," he said in a statement. "I shall have no further or amplifying statement to make until after my official duties shall have terminated" at the end of this month.

Hastie was born in 1904 at Knoxville, Tenn., and is a graduate of Amherst College and the Harvard Law School. He has been on leave as dean of the Howard University Law School here since he joined Secretary Stimson's staff November 1, 1940, as an adviser on negro affairs. Hastie was Federal judge in the Virgin Islands from 1937 to 1939.

Hastie said that his assistant, Truman K. Gibson Jr., and Louis Lautier, administrative assistant in charge of matters affecting negro civilian personnel, would remain on duty with the department, "at least through such transitional periods as may be necessary to prevent any discontinuity in efforts which have been undertaken by this office."

Dee Cee To Protest McNutt FEPC Ruling

1/19/42

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(SNS)—Final plans have been made for the biggest demonstration Washington, D. C., has ever witnessed in the form of a monster protest mass meeting to be held at Vermont Avenue Baptist Church Sunday, January 24, 3:00 P. M.

The meeting is a direct protest to the recent ruling of Paul V. McNutt postponing the scheduled hearings of FEPC in the case of the Negro railroad firemen and railroad workers, in alleged discriminations. The hearings were slated to disclose what is termed as the most flagrant job of discrimination ever perpetrated upon a group of workers.

1/19/43

Negroes throughout the country have been greatly alarmed ever since President Roosevelt switched the FEPC to McNutt. There was general discontent at that time and floods of telegrams poured into the White House. They were fearful at that time that the committee would lose much of its effectiveness and the recent ruling and action of McNutt have justified their contentions.

1/19/43

Members of FEPC are at a loss to determine the reason for McNutt's sudden decision, due to the fact that much time and money have been spent to gather the vast amount of information which was to be used at the hearings. Henry Epstein, former solicitor of New York state, Harold A. Stevens, New York and Charles H. Houston, of this city, were the attorneys handling the case for FEPC.

With a number of committees at work, the protest meeting bids fair to be attended by 5,000 persons or more. Every church, club, civic, labor, and fraternal organization, of Washington and vicinity is being urged and requested to take part, so that McNutt and the forces responsible for the calling off of the hearings may know the people of the country, and particularly the Negro, are determined to see that the Negro workers keep their jobs and be free from discrimination.

Speakers slated to appear on the program include B. F. McLaurin, Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters; James B. Carey, CIO; A. Philip Randolph, Director, March On Washington Committee; Paul Scharrenberg, AFL; Theodore A. Jackson, President, Dining Car Employees Union; Dr. Lawrence M. Ervin, and Thurman L. Dodson.

Addes Calls Gag on FEPC A 'Disgrace'

"Daily Worker"

JAN 26 1943

DETROIT, Jan. 25.—George F Addes, secretary-treasurer of the UAW-CIO and director of the War Policy Board sent a strong letter of protest to Paul V. McNutt of the indefinite postponement of the public hearings on discrimination against the Negroes in the railroad industry.

Stating that "during this present war emergency is no time for the government or government officials to show signs of weakness or adopt an appeasement policy on this matter. The principle of no discrimination should not be made a political football or the subject of political bargaining," Addes went on to blast the discrimination against the Negro in the railroad industry as a "disgrace to our democratic country."

"The UAW-CIO has consistently fought against discrimination of any kind and character and insist that a non-discriminatory policy be followed in all plants wherein the UAW-CIO has collective bargaining agreements. In these plants Negro men and women are today working side by side with other workers and are contributing a great deal towards the success of the war production drive" his statement continued.

NEED ALL TO HELP

"We need the help of the Negro people to win this war, and failure on the part of government to cooperate in denouncing those industries and managements that refuse to abide by the Constitution will unquestionably tend to lower the faith of many in the democratic ideals for which we are today fighting" concludes the statement.

JAN 26 1943

Walter P. Reuther, vice-president of the UAW-CIO and member of the Labor-Management Policy Committee of the United States War Manpower Commission added his voice to the protests flowing in to Paul V. McNutt.

Reuther emphatically protested the postponement of the hearing and urged that they be opened forthwith so that remedial steps can be taken to improve the situation. In addition Reuther declares that "The UAW-CIO is disturbed by reports that proposed hearings by the FEPC in Detroit may also be postponed. Our union desires to register its protest also against any postponement of projected Detroit hearings."

He also charges that railroad executives and short-sighted unions are working together "to abrogate President Roosevelt's order 8802 against racial discrimination, and that these activities are a serious blow to the morale of millions of colored citizens whose contribution to the war effort is so vital to victory."

McNutt Acted On White House Order, Is Capital Report

JAN 16 1943

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The Committee on Fair Employment Practice has been directed to drop its investigation into race discrimination in employment by common carriers (railroads), it was learned Saturday.

Instructions to the committee not to pursue further its plans for a hearing on charges that the railroads practice discrimination in their hiring of workers were issued by Paul V. McNutt, chairman of the War Manpower Commission, under whose supervision the committee comes, it was reliably reported.

Mr. McNutt is said to have acted on orders from the White House.

FOLLOWS JUSTICE LINE

While the calling off of the hearing was attributed in some quarters to the influence of reactionaries who are opposed to the efforts of the committee to combat race discrimination, it was pointed out in other quarters that this action was in line with the move of the Department of Justice in postponing anti-trust indictments which were to have been returned against motor and rail carriers.

JAN 16 1943

Indictments charging rate fixing by carriers were postponed recently at the request of the Secretaries of War and the Navy and the Director of Defense Transportation.

The reason given for the postponement of the indictments was that if the government proceeded with the indictments, the efforts of the carriers during the war would be injured.

Postponement of the indictments was in accord with the program agreed upon by President Roosevelt and officials last March.

Attorney General Biddle said the indictments had been prepared after evidence was given to a Chicago grand jury "involving abusive and coercive practices in the private fixing of rates by motor and rail carriers."

JAN 16 1943

The committee was rushing preparations for the hearing when Mr. McNutt directed it not to proceed in the matter.

Special counsel had been employed by the committee to prepare the case against the railroads and adduce evidence during the hearing.

White Urges Reversal of Ban on FEPC Probe

WASHINGTON, D. C.—"Because the decision which is now made will profoundly affect the course of things to come, we renew our request that the Fair Employment Practice Committee be restored to its independent status," said Walter White this week, in a letter urging the President's reversal of McNutt's War Manpower order of the postponement of the Jan. 25 FEPC hearing on discrimination in railroad employment.

JAN 23 1943

"We want you to know," said White, "that we are deeply sympathetic because of the difficulties which the making of such a decision will entail. We know the terrible dilemma you face in the 78th Congress because of the coalition formed against you and against all liberal legislation by members of your own party from the South and of certain members of the Republican party. We have been informed of the lobbying being done among these members by representatives of the railway brotherhoods and the railroads, who bitterly oppose any action which would attempt to correct the vicious discrimination against Negroes on certain of the public carriers. But we respectfully submit that any surrender to such forces would be disastrous, not only for the Negro, but for the principles of democracy itself.

"We know, also, that certain members of your secretariat, who are distinctly unsympathetic to Negroes, may have given you less than a complete picture of the situation. I have been informed, for example, by distinguished white visitors to the White House of violently denunciatory statements by one of your secretaries against Negroes. I am informed that Mr. A. Philip Randolph and myself are the particular objects of attack."

White pointed out that on matters relating to the Negro the President has conferred exclusively with white Americans.

FEPC Statement Says New Chairman Will Be Named Soon

WASHINGTON—(AP)—The self-sought reorganization of the Fair Empolyment Practice Committee, a government unit charged with combating racial and religious discrimination, appeared imminent Tuesday.

The committee, in a statement, said it had been "officially advised that new chairman had been appointed and that the reorganization will be effected immediately upon his assumption of the chairmanship."

The committee has acceded to a "request" to postpone two hearings it had scheduled for inquiry into charges of discrimination against Negroes and others.

One hearing was postponed from May 24-25 to June 28-29. The other was set back from Wednesday to June 2.

Identity of the new chairman was not disclosed. Chairman Paul V. McNutt of the War Manpower Commission indicated that President Roosevelt would deliver the appointment personally.

The new chairman will succeed Dr. Malcolm S. McLean, Hampton (Va.) Institute president.

The committee's work has been virtually at a standstill since early this year, when a hearing it had scheduled into alleged discrimination against Negroes by the railroad industry was "postponed indefinitely" by McNutt.

Statements of Chairman and Director of Southern Conference On Race Relations To Chairman McNutt of WMC At Hearing In Washington

EDITOR'S NOTE—Invited to confer with Chairman Paul V. McNutt, Chairman of the War Manpower Commission, February 19, on the future of the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee, were heads of numerous organizations representing Jews, Catholics, Spanish speaking Americans, the foreign born, and Negroes. The Southern Conference on Race Relations was represented by P. B. Young, of Norfolk, chairman, and Dr. Gordon B. Hancock, Richmond, director. Their remarks, stenographically reported, are printed on this page.

MAR 6 1943

Statement By Mr. Young

Chairman, Southern Conference On Race Relations

Mr. Chairman, I want to say at the outset that I believe that the members of our Conference would endorse the idea of this Committee being continued as an independent agency, working directly under the executive control of the President.

That is not because any of us feel a lack of confidence in the Chairman of the War Manpower Commission. I hope you will not feel that the insistence that the Committee be kept directly under the President and under his executive control is due to any feeling that Mr. Paul McNutt would in any sense do anything to hinder the work of this Committee. I think that is the general sentiment—certainly of all the Negroes in the southern regions—if not the sentiment of some of those in the northern regions.

RANDOLPH CHARGES TRUE

However, there are several things to be taken into consideration if you set this Committee up as an agency of the Manpower Commission or as an independent agency, that have to do directly with getting its appropriations from the Congress. We have all had practical illustrations within the past week or so of what the present Congress will do with any budget that is presented for the committee on Fair Employment Practice. If it goes to Congress,—the present Congress — that is what will happen. We have the feeling that had it not been for the President's Executive Order 8802, and the establishing of this Committee, Negroes would have been excluded almost entirely — especially Negroes that are skilled in any particular craft — would have been excluded almost entirely from participation in the war effort.

Though we may not agree with all that Mr. Randolph implied in the March on Washington Movement, whatever gesture that was, or whatever he had in mind, when this Committee was set up, when this Executive Order was issued and the Committee set up, he rendered a distinct service to this nation in many ways. I want to emphasize here also that what Mr. Randolph has said this morning about the precarious position in which Negro railroad employees find themselves at the present time, is all true. He hasn't made an over-statement of the case in the slightest degree. In fact, I think it is much more precarious than he has stated.

Statement By Dr. Hancock

Director, Southern Conference On Race Rlations

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Chairman, we are essentially interested in this matter of race relations. As my good friend Mr. Young said, in other parts of the country, you have race relations cooked and seasoned, but in the South, we have them in the raw.

When you speak about helping the Negro economically, you go to the heart of the matter. I heard a little speech one time:

> "I had a little dog and his name was Rover:
> When he died, he died all over."

I think that is true about a man economically. If you make him alive economically, he is alive all over. If you kill him economically, he is killed all over. When you attempt, therefore, to let the Negroes come within the purvey of this Fair Employment relations because there can be no amicable race relations while a large segment of our people are discriminated against.

We are therefore, as Mr. Young has said, loking to the continuation of this Committee because it looks forward to the thing we so much desire.

Hopes Tied Up With Order 8802

Hendrik Van Loon said some time ago in attempting to describe eternity, "If you will imagine a rock that is one mile wide, one mile long, and one mile high, in the middle of the ocean and a little bird comes once every thousand years to sharpen his bill when that little bird would have rubbed that rock away, that would represent just one day of eternity."

There are forces in this country that are attempting to postpone this, but we are very glad that this Order 8802 looks forward to not putting it off until the little bird wears the stone away. Therefore, our hopes, our aims, are definitely bound up in this thing.

As Mr. Churchill said, "We are a warrior nation now working in the fear of God, heavily armed." I would like to see this committee not only rejuvenated but heavily financed.

Dealing With Hostile Congress

While we are in agreement on all fundamental points here — I don't believe there is any disagreement among any of us with reference to what we are trying to do — I don't agree, however, with some of what has been said here concerning the apparent disposition of the Administration to evade or to dodge its responsibility in this great work. I do not believe the President of the United States wants that to happen.

However, we do feel that this Administration, dealing with a Congress that is at present certainly out of control so far as the leaders of the Government are concerned, and which has started out to do some things which have very dangerous implications for all minority groups, particularly when it by overwhelming vote the other day gave two years more to the Dies Committee with a $75,000 appropriation, connot ignore the implications of that situation.

I think that all of us are realistic enough to know what will happen to this Committee if it goes up to Congress for an independent appropriation; the thing that almost the entire — not all of the gentlement of Congress — but the southern members of Congress and the reactionary members from other regions, want done. That is. they want dismantled, liquidated practically everything that has been set up here that will give minority groups or the working men security.

I think that most of us are realistic enough to know that the Administration now is trying to get the war effort on in spite of Congress, and that is what you are going to have to do, we feel certain, in whatever steps you take about this particular committee. I won't take the position, the emotional position, that because it is idealistic I will throw aside all of the implications in a Congress that is hostile and say. "Yes, we are going to do this thing anyhow," because I want to see it done.

On several questions, particularly that of giving it independent status, of continuing the public hearings, and some other phases of the question that have been raised here, I am in agreement, short of any steps that would close the door to accomplishing anything. We don't want to close the door, and we know that all of this is involved in politics. All of this is involved in the political attitude, the social attitude of the people who right now are riding high and pretty hard in this country.

Now, as to the question of a paid or unpaid committee. The first thing we have to face is that the Committee at the present time is in a state of flux. There is no Committee, so to speak. The Chairman, with whom I happen to have been closely associated with you have already stated. There are those members whose resignations, as you state, are on your desk. Your first problem is to get another chairman and a

Stand Of Conference Cited

We went one step further and recognized the fact that one of the main reasons why this Executive Order was issued and why this Committee was set up, was the attitude of the unions toward the integration of Negroes. I don't want to be misunderstood as taking any position here at all against the unionization of labor, or against organized labor. I don't want to get into any quarrel with organized labor. I am not opposing organized labor in any sense. I am committed to the principle of organized labor, but it is a fact that a large number — I think Mr. Randolph could tell you exactly how many of them — by ritual or constitution exclude Negroes from membership in their unions.

So we said that we held that only those labor unions which admit Negroes to membership and participation on a fair and democratic basis should be eligible for the benefits of the National Labor Relations Board, Railway Labor Act, State Labor Relations Act, and other protective labor legislation.

GOVERNMENT HAS OBLIGATION

It seems to me obligatory upon the part of the Government, that something be done to protect the interests of the Negro worker because it is true that the Government has given organized labor a blank check to go ahead to do anything it wants to do, and this action is supported by statutory law. On the other hand, these acts do not protect the Negro, because most of the unions exclude Negroes from membership.

Confidence In President Roosevelt

We do not share any apparent lack of confidence in the President. We believe that the President has been entirely sincere and courageous in what he has done prior to his Executive Order and since his Executive Order; that he has given support to the Committee; that he is sincere in whatever he wants to do now.

This administration certainly has done more for minority groups, certainly has done more for labor, certainly has done more for Negroes, than any administration since the administration of Abraham Lincoln. I think that is true.

full committee.

NEED MEN OF HIGH CALIBRE

The question of whether those men should be paid or unpaid would involve this, as to whether or not, when you go out for paid men, you are going to have sufficient funds to get the caliber of men who are willing or able to do the thing that you want done. I don't think there is any question of their integrity or their intent involved there. So I think our Conference group would be inclined to feel that you would be on better ground if you sought to proceed with an unpaid committee, but with big men and strong men who would be willing to give their time and their services to the cause.

Negroes Excluded From Railway Jobs

It is alarming, if not appalling, when we consider the fact that just a decade, or two decades ago, a large segment of the Negro population, especially in the southeastern states, was employed in various railroad occupations. But it is true that these powerful Railroad Brotherhoods are gradually eliminating them; have done that until they have gotten them down to the place when almost the only participation of the Negro in the railroad industry is by indirection. He is a red cap, a pullman porter, a dining car waiter, a dining car cook. I cant' think of anything else much he has to do with reference to the operation of railroads.

Now, at our conference in October, we went on record with the following statement: "That the only tenable basis of economic survival and development for Negroes in inclusion in unskilled, semi-skilled and skilled branches of work in the industrial or occupations of the region to the extent that they are equally capable. Circumstances will vary so as to make impossible and impractical the exact numerical balance, but the principles enunciated by the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee are regarded by us as sound and economically essential."

There is one other thing — I think I speak for the South; I can't speak for all of the country. Negroes do believe that this Administration really wants to give them a fair deal along with all other minority groups, along with all other segments of the population; that there is no conspiracy, no conniving, no darkness in these things being done on the part of the administration as such to deprive us of anything to which we are entitled under the Constitution and the laws of our country.

'Save FEPC' Conference Is Held

"The Call" Kansas City Mo.

Urge Voluntary Rather Than Paid Members

FEB 12 1943

WASHINGTON.—The latest upshot of Commissioner Paul V. McNutt's indefinite postponement of the FEPC railroad hearings was the arrival in Washington, Friday, Feb. 4, of more than 150 delegates from 13 states to a "Save the FEPC Conference."

FEB 12 1943

While applauding President Roosevelt's announcement, made five days after his return from Casablanca, that the railroad hearings will be resumed, the conference declared that the fight to keep Order 8802 from becoming a scrap of paper vas by no means over.

FEB 12 1943

In sharp contrast with the rumored plans of official Washington was the conference's demand that FEPC be removed from the jurisdiction of the War Manpower Commission and that instead of becoming a paid board, it continue as a voluntary committee.

FEB 12 1943

Reactionary Wave

Delegates from 42 organizations declared "The recent action of Commissioner McNutt in summarily postponing the railroad hearings is another indication of the tremendous reactionary wave which has begun in this country.'

"If the federal government is forced to capitulate to the reactionary and anti-liberal forces of this country who insist on imposing their pattern of discrimination and intolerance upon the minorities of this country, then serious and irreparable injury to the morale of these groups will result," said the conference in its resolution.

FEB 12 1943

After calling on 13 senators and congressmen, the conference went on record as endorsing five principles enunciated by its chairman, A. Philip Randolph. These principles were:

FEB 12 1943

1.—The railway hearings should be held as scheduled by the original committee which prepared them.

2.—The committee must have an adequate budget.

3.—The principle of public hearings as a sanction must be maintained.

4.—The FEPC must be removed from the War Manpower Commission and given the indepedent status it originally had.

5.—The FEPC must be a voluntary board representing various interests, and must not become a paid appendage of any political administration.

COMMITTEE MOVES TO CURB JOB BIAS

Agency Under New Mandate With Mgr. Haas as Chairman Tackles Vexing Problems

New York Times
New York, N. Y.

OLD DISPUTES WAIT ACTION

By W. H. LAWRENCE

WASHINGTON, June 26—Dealing with one of the most delicate and potentially explosive issues in the whole war, that of discrimination, especially against Negroes, in war industry employment, the revived Fair Employment Practices Committee, headed by Mgr. Francis J. Haas of Catholic University, has been moving slowly in carrying out the mandate given it by President Roosevelt.

JUN 27 1943

47d

FEPC

The race riots in Detroit, at Beaumont, Tex., and in Mobile, Ala., were indicative of the moral atmosphere in which the committee has to work in some towns in the United States. These outbreaks, the most serious of which was in Detroit and which had nothing to do with the committee or the breaking down of color-line barriers in war plants, already were having a serious effect on war production and emphasized the need for a cautiously firm approach to the problem.

Problems for Committee

The committee's job is one of the most difficult in the war. It encounters prejudices which have been built up for many years, especially in the Deep South. The committee faces pressure groups on both sides. It must combat discrimination not only by employers but by organized labor groups, some of which either bar Negroes from membership or require them to join "Jim Crow" locals. It has a task which probably never will be completed perfectly, but which, most persons agree, must be done in large part because the nation needs the Negro manpower to carry out its huge war production commitments at a time when more than 10,000,000 men are to be drawn into the armed forces.

JUN 27 1943

The campaign to wipe out discrimination against not only Negroes but all other types of religious and racial minorities is important, also to the cause of the United Nations on the propaganda front. Officials say that Japanese agents have been spreading the word that this is "a white man's war against the colored peoples," depending on the ignorance of the listener to overlook the fact that the assertedly 100 per cent Aryans of Germany started the war in Europe.

Racial Ruling by WLB

As Dr. Frank P. Graham, president of the University of North Carolina and public member of the War Labor Board, pointed out in a recent decision abolishing pay differentials based solely on race, this country needs the Negro "whether as vigorous fighting man or for production of food and munitions," and the Negro needs the equal opportunity to work and fight.

47d

"The Negro is necessary for winning the war and at the same time is a test of our sincerity in the cause for which we are fighting," Dr. Graham said. "Under Hitler and his master race, their movements backward to slavery and despair. In America the colored people have the freedom to struggle for freedom."

JUN 27 1943

FEPC

Recent governmental figures show that slow, steady progress is being made in breaking down racial barriers. The War Manpower Commission reported last week that the proportion of non-white workers in 16,000 establishments employing about 14,600,000 was 6.7 per cent in March, an increase from 5.8 per cent reported nine months before.

The New Committee

Mgr. Haas has been on the job only since May 28, when the President restored the FEPC as an independent agency, taking it from under the control of WMC Chairman Paul V. McNutt. The old committee ceased to function after Mr. McNutt forced postponement of a hearing on charges that some railroads and unions were discriminating against Negroes.

JUN 27 1943

Well-informed persons think one of the most difficult cases which the new committee will be called upon to handle involves discrimination in Pacific Coast shipyards and aircraft factories.

The new committee's position is considered stronger than that of its predecessor. Under the executive order creating it all contracting agencies of the government are required to include in all new contracts or renegotiated contracts a provision obligating the contractor or subcontractor not to discriminate because of race, creed, color or national origin.

Job Discrimination Goes On As FEPC Remains Dormant

P.M N.Y., N.Y

Delay in Reorganizing Committee Is Hindering Efforts in the City

APR 2 1943

By ARNOLD BEICHMAN

Delay in the long-promised reorganization of the Fair Employment Practices Committee (FEPC), particularly the appointment of a chairman, is seriously hindering the anti-discrimination work of the Committee's regional office in New York.

The local office, Room 2240, 11 W. 42d St., was created last August, although no public announcement of its existence has ever been made. It was to be followed by creation of 11 other such FEPC regional centers throughout the country. More than $200,000 has been allocated for such a set-up, but so far only the New York office exists.

Even without any publicity, the local FEPC headquarters receives about 50 discrimination complaints weekly. Of these, it is able to handle only 15 a week because of lack of office and investigative personnel. Most of the complaints come from private organizations which concern themselves with racial or religious discrimination in war industry, rather than directly from individuals.

APR 2 1943

$200,000 Cut

Meanwhile, concern was expressed today that the $200,000 cut in the New York State War Council budget would seriously affect the appropriation of the Council's State Committee on Discrimination in Employment. The Committee is charged with running down complaints against companies refusing to hire workers because of race, religion, color, creed, or national origin.

A report made to the regional office of the War Manpower Commission (WMC) charged that, despite an increase in Negro employment in New York war plants, violations of President Roosevelt's anti-discrimination rule still prevailed.

According to this survey, there still are 500 war plants—working directly on Government contracts—which refuse to hire Negro workers. In upstate plants, there are 640 plants which reject Negro workers—making a total for the state of 1140 such factories.

Southern Pressure

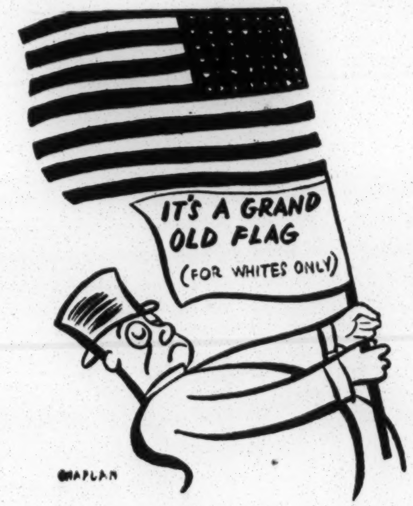
The WMC in Washington under which the FEPC now operates, has several times been on the verge of announcing the appointment of a chairman. But pressure by Southern Senators on one occasion, it is reported, delayed designation.

Previously, the chairmanship had been offered to former Gov. Poletti of New York, former Gov. Price of Virginia, Dr. Will Alexander of the WMC, Dr. Frank Graham of the War Labor Board and former Sen. George W. Norris. All have refused the job.

The FEPC, created by FDR in June 1941, has been in a state of virtual suspension since last August, when it lost its independent status and became part of the WMC under Paul V. McNutt.

APR 2 1943

Of the original committee of seven, only four remain. Its previous chairman, Dr. Malcolm S. MacLean, now a Navy officer; David Sarnoff, president of RCA; and Mark Ethridge, general manager of the Louisville Courier-Journal, resigned following McNutt's order postponing scheduled public hearings on discrimination in the railroad industry. Henry Epstein, appointed as the Committee's general counsel to conduct these hearings, also resigned in protest.



Last February, FDR directed McNutt to call a conference of interested groups to consider strengthening the FEPC's powers. Several such conferences have been held.

Under the proposed reorganization plan, the Committee chairman would have greater powers and the Committee itself, according to assurances received by several Negro groups here, would be more independent of the WMC.

APR 2 1943

In the meantime, however, the regional FEPC office is struggling along waiting for permission to appoint additional investigators augmenting the present overworked staff of three, which is supposed to cover the state.

According to the latest survey, employment of Negroes in war plants is rising gradually. In New York City, nearly 20,000 Negro workers are now employed, a large proportion of whom are women. The 20,000 represent about 5 per cent of the total war workers employed in New York City.

38,000 in State

Negro war workers upstate total almost 18,000, making a total for the entire state of 38,000.

These totals represent substantial increases in Negro employment over last July, when a similar survey was made.

Beyond the single question of discrimination against Negroes in war work, Negro organizations want the FEPC to investigate the relationship of the Negro to the draft. This does not envision any direct interference with the Army's quota system under which Negro men are drafted. The inquiry would concern itself with the effect of the quota system on the employment chances of Negro workers.

According to groups which have made preliminary studies of the question, many Negro boys, classified 1A, aren't inducted over long periods because of the Army's quota system, by which Negro draftees are limited to the Negro proportion of the total population.

APR 2 1943

War Jobs Hard to Get

As a result of this protracted 1A status, it is almost impossible for these Negro workers to get war-plant jobs because employers fear they may be inducted within a short time.

"Of course, these boys can get jobs as soda-jerkers or as busboys," said one Negro leader, "but no employer is going to put them in a war job. And naturally these boys can't learn any kind of trade or skill."

FDR's Executive Order 8802

APR 10 1943

By James W. Ford

One urgent requirement for winning the war is that the government right the status of the Negro people. The manpower capacities and political enthusiasm of 13,000,000 Negro American citizens are still not yet fully mobilized. These capacities and enthusiasm are key needs for an effective second front to smash Hitler now. They are a tremendous strength for our armed forces and for mills and factories on the home front.

James W. Ford

APR 10 194

We are in this war fighting for our very existence. We are fighting for the four freedoms, for the application of the broad principles of the Atlantic Charter, for the restoration of freedom and independence to peoples and nations who have lost their liberties, for the firm establishment and retention of liberties and democratic rights for citizens within our own country.

This urgency to safeguard these principles and victory in the war effort is brought sharply to our attention because there are forces at work struggling against President Roosevelt's war effort, at home and abroad. Soviet - American relations are being strained by these forces; they are trying to hold up the opening of the Second Front; they are out to hamstring labor; they are trying to destroy economic stability in the nation by skyrocketing prices; they are carrying on a campaign of anti-Semitism and Negro baiting. If the attacks and policies of these forces prevail and gain ascendency the United States will lose this war and enslavement will come to America and all of its people.

APR 10 1943

ESSENTIAL WAR STRUGGLE

The establishment of full rights for the Negro people is a part of the struggle against the defeatists, red-baiters, labor baiters and snipers at the government's war policy, and is an essential requirement for the unification of the nation to defeat the Axis.

The government has a well-established policy against discrimination of Negro citizens in war industries. That policy was established by President Roosevelt's Executive Order 8802, issued June 25, 1941. One cannot deny that much has been accomplished in the elimination of job discrimination, that many hundreds of thousands of Negro workers have been put to work in war industries. The Fair Employment Practices Committee (FEPC) was an effective instrument in exposing cases of discrimination and forcing employers to hire Negro workers until it met its death by defeatists and Negro haters at the time of the scheduled railroad hearing. Now at a time of crisis in the war effort wide-spread discrimination is still holding back production and causing dissatisfaction among the Negro people. The treatment of Negro troops is intolerable.

BLOW TO ARMY MORALE

APR 10 194

Negroes are patriotic and willing to fight for their country, but it is stupid and narrow-sighted to think that Jim-Crow and undemocratic practices do not gall them. Negro soldiers have Jim-Crow imposed upon them in busses and train transportation in the South. They are only allowed transportation facilities after white soldiers have been served, and are often late returning from furloughs and army duties. The recent announcement that Negro troops trained for combat service would be used for cotton-picking shows the work of the reactionary farm bloc in Congress not only to attack Negroes but also to attack labor and farm workers.

Political discrimination against

Negro Communists and Negro trade unionists, against their training and advancement to combat service and for officer and non-commissioned officer ranks, has reached a point of alarm and causes demoralization among non-Communist Negro soldiers.

APR 10 1943

Jim-Crow regiments in the infantry and artillery, as has already been shown by the example of the air corps, are not conducive to the most efficient and democratic means of running the army.

The Negro people are more and more conscious of the role the defeatists are playing and are responsible for this state of affairs. But they are also troubled by the laxity of the Administration in using its full powers to put down the practices of Jim Crow and discrimination.

APR 10 1943

PUT TEETH IN ACT

Executive Order 8802 was and still is an historic document. But it has to have teeth in it. President Lincoln issued the Emancipation Proclamation in 1863. It was not however until Lincoln, seeing the practical need of full enforcement of his Executive Order, took further steps to put teeth in this proclamation. A joint resolution by Congress established the means of enforcement.

APR 10 1943

President Lincoln was clearly moved to take these measures because of danger to the nation. He said that the nation could not survive half slave and half free. Today we are fighting against a slavery far greater than Negro slavery of 1860. The nation today requires unity of all its people; it demands measures that unloosen the powers of every American.

APR 10 1943

President Roosevelt, as Commander-in-Chief of our nation and our armed forces, is obligated to take steps similar to Lincoln to preserve and save our nation by creating absolutely effective means through legislation or the full use of the powers of his office to enforce Executive Order 8802 to wipe out discrimination in war industries and in the armed forces. If President Roosevelt is to meet the requirements of our day and to follow in the footsteps of Lincoln, he will have to take a strong hand against the poll taxers and defeatists and make the FEPC an effective instrument to enforce his orders against discrimination.

APR 10 1943

The Negro people on their part must be fully aware of the critical crisis in the war effort. They must do everything in their power and join with labor and the win-the-war forces to speed-up the opening of a Second Military Front because their destiny as that of the nation is wrapped up in victory over Hitler. The Negro people can render great service to the nation by supporting all those measures of the President to win the war, and help him fight the poll taxers and defeatists.

State FEP Wins Okeh By Solons

SPRINGFIELD, Ill.—The House committee on appropriations unanimously approved recommendation of a bill to create a state Fair Employment Practices Board here Wednesday following endorsement of the measure by former Alderman Earl C. Dickerson, member of the President's Fair Employment Practices committee.

The bill introduced by Rep. Ernest A. Greene, advocates establishment of an FEP board "to prevent discrimination in defense and other industries and employments."

Dickerson, after visiting Governor Dwight Green, addressed the committee on appropriations and won that body's hearty approval of the measure. However, a recommendation for appropriation of $75,000 for operational expenses was cut to $35,000 before its approval was won.

Also appearing in favor of the bill were: Dr. Charles M. Yard, former chairman of the Metropolitan Council of FEPC, and Arnold Aaronson, director of the Jewish Bureau of Employment.

Henry Epstein, Former Counsel, Tells Kind of Powers New FEPC Would Need

APR 17 1943

By Eugene Gordon

A new President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice needs the kind of powers that the old one—that broke up over the cancellation of railroad hearings—never had.

This is the opinion of Henry Epstein, Solicitor General of New York State in the Lehman administration, and former chief counsel of the Committee.

Epstein, in discussing the possibilities of reviving the FEPC, in which the Negro people and other minorities had so much hope, said that a new FEPC, or similar agency, must have the kind of authority that the old one never possessed.

He said also that he would like to see in the State of New York some agency "to compel employers to pay back salaries or wages to persons they had denied employment because of race, color, creed, or national origin"—that is, paid the amount of money the person would have received had he been employed instead of rejected.

Mr. Epstein resigned early in January as chief counsel of the FEPC in protest against postponement of hearings into the railroads' barring Negroes from certain jobs. He spoke Monday night at the New School for Social Research on Negro discrimination in industry.

TELLS OF RESIGNATION

He told this writer of the circumstances leading up to his resignation.

The whole membership of the FEPC was prepared for hearings into railroad discrimination, scheduled for Jan. 25 through 27. Mr. Epstein, as special counsel to handle the hearings, visited the Mediation Board in Washington on Jan. 6 to inform it that everything was ready. Constitution Hall had been procured for the overflow open meeting expected.

On the morning of Jan. 8 he asked a member of the Mediation Board to permit examination of its agreements with railroads. The next evening, having returned to New York, Mr. Epstein was informed over long distance phone that the hearings had been cancelled.

THERE'S HOPE, HE SAYS

There has been much speculation on reasons for the cancellation. Mr. Epstein declined to add his. Others have alleged, however, that the railroads, officials of the Railroad Brotherhoods and, even members of the Mediation Board, appealed to Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt not to permit the hearings. Nobody in authority in the government has ever denied these allegations.

"Do you think the FEPC can be reconstituted, new life breathed into it and set again to functioning?" Mr. Epstein was asked.

Yes, he did think so. It must have as its head, however, a "guiding spirit who would have the tenacity and the courage to go ahead in spite of pressure from any variety of sources." Above all, it "must have the power of subpoena with additional power, in some form, of enforceable sections."

He expanded the latter point: "Sanctions might include the power to rescind agreements between railroads and representatives of workers" when such agreements showed clear violations of Executive Order 8802, which created the FEPC.

APR 17 1943

Referring to his suggestion that the State of New York set up an agency to compel employers to pay back salaries or wages to persons they had denied employment, because of race, color, creed or national origin, Mr. Epstein recalled that some persons say it would drive employers out of the state.

"They made similar objections to the Workmen's Compensation Act and to the Eight-Hour Law," he said.

"So your answer to that objection is?"

"Hooey," said Mr. Epstein. "Businesses don't run away for any such reason."

Johnson Tells Group of 8802s Powers, Rights

MAY 1 1943

Said to Answer Critics Holding FEPC Can't Attack Segregation

Although Executive Order 8802 is not specifically directed against segregation, it is a fact that in most cases segregation of workers on account of race results in discrimination and denial of equality of opportunity, and where this is true the President's committee on Fair Employment Practice has the right to act.

MAY 1 1943

This was the theme of a speech here April 21 by George M. Johnson, assistant executive secretary of FEPC, before the New York chapter of the National Lawyers Guild at the Park Central hotel.

The speech was regarded as an answer to the extremist critics who have maintained that FEPC must not and may not, under its executive order, attack segregation in any form.

Explaining that Executive Order 8802 prohibits discrimination in the employment of workers because of race, creed, color, or national origin and makes it the duty of employers and labor organiaztions "to provide for the full and equitable participation of all workers . . . without discrimination," Mr. Johnson posed the question of whether, in the operation of the policy of segregation, workers were denied full and equitable participation without discrimination.

MAY 1 1943

He pointed out that many employers, both in government and private industry, have a segregation policy on the job, "which may place a particular race on a particular shift, or limit that race to certain types of work, or place them in certain buildings, shops, or sections by themselves."

Promotions Consideration Basic

"Basic to the right to equality of opportunity for employment is the right to be considered for employment for any position on the same terms as other persons," Johnson said. "Equally basic is the right to be considered for promotions and upgrading to better paying and supervisory positions.

MAY 1 1943

"Where the policy of segregation obtains in any of the forms mentioned above, there will be a denial of employment opportunity if and when an available and qualified worker is refused consideration for a position because it is in a skill from which members of his group are excluded, or because it is in a building from which they are excluded."

Hits Jim-Crow Locals

Johnson said the FEPC recognized that its jurisdiction was limited in discrimination, but he reiterated that where segregation produced discrimination violative of Executive Order 8802, the FEPC was obligated to act.

Striking at separate jim-crow local unions, set up as auxiliaries of established unions, Johnson said that "to the extent that the minority group deals only thruogh the regular union of which it is simply a part, it seems clear that the unions' policy of racial separation has violated 8802."

WASHINGTON, Apr. 20.—Earl B. Dickerson, former Chicago alderman and acting chairman of the Committee on Fair Employment Practices (FEPC) announced yesterday that the FEPC will hold a public hearing in Detroit May 24 and 25 on complaints of discrimination against Negroes and other minority groups in war plants in that area.

He said also that hearings would be held later in St. Louis, Cleveland, Philadelphia and Baltimore.

Group Blamed For Racial Strife

Charges that President Roosevelt's Fair Employment Practices Committee is creating more racial disunity than any other factor in the county were voiced Saturday by Representative Manasco (Democrat) of Alabama at the last of the House Civil Service Investigating Committee's hearings on the War Department.

Manasco's attack was launched after Col. Gordon Clark, chief of the Civilian Personnel Division, Army Air Forces, testified that 14 per cent of the employes in his division are colored.

Strengthens FEPC Scope Power, Raps Job Jimcrow

Feb. 13, 1943

Feb. 13, 1943

Tribune
Philadelphia, Pa.

By JOHN A. SAUNDERS

As important to colored Americans as the Casablanca "unconditional surrender" conference and the nvasion of North Africa, were President Roosevelt's orders issued last week strengthening the powers and scope of the Fair Employment Practice Commmittee, FEPC.

The President's order stipulated, in so many words, that Negroes be given a fair and equal share of all defense jobs in all sections of the country, the Negro-hating South included.

On the heels of the President's order, Congressman Vito Marcantonio, of New York, introduced into Congress a bill which would cloak the FEPC with broad powers to stamp out discrimination in employment because of race, color, creed or religion.

The Marcantonio Fair Employment Practice Act establishes as the public policy of the United States the repudiation and prohibition of all forms of employment discrimination by any employer furnishing or manufacturing any goods for use by any agency of the Federal Government.

To Continue Hearings

At the same time that President Roosevelt asked War Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt to revise the FEPC, he said that "when the machinery has been established to meet the problems," the postponed hearings on race discrimination in the railroads will be continued. Feb. 13, 1943

The railroad hearing, which was scheduled for January 26 and was postponed by McNutt about the time President Roosevelt left for his conference with Prime Minister Churchill in Casablanca, was the FEPC's first attempt to attack discrimination on an industry-wide scale. 2-13-43

Object of Hearings

Object of the hearing was to bring to public attention reputed discrimination against Negroes by the railroads and railroad brotherhoods—particularly those operating in the Southeastern States. 2-13-43

Roosevelt announced his request for the conference, to which he is to invite members of the FEPC and leaders of groups opposing discrimination in war employment, after a luncheon conference with McNutt and Attorney General Francis Biddle. He also took occasion to praise the committee's work.

"For nearly two years", the announcement said, "the Fair Employment Practice Committee and its executive director have done an excellent piece of work, placing workers in war jobs. They, however, have been handicapped by the fact that the members of the committee were working on a part-time voluntary basis, and did not have powers for personnel commensurate with their responsibilities."

More Power Needed.

The committee's lack of authority has been a sore spot with minority groups since it was created by a Presidential order. Walter White, secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People said last week that to combat discrimination, the committee must have "sanctions such as the right to impose money penalties and prison sentences and to hold public hearings when war contract holders, labor unions or Government officials refuse to comply" with the order. 2-13-43

Biddle's presence at the White House conference today might indicate the President is seeking legal grounds for these sanctions.

Walter White, secretary of the NAACP stated last week that to wage an effective battle against discrimination in industry, the committee must be armed with "sanctions such as the right to impose money penalties and prison sentences and to hold public hearings when war contract holders, labor unions or government officials refuse to comply" with committee orders.

Fair Employment Agency Accused of Stirring Up Strife

WASHINGTON, June 26.—(AP). A complaint that President Roosevelt's Committee on Fair Employment Practices is "doing more to stir up racial bias than any other single factor in the country" was laid before the House Civil Service Committee by Representative Manasco (Democrat, Alabama).

Manasco expressed his opinion after Colonel Gordon F. Clark, chief of civilian personnel division, War Department, testified that his division is employing approximately 14 per cent Negroes.

Manasco contended that Government officials had been placed under "terrific pressure" to employ Negroes solely because they are Negroes, and added:

"I am not opposed to hiring Negroes. I worked side by side with them digging coal. I am merely opposed to hiring people because of their color. As a matter of fact, it is extremely unfair to a Negro to hire him for a job for which he is unqualified.

"Agencies are being forced to take on Negroes. Some of the higher-ups in Government feel that a certain percentage of Government personnel should be Negroes, regardless of their abilities."

Manasco contended also that some Government officials are "afraid" to discharge Negroes because the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People "would get on their neck."

CRAMER FEPC HEAD, HITS JIM CROW IN LABOR

APR 25 1943

ST. LOUIS, Apr. 22—(ANP)—Lawrence W. Cramer, FEPC executive secretary, in an address read Thursday before the regional meeting of the National conference of Social Work at Hotel Jefferson stated that the United States has discarded business as usual, under pressure of the war, but is still indulging in the costly luxury of "prejudice as usual." Due to the absence of Cramer, the address was read by Theodore Jones of FEPC.

Cramer said that discrimination because of race creed or nationality has resulted in "a substantial and continuing waste of available man power and skills" which is of great importance in the present labor shortage crisis.

He asserted that in many cases Negroes and other non-Caucasians do not get jobs in accordance with their skills because of the policies and practices of labor organizations even though both AFL and CIO formally oppose race discrimination within their organizations.

APR 25 1943

He said that even though AFL and CIO officers have helped to work out satisfactory adjustments in certain cases, the railroad brotherhoods have not taken such a position and apparently act on the opposite policy.

APR 25 1943

He said that the barring by the southeastern railroads, of non-whites or their exclusion from certain classes of employment, is encouraged by "percentage" or "non-promotable" clauses in union agreements. He added that such practices weaken the labor movement and extend an invitation to certain employers to use unorganized workers at low wage scales, or for strike-breaking purposes.

In speaking of the wave of discrimination against other minority groups, he charged that in the southwest there is discrimination against Mexicans and Spanish-Americans, while anti-Jewish discrimination is strongest in the eastern and Northeastern seaboard states. He said that even those non-citizens who are our allies find it hard to get jobs, although there are no legal restrictions on their employment in non-war industries or even in war industries if the labor is not on confidential and restricted contracts.

LAST MINUTE MOVE BY FDR DELAYS QUIZ

MAY 22 1943

New Chief, Believed Rev. Haas, Will Have Power

To Name Members

(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON.—An eleventh hour White House move that had all the earmarks of a final act of desperation this week upset plans of the Fair Employment Practices Committee for Capital Transit Co., and Detroit hearings on job discrimination.

Coming a short 24 hours before scheduled Washington bus hearings and resembling the recent cancellation of the FEP's scheduled railroad probe, the postponement was assertedly caused by the final naming of a new FEP chairman—believed to be the Rt. Rev. Francis J. Haas, dean of social studies at Catholic university.

But from facts disclosed by reliable sources to the Defender, the delay of the two hearings may be permanent!

MAY 22 1943

Furthermore the entire present personnel of the FEP may be out.

Challenge Jurisdiction

Coming in quick succession were these sudden developments:

1. On the eve of the scheduled Capital Transit hearings Tuesday, the White House told FEP members that a new chairman had been named and requested that all scheduled hearings be cancelled.

2. The FEP met the White House request but was not informed whom the new chairman was.

3. Meeting in its regular session, the FEP learned that Lawrence Cramer, committee secretary, had informed the Capital Transit Co. to hold off on hiring Negro drivers without any consultation with FEP members.

MAY 22 1943

4. At the same time the jurisdiction of FEP in the bus case was challenged by R. B. Dresh[illegible]er, War Manpower Commission area director, who claimed the case came under his sole supervision.

Altogether the sum total of FEP trends added up to open desperation by government officials to stop the important transit hearings at all costs.

May Never Be Held

Signs were that the Capital Transit case will never be held despite the FEP announcement of a delay until Wednesday, June 2.

It was learned by the Defender from officials close to the White House that the new executive order which will be issued at the time of official appointment of the new FEP chairman will make him a virtual czar—having complete power [illegible] other members of FEP.

That the present FEP members will be "dumped" is taken for granted by high Washington officials, who have been gunning for them.

MAY 22 1943

Father Haas, who is mentioned as the choice for the post is sponsored by Attorney General Francis Biddle. He is considered a labor man and is formerly from Milwaukee.

Official Announcement

The official FEP announcement of the delayed hearings said:

"The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice was today officially advised that a new chairman had been appointed and that its reorganization will be effected immediately upon the assumption of office by the chairman.

"The committee has therefore been requested to postpone its public hearings scheduled for Tuesday, May 18, in Washington, D. C., on the Capital Transit Co. case. Pursuant to this request the committee at its meeting today postponed the Capital Transit Co. hearing from Tuesday, May 18, to Wednesday, June 2.

"At the same time and for the same reason, the committee postponed its scheduled hearing in Detroit from May 24 and 25 to June 28 and 29."

MAY 22 1943

Cramer Under Fire

The announcement came a short several hours after War Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt at his press conference said he had no statement to make on the status of the FEP.

Meanwhile, it was learned that Cramer, FEP secretary, came under heavy fire of the committee members at their session after disclosure of his statement to the Capital Transit Co. telling the firm to "hold up" on hiring Negroes.

Cramer, it was divulged, met with Leo R. Wertz, WMC director of manpower operations; George Johnson, assistant FEP secretary; E. D. Merill, president of Capital Transit and J. D. Bigelow, local president of the AFL Amalgamated Association of Street, Electrical Railway and Motor Coach Employes, of America, to discuss the Capital Transit case recently.

Merill at the meeting maintained that he had done everything to meet the FEP's order on employing Negroes. He related that the company had trained several Negro bus drivers and attempted to put one man on but a number of white employes refused to work with him. Then it revealed, he consulted with

Cramer who told him to "hold off" on hiring Negr[illegible] MAY 22 1943

Confesses Statement

That was the first time FEP members learned of Cramer's action and at Monday's meeting he confessed making the statement to Merill. It was believed that Cramer's statement would have been the company's defense in case the scheduled hearing were put on [illegible] week.

It was also learned that the FEP meeting Monday had voted to hold the Capital Transit hearings on Thursday instead of Tu[illegible], when Marvin MacIntyre, President Roosevelt's secretary, called asking for the delay until the new chairman took his post.

MAY 22 1943

The original delay was made to allow the AFL's Boris Shiskin and the CIO's John Brophy to attend.

A large crowd of Kansas Citians, proud and happy over their achievements, went to the Ebenezer A.M.E. church Sunday afternoon, Feb. 14, to hear their delegates to the "Save FEPC" conference make reports on that national meeting.

The delegates told in detail what happened at the conference held in Washington, February 5 at the call of A. Philip Randolph.

Thomas A. Webster gave an over-all picture of the conference which brought representatives from many parts of the country to the capital in the interest of preserving the Fair Employment Practice Committee as an independent agency to act in cases of discrimination in war plants.

He read the resolution adopted at the conference calling upon the President to restore the FEPC to its original status and to reschedule hearings postponed by Paul V. McNutt.

FEB 26 1943

Mrs. Frances Hayden, industrial secretary of the Paseo Y.W.C.A. gave details of the conference held with senators following the "Save FEPC" conference. Committees were named to call upon various senators enlisting their support in restoring FEPC.

Mrs. Hayden, member of a committee which called upon several the congressmen. Senators Trusenators, told of the reaction of man of Missouri, Wagner of New York and Capper of Kansas were especially generous in pledging their support, she said.

"Pittsburgh Courier"
Pittsburgh Pa.

WASHINGTON, D.C., May 13—There will be a showdown on the FEPC next Tuesday, May 18, when Ernest Trimble, FEPC attorney, presents in open hearing to the remaining four members of the committee, the record of persistent refusal by the Capitol Transit company here to employ Negroes. Faced with the declinations of at least six, and possibly seven persons to accept chairmanship of the FEPC, Governor Paul V. McNutt, War Manpower Commissioner and other high ranking officials who have had a finger in the FEPC pie will be confronted with the problem of vetoing another vital committee hearing, as they did in the case of the railroad hearings, or else permitting the present membership of the committee to move against the jim-crow policies of the Capitol Transit Company.

MAY 15 1943

PHILADELPHIAN DECLINED POST

The note of optimism which came last week when Governor McNutt told his press conference that he expected to have a new chairman by last Wednesday and when Marvin McIntyre, secretary to President Roosevelt, told members of the FEPC who met with him last week, that a chairman would be announced "in a day or so," fell flat on last Friday when Otto Tod Mallery, industrial relations expert and economist of Philadelphia, is said to have turned down the offer of chairmanship. Mallery's declination was the sixth or seventh in a long line of persons offered the post which includes: Dr. Will W. Alexander of the Southern Interracial commission; Oscar Chapman, assistant secretary of the Interior; Monsignior Francis Joseph Haas of Catholic university; Frank P. Graham of the University of North Carolina; William Earle Coles of the University of Tennessee and former Senator George Norris of Nebraska. It is not certain that Senator Norris was definitely offered the post but it is known that his name was considered. In addition there was some consideration given to bringing back former chairman Mark Ethridge.

At the meeting with McIntyre, last Wednesday, members of the committee insisted that they be permitted to proceed with their work of stamping out job discrimination, unhindered by the War Manpower Commission, regardless of the Commission's success in getting a chairman or not. At that time McIntyre is said to have agreed that the committee's work should go on, but to have insisted that the matter of a new chairman was only a question of a few days.

MAY 15 1943

Present at the meeting were Earl B. Dickerson, acting chairman; Milton P. Webster, John Brophy and Boris Shiskin, committee members, and Lawrence Cramer and George Johnson, secretary and associate secretary of the committee. McIntyre is reported to have told this group that the new Presidential executive order governing the authority and work of the committee could not be issued until the new chairman had approved.

Meanwhile the FEPC went forward, in the face of growing protest against jim-crowism in employment on the bus and street car lines here, to plan a formal hearing on May 18. All of last week Negro and white citizens picketed terminals of the Capitol Transit company, held a monster parade and an open air mass meeting to demand jobs for Negroes in this vital war industry. The demonstrations were attended by widespread rumors of threatening race riots, which brought to the scene of the final open air mass meeting more than 300 policemen and plainclothesmen. No violence developed. MAY 15 1943

To further cloud the final solution of the problem of use of Negro manpower came last Saturday the protest resignation of Fowler V. Harper, deputy War Manpower Commissioner, who has had direct responsibility for FEPC. Thus the War Manpower Commission is left with no person directly acquainted with the problems of the committee.

The Future of the FEPC

MAY 10 1943

Since before Christmas, the President and a good part of the Cabinet have been trying to find someone willing to take over the red-hot driver's seat of the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee. The FEPC was left in such miserable condition last fall that no one has yet been found willing to take the job. At Christmas time the White House asked Dr. Will Alexander to do so; but Dr. Alexander thought the request came two years too late. He suggested a few possible chairmen, and many other lists of prospects were thrown into the hopper. It is no exaggeration to say that the post has now been offered to literally scores of men. Every last one has refused it. The joke around the Manpower Commission last week was that the chairmanship should be smuggled into Horace Heidt's "Treasure Chest" and palmed off on some unsuspecting winner in that telephone-radio lottery. MAY 10 1943

There are some well informed observers who feel that the difficulty in finding a suitable man is principally due to the fact that sights have been set too low. Top-flight men, for the most part, are not among those who have been offered the plum. We have heard of a few sensible suggestions ourselves which seemingly have not yet been considered. Harold Swift of the packing-company family, chairman of the Board of the University of Chicago, and well known for his fair policies with regard to Negro workers, is one. President Ernest Hopkins of Dartmouth College is another. It is imperative that the FEPC be reconstituted immediately, and desirable that it be returned to White House jurisdiction and established as a quasi-judicial body, leaving the administrative phases of the work to be carried on by the appropriate divisions of the Manpower Commission.

Refused A Clerical Job In A War Plant? Squawk!

JUN 26 1943

Every Negro office worker refused employment in war industry solely because of color can do herself and the war effort a service by reporting cases to the Fair Employment Practices Committee and the Governor's Committee on Discrimination.

This statement made last week by Lorenzo Davis, industrial secretary, Brooklyn Urban League, exposed the fact that, while war plants place women workers on the assembly lines, few will use them in front offices.

Davis stated that there is no justification for this condition when it is known that Executive Order 8802, prohibiting discrimination, applies to war offices as well as factories. No argument exists for those who say that Negro women have no previous experience, since the majority of such offices accept mostly unskilled white applicants. There are also hundreds of qualified Negro women available as skilled office personnel such as typists, stencil cutters, stenographers and office machine operators.

With the exception of some local government offices which have hired numbers of them, the overwhelming majority of Negro office workers have had to make the difficult choice between accepting employment only in over-crowded Washington, D.C., or abandoning their field entirely and entering factories.

Negro women are advised to train themselves for such office work with an eye to post-war employment. The National Youth Administration offers a complete range of office work courses for women 15 to 25 years of age and will pay them $40 a month whiletraining.

AUG 23 1943
New York, N. Y.

WASHINGTON—(ANP) — With the dispatching of George M. Johnson, assistant chairman, Fair Employment Practice Committee, to the West Coast to participate in conferences developing out of the firing of about 350 Negro shipworkers, it would appear that the Committee is shaping up a real case on which to test its powers under the new order as regards labor unions.

Early in July complaints began to pour into the Committee headquarters here from the vest coast regarding the firing of the Negroes pursuant to the terms of a closed shop agreement which the Boilermakers Union (AFL) has with shipbuilders out there. The Negroes insisted that they were being discriminated against by being organized into an auxiliary union on a Jim-Crow basis ,and that they were being denied a participation in union affairs.

They ceased to pay dues to the auxiliary and thereby became uniinancial. According to the union agreement with employers, these members were no longer qualified to work in the shops and on the ways, and so were laid off. Some 3,000 men in all are estimated to be affected.

SENT EXAMINER

Immediately FEPC sent out Daniel Donovan, a field examiner, and asked Judge James H. Wolfe, chief justice, Utah Supreme court, and a labor conciliator of some experience to join him in San Francisco for the purpose of making a quick appraisal of the situation, particularly with an eye to having the fired men restored to their jobs pending final solution.

Following the July 26 meeting of the Committee, Msgr. Francis J. Haas, chariman, requested union and industry representatives to sit down with FEPC spokesmen to work out a plan to put the men back to work until the entire matter is settled. It is understood that the union has finally ben brought around to agree to sit down, and that it is for these conferences that Johnson has made the trip.

PRESENT ISSUE

Once the men have been returned to their jobs, the issue will revolve about that portion of the amended executive order which places a responsibility on trade unions to eliminate discriminations within their ranks. The Commttee's authority is considerably strengthened in the new order.

Originally, it was the "duty of employers and of labor organizations, in furtherance of said policy (of non-discriminatoin) and of this order to provide for the full and equitable participation of all workers, irrespective of the uusal grounds for discrimination.

Invariably the emphasis under the old order was placed upon recalcitrant business rather than stubborn and unyielding labor. Besides, so long as labor saw that Negroes were participating, they had discharged their obligation.

The new order takes a little different slant. The amended order goes further and makes it the duty of all employers, "including the several Federal departments and agencies, and all labor organizations, in furtherance of this policy and of this order, to eliminate discrimination in regard to hire, tenure, terms or conditions of employment, or union membership because of race, creed, color or national origin."

HALT DISCRIMINATION

Clearly then it becomes the responsibility of unions to wipe out discriminations within their organizatons. Faling this, the Committee is obligated to achieve this same end on its own initiative.

The Boilermakers refuse to admit Negroes to anything other than an auxiliary. They do not vote for officials of the body that collects their dues. They cannot influence union policy nor select delegates to convention. In short, they are paying dues just for the privilege of holding down a wartime job. When peace returns, and shipbuilding begins to taper off, the thinking is that the auxiliaries will be very easily disposed of, whereas a sifting process within the union of Negroes might be a good deal more difficult.

If the committee can get somewhere in the boilermaker case, it will have established a precedent and can then move on to those other unions, and brotherhoods, which now carry discriminatory clauses in their constitutions.

Many Citizens Make Protests All In Vain

DEC 12 1943

The resolution passed in city council Monday night by the vote of 11 out of the 14 councilmen gathered, calling upon Georgia representatives in the United States Congress at Washington "to insist upon the removal of the recently established Southeastern Regional Office of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices, (FEPC), located in 10 Forsyth Street Building," has been approved with the signature of Mayor W. B. Hartsfield on whose desk the resolution was placed Tuesday morning.

The mayor's office stated Saturday that he had signed the resolution Wednesday of this week. Large numbers of Atlantans on learning of the action of council of Monday night were waiting with much interest to learn whether the mayor had signed what many termed a "deplorable action" of the city fathers.

The Atlanta office of FEPC was set up here more than three weeks ago for the purpose of investigating and correcting grievances arising out of discriminatory employment practices based on race, color, creed and national origin, having jurisdiction over the war industries, government departments and agencies in the states of Alabama, Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, South Carolina and Tennessee, and into labor union compaints.

LETTERS OF PROTEST

Several letters of protest have been sent to the mayor, most of these before he had affixed his signature to the bill, and others went to councilmen for reconsideration of a matter which vitally affected the war effort. In addition to these protests direct to those in authority of city government, the WORLD published opinions of some of the leading men of the city who represent various stratas of life.

This is the resolution which was passed by council and signed by the mayor:

A RESOLUTION
BY ALDERMAN BREWER;
COUNCILMEN ALLEN, COUCH
AND BELL, ET AL:

WHEREAS, it has come to the attention that those in charge of the President's Committee on Fair Employment are planning to open an office in the City of Atlanta for the southesatern district and that they plan mixed employment of the races in one of the office buildings of Atlanta, and doubtless they intend to insist upon the same in other Federal offices, and

WHEREAS, the activities of this Committee in other parts of the south, and particularly in Alabama, have resulted in building up racial animosities

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED BY THE MAYOR AND GENERAL COUNCIL that we express our view that the race situation can best be handled by local people acting in a spirit of fairness and justice without the intervention of Federal agencies, and that we call upon our representatives in the National Congress to insist upon the removal of said office from the City of Atlanta.

FEP REACHES RAIL DECISION

NOV 6 1943
Defender
Chicago, Ill.

(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON—The Fair Employment Practice committee has concluded its consideration of the evidence in the railroad discrimination cases.

The decision is being withheld, however, until the companies and unions cited in the hearings have received and had an opportunity to study and react to the committee's findings.

Twenty-three companies and fourteen labor unions were involved in the charges of discrimination before the committee. It is believed that all but one of the companies and all of the unions have been ordered to cease and desist in their practices of discrimination by the committee, after being found guilty as charged in the complaints.

A different finding may have been made in the case of the Union Pacific Railroad, headed by former rubber director, Jeffries. That company repented during the hearings, after hearing the evidence against it, and promised to adjust its practices to its policy.

The evidence introduced at the hearings—which was uncontested—on Sept. 15-19, could not lead logically to any other action by the committee.

What remedial action on the part of the companies and unions has been proposed by the committee could not be learned immediately. Nor could it be learned whether any recommendations were made affecting government agencies shown in the hearings to have collaborated with the railroads and unions in fostering discriminations against Negroes and Mexicans. The National Mediation board was specifically cited in the evidence.

A. P. Randolph Suggests Court For Hearings

Would Apply To Employers And Unions Alike

SEP 21 1943

By ERNEST E. JOHNSON

WASHINGTON—(A N P)—That legislation will be introduced shortly looking to the establishment of what has been described as a Court of Fair practices, to carry on the work in peace-time that is being done through the Fair Employment Practice committee currently, has been disclosed to the Associated Negro Press.

Active sponsor of the bill, understood to be rapidly approaching final form, is said to be A. Philip Randolph, national director, March on Washington movement and president of the International Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters. As yet, no names has been advanced as one who will introduce the bill, although some names are running through the minds of a few people.

BASED ON WAR CONTRACTS

Need for this type of legislation, it is explained, develops out of the fact that at the end of the war, the present FEPC will have little of discrimination which it may standing inasmuch as the cases handle are based largely upon violations by companies holding government war contracts.

Outline of the measure as it now stands places responsibilities upon both employers and labor unions alike. One is prohibited from refusing employment to, or discharging from employment, or discriminating in conditions of employment, a person on the basis of race, color, creed, or origin. Unions would be called to book if they deny membership, expel from membership or discriminate in any way against an individual for similar reasons.

The act would apply to any employer hiring five or more persons, and engaged in intensive or foreign commerce, or under contract with the United States or any of its agencies. Sub-contractors are included in this responsibility. Unions with five or more in membership at any single employer are included.

WOULD SETUP COURT

Determinations with regard to complaints for violations of the act would be made by a Court of Fair Employment practices consist-ng of a presiding judge and six associates, all receiving a salary of $10,000. They would be appointed by the [illegible] with the consent and a[illegible] of the [illegible]e, and would serve for a term of seven years.

CONGRESSIONAL 'FAIR PRACTICES' INQUIRY LOOMS

Birmingham Post

AFL Boilermakers Union Ordered To End Negro Discriminations

Birmingham, Alabama

By Fred W. Perkins
Scripps-Howard Staff Writer

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14.—A congressional inquiry was forecast today into the powers and actions of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices, as that agency apparently was heading into a concentration of opposition to its directives against work discriminations because of color or race.

The committee yesterday received a direct refusal from 16 railroads and terminal companies, operating in Southern States, to heed the committee's orders, which they declared violated the collective bargaining procedures set up by the Railway Labor Act, and had no adequate authority back of them. The committee charged discrimination chiefly [illegible] the matter of promotions.

DEC 14 1943

Today, the committee entered a fresh controversy when it ordered the big boilermakers union, of the American Federation of Labor, to cease discriminations against Negroes.

The congressional inquiry, it was learned, has been suggested by some of the unions in the controversy. It would be based on the question of how much authority the committee has, and where it got it.

Authority Never Questioned

Committee spokesmen said there had been no test of tis authority bcause there has been no defiance in any important case. If necessary, it was said, non-compliance cases would be sent to the White House, for handling under the President's war powers. In non-compliance cases from the War Labor Board the President has a formula of seizing the facilities of the companies, but he has never proceeded against labor unions, which are involved in all important cases of the Fair Employment Practices Committee.

The railroad case, which has been in the making for 18 months, involves seven railway unions and 22 railroad companies. The unions, including the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, have ignored the committee from the beginning.

The defying railroads—including the Southern, Atlantic Coast Line, Seaboard, Chesapeake & Ohio, Norfolk & Western and Illinois Central — declared that their employment relations "are governed by collective bargaining agreements reached under the controlling procedures of the Railway Labor Act . . . railroads are forbidden by law to interfere in any way with the self-determination or self-organization of their employes. . . . It is wholly impracticable and indeed impossible for these rairoads to put into effect your committee's directives. . . With great respect, the undersigned railroads submit that your committee was and is wholly without constitutional and legal jurisdiction and power."

Refused To Pay Dues

The boilermakers case involves, in addition to the union, five West Coast shipbuilding companies which were directed to reinstate all Negro workers discharged because of their refusal to pay dues, under the closed-shop plan, to the auxiliary bailermakers unions that were set up for them. The auxiiaries have been labeled "Jim Crow unions" by their critics. The companies also were ordered to cease discharging or refusing to hire Negroes solely because they had failed to obtain clarance from [illegible] unions.

The committ[illegible] it had found "the auxiliaries a[illegible] created only for Negro workers and are placed directly under control of the white (regular) lodge for the area. Auxiliary members have no vote or voice in conduct of the union's affairs and must accept as their business agent the business agent of the supervising lodge in whose election the auxiliaries have no part."

The committee was set up by a presidential o[illegible] on June 25, 1941. Malcolm Ross, [illegible]erly with the National Labor Relations Board, is chairman. The six members are John Brophy, representing CIO; Boris Shishkin, A. F. of L.; Milton P. Webster, vice president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters (A. F. of L.); Miss Sara Southall, Samuel Zemurray, and P. B. Young Sr., the last three representing the management. The members serve without Government pay. Mr. Ross receives $10,000 a year.

New FEPC's Ready To Try Bias Cases

New York, N. Y.

Chairman Haas Tells Negro Press He's Ready To Try All Bias Cases

WASHINGTON—Chairman Francis J. Haas of the FEPC last Saturday, at a press conference with Editors and Publishers of Negro newspapers, put his organization on record as being sincerely interested in wiping out discrimination in industries that have to do with the war effort, and outline the operation of the machinery that has been set into motion to accomplish the task.

Under the term of Executive Order 9346, which, in effect is an amendment to Executive Order 8802, which created the original FEPC, the new committee's scope has been broadened to include all labor organizations within its jurisdiction.

Newsmen Like Haas

Father Haas is a most gracious man. His infectious smile and solicitude for the comfort and convenience of the newsmen didn't hurt his cause, although most of the editors even before the meeting had adopted a friendly attitude toward the new committee. They pointed out that Father Haas and his associates should not be hampered by unfair criticism for conditions created and passed down to them by the previous committee.

Test For FEPC

While Chairman Haas' smile was charming, and the Editors expressed confidence in the committee, the newspapermen were quick to point out to the chairman that the FEPC will meet its crucial test in the manner of its handling the Railroad case hearing which is taking place here this week, and its final disposition of the Capital Transit Company case, in which the company has ignored a directive of the previous FEPC to hire Negroes as platform men.

"The FEPC will rise or fall on the Railroad case", one Editor told Chairman Haas. "In view of the limited authority of the committee', he continued, "the FEPC will not be blamed for what it has not the power to do, but it will be held strictly accountable for the prosecution with the utmost vigor of the case with every facility at its disposal."

Bartley C. Crum of San Francisco named a chief counsel for the committee in the Railroad cases, arrived here last week and immediately began work with Attorney Charles A. Houston and Harold Stevens, who have been selected to be his associates in the presentation of the case.

SEP 18 1943

Victory Expected

Mr. Crum told newsmen that he has had the fullest cooperation from all government agencies and other groups since he entered the case, and that there has appeared nowhere the slightest evidence of any pressure by hint or deed to interfere with his handling of the case in a manner that would produce any other than a victorious conclusion.

Section "Five" of the Executive Order provides that the committee "shall receive and investigate complaints of discrimination forbidden by this Order. It may conduct hearings, make findings of fact, and take appropriate steps to obtain elimination of such discrimination."

The Railroad cases in which the roads are charged with discrimination against Negroes are the result of an investigation of complaints. The next step is the hearing to ascertain the facts. If the charges are sustained the railroads will be directed to eliminate the discrimination.

Force, If Needed

Chairman Haas admitted that if the Railroad or any other employer refused to heed a directive the only course open would be to invoke the assistance of other government agencies that could possibly bring pressure to bear to such an extent as to force compliance.

He pointed out that the War Manpower Commission, which now controls the United States Employment Service, and with which the FEPC has a working agreement could refuse to honor requests for workers from employers who ignored a directive or an appeal from the FEPC to quit discrimination.

"We believe much can be accomplished through a public hearing", Chairman Haas said. "Somehow or other the big companies just don't like to have these sorts of charges tossed about in public."

Faced with the airing of its "linen" the Virginian Railway Company which operates the Norfolk and Western and the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroads subsequently made adjustments of the complaints and on September 9, FEPC announced the complaint against that company had been withdrawn and that its name had been removed from the list of firms summoned to appear at the hearings here for four days beginning Wednesday.

Asked what would the committee do if all these efforts fail to force compliance, Chairman Haas said the case or cases would then be cited to the President from whom the committee derives its power. The chairman left no doubt in anyone's mind that he favored strong recommendations to the President if any employer found guilty persisted in disobeying the committee's directives.

Neither Management, Labor Nor Government to Be Spared, Chief Counsel Crum Says

WASHINGTON —(Special) — The much discussed and often postponed Jim Crow Case of Railroads was opened at a FEPC hearing here Wednesday in what many hold to be the "making" or "breaking" test of the President's new Executive Committee. In a sound and carefully prepared opening statement, FEPC's Chief Counsel Bartley C. Crum of San Franciso, declared that the three day hearing had only one purpose: "To seek out the essential and pertinent truths," and would not suppress or distort findings to "save the face" of any of the concerned parties. Whether the facts hit management, labor, or even the Government itself, they will speak for themselves without rancor and free from emotion, he assured.

36 Groups On Trial

In opening the hearing which involves alleged employment discrimination of twenty-two separate railroads and fourteen labor unions, Counsel Crum recalled the President's Executive Order (9346) which holds that employment discrimination hampers "the successful prosecution of the war," and reminded the guilty parties that they were giving aid to the Axis forces.

At present, there is a labor shortage of over 80,000 on the railroads. Some attempts have been made to relieve this condition with women and prisoners of war. Crum pointed out that this was not even "common sense," in view of the vast "untapped pool of able-bodied Negroes, whose full skills, and sometimes even their services, are denied to the railroad industry by dint of a long and unhappy history of discrimination against Americans whose skins are darker than those of other Americans."

Union Bias Attacked

The attitude of labor unions who limit the Negro to "Negro Jobs," and take them away from them as they become more desirable was attacked in the opening statement, which outlined the nature of the complaints and alleged conditions which have brought about the present plight of the Negro railroad worker.

Assisting Chief Counsel

Associated with Mr. Crum are Charles A. Houston of Washington and Harold Stevens of New York City.

Future Outlook

Hence, the Famous Jim Crow Case of Railroads and associated labor unions is in process before FEPC in the Nation's capital. Its success or failure may determine all other cases of discrimination scheduled to appear before the Executive Committee. Based on the strength of the opening statement by Chief Counsel Crum, FEPC means business and Jim Crow employment on the railroads and elsewhere in major industries aiding the war effort is on the way out.

P. B. Young to Continue as Member of FEPC

P. B. Young, employer member of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice who has been ill, announced this week that he would continue to serve as a member of the committee, and that he would be able to attend the committee's forthcoming public hearings at Portland, Ore., November 15 and 16, in cases involving shipyard workers in that area.

Following an acute illness in September, Mr. Young had expressed doubts of his ability to continue as a member of FEPC. A return to normal health has led to the decision that he will be able to give the full time required to Committee matters. Mr. Young is publisher of The Norfolk Journal and Guide and was recently elected chairman of the Board of Trustees of Howard University.

International Railroad Employes Demand Justice on Negro's Grievances

JUL 31 1943

47d

ATLANTA (ANP)—President Roosevelt was called upon Wednesday by the International Association of Railway Employes to use his influence to wipe out the color bar to Negro employment as locomotive firemen and trainmen "so that the burdens of the war and the chance to contribute to the war effort may rest equally on all elements of the population."

The letter to the Chief Executive was drafted during the closing session of the association's national convention at the Butler Street YMCA. Representatives of every major railroad using Negro firemen, brakemen and trainmen were in attendance. Copies of the letter to the President were sent to WMC Chairman Paul V. McNutt, Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, director of selective service, and Charles E. Houston, general counsel of the association.

The nation's Chief Executive was asked to give his official support in seeing to it that his FEPC hold hearings on grievances of the Negro trainmen.. The committee has already scheduled hearings on the case in Washington, August 15-17.

Text of the association's letter to the President follows:

"The International Association of Railway Employes, Inc., a national railway labor union of Negro locomotive firemen and Negro trainmen, in biennial convention in Atlanta, address you on the gross discriminations against Negros in the railway industry, both on the part of railway management and on the part of the white railway brotherhoods.

THE CASE IN BRIEF

"The railroads under pressure from the white railway brotherhoods refuse to hire Negroes as locomotive firemen or trainmen. They refuse to promote Negro firemen, regardless of how competent, to engineers; Negro trainmen are never promoted to conductors, either in freight or passenger service. The white Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and the white Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers, using their bargaining position as majority representatives under the Railway Labor act, negotiated secret agreements with the railroads depriving Negro firemen and trainmen of their seniority rights.

JUL 31 1943

"Our complaints concerning deprivation of our seniority rights and insertion of non-promotable clauses in working contracts, have been presented to you before and we trust that this time you will see that the hearings into these discriminations set by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices for Sept. 15-17, 1943, will not be called off, but it will be given your official support.

"However, what we specially point out to you is that the refusal of the railroads to hire Negroes places an unjust discrimination and hardship on every Negro home under the selective service administration. In February, 1943, Mr. McNutt issued his famous work-in-war-activity or fight order which became effective April 7. There under, a large number of occupations were listed as non-deferrable. Most Negro men are classified in non-deferrable occupations because race prejudice has limited them to such jobs, for example, bell boys, butlers, elevator operators, housemen, messengers, newsboys, chauffeurs, valets, waiters, etc. Railroad occupations are deferrable; locomotive firemen and trainmen are deferrable.

JUL 31 1943

WANTS NO FAVORS

"We are not trying to find a loophole to keep Negroes out of the draft, but we point out that every time a Negro father or husband is refused deferment and taken into the armed forces because he is chauffeur, who has been denied employment as a locomotive fireman or trainman solely because he is a Nego, a Nego home is broken up to the unfair advantage of some white home. We are all in this war together. We should bear equal risks. Certainly the Negro has never gotten such benefits from this country that he should be asked to bear a greater risk than the white man.

JUL 31 1943

"We do not believe you will suffer such injustice to continue and we, therefore, ask you to use your great influence to wipe out the color bar to employment of Negroes on the railroads as locomotive firemen and trainmen, so that the burdens of the war and the chance to contribute to the war effort may fall equally on all elements of the population."

The letter was signed by Arthur Lewis, president, and E. L. Leonard, chairman of the board of the association. It constituted the resolutions of the group which began sessions here Monday with delegates from 17 states. Jul 31, 1943

Reports on the progress of legal action instituted by Chief Counsel Charles Houston, Washington, D. C.; Atty. A. T. Walden, Atlanta and Atty. Arthur D. Shores, Birmingham were heard Tuesday. Methods of co-operation and combatting discrimination against seniority rights in contracts of the roads under the Southeastern Conference agreement were suggested. This agreement halted the further employment of "non-promotable" firemen. The clause "non-promotable" referred to the unwillingness of roads to promote Negro firemen to engineers. N.Y. Text Of New Roosevelt Order On Fair Employment Practices

Defender
Chicago, Ill

JUN 5 1943

FEPC

47

WASHINGTON—The White House this week issued the text of the new executive order establishing a new Committee on Fair Employment Practice.

The full text of the new order defines the powers and duties of the committee as follows:

"In order to establish a new Committee on Fair Employment Practice, to promote the fullest utilization of all available manpower, and to eliminate discriminatory employment practices, Executive Order No. 8802 of June 25, 1941, as amended by Executive Order No. 8823 of July 18, 1941, is hereby further amended to read as follows:

WHEREAS the successful prosecution of the war demands the maximum employment of all available workers regardless of race, creed, color, or national origin; and

"WHEREAS it is the policy of the United States to encourage full participation in the war effort by all persons in the United States regardless of race, creed, color, or national origin, in the firm belief that the democratic way of life within the nation can be defended successfully only with the help and support of all groups within its borders; and

Evidence of Bias

"WHEREAS there is evidence that available and needed workers have been barred from employment in industries engaged in war production solely by reason of their race, creed, color, or national origin, to the detriment of the prosecution of the war, the workers' morale, and national unity:

"NOW, THEREFORE, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and statutes, and as President of the United States and Commander-in-Chief of the army and navy, I do hereby reaffirm the policy of the United States that there shall be no discrimination in the employment of any person in war industries or in government by reason of race, creed, color, or national origin, and I do hereby declare that it is the duty of all employers, including the several federal departments and agencies, and all labor organizations, in furtherance of this policy and of this order, to eliminate discrimination in regard to hire, tenure, terms or conditions of employment, or union membership because of race, creed, color, or national origin.

Nine-Point Order

"It is hereby ordered as follows:

"1. All contracting agencies of the government of the United States shall include in all contracts hereafter negotiated or renegotiated by them a provision obligating the contractor not to discriminate against any employee or applicant for employment because of race, creed, color, or national origin and requiring him to include a similar provision in all subcontracts.

"2. All departments and agencies of the government of the United States concerned with vocational and training programs for war production shall take all measures appropriate to assure that such programs are administered without discrimination because of race, creed, color, or national origin.

"3. There is hereby established in the Office for Emergency Management of the Executive Office of the President a Committee on Fair Employment Practice, hereinafter referred to as the committee, which shall consist of a chairman and not more than six other members to be appointed by the President. The chairman shall receive such salary as shall be fixed by the President not exceeding $10,000 per year. The other members of the committee shall receive necessary traveling expenses and, unless their compensation is otherwise prescribed by the President, a per diem allowance not exceeding $25 per day and subsistence expenses on such days as they are actually engaged in the performance of duties pursuant to this order.

Tells Powers

"4. The committee shall formulate policies to achieve the purposes of this order and shall make recommendations to the various federal departments and agencies and to the President which it deems necessary and proper to make effective the provisions of this order. The committee shall also recommend to the chairman of the War Manpower Commission appropriate measures for bringing about the full utilization and training of manpower in and for war production without discrimination because of race, creed, color, or national origin.

"5. The committee shall receive and investigate complaints of discrimination forbidden by this order. It may conduct hearings, make findings of fact, and take appropriate steps to obtain elimination of such discrimination.

"6. Upon the appointment of the committee and the designation of its chairman, the Fair Employment Practice committee established by Executive Order No. 8802 of June 25, 1941, hereinafter referred to as the old committee, shall cease to exist. All records and property of the old committee and such unexpended balances of allocations or other funds available for its use as the director of the bureau of the budget shall determine shall be transferred to the committee. The committee shall assume jurisdiction over all complaints and matters pending before the old committee and shall conduct such investigations and hearings as may be necessary in the performance of its duties under this order.

Provides For Funds

"7. Within the limits of the funds which may be made available for that purpose, the chairman shall appoint and fix the compensation of such personnel and make provision for such supplies, facilities, and services as may be necessary to carry out this order. The committee may utilize the services and facilities of other federal departments and agencies and such voluntary and uncompensated services as may from time to time be needed. The committee may accept the services of state and local authorities and officials, and may perform the function and duties and exercise the powers conferred upon it by this order through such officials and agencies and in such manner as it may determine.

"8. The committee shall have the power to promulgate such rules and regulations as may be appropriate or necessary to carry out the provisions of this order.

"9. The provisions of any other pertinent executive order inconsistent with this order are hereby superseded."

FEPC GETS $544,000 FOR JOB BIAS PROBES

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.

WASHINGTON, D.C., July 8—The new seven-man Committee on Fair Employment Practice, named recently by President Roosevelt, met here Tuesday in its first formal meeting and discussed future activities of the agency with Monsignor Francis J. [illegible], chairman.

The members of the committee, evenly divided between employers and labor representatives are: Labor representatives — John Brophy of the Congress of Industrial Organizations; Boris Shishkin of the American Federation of Labor; Milton P. Webster of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, all members of the old commitee; and, employer representatives: Miss Sara Southall of the International Harvester company; P. B. Young, Sr., publisher of the Norfolk Journal and Guide, and Samuel Zemurray, president of the United Fruit company.

GETS $544,000; TO DOUBLE STAFF

Monsignor Haas, who spent several days last week surveying cases of anti-Negro discrimination in war industries in Detroit, reported on his trip and upon the budget for the committee's work.

A budget of $544,000, enabling FEPC to double its present staff of 45 employees has been approved by the Bureau of the Budget, and, according to present indications, will come out of emergency funds appropriated by Congress last week and placed at the disposal of the President.

Fear that the FEPC, certain to be the target of anti-Negro Congressmen, such as Rankin of Mississippi and others, would have to go to the House Appropriations committee for funds for the next fiscal year were dispelled last week by Congressional action freeing the President's special fund from restrictions which would have forced the committee to appeal to Congress.

JUL 1943

YOUNG REPLACES EARL DICKERSON

So far as funds are concerned, the new FEPC will have available for the next 12 months a sum more than double the amount available to the old committee. But grave doubts were expressed by observers here regarding the future effectiveness of the committee.

Th substitution of P. B. Young, Sr., for Earl B. Dickerson of Chicago, was interpreted by some as a definite attempt to satisfy the criticisms of Southern poll tax congressmen. These observers point out that the reason most frequently stated by officials around Father Haas, who did the actual selection of the committee, that he wanted a committee equally balanced between employers and employees was pure whitewash, inasmuch as the committee will have no dealings with Negro employers on questions of discrimination. They declare the employer-labor set-up was created for the sole purpose of getting rid of Earl Dickerson and that this step was dictated by Atty. General Biddle, who is known to have played an active part in setting up the new committee.

PRAISE WOMAN APPOINTEE

The selection of Tennessee-born, Miss Southall, a personnel director of the International Harvester company in Chicago, and an active member of the executive board of the Chicago Urban league, was greeted with enthusiasm here, however. Persons familiar with her work in securing placements of Negroes in war industry praised her accomplishments.

Young, a member of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice who has been ill, announced this week that he would continue to serve as a member of the committee, and that he would attend the committee's forthcoming public hearings at Portland, Oregon, November 15 and 16, in cases involving shipyard workers in that area. He left for the West Coast Saturday.

Following an acute illness in September, Mr. Young had expressed doubts of his ability to continue as a member of FEPC. A return to normal health has led to his decision that he will be able to give the full time required to committee matters.

Mr. Young is publisher of the Journal and Guide and last spring was elected chairman of the board of trustees of Howard University.

AFL Backs Haas' Appeal For End of Negro Bias

New York, N. Y. PM

AUG 1 1943

Msgr. Francis J. Haas

Union Magazine Publishes Plea to End Union Discrimination

WASHINGTON, July 31.—Msgr. Francis J. Haas, chairman of the President's FEPC (Fair Employment Practice Committee), is calling for an end of racial discrimination by labor unions.

A number of cases in which AFL unions have barred Negroes from membership already are pending before the FEPC.

Writing in a forthcoming issue of the American Federationist, official journal of the AFL, Father Haas chides union leaders for "endless explanations, excuses and justification" of why racial barriers and other discriminatory practices are continued.

Hits 'Buck Passing'

"For the most part," the FEPC chairman reports, "union leaders have said 'they won't stand for it,' meaning that their white members are opposed to a non-discriminatory membership policy."

"In too many cases, 'they' is just symbolic of buck-passing," he adds. "However this may be, the clear duty of leaders is to lead, and in the present case the duty is crystal clear."

Despite the critical tone of his article, Father Haas cites considerable progress—of which the AFL's publication of this frank piece of self-criticism can be taken as an indication. He points out:

"It should not be passed over that, during all the rioting in Detroit, black and white workers continued working in most of the plants without friction; in several instances white workers escorted Negro workers home and protected them from the mob."

Other Unions Guilty

Father Haas also made it clear that "not all unions which bar Negroes or other minority group workers are in the AFL by any means, and neither do all locals follow whatever may be the policies of their international bodies."

Nonetheless, the FEPC chairman makes the statement of fact:

"Although elemental self-interest points but in one direction, there are still several major international labor unions which close their doors to Negroes as members by constitution, ritual or tradition and there are hundreds of locals which follow suit."

Father Haas praised both the AFL and CIO for establishing inter-racial action committees to develop goodwill.

Philly Transit Co. Must Hire Colored

NOV 27 1943

PHILADELPHIA

The Philadelphia (Pa.) Transportation Company, ordered by FEPC to cease race discrimination in hiring streetcar conductors, motormen, guards, cashiers and platform attendants, wants union sanction before making such a move.

The company union, which has a clause excluding colored workers met Tuesday night to consider the FEPC order, advising that insistence upon its contract is a violation of FDR's order.

Deadline Saturday

FEPC gave the company until Saturday, November 27, to upgrade and hire colored workers on the same basis as all others or to request a public hearing. PTC has 10,900 workers, 537 of whom are colored laborers.

The order requires the company to notify the union that discrimination will cease and so instruct its executives; to reconsider all colored applications received since June 25, 1941, post notices in conspicuous places stating that there will be no more color line in employment and promotion, and notify FEPC Regional Director G. James Fleming every 30 days for the next three months that these orders are being carried out.

Declares Negro Workers Must Be Strong To Overcome New Wave Of Anti-Negro Reaction

New York, N. Y. New York Age

By LORENZO F. DAVIS

JUL 3 1943

If Negro workers are to hold their own through the present wave of anti-Negro reaction, they must be determined to put forth their best effort on the job and stay clear of violence whenever possible.

While the foul stench of the anti-Negro riots and strikes of the Mobile Alabama shipyard, the Packard Motor Company of Detroit, and the Sun Shipbuilding Company of Pennsylvania, is still fresh, we had last week the most recent and worst outbreak of anti-Negro sentiment since this war began—the Detroit race riot which has already brought death to twenty Negroes, at this writing. The recent case of the Acme Backing Company of Brooklyn, where within the fortnight, 135 white workers "walked out" because a Negro was upgraded to his rightful job, gives ample evidence that this anti-Negro sentiment is not confined to the South or West, but is spreading right into New York City.

Several reasons for this condiiton have been advanced, the most prominent being: resentment of whites to the increasing number of Negroes in war jobs, practice of job segregation creating racial differences, wage differences for Negroes and whites, the revived activities of the Ku Klux Klan and "fifth columnists" or "domestic saboteurs."

But whatever the reason or reasons, the Negro worker's first duty is to protect his job and act in his best interests. Because he knows there are many hostile forces working against him, he should have all the more reason to do his job and act beyond reproach and shun bitterness.

If friction should arise with a white worker, report the incident to the shop steward if the factory is unionized, or to the foreman. If you can get no satisfaction on the job, take your grivance to the offices of the Fair Employment Practice Committee or the Governor's Committee on Discrimination for New York City. The telephone directory will give you their addresses. But in any case, avoid violence.

In this same connection, organized labor has the uncompromising duty to uphold the rights of its Negro members and impress upon its white members the need for understanding the problems of their fellow Negro unionists.

Management must be prevailed upon to treat the Negro workers with the same fairness as the whites; it must not be afraid to stand its ground against Negro-haters and trouble-makers, who demand to tell it when to hire, upgrade and fire Negro workers on the threat of organized retalliation. All must help in putting the Negro's strength to work for victory.

FEPC SEEKS TO PUT NEGROES BACK ON JOB

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9—Immediate return to work of the Negroes in West Coast shipyards who had been dismissed for refusal to pay their dues into an auxiliary union local of the Boilermakers' union is being sought by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice (FEPC) as a preliminary move to adjustment of the entire situation, it was announced last week by the committee.

As a result of investigation and a conference in San Francisco on August 20-21, the positions of all parties involved in the dispute have been clarified, the committee reported.

Workers' Defense League Quizzes New FEPC Head

Pittsburgh Pa. Courier

NEW YORK, June 17—For the avowed purpose of assisting in speedy enforcement of the President's Executive Order 8802 banning discrimination, the Workers' Defense league, through National Secretary Morris Malgram, directed a number of pointed questions at Monsignor Francis J. Haas, newly appointed chairman of the Fair Employment Practices committee.

Of one the five questions asked Monsignor Haas in a letter dated June 7 was: "In view of the broad language of the President's Executive Order, which certainly means that the armed forces are included in the words of the Executive Order banning discrimination in the "several Federal departments and agencies," when do you propose to ask the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to end the grave discrimination now going on in the armed forces—in violation of the Selective Service Act of 1940 and the President's recent executive order?"

JUN 19 1943

Other questions asked Monsignor Haas dealt with whether he had re-scheduled the railroad discrimination hearings called off in January by War Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt; whether he proposes, as some anti-discrimination leaders have suggested, to call together the 1-9 organization leaders who met at the President's request February 19 with McNutt and Attorney General Francis Biddle; whether he recognized that the chief weapon of the forces seeking to throttle the FEPC has been delay after delay in the holding of vital public hearings; and whether there is in the records of the four present members of the FEPC—Messrs. Sniskin, Dickerson, Webster and Brophy—anything that warrants the slightest doubt concerning their service on the new board.

New FEPC Chairman Has Press Conference

Kansas City Call Kansas City, Mo.

JUN 4 1943

WASHINGTON. — (ANP) — Immediately after the issuance of the new executive order reorganizing the FEPC, a press conference was called by Msgr. Francis J. Hass, the newly appointed chairman, to explain and discuss its contents.

Boiled down to its essentials, Fr. Hass declined to explain how the order would be implemented, pending the appointment of the other members of the committee. He could give no indication when these appointments would be made, but did not believe them likely before June 2, the date to which the hearing into the Capital Transit Company had been postponed.

"Here is a document which has importance and authority," Fr. Hass declared. "What methods and means are used to achieve its purposes are going to be used, and the committee is going to be such as will use these powers."

SAW ORDER EARLY

Fr. Hass admitted that he had seen the order before he accepted the offer of appointment, and that he had made some suggestions with regard to its final contents. He declined, however, to point out what suggestions he may have made.

He could not say anything about the complexion of the committee to be named to work with him, but said that he expected to be consulted on the appointments.

Although Fr. Haas anticipated no staff changes, Lawrence W. Cramer, executive secretary for the committee, practically admitted that he won't be around long.

HAS PASSED EXAM

He told reporters that the army has asked for him, and that he has no objections whatsoever to going but he said he had been asked "to hold off a while" in order to assist the new chairman to get his bearings. "I shall try to adjust so that everything will be done that should be done," Cramer said.

JUN 4 1943

Cramer's intention to go into the army were first learned of more than six weeks ago, when the Associated Negro Press learned exclusively that he had taken and passed the physical examination preparatory to entering the school for military governors at Charlottesville, Va. He had been expected to leave about May 1, but the delay in the selection of a chairman for the committee is what held up the transition.

JUN 6 1943

The appointment of Fr. Haas to the chairmanship was dated May 27, the day on which Catholic university where he is dean of the social science department, held its commencement exercises. This followed by approximately 10 days the unofficial report that he was the man. The President's letter to him said in part:

"Under your prudent and able direction, I am confident that the committee will make substantial progress in the solution of the vexing problems of discrimination in industry."

AN UNEXPENDED BALANCE

The ANP in another exclusive has been able to get a line on the budget probabilities confronting the new committee. For the fiscal period ending June 30, 1943. FEPC had been allowed $340,000 of which there is an unexpended balance.

This balance is due to the failure of WMC to transfer the field force of 30 men formerly working under Dr. Robert C. Weaver to the committee according to the agreement reached with manpower boss Paul V. McNutt last October.

In submitting his budget to the bureau of the budget for the fiscal year 1944, McNutt allowed nothing for FEPC, but denied that this indicated the status of the committee. The committee itself, however, did submit its estimates to the bureau of the budget and called for $650,000, a difference of $310,000 over the previous allowance.

In view of the issuance of the new order, it is possible that this figure will be worked, but the committee has won a concession from budget that the bureau will no longer make up estimate for the committee without first consulting with its fiscal officials.

A. Philip Randolph, national director of the March on Washington movement, made the following comment on the new order:

"The crux of the question is still the immediate rescheduling of the postponed railroad hearings. It is the judgment of the organizations participating in the February 19 conference with Messrs. McNutt and Biddle, that the four remaining members of the FEPC be retained because they investigated the railroad situation and rendered good service to minorities through the FEPC. These organizations feel it would be to the best interest of the committee were the new chairman, Fr. Haas, to call together the 19 organizations to discuss the future plans of FEPC before any major action is taken."

FEPC Gives Capital Transit Ultimatum on Race Job Bias

Washington Tribune Washington, D. C.

JUL 31 1943

Somewhat disturbed about some 800 cases of racial discrimination on its files, including some local ones, the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice notified the Capital Transit Company here Monday that it either must cease its discriminatory practice against Negroes on its lines or face the wrath of a public hearing to be decided on August 9 when the Committee holds its next meeting.

According to a statement made by the Very Rev. Francis J. Haas, chairman of the FEPC, the Capital Transit Company has taken "some steps" to alleviate the existing conditions but has "admitted a failure to employ available Negroes on its lines. "If these remedial steps are found to be inadequate by the time of our next meeting, August 9, we will need no further action. Otherwise, we shall call a public meeting to decide the issues," Father Haas further stated.

Chairman Haas revealed further that a complaint has been made by a Mexican consul that there has been discrimination against Mexicans brought into the United States for wartime work also.

Malcolm Ross Succeeds Haas As FEPC Head

WASHINGTON —(S N S)— President Roosevelt Friday accepted the resignation of Monsignor Francis J Haas as chairman of the Fair Employment Practice Committee and named Deputy Chairman Malcolm Ross to succeed him.

Monsignor Haas resigned upon his designation by Pope Pius to be bishop of the diocese of Grand Rapids, Mich. In a letter to the FEPC, Mr. Roosevelt said Monsignor Haas "has offered to continue to give us his council. The President added:

"There are many difficulties before us. I feel satisfied, however that in you the country has a committee upon which it can depend for wise and determined dealing with this problem which is essential to the fulfilment of the promises of our democracy."

New York, N.Y.

The Negro Labor Victory Committee today, through its executive secretary, Charles A. Collins, hailed President Roosevelt for his speedy appointment of a chairman of the Fair Employment Practice Committee to succeed Msgr. Haas, who resigned to become Bishop of the diocese of Grand Rapids, and pledged its full support to the new chairman, Malcolm Ross.

The Negro Labor Victory Committee was informed yesterday of the appointment of Mr. Ross by Jonathan Daniels, Administrative Assistant to the President, in a letter to Collins. Daniels stated: "The President has asked me to thank you for your letter of Oct. 9 . . . you can be confident that the Committee will carry on the same policies which characterized its actions under the former chairman."

In his statement on behalf of the Negro Labor Victory Committee Collins stated: "The decisive factor" in the work of the Committee "will be the continuous support given the Committee by the Administration, organized labor and other progressive groups throughout the country."

Life, Death And Re-Birth Of FEPC

Bystander
Des Moines, Iowa

When President Roosevelt scrapped the old and ineffective Fair Employment Practice Committee on May 28 and set up a new FEPC to combat job discrimination, because of race, religion and national origin, in the federal government and private industry, he only did what should have been done long ago, many Negro and white leaders contend.

JUN 5 1943

They base their contention on the fact that despite the critical demand for more workers in war industry, Negroes and Jews and citizens of Italian and German descent are still discriminated against in employment by the Government itself, as well as private employers. Of course, most of the discrimination is against Negroes, particularly in the South, where they are still riddeno-n-a-rail whenever they seek war jobs above the menial level.

There are fewer than 40,000 Negro trainees for war jobs in the entire South, despite the need for hundreds of thousands of skilled and semi-skilled workers and a vanishing labor supply. Although there is a critical need for 2,000 welders by the Ala. Dry Dock and Shipbuilding Company in Mobile, white workers rioted there last week soleley because of a rumor that the company, itself determined not to hire Negroes above the unskilled level, planned to employ them as welders.

Death of Old FEPC

Meantime, in the North hundreds of plants in need of labor also continue to discriminate against Negroes and others. The owners of these plants are implying equally effectively as the Southerners, who say, "to hell with winning the war if we have to let the niggers hold god jobs," that they feel the same way.

Headed by Monsignor Françis J. Haas, dean of the School of Social Science of Catholic Univ., Washington, D. C., the new FEPC will be self-contained and not dependent on War Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt. By refusing to permit the first FEPC to hold hearings last January against railroads charged with job discrimination buried the already dead FEPC. The commitee as originally established had independent status, but was placed under Mr. McNutt when his powers were broadened to include selective service and other phases of the manpower problem.

The new FEPC will consist of six members and a chairman. It is not yet known if President Roosevelt will re-appoint Earle B. Dickerson, Chicago alderman, and Milton B. Webster, vice-president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, as members. Both are Negroes and both were quite active on the first committee.

Executive Order 8802

The first Federal Government agency of its kind ever established, the FEPC came into being as a result of an executive order (8802) issued by President Roosevelt on June 25, 1941, and amended on July 18 of the same year.

The executive order establishing it was generally believed to have been issued by Mr. Roosevelt because of a threat of a march on Washington, by an estimated 50,000 Negroes in protest against job discrimination against their race by the Federal Government and private employers. A. Philip Randolph, head of the March on Washington Movement, refused to consent to call off the march, following a request that he do so by Mr. Roosevelt, and soon thereafter the executive order was issued.

As originally established, the FEPC was responsible directly to the President, who appointed its members. All contracts for war goods let by the Government had clauses inserted in them prohibiting employers from discriminating against persons because of race, religion, or national origin. Lawrence W. Cramer, former Governor of the Virgin Islands, was appointed as executive secretary of the committee, and after he had selected a small staff, the committee began to investigate complaints of job discrimination.

Crippled At Start

Although the FEPC was crippled from the beginning because of insufficient funds and an inadequate staff, it soon held hearings in various cities to determine charges against war firms that they were discriminating in their hiring practices.

The first hearings were held in Los Angeles, in October, 1941, the second in Chicago, in January, 1942, the third in New York City in February, 1942, and the last real ones in Birmingham, Ala., in July, 1942. Biased employers and their representatives openly lied on the witness stand, declaring that they did not discriminate against job applicants, although sufficient evidence to the contrary was produced by the FEPC and its witnesses.

JUN 5 1943

The large amount of publicity given to the hearings which awakened millions of people for the first time to the amount of job discrimination practiced against Negroes and others was the only real benefit derived from them or, in fact, the establishment of the committee itself.

An Abortive Career

The highlight of the first FEPC's abortive career was the hearings held in Birmingham. It marked the first time since the reconstruction period the Federal Government had ventured into the South to speak up for the rights of colored citizens.

A few Southern whites in the witness chair even made the mistake of saying, yes, sir, to their Negro interrogators.

However, because of the protests by the white Southerners against such hearings, no more was held in the South, although one had been scheduled to be held in Texas.

Following the Birmingham hearings, the old FEPC quietly folded its tent and stole back to the Social Security Building in Washington, where it maintains its headquarters, and, to all intents and purposes, died.

KILLING OF FEPC PROBE IS CONSEQUENCE OF TWO CASES OF BAD JUDGMENT

WHY did Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt call off the probe planned by the Fair Employment Practices Committee into job discrimination by common carriers—the railroads and related groups of our transportation system? Do you know? Or are you guessing? Mr. McNutt, who took full responsibility for the decision, says that the hearing was called off to iron out differences with southern railroads. I think that we have got to KNOW, not guess nor assume, more about why the hearing was killed before we can be intelligent in expressing opinions about the action. I don't think it will do any good to jump to conclusions on pure presumption. I think that the action has hurt FEPC, is embarrassing to its members. I think that Negroes have a right to feel that they have been deserted and that the killing of the probe represents a setback in the fight on discrimination. I think a mistake, or rather, two mistakes have been made.

Mr. Prattis

JAN 23 1943

FEPC MADE MISTAKE

THE first mistake, as noted in a recent letter from Miss McKenzie, was made by the Committee. Anything that touches the railroads affects the entire transportation system of the country. This system is dominated, not by the American Federation of Labor or the Congress of Industrial Organizations, but by the Big Four Brotherhoods of railway engineers, conductors, trainmen and brakemen. They constitute one of the most powerful forces in this country. They can defy the government and have defied the government. Overnight, they can tie up the transportation system of the nation. To keep them from doing so, the government was forced to take over the operation of the railroads in the last war. The FEPC planned a frontal attack on this entrenched gorilla of prejudice with no holds barred. The enemy was too strong and the FEPC was too weak. Maybe the FEPC figured that this was a good time to find out how strong, or weak, it is. It has learned. It has been kayoed. Joe Louis recovered after a kayo by Schmeling. I hope the FEPC recovers. But I believe it made a mistake by tackling too strong a foe without building up its strength in try-outs with less hardy foes.

JAN 23 1943

PRESIDENT MADE MISTAKE

ALTHOUGH Mr. McNutt takes responsibility for the action. I don't believe that he is responsible and I don't believe the reason he gives is all the reason. I believe that Mr. Roosevelt is responsible and I believe he made a mistake. From time to time, I have solicited all-out support for the President, but I do not believe he is infallible, even when he is most honest. I think that he and his advisers were caught in the middle by this proposed hearing and that they did what they thought was best. I think their best is a HUGE MISTAKE.

FACTORS BEHIND ORDER

JAN 23 1943

IN PASSING judgment on the kind of mistake they have made, it is necessary to look at the FEPC situation in the light of some other things which are happening. The anti-trust suits of the attorney general's office are in point. Cases, involving monopolies harmful to the public interest, have been built up by the attorney general's anti-trust division against a large number of American firms engaged in war production. Prosecution of practically all these cases has been killed or postponed. Why? Because the heads of these firms said they couldn't produce war goods and, at the same time, defend themselves in court. They told the Army and the Navy. The Army and the Navy told the President. The result was that the Attorney General was stopped dead in his tracks. The head of the anti-trust division of the Attorney General's office, Thurman Arnold, is now being considered for another job. The same is true of firms which have violated the patent laws to the injury of the public interest. At the present time a large section of the public press is condemning present restrictions or prospective restrictions and regulations, against the railroads. This section of the press contends that government interference and regulation hampers the railroads in doing their wartime job. The railroads are doing a big wartime job for the Army and Navy. Is it too much to assume that the railroad managements insisted that Army and Navy pull the FEPC on them and that the Army and Navy carried the case to the President? In such a situation, you doubtless perceive the combined opposition of the unions and management. Side by side with this, must be considered the political and racial opposition, based purely on prejudice.

JAN 23 1943

But political opposition is tremendously important at this time. The President has a bare majority in the Congress, necessary to him in the conduct of the war. He feels that he must hold this majority. That is one of the reasons he let Leon Henderson out. I rather feel that the President and his advisers thought that FEPC had proceeded to the point where its drive against the railroads might weaken the President's influence in Congress.

PRESIDENT COULD HAVE HELPED SOLVE PROBLEM

JAN 23 1943

BUT, in spite of all the factors described above, I believe the President and his advisers made a huge mistake. They have practically killed the only official agency fighting discrimination in this country. I think the issue against the railroads was of such vital import that the President and his advisers should have joined with FEPC in calling together the union and management leadership to effect some solution. This conference need not have been public. But it could have achieved some results and the face of FEPC could have been saved. Furthermore, thirteen million Negroes, fighting and working to win this war, would have been saved the humiliation and the injury to their morale suffered from the spectacle of their government backing down in the face of prejudice. In the basic analysis, prejudice based on color and race, must be found as the only true position of the opposition. The issue could have been tackled without jeopardising the necessary war work of the railroads and without menacing the President's influence in the Congress if the President and his advisers had had an affirmative concept of the problem, rather than fear of the consequences of tackling it. Transportation, or lack of it, can cause us to lose the war. So can color prejudice. Both are problems to be faced. Neither can be ignored without injury to the national cause. Killing this FEPC probe will hurt us at home and abroad.

Speak Out!

STRONG pressure from Negro and labor organizations has still not moved Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt to open hearings on anti-Negro discrimination in the railroad industry. Last week members of the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee unanimously voted to inform McNutt of "its very strong feeling that the railroad hearings which were postponed last week should be rescheduled and held as soon as possible." A conference of Negro editors and publishers has petitioned President Roosevelt to the same effect. It is obvious, as the conference declared, that "Wiping out the color line in war industries is not only necessary for the full use of the nation's manpower, but is also equally important as a pledge to our non-white allies of the good faith of the American government in its proclamation of freedom and democracy as the objectives of the war."

FEB 2 1943

This is a crucial issue on which there can be no compromise or evasion. The congressional defeatists and some government officers are adding fuel to enemy propaganda that the four freedoms do not apply to the colored races. They are seeking to disrupt national unity. It is vitally important that every progressive individual and organization let the President and Paul McNutt know that the people insist on reopening the hearings on the railroad industry. Not to speak out is to be an accomplice in this Jim Crow blow to the war effort.

Marcantonio Bill Would Aid FEPC

FEB 9 - 1943

WASHINGTON—(S N S)—Congressman Vito Marcantonio, N. Y., Friday introduced into the House of Representatives a bill which would cloak the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice with broad powers to stamp out discrimination in employment because of race, color, creed, religion, national origin or citizenship by any contractor or sub-contractor holding a federal government contract.

FEB 9 - 1943

The Marcantonio Fair Employment Practice Act establishes as the public policy of the United States the repudiation and prohibition of all forms of employment discrimination by any employer furnishing or manufacturing any goods for use by any agency of the federal government.

GIVES COMMITTEE POWER

It gives the Committee on Fair Employment Practice, created by President Roosevelt's Executive Order No. 8802, power to inquire fully into any alleged instance of discrimination and to issue orders to employers found guilty to cease and desist from continued violations.

The bill gives the Committee discretionary power to assess a guilty employment because of discrimi- dollars for each day's continued violation of a cease and desist order; to order the hiring or reinstatement of a person kept from employment because of discrimination; and, to bar any contractor, who after hearing has been found guilty of unfair employment practices, from receiving any government contracts for a maximum period of three years. All orders of the Committee are made subject to review and are enforceable by the federal courts. A penal provision for persons wilfully interfering with the execution of the Act, carries a penalty of five thousand dollars fine or one year's imprisonment, or both.

Commenting on his bill Congressman Marcantonio stated, "This bill is designed to put an end to all question as the status and powers of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice. The critical need for more manpower to win the war, makes it imperative that Congress acts firmly and promptly to stop un-American discriminations against Negroes, Italians, Jews, Puerto Ricans, foreign born, aliens and other groups who are hindered from giving their full energies to war production. I shall press for speedy action on this vital war measure."

FEPC DEVELOPMENTS DURING WEEK

Walter P. Reuther, vice president of the UAW-CIO, and member of the Labor-Management Policy Committee of WMC, protested to President Roosevelt and Chairman McNutt against postponement of FEPC hearings on discrimination in the railroad industry.

Powerful National Maritime Union wired Mr. McNutt denouncing the postponement as a "blow to the war against fascism."

Evidencing his resentment at McNutt's action Harry Epstein, FEPC special counsel, tendered his resignation.

Walter White, NAACP secretary, held Roosevelt's secretary, Marvin McIntyre, partly responsible for suppression of FEPC hearing and called McIntyre self-appointed President of the Negroes."

A delegation from Detroit, headed by Rev. Charles Hill, conferred with McNutt but received no "encouragement" the hearing would be held.

JAN 23 1943

George Marshall, president of National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, in a letter to President expressed "grave concern" over the indefinite postponement.

The National Lawyers Guild called on President Roosevelt to "re-create" FEPC as an independent agency with complete autonomy.

The CIO, through James B. Carey, secretary, leveled a sharp attack on McNutt and charged the postponement was a "serious blow to the war morale of Negro citizens and to all whites who know that racial discrimination is a Hitlerite weapon."

William Green, AFL president, has instructed Boris Shishkin, Federation representative on FEPC, to voice AFL's opposition to McNutt's action at the committee meeting this week.

The Socialist Party called upon McNutt to "rescind" his postponement order.

JAN 23 1943

NAACP branches throughout the country began organizing for mass protest on the ban on FEPC investigation.

The National Urban League, through President William H. Baldwin, wired President Roosevelt and Commissioner McNutt that it was "disturbed over apparent trends toward immobilization of the Committee's authority."

Dr. Max Yergan, president of the National Negro Congress, demanded the restoration of FEPC's power as an independent agency.

MARCANTONIO DOES IT!

FEB 20 1943

In the eyes of the growing number of reactionaries in Congress, Representative Vito Marcantonio, sole American Labor Party member, is a menace, and that is why they compelled the Committee on Committees to withdraw his name as a member of the potent House Judiciary Committee.

To show that the reactionaries' fears were justified, Representative Marcantonio the other day introduced in the House a bill which would give broader powers to the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices to prevent discrimination in employment because of "race," color, creed or national origin.

The Marcantonio measure would prohibit all forms of employment discrimination by any employer furnishing or manufacturing any goods used by any agency of the Federal Government.

The FEPC, under this measure, could issue orders to cease and desist and could assess fines of $500 for each day's continuation of a violation of a cease and desist order.

Employers found guilty of discrimination could also be barred from receiving government contracts for a maximum period of three years.

Now this is the kind of law THE PITTSBURGH COURIER has time and again insisted should be passed if the FEPC is going to be able to do its job effectively.

There is still not enough real patriotism among the war contractors of the United States to cause them to abolish color discrimination voluntarily regardless of where they may be located, and patting on the wrist by the FEPC will do little good, especially in certain sections.

What is needed is a punitive law with plenty of teeth, and that is what Marcantonio's bill possesses.

Significantly enough the daily newspapers have "buried" news of this bill's introduction on far inside pages and none has espoused it editorially. But the reception given this bill will indicate more than anything else at this time whether those in places of wealth and power are sincere about the ideals for which we are making such sacrifices.

In the meantime, every colored organization in the land should get behind this Marcantonio bill with every resource at its command.

WENDELL WILLKIE CONSULTED

JAN 23 1943

After consultation with Wendell Willkie in New York last week, a group of citizens issued a statement saying "The cancellation not only is an irreparable blow to the Negro people, but does the utmost damage to the whole prosecution of the war." The committee was composed of Ferdinand Smith, of the National Maritime union; Dr. Max Yergan, of the NNC; Dr. Warren Banner, National Urban league; Edward Lewis, New York Urban league; Joseph Ford, People's committee, and Rev. A. Clayton Powell Jr., city councilman.

A. Philip Randolph, militant leader, whose threat to lead a "March" on Washington forced President Roosevelt to issue the Executive Order, in a statement, said: "McNutt's action is a slap in the face of/and insult to, upwards of 20 millions of Negro Americans. It makes them feel that the President is surrendering to the race-prejudice-mongering political demagogues of the South. President Roosevelt stated in the famous White House conference that some agency was needed to which could be presented complaints of discriminations. He established such an agency and charged it with the responsibility of investigating discriminations in war industries Such is the function and responsibility of FEPC."

Walter White, NAACP secretary, strongly urged President Roosevelt to "restore the Fair Employment Practice Committee to its full independent status prior to its transfer to the War Manpower Commission."

FDR ORDERS MCNUTT TO REVISE FEPC; TO HOLD JIM CROW R. R. HEARINGS

FEB 12 1943

Washington, Feb. 12. (ANP)—President Roosevelt this week instructed Paul V. McNutt, chairman of the WMC, to call a conerence to revise and strengthen the power and scope of the FEPC.

The President stated that "when the machinery has been established to meet the problems," the committee would hold hearings of discrimination lodged against the railroad companies of the nation. He said other cases that have been delayed would also be continued.

Hearings on public carriers scheduled for Jan. 26 were ordered postponed by McNutt during the chief executive's absence from this country to attend the historic conferences on the war at Casablanca, French Morocco, West Africa.

FEB 12 1943

Negro leaders and other minority groups interpreted the postponement of the rail hearings, the first time the committee sought to challenge discrimination on an industry wide scale, as Mr. Roosevelt's capitulation to the dictates of the Bourbon south.

The hearings on the railroads were designde to focus public attention on alleged discriminations in the industry against Negro workers, and in unions composed of railroad employes. Particular attention was to be paid to unions and carriers operating in the southeastern states.

The President made the announcement of the request for reorganization of the FEPC after a luncheon engagement with McNutt and Atty. Gen. Francis Biddle. He praised the past performances of the committee, said members and leaders of groups opposing discrimination in war industries would be invited to the conference.

FEB 12 1943

One of the complaints against the organization of the President's committee by Negro leaders and representatives of other minority groups has been that it lacked sufficient power to make its dictates effective.

Walter White, secretary of the NAACP, stated last week that to wage an effective battle against discrimination in industry, the committee must be armed with "sanctions such as the right to impose money penalties and prison sentences and to hold public hearings when war contract holders, labor unions or government officials refuse to comply" with committee orders.

FEB 12 1943

Observers expressed the opinion that the presence at the White House of Biddle might tend to indicate that the President was seeking legal advice for grounds to impose sanctions.

Msgr. Hass Pleads with AFL to Grant Full Status to Negroes

BOSTON, Mass.—Msgr. Francis J. Haas, chairman of the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee, pleaded Wednesday with delegates to the American Federation of Labor convention to accord full union status to Negroes and other minority groups.

Msgr Haas issues the follow-warning:

"Just as once there existed unhealthy agreements between anti-labor employers and anti-labor workers, so there exists a danger that some labor organizations and some employers may combine to restrict the rights of minority group members. Put yourself in the place of such a member of a minority group. Be he Negro or Mexican, Jew or creedist, he wants his full stature as an American working man, and if he finds organized management and organized labor leagued against him he will in some form revolt.

"Would you have it otherwise? Would you have the spirit which founded the American Federation of Labor stamped out among great masses of your fellow-Americans? Must one-tenth of the people of our country be set aside as a special class, with special loyalties that are not the loyalties of the rest of us?"

RAILROAD DECISION EXPECTED THIS WEEK

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 30—Monsignor Francis J. Haas, chairman of the FEPC told The Pittsburgh Courier this week that he fully expected his seven-man committee to hand down a decision in the cases of alleged discrimination by railroad employers and unions at its next regular meeting which will take place here Saturday (October 2).

"Members of the committee already have heard the evidence and have complete transcripts of the testimony," said Father Haas. They will soon be furnished with digests of the cases against each company and each union based on this testimony. I expect we will make our decision at our next meeting."

BOILERMAKERS' CASE SET FOR HEARING

The FEPC chairman also indicated that West Coast hearings in the case of the Boilermakers' union were scheduled to be heard before the full committee at Portland, Ore., and in San Francisco on November 18, 19 and 20.

Decision of the FEPC to push through to a speedy decision in the railroad cases promised an early showdown between the committee and the railroad carriers union, CIO, issued a pessimistic blast at the committee this week in which he declared that the hearings were meaningless and that FEPC was as good as dead and buried.

Most observers here, however, held a more hopeful view of the chances for effective action by the committee. They accepted as a foregone conclusion that the committee could not avoid a finding of gross discrimination on the part of the railroads and the unions. They were wary, however, of the methods which the committee might attempt to enforce a correction of these jim-crow practices.

MAY OUTLAW AGREEMENT

It was pointed out that a solution of the problem of several thousand Negro trainmen and firemen, who are threatened with loss of seniority rights and eventual loss of jobs, demanded an enforced cancellation by the FEPC of the Southeastern Carriers' Agreement and other agreements between railroads and unions of similar character, which prevent and limit employment and seniority of so-called "non-promotable" employees (which under its terms means Negro).

What is involved in outlawing these agreements is not only the attack upon the companies and the unions, but also upon the National Mediation Board, a government agency, which approved the jim crow agreements. It will be squarely up to the committee when it meets Saturday to decide if it will say to the railroads, the unions and to the government agencies, "You have entered into and approved an agreement which violates the President's Executive Order against discrimination. We declare it null and void and order you to renegotiate the contract in terms which will guarantee the protection of the seniority and employment rights of Negro trainmen and firemen."

ROOSEVELT MAY ENTER PICTURE

Another problem which the committee will have to face will be how to meet the problem of future employment of Negroes on railroads in all skills at a time when the manpower shortage is so acute that Joseph Eastman, director of the Office of Defense Transportation, has appealed to be permitted to use women and prisoners of war on the railroads. The Railroad Retirement Board is the agency which now handles recruitment of workers for the railroads. It will be up to the committee to insist that this government agency take positive steps to secure acceptance of Negro workers as engineers, stewards, machinists and roundhouse employees by the railroads and to prevent any interference with these actions by the railroad unions.

There was still this week no indication of any further break in the united front of the railways or the unions. Father Haas declined to affirm or deny that the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen had submitted an answer to the charges raised against them. What will happen if the companies, the unions or the government agencies decline to obey the committee's orders, and whether in the final analysis the whole matter will be placed in President Roosevelt's lap for exercise of his emergency war powers, remains to be seen. and railway labor unions. Already various observers of the four-day hearings held two weeks ago have expressed doubt that the committee can enforce any orders it issues to the railroads or the unions to end the wholesale acts of jim-crowism proved against them.

OBSERVES DOUBT POWER TO ACT

Last week the "Kiplinger Letter" —widely circulated weekly newsletter sent to leading businessmen predicted that the hearings would be meaningless. Said the letter: "FEPC has only power to recommend . . . its recommendations may be ignored."

Sgt. James A. Jackson had a bit of fun during the landing when he became more concerned over the squadron's small upright piano than his own skin. He pulled the piano backward and forward over the beach, fearing the Germans would get aim on it if it stayed in one spot. Finally wearying, he began playing, "I Got a Gal in Kalamazoo" and other songs, which the boys chorused while shells exploded uncomfortably close.

THE RAILROAD HEARINGS

Defender
Chicago, Ill.

The formal sessions of the Fair Employment Practices committee investigation of the discriminatory practices of 22 of the nation's leading railroads and of the railroad brotherhoods are over. No findings have been submitted to the American public up to the time of this writing. These however will undoubtedly follow. They will be clear for the testimony was undoubtedly clear. Negroes are subjected to grossly discriminatory practices by America's railroads.

Yes, the anti-Negro policy of the American railroads and in the main of the railroad brotherhoods was clear, but the major factor that emerged from this hearing was not the jim-crowism, but the tremendous injury this jim-crowism has done our country at its moment of supreme crisis. War demands a change.

The railroads have been and are complaining of a shortage of manpower. The hearings confronted them with thousands of able men with years of experience behind them whose services were not used at all or used only in a limited capacity because of their color.

This is not a Negro question. This is not only an American question, but today when we are involved in coalition warfare, this is an international question. Jim-crowism and segregation in America must come to an end. The progressive forces of the country must be mobilized from the trade union movement itself to those elements within the National Association of Manufacturers who are willing to put the interest of their country over and above their prejudices.

Clyde R. Miller, founder of the Institute for Propaganda Analysis, questioned by Bartley C. Crum, special counsel for the Fair Employment Practices committee, brought out with the greatest of clarity the fact that Germany and Italy in Europe and particularly Japan in Far East have capitalized greatly on the discriminatory policy of leading industrialists in America, which

Jimcro Railroad Unions Defy Democracy

THE railway unions of America are definitely fascist and should be immediately outlawed by the government. The consistent "white supremacy" attitude on the part of their leadership is treason at its very worst. It is American Hitlerism. The flagrant disregard of the FEPC's invitation to attend a hearing in the nation's capital last week has proved conclusively that the railway unions should be dissolved immediately by the government and new unions, or a new union, formed in keeping with the fundamental principles of this nation.

Nowhere in America is the Negro kept more rigidly in the mythical place that Nazi-minded whites would confine him than in the transportation industry. Negro men can never advance further than the job that they begin in—red cap, porter or waiter. As I travel the railroads of this nation constantly, it has been time and again proven to me that the average Negro worker has the ability and experience to hold any job in the transportation picture.

- There are red caps in many stations that are better trained than ticket-sellers and the men who work in the station masters' offices.
- There are porters just as capable of being Pullman conductors as any that are now serving.
- There are waiters who are not only able to be stewards but also to work in the highest brackets of the stewards' offices in the terminal headquarters.

MANY NEGROES TODAY ARE SERVING AS STEWARDS AND PULLMAN CONDUCTORS BUT ARE REFUSED THE TITLES, THE PAY AND THE HONOR.

There is no difference between the so-called railway brotherhood and the Klu Klux Klan nor, for that matter, Hitler's Black Shirt Bullies.

The time has arrived for the awakened conscience of white America to purge these unAmerican organizations. The CIO stands as a living refutation of the fact that Negroes and whites can work together and advance in their industries as their ability and experience warrant. There are some AFL unions, all too few, who likewise not only pay lip-service to democracy but also practice it. The entire American Federation of Labor, however, will never be respected by any Negro nor any honest-thinking white until it has cleaned up its own house. THE TIME IS NOW.

Richard K. Smith, secretary-treasurer of the Joint Council of Dining Car Employees, in his closing words before the FEPC, at their hearing, sized up the whole question: "We have no complaint if we do not measure up. If we do, then we want what we have a right to expect. And sometime, somehow, somewhere, we are going to get what is coming to us."

This is absolutely true. There is no individual, race, group nor institution that can withstand the mounting tide of world freedom. The time is rapidly drawing near when every black, brown, yellow and white worker will receive full and equal opportunity for employment and advancement. The day will come when Negro red caps will be ticket-sellers, Negro porters conductors and Negro waiters stewards. Furthermore, black men will drive the trains as well.

The Negro is working today where others said we would never be admitted. And tomorrow we will make for the break-throughs.

No one can stop us!

General Accounting Office Knifes President's FEPC

Washington Tribune
Washington, D. C.

The Comptroller General of the United States, Lindsay C. Warren, in an opinion dated October 7, advised War Mobilization Director James F. Byrnes, that contracts negotiated by the Federal Government will be considered by the General Accounting Office as valid, whether they contain an anti - discrimination clause or not.

The opinion weakens considerably Executive Order of the President, No. 9346, which, in addition to creating the Fair Employment Practices Committee, ordered that:

"All contracting agencies of the Government of the United States shall include in all contracts hereafter negotiated or renegotiated by them a provision obligating the contractor not to discriminate against any employee or applicant for employment because of race, creed, color, or national origin and requiring him to include a similar provision in all subcontracts."

In compliance with that Executive Order the Office for Emergency Management issued an order to all of its subdivisions, requiring the incorporation of anti-discriimnation clauses, in all future contracts.

Such a clause, pursuant to those instructions, was incorporated in a proposed contract between the Government and the Southwestern Bell Telephone Company at Kansas City, Mo. The contract was the cover service to be rendered the National War Agencies at Kansas City.

The telephone company refused to sign the contract with the anti-discrimination clauses, in all and, being the only means by which telephone service can be obtained in Kansas City, the Government had been without telephone service.

Dallas Dort, director, Division of Central Administrative Services, of the Office for Emergency Management, in a letter to the Comptroller General dated September 11, 1943, pointed out that in addition to the refusal of the telephone company to sign the contract, the Government had experienced difficulty in negotiating lease contracts in which the anti-discrimination clause had been inserted, causing "considerable administrative difficulties." He sought the opinion of the Comptroller, whose office has to approve all Government contracts, as well as approve payment of vouchers under the contracts.

After a lengthy citation of his own opinions, the Comptroller arrives at the conclusion that the President's Executive Order was "directory and not mandatory," to the contracting agencies. Anyway, he concluded, the purpose of the Executive Order was to promote the war effort, and "failure to include such a provision will not render void an otherwise proper contract, or render objectionable otherwise proper payments thereunder.

The decision created quite a stir among officials of the FEPC, who had no knowledge of the decision until brought to their attention by the Washington Tribune.

Though the request for a decision was sent to the Comptroller by Mr. Dort, of the Office for Emergency Management, the director of which is Wayne Coy, of Indiana, the Comptroller's answer was sent to Mr. Byrnes, who is director of the Office of War Mobilization, whose office was created by Executive Order the same date that the President by like method created the newly constituted FEPC.

Some observers saw some political implications in the decision. The manner in which it was handled suggests that Byrnes and Warren conferred in advance of its issuance.

Byrnes is politically ambitious, and is reported to be seeking the Vice Presidential nomination. Warren, though a political appointee, is not subjected to politics. He is appointed for a fifteen-year term, is not subject to reappointment, and cannot be removed except by impeachment of the Senate.

Real Gains Scored In War Jobs Retiring FEPC Chairman Says

Journal and Guide Norfolk, Virginia

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Negroes have scored real gains in war employment since the beginning of the war emergency, Monsignor Francis J. Haas, retiring chairman of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, told newspapermen at his final press conference at the committee's headquarters last week.

"At present," Monsignor Haas declared, "Negroes constitute one out of every 14 war workers, and one out of every 11 government workers."

"Improvement in Negro employment in war industries has been substantial in the last year," the chairman stated.

"In July, 1942," he pointed out, "Negro workers constituted only 5.8 percent of total war production employees. By July, 1943, this percentage, had risen to 7.3 per cent. Since Negroes constitute roughly 10 per cent of our population, you can see that we still have a big job ahead. Negro employment is still limited to too few establishments, and there is still much under-utilization of the skills of Negro workers."

ROSS NEW CHAIRMAN

Malcolm Ross successor to Father Haas who was sworn into office Tuesday, October 19, stated briefly that there would be "complete continuity of the committee's work," and announced that George M. Johnson, assistant chairman, would be promoted to the deputy chairmanship.

Monsignor Haas stated that he would leave Washington, D. C., within ten days to assume his new duties as Bishop of the Diocese of Grand Rapids, Mich. He was appointed to this post on October 7 by His Holiness Pope Pius XII.

FEPC Head Warns White Transit Employees Against Striking When Negroes are Hired

Washington Tribune
Washington, D. C.

Msgr. Francis J. Haas, chairman of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices,, recently advised the Public Utilities Commission that if present crews of the Capital Transit Co. stop work in opposition to hiring of Negroes as platform men, they will be unable to get certificates to take other work.

Msgr. Haas said he had been so advised recently by the United States Employment Service. His statement was made while reporting that some progress is being made on the transit company situation. He reported the company had indicated its willingness to comply with fair employment practice orders.

The subject came before the PUC at a public hearing on the request of the company for permission to convert 52 2-man streetcars to one-man operation Company officials said the change was needed largely because of their inability to hire enough men or women to meet demands for service. They argued conversion of the cars to one-man operation would free 52 present employes to operate additional vehicles.

Text of Statement

Msgr. Haas made the following statement:

"The jurisdiction of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices extends to all of the employment policies of the Capital Transit Co., which concern discrimination because of race, creed, color or national origin.

"The company is at the present time under a directive order of FEPC to recruit, hire and upgrade all qualified workers according to Executive Order 8802. This directive, which was issued November 28, 1942, specifically requested the company to hire Negroes as platform men. Since June of this year, in conference with FEPC, the company has indicated its willingness to comply with the requirements of Executive Order 9346, which amends Executive Order 8802. Since June, the committee has been in close touch with the company in an attempt to help it comply in a manner most conducive with good public order. Our latest information from the company indicates some progress is being made.

"The committee was advised by USES on October 4, 1943, that there is currently a pool of 328 qualified Negro applicants who are classified as bus drivers or in related classifications such as chauffeur, taxi driver, tractor-truck driver and so forth. The USES also reported at the same time that between May 10 and October 1, 1943, 300 Negro applicants having the basic qualifications for platform men were offered referral to the Capitol Transit Co.

"However, the USES advised further that only eight of this number accepted referral, stating that they believed that until the problem had been settled between the company and the committee that nothing was to be gained by making applications. Of the eight who were referred, one has been rejected and the applications of seven are pending. I might add that I was informed by the USES recently that if any of the present employes of the company were to stop work in opposition to the employment of Negroes, such workers would not be able to get certificates of availability for employment elsewhere.

Cites Results Elsewhere

"I would like to indicate something of the experience of other cities regarding the employment of Negroes as bus and streetcar operators, conductors and motormen.

"Reports received by the committee within the last month from Cleveland, Detroit, New York, Buffalo, Tulsa, Okla., and San Francisco, indicate that there is a total of 2,053 Negroes employed in these capacities."

After Msgr. Haas had finished reading his prepared statement, E. D. Merrill, president of the company, asked him if he knew whether the USES had given any tests to the 328 applicants such as the company gives. Msgr. Haas replied he did not know, that he had no breakdown statement as to the applicants. When Mr. Merrill added that the company gives qualification tests before placing applicants in service, Msgr. Haas said it was to be granted that if the company employed applicants it must submit them to qualification tests.

Haas Urges AFL End Anti-Negro Bans

Daily Worker

BOSTON, Oct. 6.—"Organized labor's duty to itself" makes it imperative that the American Federation of Labor and all discrimination against Negroes, Jews and other minority groups, both in its own ranks and in employment generally, Monsignor Francis J. Haas told the 63rd AFL convention here today.

Speaking as chairman of the Fair Employment Practice Committee, Haas made such a telling plea for the abolition of all color bars and other undemocratic restrictions in unions as moved the delegates to alternate applause and thoughtful attention.

The fight of the minority groups for the right to employment without discrimination and for the right to join unions is akin to the fight of the American workers for "the right of association," Haas declared.

Speaking solemnly and slowly, the FEPC chairman emphasized to the delegates: "Just as once there existed unhealthy company union agreements between anti-labor employers and anti-labor workers also there exists a danger now that some labor organizations and some employers may combine to restrict the rights of minority group members."

LASHES MINORITY BANS

"Put yourself in the place of such a member of a minority group," said Haas, looking at the delegates. "Be he Negro or Mexican, Jew or Creedist, he wants his full status as an American workingman, and if he finds organized management and organized labor leagued against him he will rightfully revolt."

"Would you have it otherwise?" Haas asked, with rising inflection in his voice. "Would you have the spirit which founded the American Federation of Labor stamped out among great masses of your fellow-Americans? Must one-tenth of the people of our country be set aside as a special class, with special loyalties that are not the loyalties of the rest of us?"

"The interests of this nation at war coincide with the desire of the minority group members to be a part of the trade union movement," Haas went on to stress. The strength of our armed forces must still be increased by two million more men, he said, and our munition industries will need two million more workers. "There exists an untapped pool of willing and skilled hands among the minority groups," he declared, scoring those cities which import outside workers.

WANTS LIBERAL LEADERSHIP

General Haskell told his audience he believes in the type of state government that Governors Smith, Roosevelt and Lehman gave the people—a government "embodying liberal and progressive political philosophy with efficient administration."

He said he was a Democrat because he believes "our great social and labor gains have been brought about under Democratic leadership." He listed among these gains unemployment insurance, a liberal social security program, recognition of the rights of the working man, regulation of the public utilities in the public interest.

"The social advances we have made can and must be strengthened and expanded," the General declared.

HITS GOP RECORD

He charged that the record of the Republican Party is one of "reaction and opposition."

"It is now trying to walk in the cloak of liberalism," he said. "I do not believe the people of the state will be fooled."

General Haskell said he believed women should fill more offices of importance in city and state government. They have demonstrated their fitness for high administrative posts, he stated, in the Army, Navy and every branch of the war set-up.

He summarized his program in these words:

"The real question for you on Nov. 2 is: In the ensuing turmoil of war, support of the war effort, care of the returning soldiers, conversion of industry from war to peace, educational benefits to demobilized men, liquidation of surplus war stocks, agriculture's participation in rehabilitation, jobs for our men, care for their families."

The General is scheduled to leave Buffalo tonight for his home in Garrison. He will register to vote there and return to New York where he is scheduled to discuss issues of the elections with newspapermen at his first campaign press conference.

Discrimination

Addressing the American Federation of Labor convention in Boston, Msgr. Francis J. Haas, chairman of the Fair Employment Practices Committee, made a significant point when he urged full union status for workers from minority groups now being discriminated against. He said: "Just as once there existed unhealthy agreements between anti-labor employers and anti-labor workers, so there exists a danger that some labor organizations and some employers may combine to restrict the rights of minority group members. Put yourself in the place of such a member of a minority group. Be he Negro or Mexican, Jew or creedist, he wants his full stature as an American workingman, and if he finds organized management and organized labor leagued against him he will in some form revolt."

It is not clear how any revolt could be of consequence, but there can be no doubt that Father Haas has put his finger on a very pregnant analogy. In the old days, many employers thought they could thwart the organization of their workers by setting up unions of their own. That practice spread to such an extent that Congress legislated against it. Through the national labor relations act, company unions were barred. The logic behind such a ban is plain. There can be no collective bargaining between a management and its own creature. That would amount to the employer bargaining with himself.

Now company unions, representing an effort to prevent independent self-organization, are no longer in the picture. But, as Father Haas points out, keen concern should be felt because of the willingness of some legitimate unions to join with management in the exclusion from employment of workers from minority groups. It is against such tactics that the FEPC is directing its fire. Too clear for dispute is the fact that unions often help employers discriminate in this way. If those who are thus unjustly dealt with were full-fledged members of unions, there would be less likelihood of their being subjected to the edge of prejudice.

The revolt of which Father Haas speaks may very well take the form of legislative action. Congress may be moved to make it an offense to discriminate against minorities. That would amount to crying a plague on both employers and unions who indulge in such an un-American practice. No labor organization should, in any event, take the illiberal line of racialism. If organized labor does not stand for equality and fair play, how can it pretend with a straight face to speak in the name of democratic rights?

Comptroller General Sets Aside President's Discrimination Order

By Gordon H. Cole
PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28.—President Roosevelt's order prohibiting racial discrimination in war plants has been nullified by a decision of Comptroller General Lindsay Warren.

Warren, former Congressman from North Carolina, has ruled flatly that FDR did not mean what he said when he issued Executive Order No. 9346, the legal basis for all action by the Fair Employment Practice Committee.

The President's order directs all Government purchasing agents to require guarantees against racial discrimination from all firms doing business with the Government, and their sub-contractors.

Not an Order

When one corporation, the Southwestern Bell Telephone Co., refused to give such a guarantee, Warren ruled that the executive order was not an order and that the word "shall" did not mean "must" whenever a contractor threatened to refuse to accept war contracts if the guarantee against discrimination was insisted on.

Warren then placed compliance with the no-discrimination policy of the President on a wholly voluntary basis. He held:

"It seems that the most that can be accomplished by Government contracting agencies in carrying out the National policy of non-discrimination in the employment of workers as declared by the President is to secure the assent of contractors to such provisions wherever and whenever possible."

Issued Oct. 7

The order was issued Oct. 7, the same day that Bishop Francis J. Haas announced his resignation as FEPC chairman to become Bishop of Grand Rapids, Mich.

FEPC officials would make no comment on the order today except to say that they had not been informed of Warren's action until two days ago. There was no doubt from their attitude, however, that they regarded the ruling as an almost fatal setback in the present battle against racial discrimination. A direct appeal from all Negro organizations to FDR is expected.

The executive order which Warren overruled is one of the simplest ever to come out of the White House. Here is what the President wrote:

"It is hereby ordered, as follows:

"All contracting agencies of the Government of the United States shall include in all contracts hereafter negotiated or renegotiated by them a provision obligating the contractor not to discriminate against any employe or applicant for employment because of Race, Creed, Color or National origin, and requiring him to include a similar provision in all subcontracts."

FEPC Plans Fight On Warren Ruling

Daily Worker
New York. N. Y.

(Daily Worker Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 28.—The Fair Employment Practices Committee, weakened by the serious blow struck against it by the Comptroller General's ruling that guarantees against racial discrimination in government contracts are not mandatory, has no intention of giving up the fight.

FEPC officials today were not hanging out the black crepe and proclaiming that all was lost. Instead they were busy studying methods of combatting Comptroller General Lindsay Warren's reactionary interpretation and planning counteraction.

While not minimizing the destructiveness of the ruling which completely takes the teeth out of the President's executive order No. 9346 barring racial discrimination by government contractors and undermines FEPC's legal status, officials pointed out that the committee can still hold hearings and bring charges against companies on complaints of racial discrimination.

It was the refusal of the Southwestern Bell Telephone Company to sign an agreement providing telephone service for the local branch of the Office of Emergency Management in Kansas City, Missouri, which was the occasion for Warren's ruling.

The President's executive order states that all government contracts must contain a provision "obligating the contractor not to discriminate against any employee or applicant for employment because of race, creed, color or national origin."

The OEM complained to Warren that the refusal of Southwestern Bell and many other companies to abide by this provision has "caused considerable administrative difficulties."

Warren, who was formerly a Congressman from North Carolina, obligingly ruled that government contracting officers do not have to insist on a guarantee of no racial discrimination if the company refused to sign a contract containing this clause.

The President's executive order is merely a "directive" rather than an order and is not mandatory, Warren ruled. Actually the executive order states flatly: "It is hereby ordered as follows" and then goes into the discrimination ban.

Warren left the whole question of racial discrimination up to the companies on a purely voluntary basis and declared "no useful purpose could possibly be served" in insisting on the ban.

Disputes between two government agencies, like FEPC and the Comptroller General's office, usually go to South Carolina-born James Byrnes, head of the Office of War Mobilization, who is reported to be not too friendly to FEPC.

The effect of Warren's ruling, FEPC officials pointed out, will be to stop government purchasing agents from taking a strong stand and at the same time encourage small and large manufacturers to violate the order.

Brief Against Phone Unit Bias Filed With F.E.P.C.

COLUMBUS—(A N P)—Charging the refusal of the Ohio Bell Telephone company to consider the application of a serviceman's wife for employment because of her race was a direct violation of the President's Executive Order 8802, the Vanguard league last week filed an affidavit with the FEPC against the public utility.

The telephone company constantly advertises for help, said a league spokesman, yet refused to even accept an application from Mrs. Rebecca White when she applied for a job. Mrs. White's husband was inducted into the army a few days before the incident.

E. L. Keenan, director of the Ohio state war manpower commission, has been urged to appoint a Negro to the agency and has promised to do so, it was reported. The duties of the appointee would be to investigate complaints of discrimination in war plants and file affidavits with the FEPC when warranted. Such an appointment, stated a league official, would greatly stem the rising tide of employment prejudice in Ohio war plants.

Now One Out Of 14 War Workers

Daily World
Atlanta, Georgia

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (SNS) — Negroes have scored a real gain in war employment since the beginning of the war emergency, Monsignor Francis J. Haas, retiring Chairman of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, told newspapermen at his final press conference at the Committee's head quarters here.

"At present", Monsignor Haas declared, "Negroes constitute one out of every 14 war workers, and one out of every 11 government wolkers."

"Improvement in Negro employment in war industries has been substantial in the last year," the Chairman stated.

"In July, 1942," he pointed out, 'Negro workers constituted only 5.8 percent of total war production employes. By July, 1943, this percentage, had risen to 7:3 per cent. Since Negoes constitute roughly 10 per cent of our population you can see that we still have a big job ahead. Negro employment is still limited to too few establishments, and there is still much under-utilization of the skills of Negro workers."

Monsignor Haas revealed that Malcolm Ross, his successor was sworn into office Tuesday, October 19. Mr. Ross, former Deputy Chairman of the Committee, stated briefly that there would be "complete continuity of the Committee's work," and announced that George M. Johnson, Assistant Chairman, would be promoted to the Deputy Chairmanship.

Monsignor Haas stated that he would leave Washington, D. C., within ten days to assume his new duties as Bishop of the Deocese of Grand Rapids, Mich. He was appointed to this post on October 7 by His Holiness Pope Pius XII.

FEPC Resignations???

APR 24 1943

ONE OF the four remaining 'active' (?) members of the Fair Employment Practice Committee is reported to be advocating the mass resignation of the committee. Fortunately, the other three members do not share the opinion that resignation is the proper move at this time.

Nothing would be more welcome to the reactionary forces interested in scuttling the FEPC than the outward display of defeatism which resignation of the committee would show. It would be playing right into the hands of the Southern bloc and the administration appeasers.

On the contrary, the committee should be "swinging from the floor" on every problem of discrimination because of race, creed, color or national origin that it could entice into the ring with it. Needless to say, there would be no dirth of adversaries.

The committee is in a position similar to that of Joe Louis after the first Schmeling fight. He would never have become champion had he "given up" after being knocked out. Instead, he took on the best the ring had to offer, and eventually took on Schmeling again. What happened is history.

Well, the committee has been "knocked out," too. It has suffered even a few blows below the belt. But it hasn't been disqualified!

There have been no "cease and desist" orders given it, except in the case of the railroad hearings. The commission (War Manpower in this case, instead of boxing) has not said it cannot fight. So why turn in the gloves?

The best thing that could happen — and a smart move on the committee's part — would be to act just as if nothing had happened.

Needed: Some Action

IT SHOULD immediately schedule a date for holding the Detroit hearings on discrimination in war industries. And it should go right ahead and hold those hearings — unless McNutt of his own volition or on orders from higher up, should cancel them. But how else will the public know for sure whether there is an intention to observe in good faith the spirit and letter of Executive Order 8802 unless the challenge is flung.

APR 24 1943

The committee, which has shared the public's support as no other agency, can do no less than this if it desires to maintain that bulwark of strength behind it.

More, it should proceed to appoint field personnel and put them out investigating discriminations and non-compliance with the executive order. Right NOW, it should bring the full weight of its inadequate power to bear on the pressing problems of full utilization of the country's manpower in both government and industry.

What great military strategist said "A good offense is the best defense"? His words need not be restricted to the battlefield.

But, as long as the committee dilly-dallies, calls off scheduled meetings in a "hands-up" attitude that there is nothing to do, talks or even thinks of resigning—then just so long will it be subjected to the "kill yourself" tactics to which it is now being subjected.

Witness the developments of the last few weeks. Two chairmen have been "selected" and both have turned down the "invitation." On the surface, this looks as if the blame for inactivity is not on those charged with the problem. But I have learned from a very reliable source that Frank Graham, president of the University of North Carolina and a member of the National War Labor Board, has said he would take the chairmanship if he were drafted for it by the President, even though he prefers to stay with the WLB.

Really how serious is this effort to find a chairman. Last week, it is reported, Fowler Harper, deputy chairman of the War Manpower Commission, was "out in the sticks" trying to recruit a chairman — a white chairman. This gave rise to a tragic-humorous remark by one observer that "the WAACs, WAVEs, SPARs and FEPC are all recruiting, but only the WAACs are looking in the direction of Negroes.

For Whites Only?

OUT OF ALL the various possibilities considered for chairman of the FEPC, none has been a Negro. Are we to presume there is no Negro qualified for the job, or is the job labelled "white only?" If FEPC is to fight the "white only" complex in war industry and government hiring, should not it be free of any taint from such a practice in its own organization.

APR 24 1943

This isn't a plea for a Negro as chairman — but it is a protest against the exclusion of Negroes from consideration for chairman. Since so many possibilities have been considered and approached, it just doesn't seem natural that some Negro would not have been reached in the elimination process — unless there is a deliberate labelling of the job as "white only." Maybe he too would turn it down, but he should be given the opportunity to do it.

Something's screwy somewhere. And the answer is not in the resignation of the committee.

Practical Suggestion

THE OTHER DAY I was discussing the idea of a Peoples Political Movement with some friends whose ideas I respect highly. Out of that discussion came a very practical suggestion of a method for putting into effect this idea for bringing the full weight of the Negro's political potentialities to bear for the betterment of his welfare and hence the quicker winning of the war and the establishment and maintenance of a just and durable peace.

The idea is this: to set up this Peoples Political Movement on a state organization basis. Each city and county would elect a state councilman. The state council would select from among its members a chairman who would be the spokesman. The state spokesmen would select a national chairman.

Voting for city and county councilmen would be conducted in the same manner as the American political system operates — minus machine politics and major part affiliation. Eligibility for voting would be limited to Negroes 18 years old and over — with no poll tax required for exercise of the privilege. A registration of voters would be necessary.

APR 24 1943

It would be a Herculean task. But nothing that would do America and the Negro so much good could possibly be accomplished with any minutia of effort.

FEPC Reopens Capital Transit Job Bias Case

The Capital Transit Company case, which involves alleged discrimination against the employment of Negroes on street cars and buses in the District of Columbia is now in the mill again as a result of having been reopened by the new Fair Employment Practice Committee headed by Msgr. In answer to questions fired at him in a recent press conference Father Haas stated, "We may be able to settle it" and "Maybe not." "We are always hopeful," he said when questioned as to whether the case could possibly be settled by negotiating rather than bringing it up for a hearing.

JUL 10 1943

"The new committee has accepted the responsibility placed [illegible] it to promote the fullest utilization of all available manpower regardless of race, creed, color or national origin," the father futher made it clear to the press conference attendants.

An announcement was made during the conference to the effect that hearings will be held September 15-17 on charges that some 26 railroads and six unions discriminate against colored workers in employment practices.

Attorney George M. Johnson, former assistant to the former executive seccretary of the committee, Lawrence W. Cramer, who has gone into the army, and Malcolm Ross, writer, publicist, fromer employee of the OWI and the National Labor Relations Board, have been appointed in the headquarters of the committee it was further announced.

The FEPC approved with qualifications, Wednesday, settlement of a case involving alleged discrimination by the Alabama Dry Dock Co., at Mobile, where it was agreed colored persons work on four ways out of 12.

FEPC Fate Now Up To Public Pressure

Chicago Defender
Chicago, Illinois

By HARRY McALPIN

(Chief, Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON—The calm before the storm has settled over the Fair Employment Practices committees situation.

47d

This week has been one of inacivity, except for the bustling of the committee's paid staff working on a budget they may not get.

During this calm, I talked with a man who knows his FEPC. He had this to say:

Negroes need to step up their activity and pressure on behalf of FEPC now rather than let it subside.

Government authorities are still intent on setting up FEPC as a review body with no investigative functions.

Regional Setup

MAR 13 1943

The trend now is in that direction by having the regional offices handle problems of discrimination. In this way, they hope fewer and fewer complaints will seep through to the national committee.

The regional offices are sending in their plans for handling these problems of discrimination, with no reference to the participation of FEPC. They are completely ignoring the committee.

The plan is to delay the budget and an adequate staff for the FEPC so the regions can become entrenched in this procedure. This it is hoped, will give a strong argument for not using FEPC as an investigative agency. It will then be curtailed to a review body. Manpower Commissioner Paul McNutt wants this.

If this is not so, then why doesn't he give FEPC an adequate budget as promised—a field staff as agreed? Why is not FEPC's operations bulletin No. 1 released?

FEPC Stymied

Even if a paid committee is adopted, it would need a staff to carry out the mandate and spirit of Executive Order 8802. Why not put the implements for doing a job in the hands of the present committee while reorganization is pending?

MAR 13 1943

When the reorganization of OPM was pending the establishment of the War Production Board, there was no stoppage of work and function of OPM. Nor was there a stoppage when OFF was being reorganized into the Office of War Information; nor when the War Manpower Commission was being carved out of Labor, Federal Security and the WPB.

Why set a precedent of stagnation and inactivity on so important a question involving not only full utilization of our labor resources, but the morale of millions of people as well?

All Men Wearing United States Uniform Are Entitled To Respect Uniform Deserves

NEGRO SOLDIERS

Pittsburgh, Pa.

(Reprinted from Washington Post, Tuesday, July 20)

Courier

It is axiomatic that all men who wear the uniform of the United States are entitled equally to the respect which that uniform deserves. Yet there are accumulating signs that the Army has allowed its Negro troops to be treated as though they were soldiers of inferior status. Too often they have been subjected to humiliation, and even violence, at the hands not only of civilians but also of their fellow soldiers. The recent tragic riot in which one Negro was killed and six wounded at the Shenango, Pa., replacement depot is a shocking case in point.

1943

47d

The Army has promised to investigate this incident. If it confines itself to the Shenango depot, it will uncover only proximate and superficial causes. And it will effect no cure merely by disciplining those immediately responsible. For this riot was one more manifestation of a dangerous disregard for democratic values which has been carried over from civilian life into the armed services. It is recognized, of course, that the Army is primarily an instrument of warfare, not an agent of social reform. But there is much that the Army can, and should, do to promote among its enlisted personnel a decent regard for the rights and feelings of those Negroes whom it has brought into its service.

1943

It must start with an educational program directed at white soldiers. This is a task for the Army's Special Service Division, which has done well enough in providing amusement and escapist entertainment, but has done little to teach the men in service anything about the more basic meanings of the war in which they are engaged. The means of doing this are not at discussion groups, pamphlets, all abstruse. Films, lectures, must all be employed. White soldiers must be afforded greater knowledge of the Negro's contribution to the war effort, of his legitimate aspirations. They simply cannot effectively wage a United Nations war with color prejudices in their minds.

47d

Efforts must be made at the same time to make Negroes feel that their contribution is appreciated. They have shared in some of the toughest fighting of this war. They are entitled to hope that this world struggle for human liberation will open up to them richer opportunities for advancement and education than they have hitherto enjoyed. They can scarcely be expected to give full devotion to the democratic cause unless it affords some recognition to their legitimate aspirations.

Any such program of education obviously must be accompanied by a firm insistence on the part of the Army that Negro rights be respected by men in uniform and civilians alike. There are many ways in which any intelligent camp commander can act to erase the causes of friction between white and colored troops. He can see to it, if Negroes are segregated, that adequate recreational facilities are available to them, not only inside the camp but also in the community near which the camp is located. He can act to secure reasonable transportation service for his colored soldiers in places where Jim Crow traditions prevail. And, above all, he can insist that civilians show respect to the uniform his men wear, whatever the color of their skins. Officers should not be placed in command of Negro troops unless they have a sympathy for them and a willingness to safeguard their rights.

It is no part of the Army's business, to be sure, to remedy all the defects of American life. But it is a part of the Army's business to set an example of devotion to democratic principles. And it is high time now for the Army to do this in regard to its Negro soldiers.—"Editorial."

FEPC Schedules Kaiser Hearings

Special Correspondence

PORTLAND, Ore., Oct. 11.—The FEPC (Fair Employment Practices Committee) will open hearings in Portland Nov. 15 on complaints that the Kaiser shipyards and the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, AFL, have discriminated against Negro war workers.

Several weeks ago, following a preliminary hearing, the FEPC ordered the Kaiser yards and the union to reinstate all the Negroes discharged because of their alleged "Jim Crow" policies. This order has been ignored, according to the Rev. J. James Clow, president of the Portland chapter of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

Fr. Haas Urges AFL To End Color Bars

Chicago Defender
Chicago, Illinois

AUG 7 1943

(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON, D.C.—An urgent appeal to AFL unions to end racial discrimination in their locals will be made by Msgr. Francis J. Haas, chairman of the Fair Employment Practices Committee, in next month's issue of the "American Federationist." it was learned here this week.

An article by the FEPC chairman in the official AFL organ urges the union leaders to halt "endless explanations, excuses and justification" for color bars and tells them to act to break down racial barriers.

Haas' article follows action by the FEPC to reinstate 300 Negro shipyard workers fired by four West Coast yards for non-payment of dues under a closed shop contract with the AFL boilermakers union.

His article in the "Federationist" says:

"For the most part," the FEPC chairman reports, "union leaders have said 'they won't stand for it,' meaning that their white members are opposed to a non-discriminatory membership policy."

"In too many cases, 'they' is just symbolic of buck-passing," he adds. "However this may be, the clear duty of leaders is to lead, and in the present case the duty is crystal clear."

Despite the critical tone of his article, Father Haas cites considerable progress—of which the AFL's publication of this frank piece of self-criticism can be taken as an indication. He points out:

"It should not be passed over that, during all the rioting in Detroit, black and white workers continued working in most of the plants without friction; in several instances white workers escorted Negro workers home and protected them from the mob."

Other Unions Guilty

Father Haas also made it clear that "not all unions which bar Negroes or other minority group workers are in the AFL by any means, and neither do all locals follow whatever may be the policies of their international bodies."

Nonetheless, the FEPC chairman makes the statement of fact:

"Although elemental self-interest points but in one direction, there are still several major international labor unions which close their doors to Negroes as members by constitution, ritual or tradition and there are hundreds of locals which follow suit."

Father Haas praised both the AFL and CIO for establishing interracial action committees to develop goodwill.

In the West Coast action Negro workers refused to pay dues to Jim Crow auxiliary locals and were fired as a result. The FEPC estimated that some 3.000 workers are involved in the dispute.

Test Case

FEPC must determine whether or not membership in an auxiliary union constitutes discrimination. It will represent the first test ever made on the issue.

"We have no jurisdiction unless we can establish that this type of membership is a reduced membership," Fr. Francis J. Haas. chairman, declared. "We do not know that it is."

Judge James H. Wolfe, chief justice of the Utah Supreme court, and Daniel Donovan, FEPC field examiner, are in Los Angeles ascertaining the facts.

The committee considered the status of the Capital Transit company case and agreed that if steps to be taken by the company case "are not adequate in the judgment of the committee" toward hiring Negroes, the committee will "proceed" at its next meeting on August 9. The company has offered three reasons for failing thus far to use Negroes according to Fr. Haas: public resistance, employe resistance, and lack of training.

It is understood that although the contents of the draft agreement between FEPC and War Manpower commission were acceptable all around, WMC took exception to the manner in which the document was written. The change in language is now being finally effected.

May Go to Congress

Fr. Haas indicated that the committee may yet have to face congress for funds when he said that "for the time being, we are being financed out of the President's fund."

Complaints involving alleged discrimination in "a large war plant" in Detroit have been examined, and are being readied for presentation to the company for adjustment, the committee announced. In addition, it was said that four out of seven employes have squared themselves on the discrimination question there.

The FEPC now has in its files approximately 300 reports from offices of the United States Employment service located all over the country, describing placement orders submitted by employers which contain discriminatory specifications. These cases are in various stages of handling. About 250 such cases have been terminated by satisfactory adjustment since October 1, 1942, the committee said.

Ask FEP To Probe City Transit Lines Job Ban

Chicago Defender
Chicago, Illinois

FEB 6 1943

Threatened with a Federal probe into what colored citizens cite as rank injustices of their employment program, officials of the city's traction lines—the "L," street car and bus companies—sent representatives to answer these charges before the City Council's local transportation committee at a public hearing in the Council Chambers Tuesday afternoon.

In addition to being quizzed on their discriminatory methods, Ald. Earl B. Dickerson (2nd) called the surface lines' attorney's attention to the fact that the traction lines were violating war codes by drawing the color line against Negro employees. He said such conduct brought them within the scope of investigation by the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee.

Ald. Benjamin A. Grant (3rd) father of the idea that set the traction probe into action, submitted the motion to the transportation committee to invite the FEPC here for that purpose and it will be considered at a committee meeting Friday, according to Ald. James R. Quinn, (50th) chairman of the committee, who added that it will probably be passed and recommended to the council.

Thomas C. Strachon, attorney for the street car company, and Harry Roberts, assistant to the general manager of the elevated lines, appeared, but under questioning by Aldermen Grant and Dickerson, discovered they were not qualified to give definite information on the hiring policies of their respective companies.

Jess Krueger, public relations adviser to the Chicago Motor Coach company, stated that his concern hired in all 79 colored persons—8 per cent of the company's personnel—in job classifications as mechanics painters, firemen, watchmen and cleaners, except bus drivers, at salaries up to $49 a week. Eight are women, he said, drawing salaries up to $29 a week. He declared, under questioning, that no colored person had ever filed an application seeking the position as bus driver.

Strachon and Roberts stated they were the "wrong men" to question on the point of their company's policy on hiring colored people as conductors, motormen, ticket-sellers and the like, but gave the committee the names of the men who control such policies. Chairman Quinn stated that they would be notified by letter to appear at the next public hearing. Ald. Grant added that representatives from the labor union, hired by the traction lines would also be summoned to the hearing.

Own Companies Unfair

TWO FEPC MEMBERS FACE BIAS CHARGES

Pittsburgh, Pa. Courier

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 5—This week the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice is faced with the necessity of acting upon charges of discrimination against Negro workers on the part of two companies, whose major officials are themselves industry members of the new seven-man FEPC.

Samuel Zemurray, president of the United Fruit company, will have to answer charges of refusal to employ Negro sailors on his United Fruit company vessels, engaged in war industry. Samuel Zemurray, member of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, will have to hear charges against the United Fruit company and decide their truth and the action to be taken if they are true. Both Zemurrays are the same man.

COMPLAINTS ARE GUARDED SECRETS

Sara Southall, key personnel official of the International Harvester company, will have to answer charges of the issuance of anti-Negro hiring orders by the International Motor Trucks division of her company in Philadelphia. And the same Miss Southall will sit in judgment on these charges as a member of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice.

The carefully guarded secret of the existence of these complaints against companies whose officials occupy strategic positions on the FEPC came to light this week. None of the lesser officials of FEPC would even admit the existence of such complaints. They declared that it was not committee policy to name cases still in process of negotiation.

MAY DISQUALIFY TWO MEMBERS

Questioned about the two cases by The Pittsburgh Courier, Monsignor Francis J. Haas, chairman of the FEPC, stated: "The two cases are here and will be looked into. If they cannot be negotiated they will be presented to the committee."

Asked whether in the event the cases were presented to the committee, Mr. Zemurray or Miss Southall would be disqualified from sitting in cases involving their companies, Father Haas stated that such a question has not arisen and that no regulation existed on the matter, but that it would be his judgment that they would be disqualified from passing on the case.

HAAS COMPROMISE BITTERLY SCORED

Opponents See Government Approval Of Segregation — Dr. Graham Issues WLB Ruling Outlawing Race Classifications

By JOHN P. DAVIS
(Staff Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, June 10—A sharp struggle over the future of FEPC, which involves the question of the whole future status of Negro workers in industry, is developin at rapid pace this week. Before many weeks have passe it is likely that this battle will loom as one of the most bitter and significant actions on the home front.

Here in brief is the FEPC news this week: Monsignor Francis Joseph Haas, newly selected chairman of the FEPC, sworn in at the White House on May [illegible], last week, postponed again—this time indefinitely—the FEPC hearings on discrimination against Negro workers by the Capitol Transit company, which had already once before been postponed.

APPROVES MOBILE SOLUTION

Reasons given for this action were that the full six-man committee, created under the new executive order (Executive Order 9346 replacing Executive Order 8802) of President Roosevelt, had not been named and that hearings would not be held until the committee had been re-organized.

Next Monsignor Haas announced that a solution of the difficulties at the shipyard of the Alabama Drydock and Shipbuilding company had been approved by him, by the War Manpower Commission Chairman, Paul V. McNutt, by the Assistant Secretary of the Navy (Ralph Bard), by the chairman of the U.S. Maritime Commission (Rear Admiral Emory S. Land).

The announcement stated: "Under the arrangement confirmed by the heads of the interested agencies, Negroes will be upgraded in all skills necessary for bare hull construction on ways one through four of the Alabama Drydock and Shipbuilding company, and these ways will be set aside for bare hull construction by Negro workers."

PLACES OKAY ON SEGREGATION

Back of these actions lies a hidden meaning that is of utmost importance to all Negro America. The decision in the Alabama case simply means that the federal government—acting through the War Manpower Commission, the Maritime Commission, the Navy and the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, itself, has agreed to segregate Negro workers to one section of the shipyard and has approved their exclusion from all other sections of the shipyard.

The arguments of those who support the solution in the Alabama case are important to examine. Here is a summary of their point of view from an important actor in the whole developing drama:

"The attempt to upgrade Negro workers in the Mobile shipyards led to racial violence with several Negro workers severely beaten and mobbed. The white Southern anti-Roosevelt leaders, who bitterly attacked the Birmingham hearings of the FEPC, will make political capital out of the upgrading of Negro workers if these workers have to work [illegible] by [illegible] with whites in superior positions. If there is any attempt to insist on upgrading without segregation then there will be nothing but violence, a halt to vital war productiton and no real benefit to Negro workers. On the other hand, the real meaning of the solution in the Mobile case is that 5,000 Negro workers will be employed in addition to 7,000 now working there; that Negro workers will be rapidly trained and employed at practically all skills on the four segregated all Negro shipways."

ESTABLISHES JIM CROW JOB PATTERN

As Lawrence Cramer, executive secretary of FEPC, stated it to The Courier "The FEPC has in the past refused to decide hypothetically that segregation of Negro from white workers was discrimination referred to in the President's Executive Order. We always take the position that if in a segregated situation any individual can show that by being segregated he is discriminated against, we will take action."

Now that is one side. Here is the other. Opponents of the recent FEPC decision point out that if Negroes are segregated from whites on the job, it will be impossible to prevent [illegible]imination against them; that in [illegible] segregation is di[illegible]crimination. They point out that the Alabama decision threatens to establish a jim-crow job pattern throughout the country of frightening proportions, that every industry all over the country will seize on the formula of a segregated section or plant for Negro workers, and that after the war the Negro will be driven out of industry completely. They claim that the action of Chairman Haas, acting alone and not even waiting for the selection of the other members of the committee, has destroyed his usefulness to the FEPC. This side declares that it is precisely because there must be all-out war production that the "Haas Compromise"—like the "Missouri Compromise" will settle nothing.

GRAHAM RAPS CLASSIFICATION

If the side opposed to the new FEPC chairman had purposely sought a champion for its cause, it could have done no better than it did last week when quite by accident a spokesman for its side fell into its lap. That spokesman was Dr. Frank P. Graham, white Southerner, president of the University of North Carolina, member of the War Labor Board, and the first man sought by President Roosevelt to head the FEPC. In a decision by the National War Labor Board written by him and adopted unanimously, Dr. Graham lashed out bitterly against the classification "colored laborer." The case which arose in Texas concerned the practice of an oil company in paying Negro workers a lower wage than white workers for the same work.

Said Dr. Graham: "In this small but significant case the National War Labor Board abolishes the classifications "colored labor" and white labor" and reclassifies both simply as "laborers' with the same rates of pay for all in that classification without discrimination on account of color.

Dr. Graham pointed out that this decision was in line with the President's Executive Order 8802, "with prophetic Americanism; and with the cause of the United Nations."

Said Dr. Graham:

PRAISES LOYALTY OF NEGROES

"Economic and political discrimination on account of race or creed is in line with the Nazi program. America, in the days of its infant weakness the haven of heretics and the oppressed of all races, must not in the days of its powe become the stronghold of bigot The world has given America th vigor and variety of its difference America should protect and enric its differences for the sake c America and the world. Unde standing religious and racial diffe ences make for a better unde standing of other differences an for an appreciation of the sacre ness of human personality, as basic to human freedom. Th American answer to differences i color and creed is not a concentration camp but co-operation. Th answer to human error is not terror but light and liberty under the moral law. By this light and liberty, the Negro has [illegible] a contribution in work and [illegible], song and story, laughter and struggle which are an enduring part of the spiritual heritage of America.

"There is no more loyal group of our fellow-citizens than the American Negroes, north and south. In defense of America from attack from without, they spring to arms in the spirit of Dorie Miller of Texas, the Negro mess boy, who, when the machine gunner on the Arizona was killed, jumped to his unappointed place and fired the last rounds as the ship was sinking in Pearl Harbor.

"It is the acknowledged fact that in spite of all the handicaps of slavery and discrimination, the Negro in America has compressed more progress in the shortest time than any race in human history. Slavery gave the Negro his Christianity. Christianity gave the Negro his freedom. This freedom must give the Negro equal rights to home and health, educatiton and citizenship, and an equal opportunity to work and fight for our common country.

DEAN MORSE NOTES AGREEMENT

"Whether as vigorous fighting men or for producttion of food and munitions, America needs the Negro; the Negro needs the equal opportunity to work and fight. The Negro is necessary for winning the war, and, at the same time, is a test of our sincerity in the cause for which we are fighting. More hundreds of millions of colored people are involved in the outcome of this war than the combined populations of the Axis Powers. Under Hitler and his Master Race, their movement is backward to slavery and despair. In America, the colored people have the freedom to struggle for freedom. With the victory of the democracies, the human destiny is toward freedom, hope, equality of opportunity and the gradual fulfillment for all peoples of the noblest aspirations of the brothers of men and the sons of God, without regard to color or creed, region or race, in the world neighborhood of human brotherhood."

The opinion of Dr. Graham so strongly represented the opinion of the War Labor Board that Dean Wayne L. Morse, although he had not taken part in the decision, asked consent to have the record show that he agreed completely with the opinion of Dr. Graham.

Thus the battle between these two opposing points of view is clearly developing and on its outcome will depend the whole future of FEPC.

Hats Off!

Malcolm Ross

PM takes its hat off to Malcolm Ross, new Chairman of the President's FEPC (Fair Employment Practice Committee), for the job he already has done in the cause of decency and fair play and for the promise he holds in his new spot. Ross is not yet a great name, nor does he come to FEPC with the backing of his distinguished predecessor, Bishop Francis J. Haas. One-time reporter for the World, Ross is a democrat—small d. He enjoys fighting for equality of opportunity. He even wrote a good book about it: Death of a Yale Man. When the big issue was discrimination on the job against men who belonged to labor unions, Ross was sweating away at the unhappy task of trying to get newspapers to print the story of the NLRB (National Labor Relations Board). Now that the big issue is discrimination on the job because of race, creed or color, Ross is out at 10th and U Sts.—heart of Washington's Harlem. As assistant to the Chairman, he helped Haas put together an organization ready to enforce the President's order against discrimination. He taught it the techniqu worked out so effectively by th NLRB. Now, he's the general i this fight and holds the No. 1 pc litical hot seat in the Capita More power to him.

Malcolm Ross New Chairman Of FEPC

Washington, D. C.

The President last week announced the appointment of Malcolm Ross, who has been serving as deputy chairman of the Fair Employment Practices Committee, to succeed Bishop Francis J. Haas as FEPC chairman.

The appointment of Mr. Ross, former head of the press section of the National Labor Relations Board, was well received n labor and minority group circles, and his appointment had been endorsed by those groups as well as the former chairman who resigned after appointment s Bishop of the Diocese of Grand apids, by His Holiness, Pope ius XII.

In accepting the resignation of ishop Haas, the President said hat there had been increasing sefulness of the FEPC under he Bishop, and expressed the ope that the committee would nove forward, uninterrupted, in its program. He commended Bishop Haas for "helping to remove the barriers which hold back not only people as individuals but our full power as a people."

The biggest issue still pending before the FEPC is the hearings which were held on the various railroads and railroad unions. The prompt appointment of Mr. Ross, who participated in the hearings, will prevent any undue delay which would have resulted had the President taken his time about appointing a successor.

Under Bishop Haas, the FEPC went through a reorganization. The personnel of the committee was changed, as was the organization itself.

On the New FEPC

Amsterdam News
New York, N. Y

The new Fair Employment Practice Committee set up by President Roosevelt on May 28, is, we hope, an indication of an honest effort by the Federal Government to make the committee really fair and effective. The fact that the President saw fit to issue another executive order to establish a second Fair Employment Practice Committee in less than two years proves two things:

(1) Job discrimination against American citizens because of race, religion and national origin is still so serious that it is impeding the nation's war effort.

(2) The scrapped FEPC failed miserably to cope successfully with the problem of job discrimination in the Federal Gov't. and in private industry.

Meantime, if the new FEPC is not to be a flop also, and do nothing to increase the effective use of critically needed man and woman power it must crack down impartially on any private business or Federal agency that violates the President's new executive order. For total war requires total use of total manpower to the best of its ability.

The new FEPC must also recognize that it is the responsibility of the Federal Gov't. to see that all citizens, regardless of race, religion or national origin, are afforded equal opportunities for employment in private industry, now supported practically entirely by the people, and, of course, in the Gov't.

JUN 12 1943

Ever since the War of the Rebellion the Federal Gov't. has generally failed to protect the economic or any other kind of rights of many American citizens, especially Negroes. Now with the nation's back literally to the wall and democracy still little more than a mere dream at home and abroad, it is mandatory that our Gov't. itself prove to its own citizens and to hundreds of millions of people in other lands that it actually means to do its level best to establish freedom from want and fear, and freedom of religion and the press for all of the people. If this is not done it is doubtful if we and our allies can win the war or the peace.

But the war can be won and a real peace preserved if the so-called democracies begin now to establish true economic, civic and political democracy in their own lands. FEPC 2 will be, we hope, an honest and determined attempt by the U. S. Government to set up equal employment opportunities for all Americans. At least it is a step in the right direction.

JUN 1943

But the record of FEPC1 and the do-nothing policy of the Government for 68 years or more in this regard are, unfortunately, too vivid at this time to cause us to be optimistic about WEPC 2. We do, however, wish it Godspeed, but with our fingers crossed tightly.

The Reawakening of the FEPC

The announcement of the Rt. Rev. Msgr. Francis J. Haas, chairman of the new Committee on Fair Employment Practices, that it will soon become active again in dealing with discrimination against workers in war industries because of color or creed, is the best news we have heard in a long time.

JUL 17 1943

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.

According to Monsignor Haas, the committee has decided to establish 12 regional offices, to proceed with cases involving three war contractors—the Capital Transit company of Washington, D.C., a group of railroads, and the railroad unions, mostly in the South.

The railroad cases, it is said, are set down for hearings on September 15, 16 and 17.

At the same time, Monsignor Haas also announced the appointment of George M. Johnson, a colored man, as his assistant.

This sounds like business, and we hope it means business.

The fact that the new FEPC will have $500,000 to spend yearly and about 100 employees also indicates that it is ready to come to grips with the national scandal of discrimination against Negroes in war industries.

We do not believe $500,000 is a large enough sum to adequately deal with this nation-wide program, but we are willing to wait and see what the committee can do.

We appreciate the difficult problem with which the FEPC has to deal—especially in the South—and for this reason we are disposed to be charitable.

It is simply not possible to solve all of the industrial problems arising out of American color prejudice, segregation and discrimination in a short time, but colored people will expect the FEPC to attack the problem in a forthright manner and not be swerved by the clamor of Ku Klux employers, labor officials and politicians.

JUL 1943

We would like to see this committee be one Government agency that we could depend upon to carry out the letter and the spirit of the President's Executive order.

No matter what the FEPC may say, its acceptance of segregation of workers on "racial" lines at the Mobile shipyard DOES set a precedent which will be cited again and again by other employers.

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.

We do not hesitate to assert that the Federal Government agencies must bear a considerable share of the blame for increasing racial tension in this country by the ten-year policy of vacillation, hedging, about-facing and dodging on the question of a fair deal for Negro workers, from the days of the NRA to the present.

JUL 1943

There might conceivably have been some excuse occasionally before the war when the Government's powers were considerably limited, but there is no excuse today, and we hope the new FEPC will boldly come to grips with a problem which will certainly prolong the war unless it is solved.

FEPC Gets Busy

Pittsburgh, Pa. Courier

Recent activity on the part of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice indicates that this important group intends to get seriously to work to end discrimination against Negro workers in war industries.

Last week it asked that 300 Negro workers in West Coast shipyards be reinstated pending an adjustment of complaints that they had been discriminated against by the AFL Boilermakers' union for refusal to pay dues to a jim-crow union and discharged under a closed-shop agreement.

The FEPC also voted to inform the Capital Transit company of Washington, D.C., to begin hiring Negroes or have the whole question aired in a public hearing.

AUG 1943

The committee has also been active in the Detroit area where four of seven cases before it appear to have been adjusted through willingness of employers to comply with the President's order.

This is heartening news, and we hope there will be better news in the near future.

Colored people do not expect miracles from the FEPC, knowing how little real power it has; but they do expect it to do its job in a forthright and courageous manner, and not run to cover whenever opposition envelops.

The new committee got off to a bad start with its Mobile compromise with jim crowism.

We hope there will be no more of that.

Named Bishop

Statement of Chairman Francis Haas:

Birmingham, Ala.

"To asume my duties as Bishop of Grand Rapids it wil be necessary that I resign as Chairman of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice. In the degree that I know the importance of the work of that Committee to the war effort and to our democracy, I leave it with profound regret.

"The terrible nedes of war exact that we use to the utmost the hands and the high skills which Negro citizens, Spanish-Americans, Jews, and loyal men and women of foreign extractions, are offering willingly to their country's service.

"That is the practical side, against which no man who loves his country would knowingly erect the barriers of intolerance or outmoded industrial habits.

"The essential rightness of the President's Executive Order against discrimination because of race, creed, color or national origin appeared clear to me when I took office as Chairman of the Committee four months ago. In that brief period the close experience with the problems of the men and women who have suffered discrimination at the hands of fellow-Americans have deepened my conviction that this practice must be purged from our national life if we are both to win this war and consolidate our life as a democratic Nation thereafter.

"I have full trust in the members of the Committee. It was not known to me until very recently that it would be necessary for me to end what [illegible] remain as one of the most satisfactory associations of my life. The work of the Committee is in good hands."

75 Per cent of Complaints to FEPC Deals With Discrimination

Washington Tribune
Washington, D. C.

The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice revealed this week that more than 75 per cent of the complaints filed with the committee during the month of September involved alleged discrimination against Negroes in war employment.

A marked increase in the total number of complaints received during the month may be accounted for by the fact that seven regional FEPC offices have recently been opened.

All complaints are being processed by the committee as rapidly as possible. Those which appear to merit investigation and over which the committee has jurisdiction are docketed. the others are either rejected or held pending receipt of sufficient further proof to warrant inquiry.

Only valid complaints charging discriminatory employment practices based on race, creed, color, national origin or alienage against employers over which FEPC has jurisdiction are accepted for investigation by the committee.

Adjustment of a number of cases during the month was also announced by FEPC. In one case a large plant in New York State producing essential war material was found to have no Negroes in its employ, although qualified workers were available and a labor need existed. Upon filing a charge alleging discrimination, FEPC took up the matter with the plant management and as a result a number of Negroes have been put to work in the plant with a consequent easing of the labor shortage.

FEPC Head Resigns To Accept New Post

Washington Tribune
Washington, D. C.

Msgr. Francis J. Haas tendered his resignation as chairman of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices following a conference with the President last week.

The resignation was submitted by Father Haas because of his appointment as Bishop of Grand Rapids, Mich., by Pope Pius XII.

A native of Racine, Wis., Msgr. Haas, 54, succeeds the late Bishop Joseph C. Plagens, who died March 31. No date has been set for his consecration.

Named last May as chairman of the FEPC at a time when it was being subjected to much criticism, and in turn handing out criticisms of outside interference, Msgr. Haas was just perfecting a new organization and was moving forward on a backlog of hearings.

He had just concluded hearings on charges of discrimination brought against several railroads and railroad unions, and it is expected that decisions in these cases will be rendered before his resignation becomes effective.

This week the FEPC head appeared before the Public Utilities Commission to protest the conversion of two-man streetcars to one-man cars, contending that there was no legitimate claim of a labor shortage as long as the United States Employment Service had applications of more than 300 Negroes with the necessary qualifications for street car operators and platform men.

Msgr. Haas' resignation now causes the President to face the problem of naming a new chairman. Father Haas accepted the position after a personal plea from the President when several other persons to whom the job had been offered refused it, and following the resignations of other chairmen and committee members.

FEP Cracks Job Barriers In Eastern War Plants

Defender
Chicago, Ill.

WASHINGTON. — The hiring of Negro women by a New York City firm engaged in war work which had never before given such employment to Negro workers was announced by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice this week. The company, General Desserts Corporation, produces packaged foods for the armed forces.

Announcement of the settlement, together with the citing of a number of other such adjustments, was seen as an indication of increasing success in the handling of cases by the committee.

The General Desserts case came to the attention of the committee when the company revealed a need for women workers for production jobs. Although white women were employed by the firm it was found that no Negroes had ever been tried out. An FEPC representative conferred with the head of the company and pointed out the possibility of meeting its labor needs through elimination of any race basis in its employment policy.

The firm received applications from Negro women and hired them along with whites to meet its needs.

Other Settlements

The FEPC announcement also cited the following adjustments as typical of recent developments in its work.

A New England company advertising for an office worker, included certain stipulations regarding religion. When the FEPC intervened the company gave assurance that such a stipulation is not included in its employment policy, that its inclusion in the ad was a mistake and that it would not happen again.

When the representative of a New York City firm doing war work informed the United States Employment Service that it hired only Christian white workers, the FEPC was notified and took up the matter with the company. As a result, the firm, when it next had occasion to hire, included both non-whites and non-Christians among those employed.

An East Coast firm producing war material, although declaring it would employ no women on the night shift, hired white women for night production work but no Negroes. According to a request from FEPC the company placed several Negro women on the night shift.

Similarly, another plant, in Region II, although using white women, had hired no Negro women although a number was available. In this plant also Negro men appeared to be used exclusively in the lowest categories of work. Through the intervention of the committee, Negro women were hired and qualified Negro men already employed there were upgraded to production work also.

AWAIT FEPC ACTION AS RAIL JIM CROW PROVED

SEP 26 1943

Chicago Bee
Chicago, Illinois

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 23.—Four days of drama-packed testimony, presenting conclusive and irrefutable evidence of discriminatory job policies of 22 railroads and 14 labor unions highlighted the Fair Employment Practice committee widely-publicized (in Negro newspapers) twice-deferred investigation of rail industries' violations of the President's executive orders 8802 and 9346.

Follwoing the conclusion of the hearings Saturday, Msgr. Francis J. Haas, chairman, announced that FEPC would study the complete records before issuing its findings, and directions.

Eighteen of the 22 railroads cited were represented by counsel as the hearings opened Wednesday morning. Although replies were received by the committee from seven of the unions involved, none was officially represented during the first three days of the hearings.

Company Promises Investigation.

Significant progress was felt when the Union Pacific Railroad company on Friday indicated its willingness to negotiate when F. E. Baukhages, representing the company, issued a statement that Union Pacific was taking immediate steps to investigate the specific charges made against it. Baukhages, personnel assistant of the Union Pacific, rose near the close of the hearings and stated that his company had believed itself "not guilty."

He stated that the company had decided after hearing the specific charges against it to "investigate with a view toward the speedy correction of any situation inconsistent with the company's policy."

Solution Lies in Education.

The other companies represented at the hearing, joined in a statement read by Sidney S. Alderman, representing the Southern Railway company, in which, he said, all the companies present except the Union Pacific and the Norfolk and Western Railway company had subscribed this statement declared in part:

". . . the railroads involved wish to make it clear to the committee that they recognized and view with sympathy the difficulties of the problem before it and that they have no wish to place obstacles in its way. In their replies to the summaries of complaints being considered by the committee, these railroads have given you the essential facts . . .

". . . As to the general problem before you—a problem which all the wisdom and statesmanship of America have not yet been able fully to solve—it is the view of the railroads that the solution lies in a gradual and moderate process of education, based on mutual good-will, and respect. The solution will not be advanced but, rather, will be retarded and made more difficult, by too abrupt an attempt to change, by governmental decree, long-standing practices, rooted in the customs of the people."

Specific Charges Cited.

Approximately 60 persons testified for FEPC before an audience of more than 500 persons. The hearings were held in the Inter-departmental auditorium. The testimony cited specifically:

The failure of the railroads to hire or upgrade Negroes; the unfair policies which deprived them of full time employment; the failure to recognize seniority rights; the maintainance of wage differentials; the failure to permit Negroes to work on Diesel-engined locomotives.

The refusal of employment or promotion to jobs as locomotive engineers, flagmen, carmen, machinists and helpers, boiler-makers and helpers, hostlers, baggagemen, conductors, trainmen, pipefitters and helpers, crane operators, dining car stewards, clerks, road brakemen, coach painters, oilers, dining car supervisors and car retarder operators.

Monsignor Haas Urges A.F.L. To Give Negroes Full Rights

Courier-Journal
Louisville, Ky.

OCT 7 1943

Boston, Oct. 6 (AP)—Monsignor Francis J. Haas, who is resigning as chairman of the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee, pleaded today with delegates to the American Federation of Labor convention to accord full union status to Negroes and other minority groups and issued this warning:

"Just as once there existed unhealthy agreements between anti-labor employers and anti-labor workers, so there exists a danger that some labor organizations and some employers may combine to restrict the rights of minority group members.

Minority Might Revolt.

"Put yourself in the place of such a member of a minority group. Be he Negro or Mexican, Jew or creedist, he wants his full statute as an American working man, and if he finds organized management and organized labor leagued against him he will in some form revolt.

"Would you have it otherwise? Would you have the spirit which founded the American Federation of Labor stamped out among great masses of your fellow-Americans? Must one-tenth of the people of our country be set aside as a special class, with special loyalties that are not the loyalties of the rest of us?"

Monsignor Haas, who is bishop-elect of Grand Rapids, Mich., said the executive order creating his committee held out to minority groups "something akin to what the Wagner Act held out to dominated workers in 1935.

"In trade union terms they wish to own the right to settle grievances and to negotiate contracts through representatives of their own choosing, to work for their seniority rights, to share in the opportunity for security for their families, and to participate as free men in that modern equivalent of the New England town meeting, the trade union."

FEP GETS SET FOR RAILROAD PROBE SEPT. 15

Defender
Chicago, Ill.

Capital Transit Case Reported Settled; Plan Coast Quiz

SEP 4 1943

(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON.—The Fair Employment Practices Committee moved this week to clean its backlog of job prejudice cases prior to the opening of the twice-delayed railroad hearings, on Wednesday, Sepember 15.

Action in two important cases was reported while several other annoucements were made by Chairman Francis J. Haas on several pending cases. Steps taken by the FEP included:

1. In the long-pending Capital Transit bus case, Msg. Haas said: "Steps are being taken by the company which will satisfy the FEP. Both company and union state they are not opposed to hiring and upgrading Negroes." Exactly what is being done is not clear but Negroes are not yet working as drivers or conductors on Capital Transit.

2. The hearings involving Southern railroads were extended to four days instead of three.

Shipyard Hearing

3. Public hearings on charges of discrimination against Negroes by both shipyards and unions on the West Coast will be held, Haas announced.

4. The United Fruit company was cleared of charges of refusing to employ Negroes as its president, Samuel Zemurray, who is an FEP member representing industry, was rumored about to quit to take a new post with the Office of Economic Warfare.

5. Charges of discrimination were brought against the Ford Motor company by the CIO United Auto Workers.

In the shipyard case, immediate return to work of the Negroes who had been dismissed for refusal to pay their dues into a jim crow local of the AFL Boilermakers union is being sought by the FEP as a preliminary move to adjustment of the entire situation.

As a result of investigation and a conference held in San Francisco on August 20-21, the positions of all parties involved in the dispute have been clarified, the committee reported.

Seek Full Membership

Queried on its position in the case, the union is quoted as insisting that the auxiliary local which has been set up for Negroes meets all requirements and therefore dismissal of any Negro workers who ail to pay their dues in the manner provided is justified.

The FEPC has received assurance from the complainants that they are willing to pay their union dues but in return they desire full union membership. They insist, however, that the auxiliary local setup does not provide them with that full membership and that if they are required to pay their dues into the auxiliary in order to keep their jobs, it is a violation of Executive Order 9346.

On the United Fruit case, Haas said:

"The [illegible] received from its New York office a report that the United Fruit company had failed to hire qualified Negro maritime officers who had presented themselves for employment. The allegations have been investigated and have been dismissed for lack of merit.

Will Employ Negroes

"The report [illegible] that the company had requested a full crew and that, when qualified Negro officers applied the company had refused to accept them. This was found to be without any foundation in fact. No request for a crew was made by the company. Investigation revealed that a suggestion was made that Negro officers, not specified as to persons or qualifications, be hired by the United Fruit company. Upon report of the full facts to responsible officers of the company, a readiness by the company to employ qualified Negro officers was expressed."

Charges that Ford is violating the President's order prescribing discrimination in the employment of Negroes were made last week by Ford Local 600.

"The present policy of refusal to place Negro applicants is in fact a contributing factor to the 'racial tenseness' of which the Ford management is apprehensive," stated the document. It charged further that the company is "pursuing a policy deliberately aimed at denying jobs to hundreds upon hundreds of Negro workers, a large number of them trained at skills sorely needed in war production in the Rouge plant."

Deny Job Bias

Meanwhile, the AFL International Union of Operating Engineers has officially reaffirmed its opposition to discrimination in its membership, it was announced by FEP. A letter from William E. Maloney, president of the union, to the Committee declares:

"I can assure you that our local unions are open to membership for those who qualify as operators of equipment coming within the jurisdiction of our international union, and our local unions have been instructed that discrimination against applicants because of race, creed or color will not be tolerated."

Receipt of the letter followed adjustment of a situation involving alleged refusal of employment to two Negro members of the union by the foreman of a government project to which they had been referred by the business agent of their local. The business agent immediately reported the case to the committee, and, on the next requisition from the project, [illegible] four Negroes.

On the advice of the committee also, the business agent took up the matter with the project foreman and was told that a number of the white workers had threatened to walk off when Negroes were put on the job. The union official promptly informed the foreman that he would "replace any operating engineer who quit" for such a reason.

Two more Negroes have since been added to the project. There has been no work stoppage.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 22— Employment practices of 22 raliroads and 14 unions were examined in public hearings by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice September 15 to 18 in the Interdepartmental Auditorium, 14th and Constitution Avenue N. W., Washington, D. C.

SEP 24 1943

The full seven-man Committee heard testimony by more than three dozen witnesses, including experts on Axis propaganda who testified on the use made by the Axis nations of reported instances of discrimination against minority groups in the United States.

Following the conclusion of the hearings Saturday, Msgr. Francis J. Haas, Chairman, unnounced that the Committee would study the complete record before issuing its findings and directions.

Unions Ignore Hearing

Eighteen of the 22 railroads cited were represented by counsel as the hearings opened Wednesday morning, Sept. 15. Although replies were received by the Committee from seven of the unions involved none was officially represented by counsel during the first three days of the hearings.

The Union Pacific Railroad Company on Friday indicated its willingness to comform to the principles of the President's Executive Orders 8802 and 9346 when F. E. Baukhages representing the company, issued a statement that the company was taking immediate steps to investigate the specific charges made against it.

Dr. Northrup, in discussing the Railway Labor Act and its administration, alleged that under this law peace had been maintained on the railroads but only at the expense of tolerating, if not encouraging, discrimination against Negroes and other minority groups. He likewise asserted that the National Railway Adjustment Board has [illegible] aggrieved Negroes a hearing," and stated that certain rulings of the Board were material factors in eliminating Negro brakemen from the industry.

Detailed testimany of more than 40 witnesses, including a number of the complainants, was introduced during the four-day proceedings, dealing with instances of unfair treatment of workers because of race.

Sitting throughout the hearings were all the members of the FEPC: Msgr. Haas chairman; Miss Sara Southall, Milton P. Webster, Samuel Zemurray, Boris Shishkin, P. B. Young, Sr., and John Brophy.

Charge of Discrimination Lodged Against 14 Labor Unions and 23 Railroads

Bystander
Des Moines, Iowa

SEP 9 1943

Washington, D. C.—Charges of discrimination in employment because of race or color, lodged against 23 railroads and 14 labor unions, will be examintd by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice (FEPC) at hearings to be held September 15-18, 1943, at Washington, D. C. The hearings will be held at the Departmental Auditorium, Department of Labor, 12th and Constitution avenue, Northwest.

Complaints received by the FEPC allege that the practices and policies under question fail to conform to the provisions of Executive Order 8802 as amended by Executive Order 9346, to the detriment of the prosecution of the war, the workers' morale and national unity. Most of the charges involve the question of discrimination against Negro workers. In some cases workers of Mexican origin are involved. One or more of the several charges involves each railroad and union cited.

Exhaustive investigation by the FEPC has resulted in the compilation of a lengthy list of allegations involving agreements between railroads and unions whereby the effective utilization of available qualified manpower has been hampered because of discriminatory employment practices based on race.

Chief among the practices coming under the scrutiny of th Committee is that of considering Negro railroad workers "non-promotables." This is alleged to have been done through the negotiation of agreements between union and railroad which set a certain restriction on the percentage of Negroes which may be employed in a stipulated category.

These agreements, together with enactment of union restrictions limiting or barring non-white membership serves, it is charged, tend to reduce sharply the number of qualified Negroes employed by the railroads despite an increasing need for such labor.

Biased RR Employment Unshaken by FEPC Meet

People's Voice

New York, N. Y.

By MICHAEL TURNER

When the much-publicized, oft-postponed, eagerly-awaited hearings on discrimination in the railroad industry—involving 22 roads and 15 unions on complaints lodged by the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee—ended last Saturday in Washington, three things were unmistakably clear to everybody:

- first, that the roads and unions mean to continue their anti-Negro employment practices;
- second, that the federal government must stop passing the buck in allowing the various states and sections to dictate the regulation of interstate transportation employment;
- third, that Negro workers regardless of the laxity of the government and the prejudices of certain states, have not the slightest intention of abandoning their fight for equality of employment.

The second point driven home to all observers—that nothing will, or even can, be done until the federal government stops its buck-passing to private business and takes over complete regulation of employment in interstate transportation—was the statement by Sidney S. Ulderman, railroad attorney, who declared:

- Railroads do not operate in a vacuum or in a theoretical Utopia. They have to operate in and serve the civilization in which they find themselves, and must adopt their operations and employment practices to the social solutions and racial questions as worked out by the prevailing mores and legal systems of the states they serve."

Testifying before the committee, Frederick N. Myers, white, vice-president of the National Maritime Union, asserted:

- "Discrimination does not exist on the American flag merchant vessels for which the NMU is the collective bargaining agent. Negro and white seamen work side by side, eat together in the same messrooms, are quartered in the same fo'csle, and die together on the high seas in defense of America. A common saying in our industry is that a Japanese or German torpedo is not marked 'For whites only!'"

Reflecting complete defiiance of the biased policy of the roads and unions, however, was the statement by Richard K. Smith, Northwestern University graduate and secretary-treasurer of the joint council of Dining Car Employees:

- We have no complaint if we do not measure up.. If we do, then we want what we have a right to expect. And some time, somehow, somewhere, we are going to get what is coming to us."

Thus, the whole affair, despite the FEPC's vigorous rejuvenation under Monsignor Francis J. Haas, chairman, and the questioning by special attorney Bartley C. Crum, winds up right where it was at first—nowhere. The alternative now is that President Roosevelt may make a personal appeal direct to the roads and unions asking them kindly to stop hiring a limited number of Negroes; considering them as "non-promotables"; refusing to upgrade them on the basis of seniority; refusing to promote them as machinists, trainmen, conductors and engineers; maintaining unfair wage differentials between them and white workers.

FEPC Lauded For Action In Plant Dispute

Journal & Guide

Norfolk, Va.

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Credit for considerable aid in bringing about the settlement of a labor-management dispute which had threatened to cause a total shutdown of the 14-Inch Mill of the Jones and Laughlin Steel Corporation plant at Aliquippa, Pa., was given to the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice by representatives of the U. S. Conciliation Service of the Department of Labor in correspondence revealed by the FEPC last week.

FEPC action in the case was begun after formal complaints were filed with the committee's regional office in Philadelphia about the middle of September. The case was closed September 28.

A letter from Charles R. Ward, commissioner, in the Pittsburgh office of the Conciliation Service, to the FEPC Region III office, expressed thanks for the committee's cooperation and praised the FEPC representative in the case for his "fairness and keenness in being able to judge the right and wrong side of the case." The FEPC representative was Milo A. Manly.

TELEGRAM FROM STEELMAN

In a telegram to Dr. John R. Steelman, chief of the Conciliation Service, Mr. Ward referred again to the FEPC examiner who "cooperated to the fullest extent and deserves a lot of credit for hard work."

Th basis of the original dispute was a disagreement between management and union over upgrading policies in the 14-Inch Mill. A charge that the management had refused to upgrade two Negro workers because of their race brought the situation to a head.

The matter was adjusted when management and union finally agreed to a progression schedule which would protect the upgrading rights of each worker. In the individual complaints, the management recognized the claim of one man and promised him a chance at the first available promotion, while the second worker agreed to submit his case to arbitration.

Believe Haas Resignation 'Cut And Dried'

Leadership Change Damages Body, Writer Opines

BY RICHARD ROBINSON

WASHINGTON,— (A N P) — Lifted eyebrows, cynical smiles and an "I told you so" expression greets all inquiries in "official Negro" Washington, when any mention of the recent resignation of Fr. Haas was announced last week.

Refusing to speak out, many "off the record" talks are being expounded, and they all seem to indicate a more or less chaotic condition up at FEPC with someone left holding the bag.

It is generally felt that the resignation was a "cut-and dried" affair and the bishopric extended to keep Catholics out of the limelight in one of the hottest spots in these United States.

LASTS FIVE MONTTHS

It took about 10 months to find a man to hold the job-which pays a neat sum per annum—and he lasted only half that time—or did he?

The changed complexion of the FEPC has always brought comment The original committee with the Sidney Hillmans, Mark Etheridges, Earl Dickersons, Dave Sarnoffs, has evaporated, with only John Brophy and Milton Webster remaining.

Committee chairmen have also run the gauntlet, with mysteries surrounding the silent exodus from the chief spot. This is one chairmanship no one wants—and when they get it they turn it loose as quickly as possible.

SITUATION MUDDLED, CONFUSED

Few chairmen have accomplished anything in the field they set out to adjust. Brave men quail when take this seat and leave the whole situation that much more muddled and confused.

This constant change has done the work of the committee little good. The unsettled situation makes for poor morale among the workers who are not sure whether the office will carry on or what will be the ultimate outcome of the situation Few know what to expect the next moment, but there are those who are breathing easier since the resignation of Fr. Haas—whose appointment was not exactly hailed with glee when announced. More on the peasement side, he did not fit into the pattern expected of the FEPC.

Some are of the opinion that Mark Ross will be named to fill the post, but others say no, there is too much inside opposition to his appointment. Meanwhile, the old question returns, who will head the FEPC?

President To Conduct Search For FEPC Head

Atlanta, Georgia

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(ANP)—Msgr. Francis J. Haas is still at the chairman's desk at the offices of the Fair Employment Practice committee and will probably remain there until a new chairman has been selected before taking over his newly assigned duties as bishop for the Grand Rapids, Mich., diocese of the Catholic church.

It took five months to find Fr. Haas. The search then was conducted by Chairman Paul V. McNutt of War Manpower commission, under whose wing the committee had been placed. Since the reorganization, FEPC has been given independent status, which would indicate that the search for a new chairman will be named now by the White House itself. For this reason, it is not expected that the matter will drag on too long.

Certain names have been floating around, however, none with any substantial support. Dr. Frank G. Graham, member of the War Labor board, would be welcome to the job but his chairman, William Davis protested effectively the end of last winter when McNutt tried to snatch the University of North Carolina president.

The name, of Oscar Chapman, assistant secretary of Interior, is being mentioned. Harold Ickes put a crimp in that once before, and would probably do it gain, it is believed.

Somebody has proposed Monroe E. Deutsch, vice president of the University of California, but the suggestion again is unsupported.

The report is current that following the committee's meeting on Saturday, October 2, the members called in Malcolm Ross, deputy chairman. said to be an active candidate and indicated quite clearly that he would not be acceptable as a chairman The report is unconfirmed, but being circulated.

Job Bias Hits Negro Hardest

WASHINGTON, D. C. — The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice revealed last week that more than 75 per cent of the complaints filed with the Committee during the month of September involved alleged discrimination against Negroes in war employment. A marked increase in the total number of complaints received during the month may be accounted for by the fact the seven regional FEPC offices have been opened.

All complaints are being processed by the Committee as rapidly as possible. Those which appear to merit investigation and over which the Committee has jurisdiction are docketed. The others are either rejected or held pending receipt of sufficient further proof to warrant inquiry. Only valid complaints charging discriminatory employment practices based on race, creed, color, national origin or alienage against employers over which FEPC has jurisdiction are accepted for investigation by the Committee.

Adjustment of a number of cases during the month was also announced by FEPC. In one case a large plant in New York State producing essential war material was found to have no Negroes in its employ although qualified workers were available and a labor need existed. Upon filing a charge alleging discrimination, FEPC took up the matter with the plant management and as a result a number of Negroes have been put to work in the plant with a consequent easing of the labor shortage.

In another plant in Region II, it was charged by a complainant that Negroes applying for jobs were turned away with excuses while whites applying at the same time were granted interviews which usually led to their employment. FEPC representatives presented the facts to the plan management with the result that the practice was discontinued.. Subsequently, Negroes have been hired by the company on production work.

When the personnel officer of an Eastern refrigeration company with war contracts asked the United States Employment Service (USES) for a clerical worker and stipulated that a Christian be sent, the FEPC was notified. The company management, upon Committee intervention, agreed not to discriminate against non-Christians in the future.

WASHINGTON—(FP)—"If the discrimination in industry had not been solved in the merchant marine the result would have been the delay of vessels bringing troops and the material of war to the fronts where they are needed, by the army, navy, coast guard and marines all over the world."

This was the issue placed bluntly before hearings of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice Sept. 16 by Vice-Pres. Frederick N. Myers of the Natl. Maritime Union. The FEPC was hearing complaints of discriminination lodged against 22 railroads and 14 unions.

Before Myers could continue his remarks, the railroads' attorney leaped up, obviously discomfited, objecting to "that character's" testimony as irrelevant. Main contention of the railroads has been that discrimination in the south must be broken down inch by inch through the slow working of education and evolution—anything but government action.

No effort has been made to deny FEPC counsel's charge that the Southeastern Carriers Conference Agreement, signed by the unions and carriers Feb. 18, 1941, has barred Negro firemen from Diesel type engines, despite their seniority, and otherwise kept Negroes in inferior ratings on the roads.

FEPC Carries Fight For Its Life to Biddle

Ross Seeks Interpretation Following Warren's Ruling on Executive Order

PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, Oct. 30.—The FEPC (Fair Employment Practice Committee) today carried to Attorney General Francis Biddle the fight to prevent Southern Democrats from extracting the teeth from the President's order forbidding racial discrimination by firms doing business with the Government.

Malcolm Ross, FEPC chairman, announced the step, the first official move by the Committee since it discovered the three-week-old decision by Comptroller General Lindsay Warren which virtually nullified the President's order.

Ross said:

"The Comptroller General has recently held that the obligation implied by Executive Order 9346 upon contracting agencies to incorporate a non-discrimination clause in each contract awarded by them was not a mandatory requirement but merely a directive.

"In view of the doubt which this ruling has cast upon the powers and duties of the FEPC, the Committee is seeking consideration by the Attorney General of the scope and meaning of the Executive Order."

Actually, Biddle is being asked two simple questions:

¶ Is the Executive Order an "order" or a "directive."

¶ Does the word shall used in the order mean must or is compliance with the order purely voluntary, as Warren has ruled.

The Committee hopes for a ruling by the Attorney General within a week.

New Protests Over FEPC

Comptroller General Lindsay Warren's ruling that the President's order creating the Federal Employment Practices Committee is not mandatory continued to draw protests over the weekend.

Urging FDR to act at once to correct the "cynical" decision, George Marshall, chairman of National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, warned that it would set aside the national policy.

"Under the decision," Mr. Marshall pointed out in his wire to the President, "any employer who is guilty of discrimination may ignore Executive Order by pleading that compliance would impair war work. Warren's cynical interpretation places the policies of employers even though they follow the racist practices of the Nazi foe, above the imperative requirements of the war effort that all Americans regardless of race, creed, color or national origin, be utilized in the war production."

Endanger Unity

Marshall asserted that the Warren decision "will endanger the unity of our Nation and the morale of millions who hailed your Executive Order as evidence that our national policy assures every American an equal opportunity to work for his country's defense. It's effect upon the American people, our allies and all oppressed people who look to us for the fulfillment of the four freedoms will be to deepen the suspicion created by the filibuster of the Poll Tax Repeal Bill."

Solomon Harper, science editor of Calvin News Service, supplying 130 Negro weekly newspapers, issued this statement:

"The action of Comptroller General Lindsay Warren in violating the Executive Order No. 9346 of President Roosevelt for the end of discrimination because of race, creed, color or place of national origin is fine propaganda for the Axis legions and Hitler's war machine.

"Every citizen and manufacturer desiring to help win the war should immediately join with the trade unions and call upon President Roosevelt to re-establish the full power of the FEPC."

City Councilman Stanley M. Isaacs said:

"President Roosevelt made an important step forward in dealing with the race problem in setting up the FEPC. I firmly supported this measure which declared that the Government should not deal with any agency or employer who discriminated against American citizens because of their race or creed or color.

"To declare that that program is to be optional and not compulsory is a step backwards and I am one of those who resent it as wholly unsound. Every citizen worth his salt wants to make his contribution to the war effort. And it should not lie in the power of anyone to exclude the Negro, the Jew or the Catholic who wishes to do his share."

'Index of Reaction'

Alice Stark, executive secretary of National Council for a Permanent FEPC, declared:

"Mr. Warren's statement is an index of the type of postwar reaction which labor and all liberal elements fear. In anticipation of just this kind of threat, a group of concerned individuals established the National Council for a Permanent FEPC. Sens. Wagner and Capper are serving as honorary chairman and William J. Schieffllin is treasurer.

"A week ago representatives of several hundred thousand workers in New York, including such outstanding leaders as David Dubinsky, Samuel Wolchok and A. Phillip Randolph met to face the problem and voted unanimously to raise a national fund for this work.

"The objective of the council, which includes the introduction of legislation establishing a permanent FEPC, is a definitive answer to such attempts as this one by Mr. Warren to abort the developing democratic forces which till now have been a New Deal bulwark on the basis of phraseology."

The Rev. John LaFarge, executive editor, America, National Catholic weekly, said:

"It looks to me, on the face of it, a weakening on the part of the government. Any tampering with the Executive Order is something which should be looked into."

Chairman Writes President J. E. Walker

BALTIMORE, Md. — The wish to develop "cooperative relationships with other Federal agencies, governing bodies and officials, and civic organizations and leaders." was expressed in a communication from Monsignor Francis J. Hass, chairman of the Committee on Fair Employment Practice, to President J. E. Walker, of the National Negro Business League:

TEXT OF LETTER

Chairman Haas' letter follows:

"I have been informed by Mr. Theodore A. Jones, administrative officer with this Committee, that he had a very encouraging conference with you and your associates. recently, while in Chicago attending the convention of the National Negro Insurance Association.

"As you know, the Committee on Fair Employment Practice has been reorganized. We are now making every effort to perfect our organization and develop cooperative relationships with other federal agencies, local governing bodies and officials, and civic organizations and leaders that will provide the basis for an understanding and efficient leadership in eliminating discrimination in employment because of race creed, color, natonal origin, or alienage.

UNDERSTANDING OF LOCAL PROBLEMS

"The Committee recognizes that such [illegible] understanding of national problems springs from an understanding of local problems. In order to deal with discrimination in employment in local communities a thorough understanding of and sympathetic attitude toward the peculiarities of the community is required. In addition, any program designed to meet such problems will be equipped for success if civic leaders participate, offering advice and constructive criticism to the Committee, informing the Committee of local problems within its jurisdiction, assisting the Committee in interpreting its policies and problems to local communties.

"The National Negro Business League includes in its membership many persons of national renown and many who are leaders in their respective communities. The League enjoys a reputation and place in our national life, commanding the respect of both Negroes and whites.

"Accordingly, I invite your cooperation in obtaining the support of the National Negro Business League, its officers and members, in furthering the aims of this Committee."

FEPC Seeks Return Of West Coast Ship Yard Workers

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Immediate return to work of the Negroes in West Coast shipyards who had been dismissed for refusal to pay their dues into an auxiliary union local of the Boilermakers union is being sought by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice (FEPC) as a preliminary move to adjustment of the entire situation, it was announced by the Committee.

As a result of investigation and a conference held in San Francisco on August 20-21, the positions of all parties involved in the dispute have been clarified, the Committee reported.

At present attempts are being made to have worked out between management and the union a procedure through which the dismissed workers may be put back on their jobs at once pending ultimate settlement of the entire dispute.

According to the announcement, the discharge of the workers is explained by the management as being in accord with its contract to discharge any and all workers, regardless of race, creed or color, who do not remain in good standing with the union. The fact that the workers in question are Negroes, the management insists, has [illegible] bearing in the matter.

The FEPC has received assurance from the complainants that they are willing to pay their union dues but in return they desire full union membership. They insist, moreover, that the auxiliary local setup does not provide them with that full membership and that if they are required to pay their dues into the auxiliary in order to keep their jobs it is a violation of Executive Order 9346.

POST MORTEM ON FEPC

JAN 23 1943

In resigning as chief counsel to the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices after War Manpower Commissioner McNutt had torpedoed the scheduled hearings into anti-Negro railroad discrimination Henry Epstein, former New York State Solicitor General, wrote:

> The sudden cancellation of the hearings without warning or opportunity for discussion by the President's Committee is, in my judgment, an irreparable blow to your committee's prestige and must result in loss of public confidence in its effectiveness.

Mr. Epstein is just about 100 per cent right and no amount of weasel words like "indefinite postponement" can obscure the ugly truth that when the FEPC sought to get down to rock bottom on this question of discrimination against Negro labor in a major industry vital to the winning of the war, it was ruthlessly sidetracked.

This action marks the final triumph of a long and consistent campaign to make the FEPC completely ineffective, so far as ending discrimination in war industry is concerned.

The FEPC was handicapped from the first in having no punitive measures to work with, as in the case of other government agencies aiding the prosecution of the war.

In consequence, the FEPC, when it found rank color discrimination in existence, could only tap the war contractor on the wrist, figuratively speaking, and urge him to "Go and sin no more."

It got some co-operation from war contractors outside the Solid South and Negro workers entered many plants from which they had been previously barred, but they were largely employed at unskilled tasks, and promotion in accordance with experience, tenure, aptitude and skill has been disappointingly slow where it has happened at all.

The campaign to scuttle the FEPC got into full swing when it announced the hearings in Birmingham.

Some Alabama newspapers, aided and abetted by local demagogues, waved the bloody shirt and mobilized the dervishes of racial proscription to battle against any threat to white supremacy.

At the hearings Mark Ethridge, "true to his native land," administered the kiss of death.

After the hearings, the conspiracy to scuttle the committee gained impetus with some never-publicized skullduggery in high places, egged on by Congressional Negrophobes, which resulted in burying the FEPC in the War Manpower Commission where Mr. McNutt owns its body if not its soul.

It is significant that prior to the transfer, Mr. McNutt had already established a Negro setup whose purpose, though suspected, was never clearly defined.

The transfer brought forth such a clamor from liberal circles that everybody in authority yelled "'taint so" and professions of love for the committee were profuse. The rival jim-crow setup was banished from the WMC payroll.

The FEPC got more money and allegedly more freedom but remained in the shadow of the McNutt veto.

Then came the announcement of the hearings into charges of discrimination against Negroes by the country's railroads and the autocratic, lily-white railroad unions—charges that would have been as easy to prove as the existence of cold weather in Siberia.

This sort of thing was "embarrassing" and "unthinkable" to powerful business and labor czars who have slowly been eliminating Negroes from the few skilled jobs they still hold, and who do not intend to change their anti-Negro policies, war or no war.

So the hearings have been "indefinitely postponed."

When the hearings will be held is anybody's guess, but skeptics profess to believe that it will not be in our time.

The FEPC may continue to function but after this severe blow its future existence will probably be like that of a zombie UNLESS THERE IS A TREMENDOUS AND NATION-WIDE COMPLAINT FROM NEGRO ORGANIZATIONS, CHURCHES, UNIONS AND BUSINESSES, and those white groups eager to see democracy work in the United States.

F. D. R., Not McNutt, Said to Have Halted Railroad Hearings

Manpower Commissioner and FEPC Committee Agree on Another Parley February 1; 2 New Names Mentioned

JAN 30 1943

By JOHN JASPER

WASHINGTON—Official reports of a satisfactory conference of War Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt with members of FEPC (President's Fair Employment Practice Committee) were issued Friday.

The committee was said to have asked that it be removed from Mr. McNutt's jurisdiction as War Manpower Commissioner, be granted an increased budget, and be permitted to go ahead with the railroad hearings.

Another meeting is called for February 1, when the committee will have Mr. McNutt's answer.

F. D. R. Called Off Hearings

Current reports are that the railroad hearings were called off by the White House and will have to be rescheduled the same way.

The facts are that President Roosevelt was abroad for two weeks and left the decision to subordinates, probably Marvin McIntyre, his secretary, and Attorney General Francis M. Biddle.

It is said that McIntyre acted to placate the reactionary part of the South, which has always objected to these hearings, the A.F. of L. Railroad Brotherhood, which declines to admit colored workers as engineers, brakemen and in other positions above the rank of fireman.

The Southern view on this is often expressed. If colored workers get into skilled jobs, whom will we have to do the dirty work at low salaries?

Biddle Mentioned

Attorney General Francis M. Biddle, a liberal, is also reported as having his hand in the matter as speculation runs rife as to the cause of the sudden soft pedal. Mr. Biddle, in Baltimore Tuesday, said flatly that he had nothing to do with postponing the FEPC hearings.

Dr. MacLean's Speed

The speed with which Dr. Malcolm MacLean, president of Hampton Institute, got out of the chairmanship of the FEPC and into a navy lieutenant commander's uniform is receiving widespread comment.

The capital has felt for sometime that Dr. MacLean had conferences with administration officials and knew more than he communicated to fellow committee members.

Suspicion which may be entirely unjustified, was current that he knew about the postponement when the committee didn't and that he had been angling for the navy post for some time.

MacLean Absent, Ethridge Present

Dr. MacLean did not attend Friday's meeting Neither did David Sarnoff (RCA). Mark Ethridge, Louisville Courier Journal publisher, and Sarnoff have both resigned but agreed to hold on until F.D.R. reorganizes the committee. Ethridge presided.

Rumors are current here that Dr. Frank Graham, dean of the University of North Carolina, is sought to replace MacLean and Sidney Hollander of Baltimore to take Sarnoff's place.

$10,000 Baits

Jonathan Daniels, N.C. News and Observer editor, is said to be angling for a place on the committee, provided reorganization makes the post paying jobs, say at $10,000 a year for a small committee of three or five.

Public opposition to paying committee members was heard immediately for the reason that as government officers, Federal departments could not be criticized and the committee's opportunity to operate independently and without political influence would be immediately impaired. Paying FEPC members would be equivalent to putting an effective muzzle on them, it is said.

In addition, a smaller committee would mean the loss of at least one of the two colored members of the present committee. A counter suggestion is that the committee consist of eight members and continue to have representation of capital, labor and the colored, Jewish, and Catholic minority groups.

Other members of FEPC at Friday's conference were John Brophy, CIO; Boris Shiskin, AFL; Earl Dickerson and Milton Webster.

FEPC

liberal circles that everybody in authority yelled "'taint so" and professions of love for the committee were profuse. The rival jim-crow setup was banished from the WMC payroll.

The FEPC got more money and allegedly more freedom but remained in the shadow of the McNutt veto.

Then came the announcement of the hearings into charges of discrimination against Negroes by the country's railroads and the autocratic, lily-white railroad unions—charges that would have been as easy to prove as the existence of cold weather in Siberia.

This sort of thing was "embarrassing" and "unthinkable" to powerful business and labor czars who have slowly been eliminating Negroes from the few skilled jobs they still hold, and who do not intend to change their anti-Negro policies, war or no war.

So the hearings have been "indefinitely postponed."

When the hearings will be held is anybody's guess, but skeptics profess to believe that it will not be in our time.

The FEPC may continue to function but after this severe blow its future existence will probably be like that of a zombie UNLESS THERE IS A TREMENDOUS AND NATION-WIDE COMPLAINT FROM NEGRO ORGANIZATIONS, CHURCHES, UNIONS AND BUSINESSES, and those white groups eager to see democracy work in the United States.

F. D. R., Not McNutt, Said to Have Halted Railroad Hearings

Manpower Commissioner and FEPC Committee Agree on Another Parley February 1; 2 New Names Mentioned

JAN 30 1943

By JOHN JASPER

WASHINGTON—Official reports of a satisfactory conference of War Manpower Commissioner Paul V McNutt with members of FEPC (President's Fair Employment Practice Committee) were issued Friday.

The committee was said to have asked that it be removed from Mr. McNutt's jurisdiction as War Manpower Commissioner, be granted an increased budget, and be permitted to go ahead with the railroad hearings.

Another meeting is called for February 1, when the committee will have Mr. McNutt's answer.

F. D. R. Called Off Hearings

Current reports are that the railroad hearings were called off by the White House and will have to be rescheduled the same way.

The facts are that President Roosevelt was abroad for two weeks and left the decision to subordinates, probably Marvin McIntyre, his secretary, and Attorney General Francis M. Biddle.

It is said that McIntyre acted to placate the reactionary part of the South, which has always objected to these hearings, the A.F. of L. Railroad Brotherhood, which declines to admit colored workers as engineers, brakemen and in other positions above the rank of fireman.

The Southern view on this is often expressed. If colored workers get into skilled jobs, whom will we have to do the dirty work at low salaries?

Biddle Mentioned

Attorney General Francis M. Biddle, a liberal, is also reported as having his hand in the matter as speculation runs rife as to the cause of the sudden soft pedal. Mr. Biddle, in Baltimore Tuesday, said flatly that he had nothing to do with postponing the FEPC hearings.

Dr. MacLean's Speed

The speed with which Dr. Malcolm MacLean, president of Hampton Institute, got out of the chairmanship of the FEPC and into a navy lieutenant commander's uniform is receiving widespread comment.

The capital has felt for sometime that Dr. MacLean had conferences with administration officials and knew more than he communicated to fellow committee members.

Suspicion which may be entirely unjustified, was current that he knew about the postponement when the committee didn't and that he had been angling for the navy post for some time.

MacLean Absent, Ethridge Present

Dr. MacLean did not attend Friday's meeting Neither did David Sarnoff (RCA). Mark Ethridge, Louisville Courier Journal publisher, and Sarnoff have both resigned but agreed to hold on until F.D.R. reorganizes the committee. Ethridge presided.

Rumors are current here that Dr. Frank Graham, dean of the University of North Carolina, is sought to replace MacLean and Sidney Hollander of Baltimore to take Sarnoff's place.

$10,000 Baits

Jonathan Daniels, N.C. News and Observer editor, is said to be angling for a place on the committee, provided reorganization makes the post paying jobs, say at $10,000 a year for a small committee of three or five.

Public opposition to paying committee members was heard immediately for the reason that as government officers, Federal departments could not be criticized and the committee's opportunity to operate independently and without political influence would be immediately impaired. Paying FEPC members would be equivalent to putting an effective muzzle on them, it is said.

In addition, a smaller committee would mean the loss of at least one of the two colored members of the present committee. A counter suggestion is that the committee consist of eight members and continue to have representation of capital, labor and the colored, Jewish, and Catholic minority groups.

Other members of FEPC at Friday's conference were John Brophy, CIO; Boris Shiskin, AFL; Earl Dickerson and Milton Webster.

RESUMPTION OF FEPC PUBLIC HEARING URGED

NAACP Appraises Administration Attitudes On Discrimination

FEB 4 - 1943

Washington, D. C.—Unless the President is ready to undertake a drastic revision of executive order 8802 providing positive sanctions covering every field to which the Fair Employment Practice Committee has been assigned, no tampering with the Committee's hearings or with any other of its procedures should even be considered, the N.A.A.C.P. declared this week in a memorandum to the President of the United States and to the FEPC. The memorandum which stated that the recent arbitrary action of War Manpower Commissioner McNutt called for more than condemnation supplemented the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People's protests against the postponement of railroad discrimination hearings scheduled for January 25.

FEB 4 - 1943

The N.A.A.C.P. recommended that the only other effective alternate to public hearings would be the increasing of the committee's authority by permitting it to require all holders of government contracts to execute an oath that the employer has not been guilty of any discriminatory employment practices. A false statement would subject the affiant to prosecution. It would also be important that the President require that war contracts provide money penalties for proven acts of discrimination.

FEB 4 - 1943

In regard to labor organization the NAACP suggested that the President might order the War Labor Board or the National Labor Relations Board or any other appropriate agency before which labor organizations have occasion to appear to allow the FEPC to intervene in their proceedings involving labor organizations guilty of proven acts of discrimination.

FEB 4 - 1943

The NAACP stated that McNutt's action necessitated an appraisal of the fundamental attitude of the administration to the problem involved, an analysis of eexcutive order 8802 and re-examination of the techniques employed by the FEPC. The memorandum pointed out that although it was anticipated that the Committee would have independent status the President placed it in the office of Production Management and subsequently shifted it from one agency to another.

The NAACP said that although the committee members are presidential appointees, there has never been a direct relationship btween the Committee as a whole and the Executive Office of the President. The practice has been to decide important matters relating to the Committee in "off the record" conferences involving the President's Executive Assistant, other high-ranking government officials not connected with the Committee and, on occasion, some one or more of the white members of the Committee. When Mr. MdNutt ordered the postponement of the railroad hearings without prior conference or consultation with the Committee, he simply followed and reflected the mode of the Administration in dealing with the committee.

The Fair Employment Practice Committee was set up to deal with a fundamental, long-neglected problem, the NAACP reminded the President. If the Administration's purpose was a serious one, it then became necessary that it follow through. Yet, at no time has the Committee had an operating staff, budget, or status commensurate with the immensity and complexity of the problem assigned to it. The militant support which the Administration has given such agencies as the National Labor Relations Board and the Securities and Exchange Commission when they were under violent attack by reactionary forces has been conspicuously absent in its dealings with the Committee on Fair Employment Practice.

If the Administration intends that the committee be effective, let it give the Committee status in the Executive Office of the President, wholehearted support within government, and a budget adequate for the accomplishment of its functions.

The Association's memorandum pointed out that the committee has never had the authority it needs for the enforcement of Executive Order 8802. No provision is made for penalties or civil damages. Although many Federal agencies influence and in varying measure, control the execution of war contracts, there is no provision in the Executive Order obligating any such agency to exercise its authority for the correction of discriminatory practices which the committee has discovered. It also should be pointed out that, while the order imposes a duty on labor organizations to comply with its provisions, it provides no sanctions in this field.

Notwithstanding these obvious limitations inherent in Executive order 8802, and despite the handicap of an inadequate budget and admittedly undermanned staff, the Committee has been able to investigate complaints and effect a significant measure of compliance in every section of the country.

At the time the order was issued, discrimination against minority racial, religious and national groups, in almost twenty per cent of our population, had reached such a stage that it threatened to become a national scandal. The committee was literally swamped with thousands of complaints. Where there was prima facie evidence of discrimination, the committee has attempted to effect an adjustment with the party charged. In numerous instances, without publicity, satisfactory adjustments have been made at this level. Although public hearings have proved to be the committee's most effective sanction, it is only in a very small number of cases that this sanction has been involved. The committee, through its 18-month period of operation and the investigation of more than seven thousand complaints, has held only five public hearings involving less than fifty employers and labor organizations.

CALVIN'S DIGEST

By L. BAYNARD WHITNEY

Not So Good FEB 12 1943

When President Roosevelt placed the Fair Employment Practice Committee under the direction of Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt some time ago, this column gave the President the benefit of the doubt and asked the public to believe in the President's sincerity when he announced that he made the change in order that the committee might become more effective. Negro leaders declared at that time that the committee's independence was destroyed, and that time would see its effectiveness nullified. Following this some tangible assurances were given to show that the FEPC would function as intended under Executive Order 8802 wherein the President outlawed race discrimination in defense industry.

Now comes the crushing news that the FEPC, which has become a symbol of the government's efforts to make democracy work at home, is going out of existence under the impact of discouragement due to McNutt's refusal to hold scheduled hearings concerning prejudice in employment of Negroes by the railroads, and discrimination in the railroad industry. This is not so good. Chairman MacLean and Editor Ethridge have already resigned, and three of the four remaining members will probably resign unless McNutt comes thru cleanly.

What Now, FDR? FEB 12 1943

Vital as they are to the winning of the war, are the railroads too big to be brought into the court of democracy to answer for their attitude toward one-tenth of the nation? Has Manpower Commissioner McNutt been reached or pressured by men in high places? And why hasn't he come out with a forthright statement giving his reasons for calling off the hearings? What is President Roosevelt, who is considered a friend of the Negro, going to do at the showdown?

FEB 12 1943

The turn of events will answer these questions within a few weeks.

FEB 12 1943

It does seem that somebody not on our side holds an ace, for obviously the railroads flatfootedly refuse to be "embarrassed" by the race question. Maybe this also embarrasses McNutt, who on several occasions has been loud in his demands for fair play for the colored worker, but who seems to tremble at the very thought of meeting one of our committees. It must be remembered that McNutt's ideas on the manpower question were certainly not popular among industrialists prior to his appointment as commissioner.

OWI—By unanimous vote the Committee on Fair Employment Practice today decided to make representations to Paul V. McNutt, Chairman of the War Manpower Commission, that it was the Committee's very strong feeling that the railroad hearings which were postponed last week should be-scheduled and held as soon as possible. The Committee had a satisfactory conference with Chairman McNutt and received assurance that every consideration would be given to its reommendation.

He emphasized that the war Manpower Commision through hearings negotiations and all other appropriate means would work toward bringing discrimination to a permanent end.

JAN 28 1943

"Discrimination," Mr. McNutt pointed out, "constitutes a waste of manpower. It is, therefore important to the war effort that it be ended."

WMC Foe of FEP Resigns D. C. Post

(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON — Ramy B. Deschner, area director of the War Manpower commission in Washington, [illegible] who challenged the jurisdiction of the Fair Employment Practice committee (FEPC) to hold hearings on the Capital Transit case, has resigned.

JUL 10 1943

He was called to task by Paul V. McNutt, chairman of the WMC, for raising the jurisdictional question, and told that the FEPC had exclusive jurisdiction of the case.

The N.A.A.C.P., at the time Deschner raised the question regarding FEPC, wrote McNutt demanding Deschner be dismissed for attempting to confuse and cloud the situation.

JUL 10 1943

Soon thereafter, Deschner left Washington on leave, and returned to his home in St. Louis. He submitted his resignation from St. Louis, and wrote twice urging that it be accepted. The WMC accepted the resignation last week.

No Racial Issue Among U.S. Soldiers In Italy

DEC 24 1943

Kansas City Call
Kansas City, Mo.

By JAMES A. SANDERS

SOMEWHERE IN ITALY. —(ANP)—A racial issue is something that does not exist between American white and Negro troops in Italy regardless of from what part of the nation they come; all that one finds between American and English troops is the single accord to get the war over with as soon as possible They are well on the Via Roma (Road to Rome) and from there all roads lead to Berlin—then home.

But the four freedoms are starkly and dramatically conspicuous by their absence in this country which 2,000 years ago represented the highest in culture. Whether it is in the narrow twisting streets of devastated villages, the bomb-raped boulevards of once proud cities, or the wide expense of rolling country the highest antithesis of these inalienable rights of free peoples is manifest.

The want for food, the want for clothes, and the want for shelter tell as one words can what the ravages of war have done to a land that short years ago held a commanding place in the ranks of forward looking people. Fear has become almost second nature. The unholy terror that white-starred air armadas of the allied nations struck in the hearts of all Italy gave way for a spell to the fantastic fear of the now wing-cropped luftwaffe. For a score of years that fear of fascist reprisals has stymied all individual expression except that glorifying Il Duce.

Fascism is anything but washed out in Italy; but most of the people want it out. When you talk to them, the hardness and grimness drains from their faces, and is replaced by an expression of prayerful thanks. Many of them, men, women and children, have not found it easy to forget rendering the fascist salute when they greet you. The rendering of this salute is not to extol fascism, but rather to acknowledge the position of the one greeted. When American and British soldiers ignore the salutation, one can sense a feeling of monentary confusion [illegible] over them. They want freedom; the freedom from fear.

U. S. soldiers report that Italian soldiers whom they have encountered have the same feeling as the general populace. They have a song that they sing, a weird sort of chant, "Morta' Mussolini" (Death to Mussolini). This new experience of being able to say what they want to say has called out all the pent up emotion of a score of years.

These are an intensely religious people. War is really not a part of their ideology. They have a full realization of what their coalition with Germany might have meant to their freedom of worship. They know what happened to the Jews inside Germany; and they now have some sort of concept of what could happen to them if Hitlerism were to get the upper hand.

Two of their expressions, "Americano buono," (American good) and "Suno vostro amico" (I am your friend) best express the attitude of the man in the street. One can not very well doubt the sincerity of these expressions when they tell you of the German atrocities that occurred between the Italian surrender and the time that Anglo-American armies established themselves on Italy's western shore.

The most laughable thing that happens here is the Herman propaganda radiocasts, programs that they would not dare beam to the United States because the lies are too plain. Most of them insult the intelligence of a ten year old.

At this time capital is being made of labor unrest in the U. S. the racial issue in India, South Africa, and the U. S. German radio stations beam these programs to Europe and Africa, but fail to explain how U. S. production has out-pointed that of all Europe in the last six months. Wind bags spend long hours on the radio and tell all who care for such tripe that England and the U. S., are only exploiting the darker races of their nationals; then quote a long list of figures and incidents to prove it. It is then that U. S. and British listeners go DXing—looking for another program. They know the lie. Too many of them—American and British, white and Negro, have shared the same fox-hole, the same chow, and have expressed to each other the same ideology. Too many of them have been decorated for daring death to save one of the other. Too many of them have come to the realization the four freedoms will not work if it does not work for all.

Nergo troops in this theater have received nothing but praise for the splendid manner in which they have conducted themselves in forward as well as rear echelons. Yes, "American good;" that is why there will never be a black-out of democracy; that is why this war will win what the last war only hoped to win.

British Balk Jim Crow Setup At Pacific Meet

Chicago, Ill.

NEW YORK — Expressing their disapproval of the American brand of discrimination, British delegates to the conference of the Institute of Pacific Relations this week refused to meet in Pinehurst, N. C., when they discovered plans for "jim crowing" one of its members.

It was originally planned that the institute would be held in North Carolina on Jan. 8 but the site was later changed to Atlantic City, N.J., one of the Britons disclosed.

A member of the delegation said the principal Pinehurst hotel refused to admit a Negro, who is a permanent member of the staff of the institute's New York office. The conference was thereupon transferred to New Jersey.

This rebuke to American jim crow practices is in line with the friendly treatment generally accorded Negro troops stationed in Great Britain

Men Protest Brutality; Write To Philly NAACP

Tribune — Philadelphia, Pa

March 27, 1943

A warning that they might be lynched for trying to take matters "into their own hands," was allegedly issued last week by a General of the United States Army to a group of inductees at Fort Clark, Texas, who objected to the beatings colored members of the camp squadron received from their white officers.

The growing reluctance of Negro soldiers to fight for a democracy which they feel does not exist, was expressed in letters written by two privates, whose experiences with discrimination while in the service have left them grasping.

In a communication to his wife, one of the soldiers at Ft Clark related an incident comparable only to the tactics of the infamous Gestapo. He reports that the men were so severely beaten that one of them suffered a serious head injury.

March 27, 1943

According to the informant, the boys became exhausted while performing some manual task. When they dropped their burden, they were allegedly beaten cruelly by the officers in charge of the work.

They and other indignant boys then organized into a protest group but were subdued with threats of fatal injury from the guns of the Military Police. It was then that the General issued the alleged lynching threat.

At Fort Benning, Ga., a Northern soldier finds it difficult to adapt himself to the discriminatory laws of the South. He objects to being confined to jim-crow sections of public buses and trains, to being barred from restaurants and other public places, and to being constantly reminded that he is a Negro and therefore different from other Americans.

Copies of the letters were turned over to the TRIBUNE from the local branch of the NAACP.

Davies Family Upset to Read of Attack Upon Son

Bystander

Des Moines, Iowa

SEP 2 1943

Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Davies and family, 205 Fifteenth place, was upset Sunday when they read a news item appearing in the August 28 issue of the Pittsburgh Courier which revealed that their son, Corporal David Davies who is in the services of the U. S. Marines, stationed at New River, N. C, had been the victim of an attack. The news item:

MP's Attacked Marine on Bus

Fayetteville, N. C. (ANP)—Another bus loading "incident" in the South came to light last week when formal complaint was made to his post commander by a marine stationed at the training base in this state that three white military policemen had accosted and brutally beaten him.

SEP 2 1943

The Marine, David Davies of Chicago, who enlisted in the service several months ago, said that the attack occurred August 8 when he and 13 other marines on furlough sought to board a carrier at the local station. They had formed a line, Davies said, but broke ranks when a white MP told them that it was not necessary.

Later when white civilians objected to Negro service men boarding the bus ahead of them Davies said he and the other uniformed men were ordered back by another MP. The young marine said he remarked to a friend, "There'll come a day."

SEP 2 1943

Ordered Off Bus

After being upbraided by the MP for saying this, Davies charged he was ordered off the bus, but before he could alight three other MP's roughly pulled him to the ground.

The young marine complained he was lined up against the wall and set upon by the three MP's who beat him across the head, face and body, until several Negro MP's arrived. Davies said he pleaded with the colored MP's to save him from further mistreatment but all they did was push back a crowd which had gathered.

SEP 2 1943

"Knowing what has happened to many a Negro soldier in the South," Mrs. Davies was not satisfied until her son had been contacted.

She did not talk with him but contacted her nephew, Sgt. Charles S. Johnson who is stationed at the same camp, who informed the Davies family that "it was not as bad as it sounded."

SEP 2 1943

Mrs. Davies said that she could tell from the way he talked that he could not give any information.

The newspaper item informed that the attack occurred on August 8 and since then Mrs. Davies received a letter written on August 16 from Corporal Davies.

"Knowing that he would not want me to be upset, he never mentioned one word of the incident," Mrs. Davies said.

He wrote then: "You have reason enough to be angry with me. I know I have waited a long time to write, but I have been full of good intentions," then the marine told of many pleasant experiences on a boxing trip to Ft. Bragg, canoeing, sailboating and ocean swimming.

SEP 2 1943

Corporal Davies went into the marines from Chicago where he had been working and making his home with a sistes, Mrs. Mollie Dell Davies Bozeman.

AUG 21 1943

Chicago, Ill.

NEW ORLEANS, La.—Daniel E Byrd, president of the local branch N.A.A.C.P., has sent a letter to the provost marshal, New Orleans area, to advise whether or not it is the policy of the U.S. army to detail military police to private business places, to arrest innocent women, accuse them of soliciting soldiers and to detain them in violation of their civil rights and without due process of law.

Copies of the Byrd letter were sent to J. Bernard Cocke, district attorney of the Orleans Parish and to the Provost Marshal General, Washington. Cocke was asked to intercede in the release of 34 women caught in the raid on Little Beck's restaurant August 7.

The Provost Marshal General was told that Negroes are unwilling to participate in programs for the welfare of soldiers as a morale booster, if they are to be subjected to arrest in public places while entertaining the servicemen. Byrd charged a wholesale violation of the civil rights of Negroes.

The raid on Beck's "Joy Ship," one of the most dramatic in years, climaxed reports to the Provost Marshal that the place was a meeting place for soldiers and women of ill-repute. The master of the ship, Beck, denied the accusations. He insisted that he kept "an orderly place."

Military police headed by First Lieut. Edward T. Schanck, assisted the local police from the fifth precinct station led by Lieut. L. Hill and Patrolmen William Peterson Jr., Joseph O'Hara, William Dudenhoffer, Louis Bauer and John Milano.

Angry Crowd Threatens White MP Arresting Soldier, Sailor

RICHMOND. — Military police and shore patrol officers declined to give any details this week on a disturbance which began in a Second Street restaurant and threatened to develop to serious proportions.

City police had no details of the disturbance in their files because arrests were made by military police and shore patrolmen.

Reefer Blamed

The situation began after a civilian in the B.B. Restaurant in the 500 block of N. Second Street began passing a reefer for soldiers and sailors to puff.

One soldier and a sailor became disorderly and refused to leave and a call was put in for military police.

Two colored soldiers from Camp Lee assisted the policemen and were forced to use their fists in order to subdue him.

A group of young people jeered the police and declared that white military policemen would not be tolerated in Jackson Ward.

The sailor was arrested without difficulty.

Crowd Threatens

After the prisoners were taken away, a crowd began threatening the M.P., and one man menaced him with a knife.

This officer and all others, including city police, kept cool and restrained themselves as the temper and size of the crowd grew.

One false report to the effect that M.P.'s were beating soldiers went out, and the crowd swelled to more than 1000.

Officers Keep Cool

The man threatened with a knife walked north to Leigh the street from Second to Third.

More city and military police and shore patrolmen arrived shortly and quieted the crowd, which then included hundreds of curious citizens, without any show of force.

Sentiment for colored city and military police has been growing steadily this year, and many ob-Street, and the crowd thronged servers believe that their addition would help in law enforcement.

FLAG DRAPED BODY OF MATE ARRIVES ON WEDDING DATE

When Private First Class Louis Brock left for camp, he vowed to his wife that he would return to her, every wedding anniversary if possible. Ironically this vow has come to pass even in death, for last Monday, Nov. 22, the date of his marriage, his flag draped body was met at the Missouri Pacific Station in Kirkwood by his grief stricken wife, Mrs. Marie Brass[illegible] Brock.

Shot By M. P.

Pfc. Brock was shot by an M. P. Sergeant Friday at Gadsden, Ala. under mysterious circumstance. He died almost instantly of his wounds. It was reported that the sergeant, also a Negro had picked him up for questioning. Pfc. Brock was stationed at Camp Sibert, Ala.

In the little gathering at the station where the widow had lived in anticipation of a gay second anniversary reunion were also the father and mother of the dead solider, Mr. and Mrs. Brock.

Flew To See Wife

On Nov. 22, last year, Pfc. Brock flew by airplane to surprise his bride and so hapy were they that he romised to always return home on this date if possible.

The remains were accompanied by Sgt. Richard S. Hughes of 4529 Evans avenue, also stationed at Camp Sibert. The body will lie in state at the Church of God in Christ, Kirkwood, this Friday evening and night. The funeral service will be held Saturday at 11 a. m. with Elder Herman Douglass officiating.

A regulation pocket knife was taken from his pocket and he was told he'd be taught not to threaten "to cut up people in this city." Davies denied he said that.

The young marine complained he was lined up against a wall and set upon by the three MP's who beat him across the head, face and body, until several Negro MP's arrived. Davies said he pleaded with the colored MP's to save him from further mistreatment but all they did was push back a crowd which had gathered.

Davies said he was then placed in a truck and the other soldiers ordered off the bus amid profane language of the white MP's. Another bus was summoned for their transportation and he was told to get on it also and "be damned careful how you act if you ever come to this town again."

IN THE FIGHT FOR JOB RIGHT

Pittsburgh, Pa. Courier

MAY 29 1943

The new War Council's Committee on Discrimination in Employment knows what it is fighting for, and is set up in a manner to prove that the law can be followed and all men, regardless of race, creed or color, can work together.

Starting out practicing what it preaches, the committee is headed by a Negro, Charles C. Berkeley as executive director. Backed by his own personal determination, Bernard Gittleson, statistical analyst, shown with him here, and the laws of the state, Berkeley is doing a commendable job for democracy for all minority groups.—(Photo by Billy Rowe).

Roosevelt Host

RETURNING from the historic Casablanca conference, President Roosevelt paused in Liberia to pay his respects to President Edwin Barclay (above), and to review American Negro troops stationed in that country, which was founded in 1822 by Negro slaves set free in the United States. Thursday (Jan. 28) President Roosevelt conferred with President Getulio Vargas of Brazil, at Natal. Never before in wartime, had an American president greeted a chief executive of a foreign country in the latter's homeland.

ANOTHER POP CALL

President Roosevelt wasn't satisfied with startling the entire world by flying to Casablanca, North Africa, for a war-time conference with Prime Minister Churchill and other United Nations leaders. On the return trip he decided to have a look at the Negro Republic of Liberia, where American Negro troops are based, and then flit across the South Atlantic to Brazil for a talkfest with that nation's president.

Thus, before returning to Washington to put into action the decisions arrived at Casablanca, the American President will have had his finger on the pulse of many peoples, not all of whom have the same degree of interest in this war and its outcome as those of the United States and Britain. While war-time travel by military plane is not the safest form of transportation for a U. S. President to use, the risks which he has taken will likely be well worth while.

Certainly he will be in better position to see the African, the French and the Brazilian points of view upon his return to the White House than he would have been had he stayed at home and let Mrs. Roosevelt do the family traveling.

Knowledge of what our Allies are doing and thinking is essential to the successful prosecution of the war and to a reasonable settlement of international differences after hostilities have ended. No other American President has had Mr. Roosevelt's opportunities to develop a global outlook from personal observation and to understand fully the important part this nation must play in the post war world. His industriousness and scorn of personal danger will undoubtedly pay handsome dividends in the days ahead.

ANOTHER FIRST FOR F.D.R.!

President Roosevelt has shattered every precedent surrounding a ruler of a powerful state and he scored again on historic meeting with Liberian President Barclay. On that occasion President Roosevelt reviewed the famous 41st "Singing" Engineers. This marks the second time he has reviewed this crack outfit. First time was in March, 1941, when the unit was stationed at Fort Bragg, North Carolina, and on that occasion he called Warrant Officer John Brice, bandmaster, out of line to congratulate him on his fine musicians. This is the first time an American President has reviewed the same regiment twice during war time.

NEGROES FINISH FROM WASHINGTON AND LEE

MAR 13 1943

Pittsburgh Pa. Pittsburgh Courier

LEXINGTON, Va., Mar. 11—History will be made Saturday when, for the first time, four Negroes—the first to ever attend a major white college in the South—will walk up to the podium in the historic Robert E. Lee chapel of Washington and Lee university to receive their diplomas.

They are members of the ninth graduating class of the Army's School for Special Service Officers.

The officers—Lts. William Neal Brown of Aliquippa, Pa.; Clarence E. Jacobs of Atlantic City, N. J.; Edward Strawther of Mercersburg, Pa., and Harold Jennifer of Washington, D. C.—represent two branches of the service, Air Force and Infantry, and have been attending the old Virginia college and living on the campus along with their fellow white officers.

MEMBER OF AIR FORCE

Lt. Brown, Air Force officer, was sent to the school from Jefferson Barracks, Mo. He is also a graduate of Hampton and the Air Force Officer Candidate school at Miami Beach, Fla.

MAR 13 1943

Lt. Jacobs is an Infantry officer and was sent to the school from the 93rd Division at Fort Huachuca. At W. & L. he played in the Battalion band.

MAR 13 1943

ATHLETES

Lt. Strawther hailed from the famous 25th Infantry, 93rd Division, and, being an all-around athlete, was active in the athletic program of the Army Special Service school.

Lt. Jennifer also comes from Fort Huachuca, where he was director of the special training unit for the educationally underprivileged. He attended Springfield college, where he starred on the basketball team.

Col. Leon T. Davis, commandant of the school, revealed that all the men made commendable records at W. & L. and their instructors were well pleased with their work.

Negro Guest In White House

Protocol officers of the State Department are already worried over how they will make up a dinner list for entertainment of the President of the Negro republic of Liberia. President Barclay, descendant of a Kentucky slave, is now scheduled to arrive in Washington the last of May.

APR 17 1943

He has been personally invited by President Roosevelt, and as a chief of state he will be entitled to the same 21-gun salute and the same White House entertainment as the King of England, the President of Chile, or any other president.

He will spend a night at the White House, where the President and Mrs. Roosevelt will entertain for him at dinner. Thereafter he will reside at the famous Blair Mansion, now reserved for foreign dignitaries.

This is by far the greatest distinction ever accorded to a negro in this capital. Teddy Roosevelt created a sensation when he entertained Booker T. Washington at lunch. President Hoover caused a terrific furor when he planned to invite Oscar De Priest, the lone negro congressman, from Chicago, to a White House reception. Last year, President Roosevelt informally entertained President Lescot of Haiti at a White House lunch with no serious repercussions.

What worries the State Department is that a number of the officials who normally would be invited to dine with the President of Liberia are from parts of the country where there is a strict color line. Senator Tom Connally of Texas, chairman of Foreign Relations; Sam Rayburn of Texas, Speaker of the House, and Senate Leader Barkley of Kentucky are on the list to be invited.

Chicago Greets First Colored Member of RAF

CHICAGO. — (ANP) — An enthusiastic and appreciative group of citizens last week gathered around Gordon Stanley Dove, 22-year-old member of the world famous Royal Air force of Great Britain, and first colored member to visit Chicago as he proudly related the fact that the RAF recognized no color distinctions.

Dove, an RAF student-pilot, assigned to the air corps, known as the "LAC", is in the city on furlough and will next week return to his duties at the British-Canadian Training Scheme, located in northern Canada. He will be prepared for combat duties after another three months training.

Dove is a real Englander; born in London where, prior to the war, he lived with his family. His father, an official of the British Aluminum Mines campany, was born in Sierra Leone, British West Africa. His mother is a native Englishwoman.

Student-pilot Dove said there are Negro combat pilots and crew members of the British flying planes. Many of the ground crews who service and maintain the combat units are also Negroes, he states, and all have a high rating for efficiency and discipline

He was given a warm welcome at the loop USO center, and officials of Service Men's Center No. 3 and the women's committee, headed by Mrs. Marjorie Stewart Joyner, have arranged several affairs in his honor.

69-YEAR-OLD SOLDIER SERVED IN TWO WARS

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.

CAMP CARSON, Col., Aug. 12—Emil (Kid Happy) Senter isn't in the Army any more.

But Senter has done his part, having seen service in three wars, and he received his discharge only after serving in World War II as probably the oldest man drafted for the armed forces under the selective service act.

Senter registered in Memphis, Tenn., and gave his age as 40 because he had been working a river boat where 40 years was maximum for employment. Actually, Senter is 69, according to the Helena, Ark., World, his home town paper.

STILL TAGGED AS 40

Still tagged as 40 years of age, Senter was called up by his draft board, passed his physical examination with flying colors and was inducted at Camp Robinson. Forthwith he was sent to Camp Carson, where he served with troops until not so long ago.

Senter was in Louisiana when he joined the service for the Spanish-American war. He was living at Helena when he went off to fight in World War I.

An old-time fighter, Senter is now working in a Helena restaurant. His age on the Army records is still 40, and Senter says he'll never ask to have it changed, because he wouldn't mind a bit serving his country in three wars.

For the Associated Negro Press.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Noble Sissle, famous orchestra leader, writes a second article for the Associated Negro Press recounting his experiences in World War I., when he was a second lieutenant in the renowned 369th Infantry regiment of New York.)

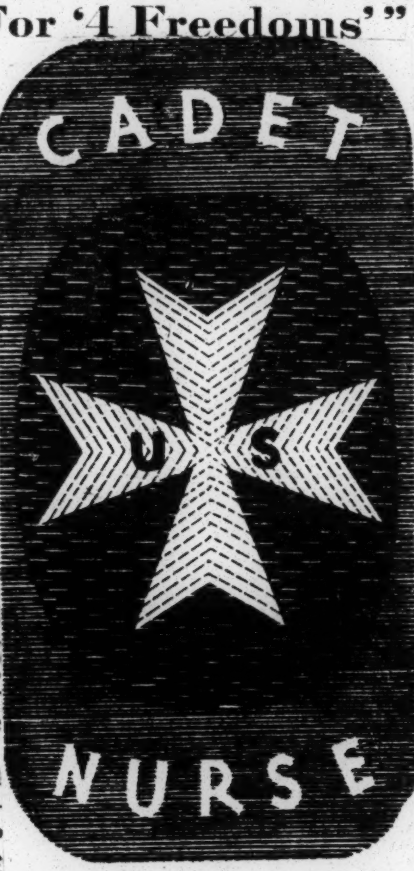
INSTALLMENT II.

My faith in the masses of white people is based on my experience before, during, and after World War I. Facts and changes that we prayed, worked, struggled, and fought for, but that I, personally, never thought I'd live to see have come to pass.

I was in college in 1914 and left to join the vanguard of Negro musicians and singers who came to New York City at the solicitation of James Reese (Jim), Europe. Many of the lucrative positions followed the successful introduction of his creative rhythms that have proven to be the very foundation upon which the American expression of dance was built. I came in when the American "400" commanded Negro musicians and put aside their gavottes, schottisches, lancers, and popular court dances of European pattern to create and popularize our [illegible] Step," "Castle Walk" and the "Fox Trot." These immediately supplanted all other dances and now form the base of American dance expression.

I saw American Negro musicians supplant European musicians in every seaboard society rendezvous from the exclusive Royal Poincianna hotel in Palm Beach, Fla., to the Copley Plaza hotel in Boston. Broadway found its true self. It was a gay, dancing, mad, festive crowd that danced to Negro jazz orchestras at "Churchills," "Recotrs," "Murrays," "Castle in the Air," "Ziegfield Midnight Follies," all the way up Broadway to Healy's at 66th street. Negro musicians played in the drawing-rooms of Park avenue, on the lawns at Long Island, on the decks of swanky yachts at Newport, breakfast dances, luncheon dances, tea dances, dinner dances and supper dances, until dawn just to start all over again. I was in the middle of that renaissance, I saw it with my two eyes. There were no radios to blast it, it happened mostly behind exclusive society walls.



The insignia of the new U. S. Cadet Nurse Corps, U. S. Public Health Service. It will be worn on the upper left sleeve of the Cadet Corps Uniform.

That same Jim Europe, the first undisputed king of jazz, at the outbreak of World War I, became Lt. Jim Europe and with his band in France, led our regiment (369th Inf.) literally fox-trotting down into the front line trenches. That was in February, 1918. We were the first American Negroes in the line of combat there, and among the first 25,000 Yanks in action. Lt. Europe was the first Negro officer to command troops in action on the western front, and was the first lieutenant in charge of the machine gun company. (I was in the middle of that, too.)

History was in the making in February, 1918, when our brown boys danced up to those lines to become part of the French 165th division of Gen. Gouroud's IV French army, a green national guard outfit. No one had the remotest idea that as a regiment of that historical epic-making, victorious army, that we, after having won every citation of the French army, finally were to be given the coveted honor of all the allied army—that of being the first of the entire allied armies to place foot on the banks of the Rhine.

That was no accident. Gen. Henri Gouroud did it deliberately. His army, of which we were a part, crushed, nearly depleted by 191 days of continuous fighting, at the end found his weary troops at the eastern pivot of the allies. This position put his army nearest the Rhine. As the general neared the coveted goal where, after four years of bitter bloodshed, the allies finally pushed the Germans, [illegible] Gouroud, out of appreciation to our regiment, who had fought it through with his French army isolated from our American army, made our regiment the advance guard of his army which automatically made us the first to the Rhine. From Harlem to the Rhine!

Oh, but brothers, the most pleasant tour of our entire two years' service in the army, strange to say, was that 191 days spent with our French comrades in the shadow of death. But we, and the 370th, 371st, and 372nd, all colored outfits who had also joined the IV French army after our experimental success, proved to be so valiant, it won for the American Negro soldier an undisputed claim to glory, and for the race a right for the fruits of victory, the fruits our colored leaders claimed for us when the peace was declared.

If you think the training periods of these four regiments preparing for the front line action which finally followed was a flowery bed of ease, I can only tell you that it was all you are going through and worse. Everything in the world was done to discourage and [illegible] us noncombatant, but we made it.

Ever since the Civil war, the chief personnel of our armed forces has been top-heavy with southerners. The south has never forgiven the north for freeing the Negro slaves. Even in times of national emergency, such as now, northern whites and southern whites cannot come together without again fighting the Civil war. It takes no far stretch of imagination to realize the predicament of the Negro soldier. But never before, as today, has the white public become aroused to the injustices done to you as soldiers and to us as a race in general. We have, today, more mass expression than ever before about racial discrimination by both white and colored races. This expression is a steady development growing out of the Negroes' participation in the last war.

It was given its greatest impetus, I might say birth, by an incident in which I was personally involved and which made me forget forever the kick in my army pants the "gentleman" from the south gave me in Spartanburg, S. C., in November, 1917. The kick in the pants, that the boys of the 369th used to say, "kicked our regiment to France." We landed in France a single regiment and it looked as though we would have to guard American supplies instead of fighting.

When Col. Hayward, our commanding officer, was offered the chance to join the French fighting forces, every man in the regiment welcomed the chance. And the French army in that war was a terrific fighting machine. Especially Gen. Henri Gouroud's IV French army. So we gladly threw those picks and spades down in St. Nazairre where our whole regiment was working on [illegible] dam the American engineers were building, but reluctantly laid aside our Springfield rifles for what our boys used to call the French "pea shooters" rifle. That was made necessary because moving as part of the French army and using their supplies, we could not be supplied with American ammunition for our rifles, because in battle you may have to grab a clip of bullets off a fallen comrade to keep going.

Anyhow, so equipped, we were holding down a battalion front which meant one battalion in front line, the second in support, and the third in rest. I was with [illegible] regimental headquarters which was about two miles from the front line.

The band was there and my duties as top sergeant also gave me automatically position of drum major of the band, and with the little voice that was still left in me still after an attack, I would raise it every now and then as soloist with the band. Our band that Jim Europe had formed was always called out to entertain any prominent guest. Well, an order came from the colonel to have the band in front of his headquarters at eight o'clock that night to give a concert for the American correspondent, Irving Cobb.

We all loved our colonel and had seen how, in first one situation after the other, he had used the band and our entertainers to soften up racial situations, and we were always willing to answer gladly any extra call outside the line of duty. It could be hardly called a line of duty and certainly giving a concert at night out in the open beneath the bright moon shining in a star-lit, cloudless sky with enemy airplanes droning overhead and screaming shells from our heavy artillery over behind a near-by hill, and the whistle of the big ones the Germans were lobbying over our heads trying to hit an ammunition dump.

And this call was all the more unpleasant when our guest was, from a Negro standpoint, just about as well liked as a poisonous snake. Irving Cobb, throughout his newspaper career until that night in France, would go out of his way in his articles just to say about the most despicable, insulting things he could say about the Negro and every one of us knew it.

Well, my father was a minister and I had been brought up around the altar of his church. As a boy I used to sing at his evangelistic services and have helped to sing many a soul out of darkness into the light of salvation. All through my entertainment career, I have seen miracles performed with music. To me, Irving Cobb, was another cold-hearted sinner. I was willing to try out the colonel's strategy. I knew what his purpose was and when Jim Europe was up front with his machine gun company, I was always in charge of the band on such occasions.

First, the band played a few selections, including a French march and then the quartet sang a few numbers. We knew Mr. Cobb had been up front all day watching our boys in line and seeing how happy they were going about their assignments to duty. Black Americans fighting the white man's battle to keep the white man on top and push the Negro farther down. That thought and the injustice of it all seemed to have hit his heart. I'd been watching his facial expressions in the bright [illegible] the moon. He was a different Cobb.

The light in the eyes of that man who had been so ruthless with his "poison pen" a few months before, had changed. I whispered to Bandmaster Mikell, to play a selection of "Plantation Echoes," which was a medley of southern songs. I felt our subject was in a weakened position and that his heart was softening, that his soul had been touched with the whole day's panorama that was rushing through his mind. He was ready for the kill.

The strains of "Kentucky Home," played by the black boys from his country, lit a spark and then the tempo of the piece slowed down, and with a silent prayer for divine power, I picked up my cue and with the clarinet and brass choir accompaniment, I closed my eyes and with all the soul that God gave me, with one supreme thought of melting the hard heart of this man before me that had done our race so much wrong, I swept into the melody of "Swanee River." Came the lines, "My soul grows weary, far from the old folks at home." The last note I took [illegible] a falsetto ending and as I was holding [illegible] and letting the volume fade in the quietness, and it really was quiet at that moment, it seemed every gun had ceased firing. And the only sound was that of a sob as though someone choked with emotions.

NEWS AT A GLANCE

ANOTHER BENEFIT OF THIS WAR WILL BE A DECLINE OF THE COLOR LINE

Christian Recorder

[illegible] ROGERS

Philadelphia, Pa.

DEC 23 1943

47

Last week I wrote on the benefits of the war to the American Negro and said that while racial troubles had increased in certain quarters I felt that racial harmony, or steps toward it, had gained generally. This week I shall speak of the benefits of the war, interracially. Of course, as I said, it cuts across the grain of common sense to speak of the benefits of war—the most stupid, debased and insane of all man's undertakings. War, in its final analysis, brings not one single benefit that peace could not.

If war could settle anything, the Europeans ought to be living like lambs in the fold. Since the first Punic War of 260 B.C., Europe has had 2.200 years of war. As for Germany and France, Julius Caesar found that in 72 B.C., the Germans had crossed the Rhine and were attacking Alsace. Since then this territory has been swinging back and forth between the two. Some now living has seen it changed three times: in 1871, 1918, 1940, with most likely a fourth in 1944.

Some Left-Hand Benefits of War

However, there are certain left-hand benefits of war. For instance, when two rival gangs of hoodlums start cancelling one another, as did Murder. Inc., of New York, the citizens, their common victims, do benefit. The same is true when rival economic systems start destroying one another as in this war. In such a case, the victims, the darker races, and the smaller white nations do benefit.

Now I am not saying that the darker races would be any better off it they were in power. They weren't when they were. After all it is not color.

but human psychology, and the greed in it, that is at fault. The Egyptians, Greeks, Romans, Moslems, Portuguese, and Spaniards had no color-line because they started much too racially mixed for that. But they had other means of exploiting the weak. The Romans had very strong class lines. A slave, no matter what his color, was a slave. A Roman, who [illegible] black, was superior [illegible] Roman, who was white. In Spain and Portugal, the barrier was religion. The man, white or black, who was not Christian and Catholic was "inferior."

Rise of Color

However, Northern Europe, which as late as 1200 A. D., was not as far advanced as say the Basutos of South Africa are now, began slowly to take the lead. Note that this was destiny. Civilization had been working its way westward for 3,000 years and Northern Europe's time had come to plague the world as Rome and the rest had done. Note, too, that by this time, the dark-skinned elements in Northern Europe had been almost bred out, leaving it so-salled white.

It was th[illegible]lor [illegible] humanity that rose to power soon after the discovery of the New World, at which time the present world development really began. Since most of the rest of humanity was dark, the white skin could be used as a symbol to exploit the rest. was actually a gift from God because in lands, as say Russia and Poland, where a people like the Jews were also white, some mark had to be worn on the clothes to distinguished them. On the other hand, the black man's color was fixed. In the natural process it would take a hundred thousand years to change. Yes, it was a gift.

Nothing to Gain From Race War

And so a color caste; which had all the fanaticism of any religion you could name, arose to plague dark humanity. But just as there was a time when the white man was nothing at all and darker skinned man was everything, so now the [illegible]m is swinging back again.

And [illegible] is this being brought about? White superiority, breaker of the moral law, is cancelling itself just as common gangsters do. The last war was the result of rivalry between England and Germany for world markets, chiefly the untapped resources of Africa. The issues of this war are too many to be thus summarized, but here again we find the big white powers engaged in cancelling their own power. And already there is even talk of a third war to settle the race problem. But, for my part, I do hope that the wiser heads of England and the United States the chief promoters of a color line—because Hitler will be soon out of the way—will see that they have nothing to gain and everything to lose by continuing thus.

Slaves Rose to be Emperors

In any case, we are slowly but surely getting back to the days of ancient Rome, Greece and Islam, when a man was a man, and worth, not color, counted most. In Rome, while a slave was hardly better than a dog, slaves sometimes rose to be emperors. In Catholic Spain and Portugal, a Moslem or a Jew could change his religion and get an opportunity. But white civilization insists you much change your color, which is impossible.

Surely, the color-line, the world's greatest idiocy, cannot survive, but must fall sooner or later.

Virginia Negro Soldiers and Seamen In The American Revolution

AUG 21 1943

47e

NEWS FROM the war front concerning the deeds of heroism of our boys in Sicily and in the Mediterranean reminds us that [illegible] deeds have been performed in all the [illegible] of our history. One of the states of the young republic which had many Negro soldiers and seamen to enlist in the American Revolution and to render a good account of themselves was Virginia.

DR. JACKSON

As soldiers they were members of the continental line and fought all over the country; as seamen they were enrolled in the state navy and fought in Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries. As spies in either service and as pilots in the Navy, certain individuals so distinguished themselves that Washington and other commanders praised them highly for their contribution to the cause of independence.

ATTAINED DISTINCTION

Some of the Virginia Negro soldiers participated in many battles and incurred all the hardships of warfare. Shadrack Battle of Albemarle County served three years and fought in the battles of Brandywine, Germantown, Monmouth and Savannah; Sylvester Beverly of Franklin County served throughout the war and fought in such engagements as Monmouth, Stony Point, Paulus Hook, Guilford Court House, and Yorktown.

Anthony Chavis of Mecklenburg not only served under Washington at Brandywine and Yorktown, but also under LaFayette and General Greene in the Southern theatre. William Flora of Portsmouth likewise fought throughout the war in many battles, and attained particular distinction in the battle of Great Bridge near his home in Norfolk County.

In the state navy Negro seamen fought in fairly large numbers on such vessels as the "Patriot," the "Liberty," the "Tempest," the "Gloucester," the "Hero," the "Dragon," the "Diligence," and the "Northampton." Serving as pilots on one or more of these armed vessels were Minny, Cuffee, "Captain" Starlins, and Caesar Tarrant. Serving as a boatswain's mate on the "Northampton" was James Thomas of Norfolk; and on the "Hero" as a gunner's mate was James Sorrell of Northumberland. On the "Diligence" was a Negro drummer, Nimrod Perkins, of Accomac County.

SERVED IN VIRGINIA NAVY

Scattered on several vessels of the Virginia navy were eight members of the present day Nickens family of Lancaster and Northumberland counties in the Northern Neck. Probably because of their previous experience as sailors on the Rappahannock and Potomac rivers, a considerable number of Negroes of this section of Virginia fought on the vessels of the fleets of these rivers.

Some of the Negro seamen were killed or wounded in action. Cuffee, the slave pilot died from injuries received in service; Aaron Weaver of Northumberland received two dangerous wounds in an engagement at the mouth of the York River, and Joseph Ranger of Elizabeth City was with the "Jefferson" when it was blown up by the British on the James River. Ranger was taken prisoner with the rest of his crew shortly before Cornwallis' surrender.

Some of these soldiers and seamen made distinguished records and were rewarded for their acts of bravery. "Captain" Starlins, a slave and a full blooded African, who was trained as a pilot from his youth, led the crew of the "Patriot" in an attack on a British sloop in the James River; and Caesar Tarrant, the pilot, and slave of the town of Hampton, "behaved gallantly" in steering his vessels during an engagement with the British south of the Virginia capes.

AIDED LAFAYETTE EXPLOITS

The exploits of LaFayette in Virginia were [illegible] easier [illegible] military secrets furnished [illegible] by James, a slave of New Kent County; and in like manner Saul Mathews of Norfolk County again and again entered the British lines to get secrets for General Greene, Muhlenburg, and other commanders. The distinguished record of Joseph Ranger of Elizabeth City was one of length of service. He enlisted in 1776 from Northumberland County and continued in service all through the war and afterwards until the State disposed of its last vessel in 1787.

The American Revolution was a struggle to perpetuate democracy, a form of life and government which the British were then seeking to crush. In the American struggle to preserve this principle the Virginia Negro soldiers and seamen, like the same warriors in other states, thus made a valuable contribution.

Just as they are helping to preserve it [illegible] in Sicily and many other fronts, so have they always been fighters for liberty and democracy.

History Reveals Negro Is Good Military Man

Race Has Proven Ability From Colonial Wars To World War II

By CHRISTOPHER CRITTENDEN AND ELLEN M. ROLLINS

RALEIGH, Dec. 4.—Nobody can deny that negroes will fight. Their military tradition is older than the American nation.

Records of fighting negroes date far back into the colonial period. As early as 1652 negroes trained in the Virginia militia and later they fought in the French and Indian war. Crispus Attucks, mulatto, was one of the first to fall at the notorious Boston massacre (1770).

In the Revolution, free negroes enlisted and served in the forces of nearly all the 13 colonies. Black Peter Salem, a slave, was the subject of a memorial to the General Court of Massachusetts for his soldierly bearing and bravery at the Battle of Bunker Hill (1775), where he killed British Maj. Pitcairn. At the Battle of Rhode Island (1778) a battalion of 400 negroes withstood three separate charges from 1,500 Hessian soldiers, and distinguished themselves with "deeds of desperate valor."

Negroes helped man our victorious ships in the War of 1812, constituting no less than one-sixth of our entire naval force. At the Battle of New Orleans negroes won commendation from Gen. Andrew Jackson for their bravery.

But it was in the Civil war that negroes first played a major part. More than 82,000 northern negroes and 125,000 negroes from the slave states served in the Union army. They fought in 450 battles and 37,000 of them were killed in action. Even the Southern Confederacy was forced to approve the drafting of slaves for its army. After a great deal of discussion, the Confederate congress early in 1865 passed a bill authorizing the president to call for as many as 300,000 slaves to serve as soldiers. A few companies were organized, but the war came to a close before a single negro soldier had fired a shot for the Confederacy. But some 20,000 slaves were conscripted for labor by the Confederacy, and they rendered valuable service in factories, and on farms and fortifications.

Spanish-American War

At the opening of the Spanish-American war (1898), there were four regiments of negro soldiers in the regular army, and all of these saw service in Cuba. In addition, a number of volunteer units, the seventh, eighth, ninth and 10th U. S. volunteers, also took part in the fighting (but none of these was from south of the Mason-Dixon line). Though there were negro line officers, no high commissions were held by negroes.

Record of Negroes Good In Nation's Army, Navy

Negroes Have Fought in All the Nation's Wars Since Early Colonial Days

By CHRISTOPHER CRITTENDEN and ELLEN M. ROLLINS.

Nobody can deny that Negroes will fight. Their military tradition is older than the American nation.

Records of fighting Negroes date far back into the colonial period. As early as 1652 Negroes trained in the Virginia militia and later they fought in the French and Indian War. Crispus Attucks, mulatto, was one of the first to fall at the notorious Boston massacre (1770).

At the Battle of Rhode Island (1778), a battalion of 400 Negroes withstood three separate charges from 1,500 Hessian soldiers, and distinguished themselves with "deeds of desperate valor."

Fought In Navy.

Negroes helped man our victorious ships in the War of 1812, constituting no less than one-sixth of our entire naval force. At the Battle of New Orleans Negroes won commendation from General Andrew Jackson for their bravery.

But it was in the War for Southern Independence that Negroes first played a major part. More than 82,000 Northern Negroes and 125,000 Negroes from the slave states served in the Union army. They fought in 450 battles and 37,000 of them were killed in action. Even the Southern Confederacy was forced to approve the drafting of slaves for its army. After a great deal of discussion, the Confederate Congress early in 1865 authorizing the President to call for as many as 300,000 slaves to serve as soldiers. A few companies were organized. but the war came to a close before a single Negro soldier had fired a shot for the Confederacy.

But some 20,000 slaves were conscripted for labor by the Confederacy, and they rendered valuable service in factories, and on farms and fortifications.

At the opening of the Spanish-American War (1898), there were four regiments of Negro soldiers in the regular army, and all of these saw service in Cuba. In addition, a number of volunteer units, the 7th, 8th, 9th, and 10th U. S. Volunteers, also took part in the fighting (but none of these was from south of the Mason-Dixon Line). Though there were Negro line officers, no high commissions were held by Negroes.

Fine Record.

But in the First World War it was different. A special camp for training Negro officers was established at Des Moines, Iowa, and during the conflict some 1,400 Negroes were commissioned. Under the draft, a total of 2,290,527 Negroes registered for military service, and the per cent of those rejected was only 25.40, as compared to 29.59 for whites. The total number of Negroes mobilized for military service was about 380,000, including the four Negro regiments of the regular Army and a number of National Guard units.

The record made by Negroes in World War I was admirable. General Crowder, in his report for 1918 commented: "One of the brightest chapters in the whole history of the war is the Negro's eager acceptance of the draft and his splendid willingness to fight." Two Negroes Henry Johnson and Needham Roberts, both of New York, were the first soldiers in the AEF to be decorated for bravery, and later many other individual feats of bravery were cited. The French even awarded the Croix de Guerre to four Negro regiments for heroism in action.

Then came demobilization, after which the peacetime Army again included only four Negro regiments, and with one exception all the officers were white. But with the setting up of a new national Army in 1940, the induction of Negroes was increased and at the end of 1941 almost 100,000 Negroes, comprising 20 regiments, were in uniform. The 1942 quota was set at 175,000, with the 1943 goal proportionately increased.

More Negro Officers.

The first regiment of Negro troops in the new army was the 41st Engineers under Lt. Col. John Elliott Wood, which trained at Fort Bragg. An increasing percentage of Negroes is being put into combat units and they are now admitted to all branches of the army. Their officers train at the regular OCS schools and there are now three times as many Negro officers as there were in World War I.

The Army Air Force opened a new door to Negroes in July, 1941 by establishing at Tuskeegee, Alabama, a school for Negro combat pilots. The 99th Fighter Squadron AAF, was the first all-Negro fighter outfit. Led by Lt. Col. Benjamin O. Davis, Jr., West Pointer, whose father, Brig. Gen. B. O. Davis, is the only Negro general officer in the Army, this unit saw service in both Tunisia and Sicily, and was commended by the Secretary of War. Lt. Col. Davis has now returned to this country where he is preparing to head a Negro bomber squadron to be activated July 1, 1944.

Negroes have taken part in all the nation's wars. More than ever before they are helping to win this one.

Caesar Tarrant of Hampton, Virginia

ABANDONING for a time the subject of voting I return to the theme of the Negro soldier in the American Revolution. In this war for American independence a man of importance was the slave Caesar Tarrant of the town of Hampton, Virginia. Tarrant served his country as a pilot in the state navy, won his freedom from slavery for his skill in piloting, and later reared a family in Hampton, and bought property there. He died in 1798, fifteen years after ending his naval career in Chesapeake Bay and the surrounding waters of Virginia.

DR. JACKSON

Thirty years after his death Tarrant's daughter, Nancy, began her correspondence with the land office at Richmond in which she made a claim for a grant of land for her father's notable service, a claim which the authorities duly honored. This is the story, then, of a man and his family who rose to prominence on the strength of a war whose leaders proclaimed for all men the good fortune which befell Caesar Tarrant.

Our knowledge of Tarrant is not one based on tradition but on actual written records. In the state archives at Richmond today are the original papers dealing with the subject of his liberation from slavery; at the land office in Richmond is his original will drawn in 1797; and at the same office is the original correspondence of his daughter dealing with her efforts to get bounty land in Ohio then offered by Virginia to the heirs of the Revolutionary soldiers and seamen.

TRAINING IN GREAT DEMAND

This man derived his name from his master's Carter Tarrant of Hampton. Previous to his liberation he was known only as Caesar. Trained perhaps to a life at sea, as numerous other slaves were trained, Caesar found his training in great demand when the full force of the war came upon Virginia in 1776. Continental Congress at the time had regulations a plenty forbidding the enlistment of Negro slaves; but in the face of the increasing strength of the enemy, these orders then, as now, were gradually cancelled.

Caesar Tarrant piloted the armed vessels of Virginia throughout the period of the war. He engaged in many sea fights with British vessels in the vicinity of Hampton and Elizabeth City County. One of these engagements took place south of the Virginia capes. In this particular engagement an eye witness later testified that Tarrant steered well his vessel, the "Patriot," and "behaved gallantly" throughout the fight.

Following the practice of liberating slaves who fought in time of war, and greatly appreciating the service of Caesar, the General Assembly of Virginia in 1789 passed an act to first purchase him from his mistress and then to set him free. From this time until his death, nine years later, Caesar Tarrant thus lived as a free Negro and a respected citizen of his community. Laboring probably as a skilled artisan he bought during this short period two or more pieces of property in Hampton.

PROVIDED FOR DAUGHTERS IN WILL

In his will this Revolutionary veteran made provision for his "loving wife." To her he gave his houses and lot, his household furniture, and all money then due to him. At this time he had two daughters, one a slave and the other a free person. Remembering each he provided that after the death of his wife the property should be sold with his free daughter Nancy receiving half the income, and his slave daughter Lidy receiving her freedom with the remaining half.

As the years passed Nancy never forgot the service of her father to the Revolution. Taking advantage of the liberality of Virginia and the United States in providing land for war veterans and their heirs, this woman succeeded in having a warrant issued to her on March 4, 1833 for a tract of land in Ohio embracing 2,666 2-3 acres. She thereby acquired the maximum amount of land granted to Virginia Negro veterans of the Revolution. Nancy Tarrant either moved to Ohio to occupy this big estate, or she sold it to another party and remained in Virginia.

OPPORTUNITIES IN WAR TIME

Caesar Tarrant's career illustrates the possibilities opened to a suppressed people in time of war and the opportunity for even slaves to improve their condition. Starting life as a lowly bondman he ended life a well-to-do citizen. He was the first property-owning Negro citizen in the town of Hampton and a forerunner of the real estate enterprise manifest there today.

(This column represents the personal opinion of Mr. Schuyler and in no way reflects the editorial opinion of The Pittsburgh Courier.—The Editors)

The story of the Negro's participation in the Second World War will have to be told by the Negroes themselves—if it is to be told at all. This has been obvious for a long time: ever since the Government began to prepare to enter the war shortly after the Hitler-Stalin pact loosed Nazi aggression upon the world.

The story so far has been largely shameful, a disgrace to the United States and a mockery of the principles thundered by "democratic" statesmen in Washington. Negroes who have volunteered or been called to the service of their country have been insulted, discriminated aga[illegible]nd segregated like social pariahs. Not only has this crime bee[illegible]tted [illegible]he responsible heads of the armed forces, but civilian agencies are equally guilty. In addition to being mistreated on buses, street cars, trains, and in public places, they have been given jim crow accommodations—often inadequate—by the USO, and their great contribution to the war effort has been passed over in silence by most of the white newspapers. The iniquities of the Army-Navy chiefs in this connection are well known to everyone who has regularly read Negro newspapers.

On the other hand, numerous instances have been brought to my attention where jim crowism has been given a setback—such as the officer training schools and the various service schools where Americans of all colors have been trained, fed and housed together. All this should be told in the story of the Negro in World War II, along with the more numerous instances of shameful treatment based on the color bar. The picture is not all bad by any means, and if there is to be a true story written, ALL sides will have to be told.

The story of the Negro in World War I was told largely by a half dozen men like Kelly Miller, Emmett J. Scott, Victor Daly and others. The majority of the ex-service men told their stories only verbally. The information given [illegible]ooks was statistically correct and the incidents related were true; but these [illegible]icles were, after all, the mere skeleton of the story. What is needed this time is the story told by the men themselves in their own words, with all the flesh and blood of feeling included, so that we shall have a great human document.

* * *

Since 1940 I have received hundreds of letters from soldiers and sailors relating their experiences—good, bad and indifferent. I have answered them all at great expenditure of time, effort and postage, and I have frequently quoted from them. But unfortunately I did not preserve them.

It now occurs to me that a compilation of these letters from men and women in the armed services, of all ranks and degrees of service, would be most interesting, and perhaps come nearer to giving us the truth than any post-war effort of individual writers, no matter how well trained.

So I am asking all colored men and women in the armed services, here and abroad, to send me accounts of their experiences in the Army, Navy, Coast Guard and Marine Corps, as well as the Merchant Marine, in the form of letters. I will keep them on file and select the best for publication. Letters do not have to be grammatically correct, but they should be written very clearly in ink, on one side of each sheet of paper. No anonymous letters will be considered; but NO NAMES WILL BE USED in order to protect the writers.

* * *

Letters from abroad, if containing criticism, are censored as a matter of course, so [illegible] must be kept in mind by each writer. It is better to mail letters in th[illegible]s co[illegible] upon return. However, certain kinds of letters can be mailed from abroad and I will receive them intact. Writers are expected to use judgment and send no military information. I am not interested in that anyway. Letters should be addressed to George S. Schuyler, The Pittsburgh Courier, 2628 Centre Avenue, Pittsburgh (19), Pa.

DEC 4 - 1943

Very interesting and revealing letters are sometimes received by wives, families and sweethearts of men and women in the armed services and merchant marine. If they regard them as HISTORICALLY IMPORTANT, I urge them to send them on to me when they have finished with them, or to send me copies of them. Let us get going on this important project.

James Lafayette, Spy In The American Revolution

THIS is the story of James, a Virginia slave in the American Revolution who rose to fame because of his intimate association with the great French patriot and American commander the Marquis de Lafayette. This slave at first had only the one name, James, but after serving this noted commander he was elevated to the full name, James Lafayette.

DR. JACKSON

This man made history first by acting as a spy for Lafayette in 1781, second by gaining his freedom through an act of legislature in 1786, next b winning a state pension from the legislature in 1819, and finally, late in life, by receiving the personal greeting of Lafayette in Richmond on the occasion of his triumphal tour of America in 1824. Thus in the archives of Virginia and in various collections of historical papers these events are found recorded in the life of this daring and energetic man.

ENDED CAREER AS FARM OWNER

But there is more to the life of James Lafayette than his military exploits and his association with the noted French patriot. He lived as a farmer and laborer in New Kent County, Virginia for nearly fifty years after receiving his freedom and he reared a large family there. Beginning his free career as a farm laborer, he ended his career as a farm owner.

In 1816 he bought forty acres of land lying nine miles south of the New Kent County court house and held it until his death sixteen years later. Among his property holding neighbors were two white families and a free Negro by the name of Edward Nickens, the owner of 71 acres.

James went into action as a spy for Lafayette in July, 1781 only three or four months before the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown on October 19, 1781 and the end of the war. During July and August Lafayette's American army was in camp at Malvern Hill in Charles City County (a short distance from Richmond) at New Kent Court House, and at Williamsburg, while Cornwallis with his British army was in camp at Portsmouth, at the mouth of the James River seventy-five miles away.

PLACED SERVICES AT LAFAYETTE'S DISPOSAL

The one great need of Lafayette at this critical juncture was to determine the future movements of the enemy. Was Cornwallis to break camp and go North to join Clinton at New York, was he to go South to join the British forces at Charleston, or was he to make a stand at Portsmouth or some other point in Virginia? In an effort to get information on these points Lafayette dispatched spies to Portsmouth.

Among this number was James of New Kent County in whose very neighborhood Lafayette's troops were camping and marching. After first obtaining the consent of his master, William Armistead, this patriotic slave then entered the ranks and placed himself at the disposal of the great leader.

One task of James was to deliver documents of Lafayette to certain American agents already serving as spies in the British camp at Portsmouth. He was also to pick up all the verbal information he could obtain concerning the enemy's movements. That James performed these duties well there is no room for doubt. Lafayette said that important bits of information about the enemy were "industriously collected" by James and were "faithfully delivered" to him.

SECRET AND IMPORTANT DOCUMENTS

The documents which James delivered, says another observer, were "of the most secret and important kind the possession of which if discovered on him would have most certainly endangered (his) life." All told, he kept open a channel of useful information to the American forces and thereby made a contribution with others toward the ultimate defeat of Cornwallis when he broke camp at Portsmouth and made his last stand at Yorktown. Faithful to the last, James was found present in Lafayette's headquarters at Yorktown two days after the surrender.

The association of the Marquis de Lafayette with James Lafayette is typical of his belief in the liberty of all men and his concern about the welfare of humanity. In the midst of his hand shaking with thousands of whites in Richmond during his return visit in 1824 he did not fail to greet and shake hands with James, his old Negro ally of the Revolution forty-three years before.

To see the old Negro and to recall his association in New Kent with him, and his writing of a recommendation in Richmond for him in the old days. Truly was the marquis one of the best exponents of genuine democracy our country has known

Joseph Ranger, Seaman In The American Revolution

BY THE observance of Navy Day on Wednesday, October 27, the American people paid due respect to our present day fleet. They likewise paid homage to all the brave men of the past who have gone down to sea in ships to defend our country from invasion by foreign foes. This article pays homage to one of these brave men who went down to sea in ships to fight the British foe at the time of the American Revolution.

DR. JACKSON

His name was Joseph Ranger and he lived in Elizabeth City County, Virginia. Bred to a life at sea, like so many slaves and free men of color in the early history of our country, Ranger found himself ready for service in the navy of Virginia when the War for independence came in 1776.

Today as a united country we have only the Navy of the United States; in 1776 as a divided country we had the Navy of the United States (the continental navy) and the navies of nine separate states. Enlisted in the Navy of Virginia were at least seventy-five Negroes who served on fifteen or more vessels.

HALF DOZEN NEGRO SEAMEN

They fought side by side with he white seamen on such vessels as the "Patriot," the "Norfolk Revenge," the "Accomac," the "Dragon," and the "Jefferson." The "Dragon" was a ship which carried officers and men to the number of 104; the "Jefferson" was a brig which carried a smaller crew but mounted eighteen guns. On the "Dragon" and on the "Jefferson" were a half dozen Negro seamen; one of them, an able seaman, was Joseph Ranger.

This warrior has the honor of giving a longer term of service to his state and country than any other Virginia Negro; he also has the honor of fighting on a greater number of vessels. He fought and cruised on four vessels for almost the entire war period and he remained in service for six years after the war ended. He began his career on the "Hero" and was transferred first to the "Dragon," then to the "Jefferson," and finally to the "Patriot."

After the war he served on the "Patriot" and the "Liberty;" two vessels allowed to Virginia by Congress to defend its shores. Ranger has the further honor of entering the service from the region of Northumberland County from which came that hardy group of Revolutionary sailors—the Nickens, the Sorrels, the Weavers, the Woods, the Causeys, the Haws, and others.

EXPERIENCED REAL FIGHTING

Ranger must have experienced some real fighting on the "Jefferson" and the "Patriot," for these vessels were ordered to sea by the State in 1780 for the express purpose of suppressing the enemy cruisers then infesting Chesapeake Bay and the rivers flowing into this body of water. He apparently experienced real warfare on the "Jefferson" inasmuch as he was on this vessel when it was blown up by the British at Osborne's on the James River, and he was on the "Patriot" when the entire crew were taken prisoners and held as captives until after the battle of Yorktown when they were discharged.

In common with all the soldiers and seamen in the American Revolution, Ranger enjoyed all the rewards given for service in this struggle. He was paid in money, he received a grant of land; and, very late in life, he received a pension from the United States government. Able seamen on the "Patriot" were paid two shillings a day. As one of this class, on one occasion, in 1786, he was paid two pounds and ten shillings for a whole or a part of a month's service; on another occasion in 1787 he was paid five pounds and seven shillings for two months and seven days service.

Seeking at this time to get all that the State owed him, Ranger sent the following note to one of the state officials: "Please deliver to Francis Graves whatever may be due to me for my services as a seaman in the navy of this state—also the land I am entitled to."

ALLOTED 100 ACRES OF LAND

Ranger's share of land, alloted him shortly after the Revolution, was one hundred acres; his pension coming fifty years after the struggle, when he was seventy-three, amounted to the annual sum of ninety-six dollars. In order to qualify for this pension under the act of Congress passed in 1832, Ranger and all other Revolutionary veterans had to make a declaration under oath before a court of record.

Appearing before the Elizabeth City County court at Hampton on October 25, 1832, he told the story of his engagement on four vessels; and who the captains, lieutenants, pilots, boatswains, and so forth were on each vessel. He also said that he was acquainted with Commodore James Barrow and others, Revolutionary leaders then living, who could testify to the accuracy of his statements.

STILL GO DOWN TO THE SEA IN SHIPS

Brave men of the Negro race still go down to the sea in ships to defend their country, but they go there now not as full-fledged fighters like Ranger and others in the Revolution and the War of 1812, but as menial servants. Thus it is that our democracy has assumed a changing character. At one period the black man has been allowed full opportunity to display his talent; at another he has been crushed.

ROGERS SAYS:

Another Benefit of This War Will Be a Decline of the Color Line

BY J. A. ROGERS

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa

LAST WEEK I wrote on the benefits of the war to the American Negro and said that while racial troubles had increased in certain quarters I felt that racial harmony, or steps toward it, had gained generally. This week I shall speak of the benefits of the war, interracially. Of course, as I said, it cuts across the grain of common sense to speak of the benefits of war—the most stupid, debased and insane of all man's undertakings—war, in its final analysis, brings not one single benefit that peace could not.

Mr. Rogers
